pampered, and all the other parts to much pined, that body could nor long continue. So in the body of the wealth ecclesiastical, if some who be the heads be so enormously ouergrown in riches and dignity, that the weaker members of the body be scant able to beare them vp, there is a great token of dissolution and ruine shortly. Wherupon commeth well in place the saying of the Prophet Esay.* Euery head is sicke, euery hart is full of sorrow, of the which heads it is also spoken in the Prophet Amos.* chap. 6. Wo be to the secure and proud wealthye in Sion, and to such as thinke themselves so sure vpon the moūt of Samaria, taking themselves as heads and rulers ouer other. &c. And moreouer in the sayd prophet Esay it followeth: Frō the top of the head to the sole of the foot, there is no whole part in all the body, to witte: In the inferiours, because they are not able to liue for pouerty: in the superiours, because for theyr excessiue riches, they are left from doing good. And followeth in the same place: But all are woundes and botches and strypes, beholde here the daunger comming, the woundes of discorde and deuision, the botch or sore of rancor and enuy, the swelling stripe of rebellion and mischief.

The 4. signe is the pride of Prelates.* Some there haue bene which fondly haue disputed of the pouerty of Christ, and haue inueyed agaynst the Prelates, because they liue not in pouertye of the saynts. But this phantasy cōmeth of the ignoraunce of morrall Philosophy and diuinity,* and of the defect of naturall prudence: for that in all nations, and by common lawes, priests haue had and ought to haue wherewith to sustayne themselves more honestly then the vulgare sort, and Prelates more honestly then the subiectes. But yet hereby is not permitted to them their great horses, theyr troupes of horsemen, their superfluous pompe of theyr wayting men and great famylyes, whyche scarcely can bee maynteyned without pride, neyther can be susteyned with safe iustice, and many not without fighting and iniuries inconueniēt: not much vnlike to that as Iustine the historian writeth of the Carthaginenses. The family (sayth he) of so great Emperours was vntolerable to such a free Citty. In semblable wise, this great pride in the Church of God (especially in these dayes) doth moue not so few to due reuerence, as many to indignation: and yet mo to those thinges aforesayde, which thinke no lesse but to doe sacrifice to God if they may robbe and spoile certayne fatte priests and parsons namely such as neither haue nobility of bloud, and lesse learning to beare themselves vpon but are lyers, seruile and fraudulent, to whome the Lorde speaketh by his Prophet Amos fourth.* Heare you fatted kine of Samaria, ye that doe poore men wrong, and oppresse the needye, the daye shall come vpon you. &c.

The fift signe is the tyranny of the Prelates and Presidentes,* which as it is a violent thing, so it cannot be long lasting. For as Salomon sayth, Sap. 16.* For it was requisite that (without any excuse) destruction shoulde come vpon those whiche exercised tyranny. The property of a tyraunt is to seeke the commodity not of his subiectes,* but onely his will and profite. Such were the Pastours that fedde not the Lordes flocke, but fed themselves: of whom and to whom speaketh the Prophet Ezech. 34. Woe be vnto those Pastours of Israel that feede themselves. Shoulde not the shepheardes feede the flockes? With many other threatninges agaynst them in the sayd chapter. Wo be vnto them which reioyce at the transgressions of such whom it lieth in theyr power to cōdemne, neither do they seeke what he is able to pay, to whom crieth Micheas the Prophet 3. chap. Ye hate the good and loue the euill,* ye pluck of mens skinnies and the flesh, from the bones: ye eat the flesh of my people, and slay of their skin: ye break their bones, Page 417 ye chop them in peeces as it were into a Caudron, and as flesh into the pot.* &c. And therefore the foresayd Ezechiel pronounceth: Behold I will my selfe vpon the shepheardes, and require my sheepe from theyr handes, and make them cease from feeding my sheep, yea the shepheards shall feed themselues no more, for I will deliuer my sheep out of theyr mouthes, so that they shall not deuour them any more.

The sixt signe is in promoting of the vnworthy, and of neglecting them that be worthy. This as Aristotle sayth, is a greate cause many times of the dissolution of common weales. And often times it so happeneth in the wars of princes, that the contēpt and small regarding of the valiant, and the exalting of others that be lesse worthy, in gendereth diuers kindes & kindlinges of sedition. For by the reasō partly of the same, partly of the other causes aboue recited: We haue read not only in books, but haue sene with our eies, diuers flourishing Cities welneare subuerted. Wher as good men be not made of, but are vexed with sorrow & grieve by the euil: the contentiō at length brasteth out vpon the prince, as Haymo reciteth out of Origen. This hath alwayes bene the per uers incredulitye of mans harde heart, that not onely in hearing, but also in seing: yet will they not beleue that other haue perished, vnlesse they also perish themselues.

The seuēth signe is the tribulation of outward policy & commotions of the people,* which in a great part is now happened already. And therefore forasmuch as Seneca sayth: Men do complayne commonly that euils onely come so fast: It is to be feared least also the ecclesiastical policy be afflicted not onely outwardly but also in it selfe.* And so be fulfilled in vs, that in Jeremy is prophesied cap. 4. Murther is cryed vpon murther, and the whole land shall perish and sodenly my tabernacles were destroyed, and my tentes very quickly. And Ezec. 7.* Wherfore I will bring cruell tyraunts from among the heathen, to take theyr houses in possession, I will make the pompe of the proud, to cease, and their sāctuaries shall be taken. One mischiefe and sorow shall follow another, and one rumor shall come after an other, then shall they seek visions in vayne at theyr prophets, the law shall be gone frō theyr Priests, and wisdom from their Elders &•.

The eight signe is the refusing of correction, neither will they heare theyr faultes tolde them, so that it is hapned to the princes and rulers of the Church, as it is written in the prophet Zach. ca. 7. They stopped their eares that they would not heare: yea they made their hartes as an Adamant stone, least they shoulde heare the law and words which the Lord of hostes sent in his holy spirite by the Prophetes aforetime. Also Esay witnessing after the same effect. cap. 30. sayth: For it is an obstinate people, lying children and vnfaythfull, children that will not heare the law of the Lord: which say to the Prophetes, meddle with nothing, and tell vs nothing that is true and right, but speake frendly wordes to vs. &c. All this shall be verified when the Prelates begin to hate thē that tell them trueth,* and haue knowledge, like vnto such of whō Amos speaketh, chapter. 5. They beare him euil wil that reproueth them openly and who so telleth them the playne trueth, they abhorre him And therefore sayth the Lord to the Church of Ierusalem.* Ose 4. Seing thou hast refused vnderstanding, I haue refused thee also, that thou shalt no more be my priest. And for so much as thou hast forgotten the law of thy God, I will also forget thy children, and chaunge theyr honor into shame. And so shall it be like priest, like people &c. And many other saynges there be in the prophets, speaking of the deiecting and casting downe of the priestly honor.

Besides these foresayde signes and tokens hitherto recited, there be also diuers other:* As the backsliding from righteousness, the lacke of discreete and learned Priestes, promoting of childrē into the Church with such other like. But these being alreadye well noted and marked, you may easely iudge and vnderstand, whether these times now present of ours be safe and cleare from tribulation to be looked for, and whether the word of the Lord be true according to my theame. Iuxta est iustitia mea vt reueletur, my righteousnes is neare at hande to bee reuealed. &c. And thus muche of the second part.

*Now to the third part or member of my subdeuision, which is concerning the false and perilous opinions of some, vpon thys word of my theame vt veniat &c. which opinions principally be 4. repugning all agaynst the truth of the canonicall Scripture.

The first opinion is of such men, who hauing to much confidence in thēselues, do think and perswade with themselves, that the Prelates be the Church, which the Lord will alwayes keepe and neuer forsake as he hath promised in the persons of the Apostles. Mathew. 28. saying: And I will be with you to the end of the world. &c But this is to be vnderstanded of fayth, whereof Christ speaketh Luke. 21. I haue prayd for thee, that thy fayth shall not fayle. Whereof we read Ecclesiast. 40. fayth shall stand for euer. &c. And albeit Charity waxe neuer so colde, yet fayth notwithstanding, shall remayne in few, and in all distresses of the world: of the which distresses, our Sauour doth prophecy in many places to come And least peradventure some shoulde thinke themselves to be safe from tribulation because they be of the church, this opinion the Lord himselfe doth contrary in Ieremy the 7.* Trust not (sayth he) in false lying wordes, saying: the temple of the Lord, the temple of the Lord, and a litle after, but you trust in wordes and lying counselles which deceiue you and doe you no good.

The second opinion is of them,* which deferre tyme, for thys they well graunt, that the Church shall abide trouble, but not so shortly: thinking thus with thēselues, that these causes & tokens afore recited, haue bene before at other times as well in the churche. For both by Gregory and Bernard holy doctors, in time past the Prelates haue bene in like fort reprehended, both for theyr bribinges, for theyr Pompe and pride, for the promoting of persons and children vnfitte vnto ecclesiasticall functions and other vyces moe, which haue reigned before this in the Church of God more then now, and yet by God his grace, the Churche hath prospered and stand. Doe ye not see, that if an house haue stand and continued ruinous a long season, it is neuer more neare the fall thereby, but rather to be trusted the better? Moreouer, many times it commeth so to passe in Realmes and Kingdomes, that the posterity is punished for the sinnes of the predecessors. Whereof speaketh the booke of Lamentations the 5. chapter. Our fathers haue sinned, and are now gone, and we must beare their wickednesse.* &c. Agaynst this cogitation or opinion well doth the Lord aunswere by the Prophet Ezechiel chapter 12 saying: Beholde thou sonne of man the house of Israel sayeth in this maner.* Tush as for the vision that he hath seene, it will bee many a day or it come to passe: It is farre of yet, the thing that he prophecieth. Therefore say vnto them, thus sayth the Lord God: The wordes that I haue spoken shall be deferred no longer, looke what I haue sayd, shall come to passe sayth the Lord. &c. We haue seene in our dayes thinges to happen, which seemed before incredible. And the like hath bene seene in other times also: as we read written in the booke of Lamentations chapter. 4. The kinges of the earth nor all the inhabitaunce of the worlde would not haue beleueed,* that the enemy and aduersary shoulde haue come in at the gates of the Citty, for the sinnes of her priestes, and for the wickenesse of her Elders that haue shedde Innocentes blood within her. &c. by Hierusalem, as is sayd, is ment thē Church.

The third opinion or error is very perilous and peruerse, of all such as say, * veniat, let come that will come: Let vs conforme out selues to this world, and take our time with those Temporifers which say in the booke of wisdom. Sap. 2. Come let vs enioy our goodes and pleasures that be present,  and let vs vse the creature as in youth quickly. &c. Such as these be, are in daungerous case, and be greatly preiudicial to good men in the Church: And if the heades and rulers of the Church were so vile to haue any such detestable cogitation in them, there were no place in hell to deepe for them. This Church founded by the Apostles in Christ, consecrated with the bloud of so many Martyrs, enlarged and increased with the vertues and merites of so many Sayntes, and indued so richly with the deuotion of so many secular princes, and so long prospered hetherto: If it now should come into the hands of such persons, it should fall in great daunger of ruine, and they for theyr negligence and wickednes well deserued of God to be cursed, yea here also in this present world to incurre temporall tribulation and destruction, which they feare more: by the sentence of the Lord saying to them in the booke of Prouerbes cap. 1.  All my counsels ye haue despised, and set my correctiō at nought. Therefore shall I also laugh in your destruction, when tribulation and anguish shall fall vpon you.

Fourthly, an other opinion or errour is of such as being vnfaithfull,  beleue not any such thing to come. And this errour semeth to haue no remedy, but that as other thinges & other kingdomes haue theyr endes and limittes set vnto them, which they cannot ouerpasse: 80 it must needes be, that such a domination & gouernment of the Church haue an end, by reason of the demerites and obstinacyes of the gouernors prouoking and requiring the same: like as we reade in the Prophet Ieremy cap. 8.  There is no man that taketh repentaunce for his sinne, that will so much as say, wherefore haue I done this? But euery man runneth forth still like a wilde horse in a battell And the Prophet Ieremy in the 13.  chapter of his prophecy: Like as the man of Inde may chaunge his skinne, and the Cat of mountayne her spottes, so may ye that be exercised in euill, doe good. Whereunto also accordeth that which is written of the same Prophet. chap. 17. speaking of Iuda signifying the Church:  The sinne of Iuda (sayth he) is written in the table of your hartes, and grauen so vpō the edges of your altars with a penne of Iron, and with an Adamant claw, which is as much to say, as indelible, or which cannot be raced out: as also Ezechiell speaking of the punishment,  chapter 21. sayth: I the Lord haue drawne out my sword out of the sheath, and cannot be reuoked. Notwithstanding, all these signifye no impossibility, but difficulty, because that wicked men are hardly conuerted: for otherwise the Scripture importeth no such inflexibility Page 418 with God, but if conuersion come, he will forgeue. So we read in the Prophet Ionas cap. 3.  Who can tell? God may turne and repent, and cease from his fierce wrath that we perish not. And to the like effect sayth the same Lord in Ieremy. cap 26 Looke thou keepe not one word backe, * if peradventure they will harken and turne euery man from his wicked way, that I also may repent of of the plague which I haue determined to bring vpon them, because of their wicked inuentiōs. &c. For the further prooffe wherof Niniuy we see conuerted, and remayned vndestroyd. &c. Likewise, the Lorde also had reuealed destruction vnto Constantinople by sundry signes and tokens, as Augustine in a certayne Sermon doth declare. And thus for the third part or member of my deuision.

Fourthly and lastly remayneth to declare, some wholesome concluding now vpon the causes preceding: That is, if by these causes and signes (heretofore declared) tribulation be prepared to fall vpon the Church, then let vs humble our mindes mildly and wisely. And if we so returne with hart and in deed vnto God, verely he shall rescue and helpe after an inestimable wise: and will surcease from scourging vs, as he promiseth by his Prophet Ieremy. 18. If that people agaynst whom I haue thus deuised, cōuert from their wickednesse, immediately I will repent of the plague that I deuised to bring vpon them: speaking here after the maner of men: &c. Now therefore, for so much as tribulation and affliction is so neare comming toward vs, yea lyeth vpon vs alreadye, let vs be the more diligent to call vpon God for mercy. For I thinke verely these many yeares •here hath not hene so many and so despihtfull hartes and euill willers, stout, and of such a rebellious hart aganst the Church of God, as be now adayes: neither be they lacking that would worke all that they can agaynst it, and louers of new fanglenes: whose hartes the Lord happelye will turne that they shall not hate his people and worke deceipte agaynst his seruauntes, I meane agaynst Priestes whom they haue now in little or no reputation at all:• Albeit many yet there bee through Gods grace, good and Godly. But yet the furye of the Lord is not turned away, but still his hand is stretched out. And vnlesse ye be conuerted, he shaketh his sworde, he hath bent his bowe, and prepared it readye. Yet the Lorde standeth wayting, that he may haue mercy vpon you. Esay. 30.* And therefore as the greatnesse of feare ought to incite vs, so hope of saluation may allure vs to pray and call vpon the Lord, especially now toward this holy and sacrat time and solemnity of Christes natiuity: For that holy and continuall prayer without intermission is profitable and the instant deuotion and vigilant deprecation of the iust man, is of great force. And if terreine kinges in the day of celebration of their natiuity, be wont to shew themselnes more liberall and bounteous, how much more ought we to hope wel, that the heauenly king of nature most benigne, now at his natall and byrth day, will not denye pardon and remission to such as rightly call vnto him.

And now therefore as it is written in Iosue chap. 7. Be you sanctified agaynst to morow. &c. And saw vnto him as it is written in the first booke of Kinges chap. 25. Now let thy seruaunts I pray thee finde fauour in thy sight, for we come to thee in a good season. Moreouer ye may finde that ye aske, if that ye aske that which he brought in the day of his Natiuity, that is, the peace of the Church, not spirituall onely but also temporall, which the angelicall noyse did sounde, and experience the same time dyd proue, testified by T. Liuius, Plinius, and other heathen storywriwriters, which all maruelled thereat saying: that such an vniuersal peace as that •ould not come on earth but by the gift of God. For so God did forepromise in the Prophet Esay. chap. 66.* Behold I will let peace into Ierusalem like a waterfloud. &c. And in the Psalme. 71.* In his time righteousnesse shal flourish, yea and abundance of peace. &c.

Therefore now (O reuerend fathers in the Lord,) & you here in this present assembly, behold I say the day of life and saluatiō: Now is the oportune time to pray vnto god, that the same thing which he brought into the world at his byrth, he will graunt in these dayes to his Church that is, his peace. And like as Niniuye was subuerted ouerturned, and not in members but in maners: so the same wordes of my theame, Iuxta est iustitia mea vt reueletur, may be verified in vs, not of the primitiue iustice, but of our sanctification by grace, so that: As to morow is celebrated the natiuity of our Sauour, our righteousnesse may rise together with him, and his blessing may be vpon vs, which God hath promised, saying: My sauing health is neare at hand to come. &c. Whereof speaketh Esay the Prophet,* chapte. 51. My sauing health shall endure foreuer. &c. This health graunt vnto vs the Father, Sonne and holy Ghost. Amen.

This Sermō was made by maister Nicholas Orem before Pope Urbane and his Cardinals vpon the euē of the Natiuity of the Lord, being the fourth Sonday of Aduent, in the yeare of our Lord, 1364. and the second of hys Hopedome.

*In the 5. yere of this forenamed Pope Urbane, began first the order of the Iesuites. And vnto this time whiche was about the yeare of our Lord, 1367. *the offices here in England, *as the Lord Chauncellor, Lord Treasurer, & of the priuy seale: were wont to be in the handes of the clergy. But about this yeare through the motion of the Lords in the Parliamēt, and partly (as witnesseth mine author) for hatred of the clergy: all the sayd offices were remoued from the clergy, to the Lordes temporall.

After the death of Pope Urbane, next succeeded Pope Gregory the 11. who among his other acres, first reduced agayne the papacy out of Fraunce vnto Rome, which had from thence bene absent, the space now of 70. yeres, being therto moued (as Sabellicus recordeth) by the answer of a certain bishop, whom as the Pope saw standing by him asked, why he was so long from his charge and church at home, *saying: not to be the part of a good Pastor, to keepe him from his flocke so long. *Wherunto the Bishop aunswering agayne, sayd: And you your selfe being the chiefe Bishoppe, who may and ought to be a spectacle to vs all: why are you from the place so long where your Church doth lye? By the occasion whereof, the Pope sought all meanes after that to remoue and to rid his Court out of Fraunce againe to Rome, and so he did.

This 11. Gregory in a certayne Bull of his sent to the Archb. of Prage, maketh mētion of one named Militzius a Bohemiā, & saith in y^e same bull y^t this Militzius should hold apinion. & teach. an. 1366. that Antechrist was alredy come. Also that the said Militzius had certayn cōgregations folowing him: & that in the same conragation were certain harlots, who being conuerted frō theyr wickednes were brought to a godly life. Which harlots being so conuerted, he vsed to say were to be preferred before al the holy religious virgins. And therfore commaunded the archbishop to excōmunicate and persecute the sayd Militzius, *which in foretime had bene a religious man of Prage, and after forsook his order, and gaue himselfe to preaching, and at length was by the foresayd Archb. imprisoned.

Iacobus Misnensis a learned man and a writer in y^e time of I. Hus, maketh mention of this Militzius, and calleth him a worthy and a famous Preacher. Also citeth many things out of his writings: In the which writinges thys good Militzius thus declareth of himself how he was moued & vrged by the holy Ghost to search out by the sacred Scriptures, *concerning the comming of Antechrist. And that he was compelled by the same holy spirite at Rome publickly to preach, and also before the Inquisitor there to protest plainly, that y^e same great Antechrist which is prophesyed of in y^r holy Scriptures, was alredy come. Moreouer his saying was, that the church through negligēce of the pastors was desolate, did abound in temporall riches, but in spirituall riches to be empty. Also that in y^r Church of Christ, where certayne Idols which destroyd Ierusalē, and defaced the Temple, but hypocrisye caused that those Idols could not be sene. Also that many there were which denied Christ, because that knowing the truth, yet for feare of mē they durst not confesse their conscience. &c. And thus much of good Militzius, liuing in the time of Gregory 11. and king Edward the third. an. 1370.

The which king of England holding a Parliamēt in the 3. yeare of this Pope, sent his Embassadors to hym, desiring him: that he from thenceforth would abstayne frō his reseruatiōs of benefices vsed in the court of England. And that spiritual men within his realme promoted vnto Bishopricks,might freely enioy theyr electiōs within the realme, and be confirmed by theyr Metropolitanes, according to the auncient custome of the realme. Wherefore, vpō these and such other like wherein the king and the realme thought thēselues greued, he desired of the Pope some remedy to be prouided. &c. Wherunto the Pope returned acertayne answeare agayne vnto the king, requiring by his messengers to be certified agayn of the kings mind cōcerning the same. But what answeare it was, it is not in y^e story expressed, saue that the yere folowing, which was 1374. there was a tractation at Burges vpon certain of the said articles betwene the king & the Pope, which did bāg two yeares in suspēse, so at length it was thus agreed betwene them: that the pope should no more vse his reseruatiōs of benefices in England, and likewise the king shoulde no more cōferre and geue benefices vpon the writ, Quare impedit. &c. But as touching the freedome of elections to be confirmed by the Metropolitane, mentioned in the yeare before, therof was nothing touched.

As touching these reseruatiōs, prouisiōs, and collations, with the elections of Archbishops, Bishops, beneficed men and other, wherwith the Pope vexed this realme of England, as before you haue heard. The king by y^e consent of the Lordes and commons, in the 25. yeare of hys raigne enacted: that according to a statute made in the 30. Page 419 yeare of his graundfather Edward the first, wherein was made an act against y^e rauinous pillage of the Pope, thorough the same prouisiōs, reseruatiōs, & collations. &c. but not put in execution. By the which prouisiōs, y^e state of the realme decreased more and more, the kings royaltie & prerogatiue greatly obscured and diminished, innumerable treasure of the realme transported, aliens & straungers placed in the best and fattest by shoprickes, abbeyes, and benefices within the realme. And suche, as eyther for their offices in Rome, as Cardinalships & such like could not be here resident,or if resident, yet better away for causes infinite, as partly haue bene touched before: Not onely reuiued the sayde statute made by Edward the first hys graundfather, but also enlarged the same. Adding therunto very strait and sharpe penalties against the offenders therin, or in any part therof, as exemptiō out of the kings protection, losse of al their lands, goods, and other possessions, and theyr bodies to be imprisoned at the kings pleasure: And farther, who so euer was lawfully conuict, or otherwise for want of appearance by proces directed forth, were wythin the lappes of this statute or premunire (for so bare the name therof) shuld suffer al and euery such molestation & iniuries, as men exempted frō the protection of the king. In so much, that who so euer had killed such mē, had bene in no more daunger of lawe therefore, then for the killing of an outlaw, or one not worthy to liue in a commō weale. Lyke vnprofitable members were they then in that tyme, yea of ignoraunce esteemed in thys common weale of Englande, as would offer themselues to the wilfull slavery and seruile obedience of the pope: which thyng in these dayes, yea and that amōgst no small fooles, is coūted more then Euangelicall holynes. He that list to peruse the statute, and would see euery braunch and article therof at large discussed and handled, wyth the penalties therefore due:Let him read the statute of prouision and premunire, made in the 25. yeare of thys kynges dayes. And let hym read in the statutes made in the parliamentes holden the 27, yeare, and 38. yeare of hys raigne: And vnder the same title of prouision and premunire shall finde, the popes primacie and iurisdiction wythin this Realme more nearely touched, and much of hys papall power restrayned: In so much, that who soeuer for any cause or controuersy in law, either spirituall or temporal, y^e same being determinable in any of y^e kyngs courts (as all matters were) whether they were personall or reall, citations or other: or should eyther appeale or consent to any appellation, to be made out of the realme to the pope or see of Rome: should incurve the sayd penaltie and daunger of premunire. Diuers other matters wherein the Pope is restrained of his vsurped power, authoritie & iurisdiction within this realme of England: are in the sayd titles and statutes expressed, & at large set forth, who euer list to peruse the same, which for breuities sake I omitte, hastening to other matters.

*About this tyme, being the yeare of our Lorde. 1370. lyued holy Brigit, whom the Church of Rome hath canonised not onely for a saint,*but also for a Prophetesse: who notwithstanding in her booke of reuelations, which hath bene oft times imprinted, was a great rebuker of the pope, and of the filth of his clergie, callyng him a murtherer of soules, a spiller, and a pyller of the flocke of Christ: more abhominable then Iewes, more crueller thē Iudas: more vniust then Pilate, worse then Lucifer hymselfe. The see of the Pope she prophesieth, shalbe throwne down into the deepe, lyke a mylstone. And that his assister shall burne w^t brimstone: Affirmyng, that the prelates, byshops, & priests are the cause, why the doctrine of Christ is neglected, and almost extincted. And that the clergie haue turned the ten commaundementes of God into two wordes,*to wyt, Da pecuniam, that is, Geue money. It were long and tedious to declare all that she against them writeth. Among the rest which I omitte, let this suffice for all, where as the sayde Brigit affirmeth in her reuelations,*that when the holy Uirgine should say to her sonne, howe Rome was a fruitfull and fertile field: yea, sayd hee, but of weedes onely and cockle. &c.

To thys Brigit I will ioyne also Catherina Senensis, an holy virgin,*which lyued much about the same tyme, ann. 1379. Of whome writeth Antoninus. part. historiae. 3. Thys Katherine hauyng the spirite of prophesie, was wōt much to complaine of the corrupt state of the church, namely of the prelates of the court of Rome, & of the pope: prophesying before of the great schisme, which then folowed in the Church of Rome, and dured to the Councell of Constance, the space of xxxix, yeaes. Also of the great warres ano tribulation, which ensued vpon the same. And moreouer declared before and foretold, of this so excellēt reformation of religion in the Church now present. The words of Antoninus be these.*After this Uirgine in her going to Rome, had tolde her brother of the warres and tumultes that should rise in y^e coūtries about Rome, after y^e schisme of the two Popes. I then curious to know of thinges to come, & knowing that she vnderstood by reuelation what should happen, demaunded of her: I pray you (good mother) sayd I,and what shall befall after these troubles in the Church of God? And she sayd: By these tribulations and afflictions, after a secret maner vnknowne vnto man, God shall purge his holy Church, and stirre vp the spirit of his elect. And after these thinges shall follow suche a reformation of the holy Churche of God, and suche a renouation of holye Pastors, that the onely cogitation and remembraunce thereof maketh my spirit to reioyce in the Lord And as I haue oftentimes tolde you heretofore, the spouse which now is all deformed and ragged, shall be adorned and deckt with most rich and precious ouches and brouches. And all the faythfull shall be glad and reioyce to see themselues so beautified with so holy shepheards. Yea and also the Infidels then allured by the sweet sauour of Christ, shall returne to the catholicke folde, and be conuerted to the true Bishop and shepheard of their soules. Geue thanks therefore to God, for after this storme, he will geue to his a great calme. And after she had thus spoken, she stayd, and sayd no more.

Beside these aforementioned, the Lord which neuer ceaseth to worke in his Church: styrred vp agaynst the malignant church of Rome, the spirites of diuers other good & godly teachers,*as Matthias Parisiensis, a Bohemian borne, who about the yeare of our Lord 1370. wrote a large booke of Antechrist, and proueth him already come, and noteth y^e Pope to be the same.*Which booke one Illiricus a writer in these our dayes hath, & promiseth to put it in print. In this booke he doth greatly inuey against the wickednesse and filthines of the Clergy, and agaynst the neglecting of theyr duety in gouerning the church. The Locustes mentioned in the Apocalips, he sayth, be the hypocrites raigning in the church. The workes of Antechrist he sayth be these, the fables and inuentions of men raigning in the Church: the Images & fained reliques that are worshipped euery where. Itē, that men do worship euery one his proper Saint and Sauior beside Christ, so that euery mā and City almost hath his diuers and peculiar Christ. He taught and affirmed moreouer, that godlines & true worship of God, are not boūd to place, persons, or times, to be heard more in this place, thē in an other, at this time more thē at an other. &c. He argueth also agaynst the cloisterers which leauing the onely and true Sauior, set vp to them selues theyr Franciscanes, theyr Dominickes, and suche other: and haue them for theyr Sauiors, glorying and triumphing in them, and fayning many forged lyes vpon them. He was greatly and much offended with Monks & friers, for neglecting or rather burying the word of Christ and in stead of him, for celebrating & setting vp theyr own rules and canons, affirming it to be much hurtfull to true godlines, for that Priestes, Monkes, and Nunnes do account themselues onely spirituall, and all other to be lay & secular, attributing onely to themselues the opinion of holynes, & contemning other men, with al theyr politick administration & the office as prophane in cōparison of theyr owne. He further writeth that Antechrist, hath seduced all Uniuersities & Colleges of learned men, so that they teach no sincere doctrine, neither geue any light to the Christiās with theyr teaching. Finally, he forewarneth that it will come to passe, that God yet once againe will raise vp godly teachers, who being feruent in the spirite and zeale of Helias, shall disclose and refute the errors of Antechrist, and Antechrist himselfe, openly to the whole world. This Mathias in the sayd booke of Antechrist alledgeth the sayinges and writings of the Uniuersity of Paris, also the writings of Guilielmus de sacto amore, and of Militzius afore noted.

About the same time,*or shortly after. an. 1384. we read also of Ioannes of Mountziger, Rector of the Uniuersity of Ulme, who opēly in the scholes in his Oratiō propoūded that the body of Christ was not God, and therefore not to be worshipped as God with that kinde of worship called Latria, as the Sophister termeth it, meaning thereby the Sacrament not to be adored,which afterward he also defended by writing: affirming also that Christ in his resurrection tooke to him agayne all his bloud which in hys passion he had shed. Meaning thereby to inferre, that the bloud of Christ which in many places is worshipped, neither can be called the bloud of Christ, neither ought to be worshipped. But by and by he was resisted and withstood by the Monks and friers: who by this kinde of Idolatry were greatly enriched, till at length the Senate & councill of the city was fayne to take vp the matter betwene them.

Nilus was Archbishop of Thessalonica, & liued much Page 420 about this time. He wrote a long worke agaynst the Latins that is, agaynst such as tooke part and held with the Church of Rome. His first booke being written in Greeke, was after translated into latin, & lately now into english, in this our time. In the first chap. of his booke, he layeth all the blame and fault of the dissention & schisme betwene the East and the West Church vpon the Pope. He affirmed that the Pope onely would commaund what him listed, were it neuer so contrary to all the olde & auncient canōs. That he would heare and folow no mans aduise: that he would not permit any free cōūcels to be assēbled. &c. And that therefore it was not possible, that the cōtrouersies betwene the Greeke Church and Latine Church, should be decided and determined.

In the second chap. of his book, he purposely maketh a very learned disputation. For first he declareth that he no whit at all by Gods commaūdement, but onely by humain law, hath any dignity, more thē hath other bishops: which dignity, the Councels, the fathers, & the Emperors haue graunted vnto him: Neither did they graūt the same for any other consideration more, or greater ordinaunce: then for that the same City then had the Impery of all the whole world: and not at all for that that Peter euer was there, or not there.

Secondarily he declareth, that the same premacy or pre|rogatiue is not such and so great as he and his Sicophāts do vsurpe vnto thēselues. Also he refuteth the chieftest propositions of the Papistes one after an other. He declareth that the Pope hath no dominion more thē other Patriarches haue, and that he himselfe may erre as well as other mortall men: and that he is subiect both to lawes & councels, as well as other Bishops. That it belonged not to him, but to the Emperor, to call generall councels: & that in Ecclesiasticall causes he could establish and ordeine no more then all other Bishops might. And lastly, that he get|teth no more by Peters succession, then that he is a Byshop as all other Bishops after the Apostles be.*&c.

I can not among other, folowing here the occasion of this matter offered, leaue out y^e memory of Iacobus Misnensis, who also wrote of the comming of Antechrist. In y^e same he maketh mentiō of a certayn learned man, whose name was Militzius, which Militzius (sayth he) was a famous and worthy preacher in Parga. He liued about y^e yere. 1366. long before Husse, and before Wickliffe also. In the same his writings he declareth, how y^e same good man Militzius was by the holy spirit of God incited, and vehe|mently moued to search out of y^e holy Scriptures the maner and comming of Antechrist: and found that now in his time he was all ready come. And the same Iacobus sayth, that the sayd Militzius was constrayned by the spirite of God to go vp to Rome, & there publickely to preach. And that afterward before y^e Inquisitour he affirmed the same. That the same mighty and great Antechrist, the which the Scriptures made mention of, was already comen.

He affirmed also, that the Church by the negligence of the Pastors, should become desolate: and that iniquitye should abound, that is, by reason of Mammon, master of iniquitie. Also, he sayde that there were in the Church of Christ idols, which shoulde destroy Ierusalem, and make the tēple desolate, but were cloked by hypocrisy. Further, that there be many whych deny Christ, for that they keepe silence: neither do they heare Christ, whome all the world should know and cōfesse his verity before men, which also wittingly do detaine the verity and iustice of God.

*There is also a certaine Bull of Pope Gregory 11. to the Archbishop of Praga: wherein he is commanded to excommunicate and persecute Militzius and his auditours. The same Bull declareth, that he was once a Chanon of Praga, but afterward he renounced his Canonship, & began to preache: who also for that he so manifestly preached of Antichrist to be already come: was of Iohn Archbishop of Praga put in prison, declaring what hys errour was. To wit, howe he had his company or cōgregation to whō he preached, and that amongst the same were certain conuerted harlots, which had forsaken their euill life, and did liue godly and well: whych harlots he accustomed in hys sermons to preferre before all the blessed virgins that neuer offended. He taught also openly, that in the Pope, cardinals, Bishops, prelates, priests, & other religious men: was no truth, neither that they taught the way of truth, but that onely he, & such as held with him, taught the true way of saluation. His Postill in some places is yet to be sene. They alledge vnto him certaine other inconuenient articles, which notwithstanding I thinke, the aduersaries to deprave him with all, haue slanderously inuented against hym. He had as appeared by the foresaid Bull, very many of euery state and condition, as wel rich as pore, that cleaued vnto him.

About the yeare of our Lord. 1371. liued Henricus de Iota, whom Gerson doth much commend, and also his companiō Henricus de Hassia, an excellent learned and famous man. An Epistle of this Henricus de Hassia which he wrote to the Bishoppe of Normacia, Iacobus Carisiensis inserted in his booke De erroribus Christianorum. In the same Epistle, the author doth greatly accuse the spirituall men of euery order, yea and the most holiest of all other the Pope himselfe, of many and great vices. He sayd, that the Ecclesiasticall gouernors in the primitiue Church, were compared to the sunne shining in the day time, and the politicall gouernors, to the Moone, shyning in the night. But the spirituall men he said, that now are, do neuer shine in the day time, nor yet in y^e night time, but rather with theyr darcknes do obscure both the day and night, that is: with theyr filthy liuing, ignorance, and impiety. He citeth also out of the prophesy of Hildegadis these words: Therefore doth y^r deuill in himselfe speake of you Priests: Dainty bankets & feasts, wherein is all voluptuousnes do I finde amongst these men: In so much that mine eies, mine eares my belly, and my vaynes, be euen filled with the froth of them, & my brestes stand astrut with the riches of them. &c. Lastly, saith he, they euery day more and more as Lucifer did, seek to climbe higher and higher: till that euery day with hym more and more, they fall deeper and deeper.

About the yeare of our Lord. 1390. there were burned at Bringa 36. Citizens of Moguntina, for the doctrine of Waldenses, as Brushius affirmeth: which opiniō was no thing contrary to that they held before, wherein they affirmed the Pope to be that great Antechrist, which should come: Unlesse peraduenture the Pope seemed then to be more euidently conuicted of Antechristianity thē at any other time before, he was reueled to be.

For the like cause, many other beside these, are to be found in storyes, which sustained the like persecutiō by the Pope, if leysure would serue to peruse all that might be searched. As where Masseus recordeth of diuers to the nūber of 140. which in the prouince of Narbone chose rather to suffer whatsoeuer greuous punishment by fire, thē to receiue the decretals of the Romish Church, contrary to the vpriht truth of the Scripture.

What should I here speake of the 24. which suffered at Paris. an. 1210? Also in the same author is testified that an. 1211. there were 400. vnder the name of heretiques burned 80. beheaded: Prince Americus hanged, and the Lady of the Castle stoned to death.

Moreouer, in the Chronicles of Houedon, and of other writers be recited, a maruelous nūber, which in the countryes of Fraunce were burned for heretiques. Of whom, some were called Publicans, some Catharits, some Paterines, and other by others names. What their assertions were, I finde no certayne report worthy of credit

In Trittenius is signified of one Eckhardus a Dominican Frier,*who not long before Wickliffes tyme, was condemned and suffered for heresy at Hedelberge. an. 2330. who as he diffreth not much in name, so may he be supposed to be the sawe, whom other do name Beghardus, and is sayd to be burned at Erphord.

Of Albingenses because sufficient mētion is made before of whom a great number were burned about the time of king Iohn, I passe them ouer.

Likewise I let passe the heremite,*of whom Iohn Bacon maketh relation, in hys. 2. Dist. Quaest. 1. Who disputing in Paules church, affirmed that those Sacraments, which were then vsed in y^e church, were not instituted by Christ, An. 1306. Peraduenture it was the same Ranulphus, mētioned in the floure of hystories, & is sayd to die in prison: for the time of them doth not much differ.

In Boetius, why the Pope should so much commend a certaine king, because for one man, he had slaine 400. cutting away the genitals from the rest, I can not iudge, except the cause were that, which the Pope calleth heresie.

But to let these things ouerpasse that be vncertayne, because neither is it possible to comprehend all them which haue w^tstand the corruption of the popes sea: neyther haue we any such firme testimony left of their doings, credibly to stay vpon: we wil now (Christ willing) cōuert our story, to thyngs more certaine & vndoubted, grounding vpon no light reportes of feble credit, nor vpō any fabulous legendes wythout authority: But vpon the true and substantial copies of the publique recordes of the Realme, remaining yet to be sene vnder the kings most sure & faithfull custody.*Out of the which records, such matter appeareth against the Popish church of Rome, and against hys vsurped authority, such open stāding & crying against the sayd sea, & that not priuely, but also in open parliament, in the daies of this king Edward the third: that neyther wil Page 421 the Romish people of thys our age easely thynke it to be true when they see it, neither yet shall they be able to deny the same, so cleare standeth the force of those recordes.

Ye heard a litle before, pag. 381. howe Iohn Stratford Archb. of Cant. being sent for and required by the king to come vnto hym,*refused so to do. What the cause was why he denyed to come at the kings sending, is neither touched of Poiidore Uirgil, nor of any other monkish Chronicler, wryting of those aces and times. Whose part hath bene, faithfully to haue dispensed the simple truth of thyngs don to theyr posterity. But that whych they dissemblingly and colourably haue concealed, contrary to true lawe of storie, the true cause thereof we haue found out by the true Parliament roles, declaring the story thus.

King Edward the 3. in the 6. yeare of hys raigne, hearing that Edward Bailol had proclaimed himselfe kyng of Scotland:*Required counsell of the whole estate to wit, whether were better for hym to assaile Scotlande, and to claim the demesing or demeines of the same: or cls by making hym party to take hys aduauntage. And thereby to enioy the seruice, as other hys auncesters before hym had done. For thys cause he sommoned a Parliament of all estates to meete at Yorke, about the begynning of December. Where the kyng was alredy come, waiting for y^e comming of such as were warned thereunto. For the want of whose comming, the parliament was reiourned til monday, and from thence to Tuesday next ensuing. But forsomuch as most of the states were absent, the assembly required the continuance of the parliament, vntil the vtas of S. Hillary then ensuing at Yorke, whych was graunted. And so a new summons was especially awarded to euery person with special charge to attend, so that the affaires of the king and the realme myght not be hindered, because of the debate betwene the Archb. of Cant. and Archbishop of Yorke, for the superiour bearing of theyr crosse.

*In conclusion, for all the kyngs summoning, none other of all the Clergy came, but onely the Archb. of Yorke, the byshop of Lincolne, and of Carliel, & Abbots of Yorke and Seleby. So that hereunto came not the Archb. of Cāterb. nor any other of hys prouince, and all for bearing the crosse. Werby the same was not onely a losse to the oportunitie to Scotland: but also an importable charge to the whole estate by a newe reassembly. And thus much out of the recordes. Whereby thou mayest easely iudge (prudent Reader) what is to be thought of these Pope holy Catholique Churchmen) being of the Popes broode and setting vp whom such friuolous causes of contention stirre vp to such disquietnes, both among themselues, and also to such disobedience against their Prince: excuse them who can. Ex. An. 6. Regis Edwardi 3.

*It foloweth moreouer in the same records, concerning the abandoning of the popes prouisions: how that the cōmons finde great default at prouisions commyng from Rome, wherby straungers were enabled wⁱn this realme to enioy ecclesiastical dignities, & shew diuers inconueniences ensuing thereby, namely the decay of daily almose, y^e transporting of the treasure to nourish the kings enemies the discovering of the secrets of the realme, & the disabling and impouerishing of the clerkes within this realme.

They also shew how the pope had in most couert wyse graunted to two new Cardinalles wythin thys Realme, *(and namely to Cardinall Peragotz) aboue ten thousand markes of yerely taxes: They therfore required the kyng and nobles to finde some remedy, for that they neuer could ne would any longer beare those straunge oppressions, or els to helpe them to expell out of thys realme the Popes power by force.

Hereupon, the King, Lords, and commōs, sent for the act made at Carliel, *in the 35. yere of king Edward y^e first, vpon the lyke complaint: thereby forbidding, y^t any thyng shoulde be attempted or brought into the Realme, whych should tend to the blemishing of the kings prerogatiue, or to the preiudice of hys Lords or commons. And so at thys time, the statute called the acte of prouision was made by common consent, whych generally forbiddeth the brynging in of any Bulles, or such trinkets from the Court of Rome, or the vsing, enioying, or allowing of any such bil, processe, instrument, or such ware, as therby at large doth appeare. Whereof sufficiently is touched before, pag. 353.

The penalty of whych statute afterwarde followed in the next parliament, * An. Reg. Ed. 18. tit. 32. the whych penalty was this: the transgressors thereof to lie in perpetuall prison, or to be foriured the land. And that al iustices of assize, gaile deliuery, and yer and determiner, may determine the same. Required withall, that the same act of prouision, should continue for euer.

Item, that the sayd 18. yeare of the raigne of king Edward, tit 34. it was moreouer propoūded: that if any archbyshop, or any person religious or other, doe not present wⁱn 4. monthes some able clerke to any dignitie, where any person hath obtayned from Rome any prouision, Bul, &c. but surcease the same: that then the Kyng may present some able clerke.*

Item, propounded in the sayd Parliament, an. 18. Reg. Ed 3. that if any Byshop elect, shall refuse to take any suche byshoprikes, other then by such Bull: that then such elect, shal not enter ne enioy hys temporalties without his speciall licence.

Also,*that the king shall dispose all such benefices and dignities of such aliens his enemies, as remain in the coūtrei of hys enemyes, and employ the profites therof to the defence of the realme.

Moreouer propounded,*that commissioners be sent to all the kings portes, to apprehend all such persons as shal bring in any such instrument frō Rome, and to bring them forthwyth before the counsaile to answeare thereto.

Propounded farthermore,*that the Deanry of Yorke which is to be recouered by iudgemēt in the kyngs court, may be bestowed vpon some able man within the realme, who will maintaine the same agaynst hym (meanyng the Cardinall, who holdeth the same by prouision frō Rome, being the enemy to the king and to the realm) and that the profites may be employed to the defence of the realme.

The kynges aunswere.*To all whych petitions aunswere was made in forme followyng: It is agreed by the King, Earles, Barons, Iustices, & other wise men of the Realme, that the petitions aforesayd, be made in sufficient forme of law, according to the petitions aforesayd.

Note in thys answere of the kyng (good reader) that at the graunt hereof,*the consent of the byshops is neyther named, nor expressed, with the other Lords of the Parliament: and yet, the Parliament standeth in hys full force, notwythstanding.

Notes of the Parliament holden in the 20. yeare of king Edward 3.

TO passe farther in the 20. yeare of the kings reigne in the Parliament holden the same yere,* it was propoūded: that all alien Monkes should auoyde the Realme by the day of S. Michael, and that theyr liuings shuld be disposed, to young English scholers. The liuings of these the king tooke to hys handes.

Item, that the king may take the profites of all others strangers liuings,* as Cardinals and others, during their liues. The profites of whō were also in the kings hands.

That such aliens enemies, as be aduanced to liuyngs here in England (being in their owne countreys, shomakers, tailers, or chamberlaines to Cardinals) shuld depart before Michaelmas, and theyr lyuings disposed to poore English scholers. The lyuings also of these remayned in the kings handes.

The commons denied to pay any paiment, to any cardinals lying in Fraunce, to entreat of war or peace: which also was graunted of the kings part as reasonable.

Item, propounded and fully agreed, that the yearely aduauncement of two thousand markes (graunted by the pope to two Cardinals,* out of the prouinces of Canterb. and Yorke) should be restrained, and suche as shall pursue therfore to be out of the law.

Lykewise enacted and agreed, that no Englysh man should take any thing in ferme of any Alien religious, ne buy any of their goods, nor be of theyr counsaile, on payne of perpetuall imprysonment.

Enacted further, that no person should bryng into the realme to any Byshop or other, any Bul, or any other letters from Rome, or from any Alien: vnlesse he shewe the same to the Chauncelour or warden of the Cinque ports, vpon losse of all he hath.

Finally, in the end of the said Parliament, the bishops were commaunded before the next conuocation, to certify into the Chancery the names of such Aliens, of their benefices, and the values of the same.

Notes of the 25. yeare of kyng Edward the third.

The Parliament of the 25. yeare,* was begon the 6. day of February, the 25. yeare of king Edward 3. In the which parliament beside other matters mo, was propounded: that remedy might be had against the popes reseruations, by which brocage and meanes the pope receiued the first fruits of all Ecclesiastical dignities: A more consumption to the Realme, then all the kings warres.

Page 431 Also the like remedy myght be had against suche, as in the Court of Rome presume to vndoe any iudgement geuen in the kinges courte,* as if they enforced to vndoe the lawes of the realme.

Wherunto it was answered, that there was sufficient remedy prouided by law.

Notes of the 38. yeare of king Edward the third.

IN the Parliament holden at Westminster, the 38. yeare of Edward 3. in the vtaues of Hillary (Symon Byshop of Ely being Lorde Chauncelour) it was required by the kings owne mouth, & declared to the whole estates: How daily citations & false suggestions were made to the pope, for matters determinable in his courtes w^tin the Realme, and for procuring prouisions to Ecclesiasticall dignities, to the great defacing of the ancient lawes, to the spoyling of his crowne, to the daily conueying away of the treasure to the wasting of ecclesiastical liuings, to the withdrawing of diuine seruice, almose, hospitalitie, and other acceptable workes, and to the daily increase of all mischiefes: Wherfore, in person and by hys owne month, the king required the whole estate to prouide here of due remedy.

To be noted finally in thys parliament of the 38. yere, that the Acte of prouisors, brought in thys parliament, although in the printed copy.*cap. 1.2.3.4. doth agree with the recorde, in maner: yet in the saide recordes vnprinted, are moe biting wordes against the Pope: a mysterie not to be knownen of all men.

Notes of the 40. yeare of king Edward the third.

IT followeth moreouer in the sayd Acts of king Edward the 3. and in the 40. yere of his raigne, an other Parliament was called at Westminster the 3. of May. An. 1366. the Bishop of Ely being Lord Chauncelour and speaker. Who in the 2. day of the sayd assembly in the presence of the King, Lordes and commons, declared: howe the day before, generally they vnderstoode the cause of thys their assembly, and now more particularly shuld vnderstand the same: specially howe that the king vnderstode, y^e the Pope (for the homage which K. Iohn made to the sea of Rome for the Realmes of Englād & Ireland, and for the tribute by him granted) ment by proces to cite the king of Rome, to aunswere thereto. Wherein, the king required their aduises, what were best for him to do, if any such thing were attempted. The Byshops by their selues required respite of answere, vntill the next day. So did the Lordes & commons euery of them by their selues.

The same next day, the whole estates reassembled together, & by common consent enacted in effect following, * vz. For asmuch as neither K. Iohn nor any other kyng, coulde bring his realme & people in such thraldome & subiection, but by common assent of Parliament, the whyche was not done: and therefore done against his othe at hys coronation (besides many other causes.) If therefore the Pope should attempt any thing against the King, by processe or other matter in deede: That the king shall his subiects, should withall their force and power resist the same.

Here moreouer is not to be omitted, howe in the sayd present Parliament, the Uniuersities of Oxford & Cambridge on the one side, and the Friers of the foure orders mēdicants in the said vniuersities on the other side: Made long complaintes the one against the other, to the kyng in Parliament, and in the ende submitted themselues to the kings order.

After which, the king vpon full digesting of the whole matter (by assent of Parliament) tooke order: that as well the Chancelour & scholers, as the friers of those orders in the sayd Uniuersities: should in al graces and other schole exercises, vse eche other in frendly wise, wythout any rumor as before. That none of those orders, shoulde receyue any scholers into theyr sayde orders, being vnder the age of 18. yeares.

*That the said Friers shall take no aduantage, ne procure Bulles or other processe from Rome, against the said vniuersities, or procede therein.

And that the kyng haue power to redresse all controuersies, betweene them from thence forth. And the offenders to be punished at the pleasure of the King, and of the counsaile.

 Notes of the 50. yeare of king Edward the third.

IN processe of the foresayd Actes and Rolles, it followeth more, that in the 50. yeare of the reigne of king Edward the 3. the yeare of our Lorde 1376. an other great Parliament was assembled at Westminster the xxiiij. of Aprill: Where, Syr Iohn Knyuet being Lorde Chauncelour of England, a certaine long Bill was put vp against the vsurpatiōs of the Pope, as being the cause of all y^e plagues, murrions, famine, and pouerty of the realme, so as thereby was not left the third person, or other cōmodity within the realme that lately was.

2. That the taxes payed to the Pope of Rome for Ecclesiasticall dignities,* doe amount to fiue fold as much, as the taxe of al profites as apperteine to the king by the yeare of his whole Realme: And that for some one Byshoprike or other dignitie, the Pope by way of translation and death, hath 3.4. or 5. seuerall taxes.

3. That the brokers of that sinfull Citie,* for money promote many caitifes (being altogether vnlearned and vnworthy) to a 1000. markes lyuing by yeare, where the learned and worthy can hardly obtaine 20. marks, wherelearning decayeth.

4. That aliens (enemyes to this land) who neuer saw ne care not to se their parishioners,* haue those liuings wherby they despise Gods seruice, & conuey away the treasure, and are worse then Iewes or Sarasens.

5. Also it was put vp in the said Bill to be considered, that the lawes of the church, would such liuings to be bestowed for charitie, onely without praying or paying.

6. That reason woulde that liuings geuen of deuotion, should be bestowed in hospitality.

7. That God had committed his sheepe to the Pope, to be pastured and not shoren or shauen.

8. That lay patrones perceiuing the couetousnes and simony of the pope,* do therby learne to sell their benefices to beasts, none otherwise then Christ was sold to the Iewes.

9. That there is none so rich a Prince in Christendome, that hath the fourth part of so much treasure, as the Pope hath out of this realme, for churches most sinfully.

10. Ouer and besides in the sayd Bill,* repeting againe the tendering zeale, for the honor of the Church: was declared and particularly named, all the plagues whych haue iustly fallen vpon this realme, for suffering the same church to be so defaced, wyth declaration that it will daily encrease wythout redresse.

11. Wherupon,* with much persuasion this was desired, to helpe to reedifie the same: and the rather for that, this was the yeare of Iubiley, the 50. yeare of the kynges reigne, the yeare of ioy and gladnesse, then the whych there could be no greater.

12. The meanes howe to begyn this, was to wryte 2. letters to the Pope: the one in Latine vnder the kyngs scale, the other in French vnder the seales of the nobles, importing their particularities, & requiring redres, of the which letter of the Lordes, the effect may be seene in a like letter mentioned before, pag. 479.

13. And for a further accomplishment hereof to enact,* that no money were caried foorth of the realme by letter of Lūbardy or otherwise, or paine of forfeiture and imprisonment, and to enact the articles hereafter ensuing.

14. The king hath heretofore by statute prouided sufficiēt remedy, and otherwise pursueth the same with the holy father the Pope, & so mindeth to do from time to time, vntill he hath obtained aswel for the matters before, as for the articles ensuing being in a maner all one.

15. That the popes collector & other straungers the kings enemies,* and onely lyger spies for English dignities, and disclosing of the secretes of the realme, may be touched.

16. That the same collectour being also receauour of the popes pence, keepeth a house in London with clerkes and officers therto, as it were one of the kings solēne courtes, transporting yearly to the Pope xx. M. markes, and most commonly more.

17. That Cardinals & other aliens remaining at Rome, wherof one Cardinall is Deane of Yorke, an other of Salisbury, an other of Lyncoln, an other archdeacon of Canterbury, an other Archdeacon of Duresme, an other archdeacon of Suffolk, an other Archdeacon of York, an other prebendary of Thame & Nassington, an other prebendary of Buckes in the Church of Yorke: Haue diuers of the best dignities of England,* & haue sent ouer to them yerely xx. M. marks ouer and aboue that whych English brokers lying there, haue.

18. That the Pope (to raunsome the Frenchmenne the kings enemyes, who defond Lumbardy from hym) doeth alwaies at his pleasure leuie a subsidy of the whole Clergie of England.

19. That the Pope for more gaine maketh sundry translations of all the Byshoprickes and other dignities wythin the Realme.

Page 42320. That the popes collector hath this yere taken to hys dic the first fruits of all benefices, by collatiō or prouision.

*21. To renue all the statutes against prouisors frō Rome, sith that the Pope reserueth all the benefices of the worlde for hys owne proper gift, & hath thys yere created 12. new Cardinals, so as nowe there are thirty, where was wont to be but 12. and all those Cardinals, except 2. or 3. are the kings enemies.

22. That the Pope in tyme, wil geue the temporall mannors of those dignities to y^e kings enemies,* sith he so daily vsurpeth vpon the Realme, and the kings regalities.

23. That all houses and corporatiōs of religion, who vnto the kings raigne nowe had free election of heades, the Pope hath encroched the same to hymselfe.

24. That in all legacies from the Pope, whatsoever: the English clergie beareth the charge of the legates,* and all for the goodnesse of our money.

25. And so it appeareth, that if the money of the Realme were as plentiful as euer it was: the Collectors aforesaid, wyth the Proctors of Cardinals, would soone conuey the same.

26. For remedy heereof it may be prouided, that no suche Collector or Proctor doe remayne in Englande, on payne of lyfe and member. And that no Englysh man on the like payne, become any such Collector or Proctor, or remayne at Rome.

27. For better information hereof, and namely touchyng the Popes Collector, for that the whole clergy beyng obedient to him, dare not displease hym: It were good, that syr Iohn Strensale, parson of S. Botulphes in Holborne, may be sent to come before the Lordes and commons of this Parliament. who beyng straightly charged, can declare much more, for that hee serued the same Collector in house 5. yeares.

* And thus much of this bil touching the popes matters: wherby it may appere, not to be for nought that hath bene vpon vs reported by the Italians and other straungers, which vsed to call English men good Asses: for they beare all burdens that be layd vpon them.

*Item, in the said parliament it was prouided also, that such order as is made in London against the horrible vice of vsury, may be obserued throughout the whole realme.

The commons of the dioces of Yorke complaine of the outrageous taking of the Byshop and his clarkes,* for admission of priestes to their benefices.

To these recordes of the parliament aboue prefixed of the 50. yere of thys king Edward: we will adioyne also other notes, collected out of the parliament, in the yere next following, which was 51. and last yeare of this kings life and raigne, An. 1377. the 27. of Ianuary: Although in the printed boke, these statutes are said to be made at the parliament holden, as aboue in the 50. yeare whych is muche mistaken, and ought to be referred to the 51. yere, as by the recordes of the sayd yere, manifestly doth appeare.

In which Parliament, the Byshop of S. Davids being Lord Chauncelour, making a long oration, taking his theame out of S. Paul: Libenter suffertis insipientes. &c. Declaring in the sayde Oration many thyngs, as first, in shewing the ioyfull newes of the olde kings recouerye: then declaring the loue of God toward the king and realme, in chastising hym wyth sicknesse: Afterwarde shewyng the blessing of God vpon the king, in seeing hys childrēs children: Then by a similitude of the head & members, exhorting the people as members to cōforme themselues to the goodnesse of the head. Lastly, hee turned his matter to the Lordes and the rest, declaring the cause of that assembly: that for somuch as the Frenche kyng had allyed hymselfe wyth the Spanyardes and Scottes the kyngs enemyes, whych had prepared great powers, conspiring to blot out the English tonge and name: the king therefore was willyng to haue therein their faithfull counsaile.

This being declared by the Bishop: Sir Robert Ashton the kings chamberlaine, declaring y^t he was to moone them from the king, for the profit of the realme (the whych wordes perca•e lay not in the Byshops mouth, for that it touched the Pope) vz. By protesting first, that the Kyng was ready to do al that ought to be done for the pope. But for that diuers vsurpations were done by the Pope to the Kyng hys crowne, and Realme, as by particular billes in thys parliament should be shewed, he required of them to seeke redresse.

In this present parliament petition was made by the commons, that all prouisors of things from Rome, & their ministers, should be out of the kings protection.

Whereunto the kyng answered, that the Pope had promysed redresse, whych if hee did not, the lawes then should stand.

It was also in that Parliament required, that euery person of what sexe soeuer,* being professed of any religion, continuing the habite of 15. yeares, may vpon the triail of the same in any of the kings courts, be in law vtterly forbarred of all inheritaunce, albeit he haue dispensation from the pope. Against which dispensation, is the chief grudge. whereunto the king and the lordes answered, saying, that they would prouide.

Item, in the sayde Parliament was propounded, that the statute of prouisors made at any time may be executed, and that remedy may be had agaynst such Cardinalles, as haue wythin the prouinces of Caunterbury and Yorke, purchased reseruations,* wyth the clause of Anteferri, to the value of xx. or xxx. thousande Scures of golde agaynst the Popes Collector: who was wont to be an Englishman, and now is a mere French, residing at London, & conueieth yearly to the Pope xx. M. markes, or xx. M. pounce, who this yeare gathereth the first frutes whatsoever. Alledging the meanes to meete wyth these reseruations and nouelries, as: to commaund all straungers to depart the Realme during the warres, that no English man to become their farmour, or to send to them any mony without speciall licence, on payne to be out of the kings protection: whereunto was answered by the kyng, that the statutes and ordinaunces therefore made, should be obserued.

In these rolles and recordes of such Parliaments as was in this kings time continued,* diuers other thynges are to be noted muche worthy to be marked, and not to be suppressed in silence. Wherein the Reader may learne and vnderstand the state of the kings iurisdiction here wythin this realme, not to be straightned in those daies (although the Pope then seemed to be in his chief ruffe) as afterward since in other kings dayes was seene. As may appeare in the parliament of the 15. yeare of this king Edward the 3. and in the 24. article of the sayde Parliament: where it is to be read,* that the kings officers and temporall Iustices did then both punish vsurers, and impeached the officers of the Church for bribery, and for taking mony for temporall paine, probate of willes, solemnitie of Mariage. &c. all the pretended liberties of the popish church to the contrary notwithstanding.

Furthermore, in the Parliament of the 25. yeare, appeareth:* that the liberties of the clergie and their exemptions in claiming the deliuerance of men by their booke vnder the name of Clerks, stode then in litle force, as appeared by one Hauketyne Honby knight: who for imprisonning one of the kings subiectes, till hee made fine of 20. li. was therefore executed, notwithstanding the liberty of the Clergie, whych by his booke would haue saued hym, but could not.

The like also appeared by iudgement geuen agaynst a priest at Notingham, for killing of his maister.

And likewise by hanging certaine monks of Combe. Ex Parliam. An. 23. Ed. 3.

Item, in the Parliament of the 15. yeare, by apprehending of I. Stratford,* Archbishop of Canterbury, and hys arrainment: concerning which his arrainment, all things were committed to sir William of Kildisby.

Besides these truthes and notes of the kings Parliaments, wherin may appeare y^e toward procedings of this king & of all his commons against the pretensed church of Rome: Thys is moreouer to be added to the commendation of the king, how in the volumes of the actes & rolles of the king appeareth. That the sayd king Edward the 3. sent also Iohn Wickleffe,* reader then of the Diuinitie lector in Oxford, wyth certaine other Lords & Ambassadors ouer into the parts of Italy, to treat wyth the Popes Legates concerning affaires betwixt the King and the Pope wth ful cōmission: the tenor whereof here foloweth expressed.

REX vniuersis, ad quorum notitiam presentes literae peruenerint. &c.

In English thus.

The King to all and singuler to whome these presentes shall come greeting. Know ye, that we reposing assured confidence in the fidelitie and wisdome of the reuerend father Iohn Bishoppe of Bangor, and other our louing and faithful subiects, M. Iohn Wickliffe, reader of the diuinitie lecture, M. Iohn Gunter Deane of Segobyen. and M. Symon Moulton doctor of the lawe, Syr William Burton Knight, M Iohn Belknappe, & M. Iohn Honnington, haue directed them as our Ambassadors and special Commissioners to the partes beyond the seas. Geuing to the sayde our Ambassadors and Commissioners, to sixe or fiue of them, of whome I will that the sayde Bishop shalbe one, full power and auctoritie, wyth commaundement speciall, to treat and consult mildely and charitably with the Legates and Ambassadors of the L. Pope touching certaine affaires. Where upon of late we sent heretofore the Page 424 sayd Bishop, and M. William Vghtred monke of Duresme, and M. Iohn Shepie to the see Apostolicall: And hereof to make ful relation of all things done and past in the sayd assembly, that all such things which may tend to the honor of holy Church and the aduauncement of our crowne and this our realme may by the assistaunce of God and the wisdome of the see Apostolicall bee brought to good effect, and accomplished accordingly. Witnes our selues. &c. at London dated the 26. day of Iuly in the 48. yeare of our raigne.

By the which it is to be noted, what good wil the king then bare to the sayd Wickleffe, and what smal regarde he had to the sinfull sea of Rome.

Of the whych Iohn wickleff, because we are now approched to his time: remaineth consequently for our story to entreat of, so as we haue heere to fore done of other lyke valiant souldiours of Christes Church before him.

Iohn Wickliffe.

*AFTER all these heretofore recited, by whome (as ye haue heard) it pleased the Lord something to worke against the Byshop of Rome, & to weaken the pernitious superstition of the Friers. Nowe remayneth consequently following the course of yeares, orderly to enter into the story and tractation of Iohn Wickleffe our countreyman, and other moe of his time, and same countrey, whom the Lord (wyth the like zeale and power of spirit) rayased vp here in England, to detect more fully and amply the poison of the Popes doctrine, & false religion set vp by the Fryers. In whose opinions and assertiōs, albeit some blemishes perhaps may be noted: yet such blemishes they be, whych rather declare him to be a mā that might erre, then which directly did fight against Christ our Sauour, as the Popes proceedings and the friers did. And what doctor or learned man hath ben from the prime age of the church, so perfect, so absolutely sure, in whome no opinyon hath sometyme swarued awry? * And yet be the sayd articles of hys, neither in number so many, nor yet so grosse in themselues and so cardinall, as those Cardinal ennemies of Christ perchance doe geue them out to be: if his bookes whō they abolished, were remaining to be conferred w^t those blemishes, which they haue wrasted to the worste, as euill will neuer sayde the best.

This is certaine and can not be denied, but that he being the publike Reader of Diuinitie in the Universitie of Oxford: was for the rude time wherein he liued, famously reputed for a great clerke, a deepe scholeman, & no lesse expert in all kinde of philosophie. * The which doth not onely appeare by his owne most famous and learned wrytings and monuments, but also by the confession of Walden hys most cruel & bitter enemy. Who in a certain Epistle wrytten vnto pope Martin the fift, sayth that he was wonderfully astonysed at his most strong arguments, wyth the places of authority whych hee had gathered, wyth the vehemency and force of hys reasons. &c. And thus much out of Walden. It appeareth by such as haue obserued the order and course of tunes, that this wickleffe florished about the yeare of our Lord. * 1371. Edward the third raigning in England: for thus we doe finde in the Chronicles of Caxton. In the yere of our Lord 1371. (sayeth he) Edward the third, king of England in his Parliamēt, was against the Popes clergy: He willingly harkned and gaue eare to the voices and tales of heretickes, wyth certaine of his counsel: conceiuing and folowing sinister opinions against the Clergy. Wherefore (afterward) he tasted and suffred much aduersity & trouble. * And not long after, in the yeare of our Lord (sayth he) 1372. he wrote vnto the Byshop of Rome, that he should not by any meanes entermeddle any more w^t in his kingdom as touching the reseruatiō, or distribution of benefices: and that all such by shops as were vnder hys dominion, should enioy their former and anciēt liberty, and be confirmed of theyr Metropolitanes, as hath ben accustomed in tunes past. * &c. Thus much wryteth Caxtō: But as touching the iust number of the yere and time, we will not be very curious or carefull about, at this present. Thys is out of all doubt, that at what time all the worlde was in most desperate and vile estate, & that the lamentable ignorance and darknes of God his truth had ouershadowed the whole earth: this man stepped forth like a valiant champiō, vnto whom it may iustly be applyed that is spoken in the boke called Ecclesiasticus of one Simon the sonne of Onias. Euen as the morning star being in the midst of a cloud, & as the Moone being ful in her course, and as the bryght beames of the Sunne, so doeth he shine and glister in the temple and Church of God.

Thus doth almighty God continually succor & helpe, whē all thinges are in dispaire: being alwaies (according to the Prophecy of the Psalme) a helper in tyme of need. The which thing neuer more playnely appeared, then in these latter dayes and extreme age of the Church: when as the whole state & condition (not onely of worldly things, but also of Religion) was depraued and corrupted. That like as the disease named Lethargus among the Phisicians, euen so the state religion amongst the Diuines, was past al mens helpe and remedy. The onely name of Christ remayned amongst Christians, but his true & liuely doctrine was as farre vnknowne vnto the most part, as his name was cōmon vnto al men. As touching fayth, cōsolation, the end & vse of the law,* the office of Christ, of our impotency and weaknes, of the holy ghost, of the greatnes & strength of sinne, of true works, of grace and free iustification of liberty of a Christian man, wherein consisteth and resteth the summe and matter of our profession: there was no mention or any word almost spokē of Scripture, learning & diuinity, was knowne but vnto a few, & that in the scholes onely: & there also turned & cōuerted almost al into sophistry. In stead of Peter & Paule, men occupied theyr time in studying Aquinas and Scotus, and the maister of sentēce. The worlde leauing & forsaking the liuely power of Gods spirituall word and doctrine, was altogether led and blinded with outward ceremonies & humaine traditions, wherein the whole scope, in a maner of all christian perfection did consist & depend. In these was all the hope of obtaining saluation fully fixed: hereunto all thynges were attributed. In so much, that scarcely any other thyng was sene in the temples or Churches, taught or spoken of in sermōs, or finally intēded or gone about in theyr whole life, but only heaping vp of certain shadowed ceremonies vpon ceremonies, neither was there any end of theyr heaping.

The people were taught to worship no other thing but that which they did see, and did see almost nothing whiche they did not worship.

The Church being degenerated from the true Apostolick institutiō aboue al measure (reseruing onely the name of the Apostolick Church, but farre from the truth thereof in very deede) did fall into all kinde of extreme tyranny: where as the pouerty and simplicity of Christ was chaūged into cruelty and abomination of life. In stead of the Apostolicke giftes and continuall labours and trauelles, slouthfulnes & ambitiō was crept in amongst the priests. Besides all this, there arose & sprong vp a thousand sortes and fashions of straunge religions, being the onely root & well head of all superstitiō. How great abuses and deprauations were crept into the Sacramentes, at what tyme they were compelled to worship similitudes and signes of thinges, for the very things themselues: and to adore such things as were instituted and ordeined onely for memorials? Finally what thing was there,* in the whole state of Christen religion so sincere, so sound and pure, which was not defiled and spotted with some kind of superstitiō? Besides this, with how many bondes & snares of dayly new fangled ceremonies, the sely consciences of men redeemed by Christ to liberty, were snared and snarled? In so much, that there could be no great differēce almost perceiued betwene Christianitie and Iuishnes, saue onely the name of Christ, so that the state and condition of the Iewes, might seeme somewhat more tolerable then ours. There was nothing sought for out of the true fountaines, but out of the dirty pudles of the Philistians. The christian people were wholly caried away as it were by the noses, with mere decrees and constitutions of men, euen whether as pleased the bishops to lead them, and not as Christes will did direct them. All the whole world was filled and ouerwhelmed with errorrs and darknesse. And no great maruell, for why the simple and vnlearned people being far from all knowledge of the holy Scripture: thought it sufficient inough for them, to know onely these things whych were deliuered them by their pastors and shepherds, and they on the other part taught in a maner nothing els, but such things as came foorth of the Court of Rome. Whereof the most part tended to the profite of their order more then to the glory of Christ.

The Christian faith was esteemed or counted none other thing then, but y^t euery man should know that Christ once suffred, that is to say, that all men should know and vnderstand y^t thing which the deuils thēselues also knew. Hypocrisie was counted for wonderful holines. All men were so addict vnto outward shewes,* that euen they thēselues which professed y^t most absolute & singular knowledge of the scriptures, scarsly did vnderstād or know any other thing. And thys euidētly did appere, not only in the common sort of doct•urs and teachers, but also in the very heades and captaines of the Church: whose whole religion Page 425 and holines, consisted in a maner in the obseruing of dayes, meates, and garments, and such like rethorical circumstances, as of place, time, person, &c. Hereof sprang so many sorts & fashions of vestures and garments: so many differences of colours & meates: with so many pilgrimages to seuerall places, as though f. Iames at Compostella could do that, which Christ could not do at Canterbury: Or els that God were not of like power & strength in euery place, or could not be found but being sought for by running & gadding hether and thether. Thus the holines of the whole yere was trāsported and put of vnto the Lent season.* No countrey or land was counted holy, but onely Palestina, where Christ had walked himselfe wyth his corporall feete. Such was the blindnes of y^t tune, men did striue and fight for the crosse at Hierusalem, as it had bene for the chief and onely force and strength of our faith. It is a wonder to reade the monumentes of the formore times, to see and vnderstand what great troubles & calamities thys crosse hath caused almoste in euery Christian common wealth. For the Romish champions neuer ceased, by wryting, admonishing, and couंसailing, yea and by quarelling, to moue & stirre vp Princes mindes to warre & battail, euen as though the faith & beleefe of the gospell, were of small force or little effect w^tout that wooden crosse. This was y^e cause of y^t expedition of the most noble prince K. Rich.* vnto Ierusalem. Who being taken in the same iourney, and deliuered vnto the Emperour: could scarsly be raunsomed home againe, for xxx. M. markes. pag. 248. In the same enterprise or iourney,* Fridericus the Emperour of Rome a man of most excellent vertue, was muche endamaged in the same iourney. an. 1179. And also Philip the king of Fraunce, scarsly returned home againe in safety not without great losses:* so much did they esteeme the recouery of the holy citie and crosse.

Upon this alone, all mens eyes, minds, & deuotions, were so set and bent: as though either there were no other crosse but that, or that the crosse of Christ were in no other place but onely at Hierusalem. Such was the blindnesse and superstition of those daies, which vnderstood or knew nothing but such as were outwardly sene: wheras y^e profession of our religion standeth in much other higher matters and greater mysteries. what was the cause why that Urbanus did so vexe and torment himselfe? Because that Antioche with the holy crosse, was lost out of the hands of the Christians. For so we doe finde it in the Chronicles, at what time as Ierusalem with king Buido,* and the crosse of our Lord was taken, and vnder the power of Sultan: Urbanus toke the mater so greuously, that for very sorow he died.* In whose place succeeded Lambertus which was called Gregory the 8. by whose motion it was decreed by the Cardinals, that (setting apart all riches and voluptuousnes) they should preach the crosse of Christ, and by their pouerty and humility first of all shuld take the crosse vpon them, & go before others into the lād of Ierusalem. These are the words of the history, wherby it is euidēt vnto the vigilant reader, vnto what grosenes the true knowledge of the spiritual doctrine of the gospel was degenerate and growen vnto in those daies: How great blindnes & darknes was in those dayes, euen in the first primacy, & supremacy of the bishop of Rome: as though the outward succession of Peter and the Apostles,* had ben of greater force and effect to that matter. What doeth it force in what place. Peter did rule or not rule? It is much more to be regarded that euery man should labor and study with all theyr endeuor to followe the life & confession of Peter: And that man seemeth vnto me to be the true successour of Peter, against whom the gates of hel shall not preuaile. For if that Peter in the gospell do beare the type & figure of the christian church (as all men in a maner do affirme) what more foolish or vaine thyng can there be: then thorough priuate vsurpation, to restraine and to binde that vnto one man, which by the appoyntment of the Lorde, is of it selfe free and open to so many?

*Thus in these so great and troublous times and horrible darkenes of ignoraunce, what time there seemed in a maner to be no one so litle a sparke of pure doctrine left or remaining: This foresayd wickliffe by Gods prouidence sprang and rose vp: thorough whom, the Lord would first waken and raise vp agayne the worlde, which was ouermuch drowned and whelmed in the depe streames of humaine traditions. Thus you haue heere the time of wickliffes originall.

*Which Wicliffe after he had now by a long time professed deuinity in the vniuersity of Oxford, and perceiuing the true doctrine of Christes Gospell to be adulterate and defiled, with so many filthy inuentions of Bishops, sectes of monkes, and darke errors: And that he after long debating and deliberating with himselfe (with many secrete sighes and bewailing in hys mind the generall ignorance of the whole world) could no lōger suffer or abide the same but that he at the last, determined with himselfe to heale and to remedy such things as he saw to be wide and out of the way. But for so much as he saw that this daungerous medling, could not be attempted or stirred wythout great trouble, neyther that these things which had bene so long tune with vse and custome rooted and grafted in mennes mindes, coulde not be sodenly plucked vp or taken away, he thought w^t himselfe that this matter should be done by litle & litle. Wherefore he taking his original at small occasions, thereby opened himselfe a way or meane to greater matters. And first he assailed his aduersaries in logicall & metaphisical questiōs, disputing w^t them of the first forme & fashion of things, of the increase of time, and of the intelligible substance of a creature, w^t other such like sophemes of no great effect: but yet notwithstanding did not a little helpe and furnish him, which minded to dispute of greater matters. So in these matters, first began Regningham (a Carmelite) to dispute and argue against Iohn Wicliffe.

By these originals, the way was made vnto greater poynts, so that at the length he came to touch the matters of the sacraments, and other abuses of the Church. Touching whych thinges this holy man tooke great paynes, protesting (as they saide) openly in the scholes, that it was hys chiefe and principall purpose and intent: to reuoke and call backe the Church from her Idolatry to some better amendment, especially in the matter of the Sacrament of the body and bloud of Christ. But this bile or sore could not be touched wythout the great griefe and paine of the whole world. For first of all, the whole glutte of Monkes and begging Friers were set on a rage or madnes, which (euen as Hornets wyth their sharpe stings) did assaile this good man on euery side: fighting (as is sayd) for their aultars, paunches and bellies. After them the priests, and then after them the Archb. tooke the matter in hand being then S. Sudbury, who for the same cause depriued him of his benefice,* which then he had in Oxford. Notwythstanding he being somewhat friended & supported by the king, as appeareth, continued and bare out the malice of the Friers, and of the Archb. all this while of his first beginning, till about the yeare of our Lorde. 1377. After whych time now to prosecute likewise of his troubles & conflict, first I must fetch about a little compasse, as requisite is, to inferre some mention of Iohn of Gaunt Duke of Lancaster the kings sonne, and Lord Henry Percy, whych were his speciall maintainers.

As yeares and time grew on, king Edward the third, which had reigned nowe about 51. yeares, after the decease of prince Edward his sonne, who departed the yeare before: was stricken in great age, & in such feblenes withall, that he was vnweldy through lacke of strēgh to gouerne the affairs of the realm. Wherefore, a parliament being called the yeare before his death, it was there put vp by the knights & other the burgesses of the Parliament (because of the misgouernment of the realme by certain greedy persons about the king, raking all to themselues, without seing any iustice done) that 12. sage and discrete Lordes and Pieres, such as were free from note of all auarice, shuld be placed as tutours about the Kyng, to haue the doing and disposing vnder him (6. at one time, and in their absence 6. at an other) of matters pertinent to the publike regiment.* Here by the way I omit to speake of Alice Perris the wicked harlot, which (as the story geueth) had bewitched the kings hart, & gouerned all and sate vpon canses herself through the diuelish help of a Frier Dominick: who by the duke of Lancaster was caused to be take, and was conuicted, & should haue suffred for the same, had not the Archb. of Cant. and the Friers (more regarding the liberty of their Church, then the punishing of vice) reclaimed hym for their own prisoner. This Alice Perrys, notwithstanding she was banished by this Parliament from the king,* yet afterward she came againe, & left him not: til at hys death shee tooke all his rings vpon his fingers and other iewels frō him, and so fled away like an harlot. But thys of her by the way.

These 12. gouernours by the parliament aforesayd being appoynted to haue the tuition of the king,* & to attend to the publike affaires of y^e realme: remained for a certaine space about him, till afterward it so fel out, that they being againe remoued, all the regiment of the realme next vnder the King, was committed to the Duke of Lancaster the kings sonne: For as yet Richard the sonne of prince Edward lately departed, was very yong and vnder age.

This Duke of Lancaster had in his heart of long time conceiued a certaine displeasure against the popish clergy: Page 426 whether for corrupt and impure doctrine ioyned w^t lyke abhominable excesse of life,* or for what some other cause, it is not precisely expressed. Onely by story the cause thereof may be gessed, to rise by William Wickam bishop of Winchester. The matter is thys.

The Bishop of Winchester (as the saying went then) was reported to affirme, that the foresaid Ihon of Gaunt duke of Lācaster, was not the sonne of king Edward, nor of the Quene. Who being in trauel at Gaūt, had no sonne (as he sayd) but a daughter:* which the same time by lying vppon of the mother in the bedde, was there smothered. Whereupon, the Quene fearing the kings displeasure, caused a certaine manchild of a woman of Flaunders (borne the very same time) to be conueyed and brought vnto her in stead of her daughter aforesayde. And so brought vp the child whom she bare not, who now is called duke of Lancaster. And this (said the Bishop) did the Queene tell him, lying in extremes on her death bed vnder seale of confession: charging hym if the sayde Duke should euer aspire to get the crowne, or if the kingdome by any meanes should fall vnto hym, he then should manifest the same, & declare it to the worlde, that the sayde Duke of Lancaster was no part of the kings bloud, but a false heire of the king. This slaunderous report of the wicked Byshop, as it sauoureth of a contumelious lie, so seemeth it to proceede of a subtile zeale toward the Popes religion, meaning falshoode. For that the foresayd Duke by fauouring of Wickliff, declared hymselfe to be a professed enemy against the Popes profession. Whych thing was then not vnknown, neyther vnmarked of the Prelates and Byshops then in Englande. But the sequele of the story thus followed.

Thys slanderous vilany of the Byshops report being blased abroad, and comming to the Dukes eare: he therw^t being not a litle discontented (as no maruell was) sought againe by what meanes he coulde, to be reuenged of thys forenamed Bishop. In conclusion, the Duke hauing now al the gouernment of the realm vnder the king his father, in hys own hand: so pursued y^e byshop of Winchester, that by acte of parliament he was condemned and depriued of al his temporal goods,* which goods wer assigned to prince Rich. of Burdeur, the next inheritour of the crowne after the king, and furthermore inhibited the said bishop not to appoch nere to y^e court by 20. miles. Further as touching thys bishop, the story thus procedeth. Not lōg after in the yeare of our Lord. 1377. a Parliament was called by the meanes of the Duke of Lancaster, vpon certaine causes & respects: in which parliament great request, and sute was made by the cleargy for the deliuerance of the B. of Winchester. At length whē a subsidie was asked in the kyngs name of the clergy, and request also made in the kings behalfe for spedy expedition to be made for the dissoluing of y^e parliament, the Archb. therfore accordingly conuented the bishops for the tractation thereof. To whō the B. w^t great lamentation cōplained for lack of their felow and brother B. of Wint. Whose iniury said they, did derogate to the liberties of the whole church: And therfore denied to ioyne themselues in tractation of any such matters, before al the members together were vnited w^t the head: And (seing the matter touched them altogether in common, as well him as thē) would not otherwise do. And seemed moreouer to be moued against y^e Archb. for that he was not more stout in the cause, but suffered him so to be cited of the duke.

*The Archb. although hauing sufficient cause to excuse himselfe, wherefore not to send for him (as also he dyd) because of the perils which might ensue therof: yet being enforced & persuaded therunto, by the importunitie of the bishops, directed downe his letters to the foresaid bishop of wintch, willing hym to resort vnto the conuocation of the clergy. Who being glad to obey the same, was receyued w^t great ioy of the other bishops. And at length by y^t meanes of Alice Perris, the kings paramor, aboue mētioned, (geuing to her a good quantity of mony) the sayd Winchester was restored to his temporalities againe.

As the Bishops had thus sent for wintch. the Duke in the meane time had sent for Iohn Wickliffe: who as is saide, was then the diuinity reader in Oxford, and had cōmenced in sondry actes and disputations, contrary to the forme and teaching of the Popes church in many things: who also for the same had bene depriued of his benefice, as hath bene afore touched. The opinions which he began in Oxford, first in his lectures, and sermōs to entreat of, and wherefore he was depriued were these. That the Pope had no more power to excommunicate any man, then hath an other. That if it be geuē by any persō to the pope to excōmunicate, yet to absolue the same is as much in the power of an other priest, as in hys. He affirmed moreouer, y^t neyther y^e king nor any temporall Lord could geue any perpetuity to the church, or to any ecclesiasticall person: for that when such ecclesiasticall do sinne, habitualiter, continuing in the same still, the temporal powers ought and may meritoriously, take away from them, that before hath bene bestowed vpon thē. And that he proued, to haue bene practised before here in England by Williā Rufus. which thing (sayd he) if he did lawfully, why may not the same also be practised now? if he did it vnlawfully, then both the church erre (sayth he) & doth vnlawfully in praying for him.* But of his assertions more shall follow (Christ willing) hereafter. The story which ascribeth to him these assertions being taken out (as I take it) of y^t monastery of S. Albons addeth withall: that in his teaching and preaching he was very eloquent, but a dissembler (saith he) and an hypocrite. Why he surmiseth him to be an hypocrite, the cause was this:

First, because he resorted much to the orders of the beg'ging Friers, frequenting and extolling the perfection of their pouerty.

Secondly, because he and his felowes vsually accustomed in their preaching to go baretoote, and in simple russet gownes.

By this I suppose, may sufficiently appeare to the indifferent, the nature and condition of Wickliffe, how far it was frō the ambitiō & pride,* which in the slaundrous pen of Polydore Virgil, reporting in his 19. book of him, that because he was not preferred to higher honors and dignities of the church (conceiuing therfore indignation agaynst the clergy) became theyr mortall enemy. How true this was, he onely knoweth best, that rightly shall iudge both y^r one and the other.

In the meane time,* by other circūstaunces & partes of his life, we may also partly cōiecture what is to be thoght of y^t mā. But howsoeuer it was in him either true or false: yet it had bene Polidors part, either not so intemperatly to haue abused his pen, or at least to haue shewed some greater authority and ground of that his report. For to follow nothing els but flying fame, so rashlye to defame a man whose life he knoweth not, is not the part of a faythful story writer.

But to returne from whēce we digressed.* Beside these his opinions and assertions aboue recited, with other mo, which are hereafter to be brought in order: He began also then something nearely to touch the matter of the Sacrament, prouing that in the sayd Sacrament, the accidences of bread remayned not without the subiect, or substaunce: both by the holy Scriptures, and also by the authoritie of the doctors, but specially by such as were most aunciēt. As for the latter writers, that is to say such as haue written vpon that argumēt vnder the thousand yeres since Christes time, he vtterly refused: saying, that after these yeares Sathan was losed & set at liberty. And that since that time the life of man hath bene most subiect and in danger of errors: the simple and playne truth to appeare and consist in the Scriptures, wherunto all humam traditions whatso'euer they be, must be referred, and specially such as are set forth & published now of late yeares.* This was the cause why he refused the latter writers of decretals, leaning only to the Scriptures & auncient doctors: most stoutly affirming out of them that in the Sacramēt of the body which is celebrate, with bread the accidēce not to be present with out the substaunce.* That is to say, that the body of Chryst is not present without the breade, as the common sorte of Priestes in those daies did dreame, As for his arguments what they were: we wyll shortly at more oportunity by Gods grace, declare them in an other place. But herein the trueth (as the Poet speaketh very truly) had gotten Iohn Wickeliffe great displeasure and hatred, at many mens handes: and specially of the Monkes and richest sort of Priestes.

Albeit through the fauor and supportation of the duke of Lancaster, and Lord Henry Percy, he persisted hitherto in some meane quiet against their woluish violence & eruelty: Till at last about the yeare of our Lord. 1376. the Byshops still vrging and inciting their Archbishop Symon Sudberye, who before had depriued him, and afterward prohibited him also not to stirre any more in those sorts of matters: had obtained by processe and order of citation to haue him brought before them. Whereunto both place and time for him to appeare after theyr vsuall forme was to him assigned.

The Duke hauing intelligence that Wickliffe his client should come before the Bishops, fearing that he being but one, was to weake agaynst such a multitude: calleth to him out of the orders of Friers, foure Bachelers of Diuinity, out of euery order one, to ioine them with Wickliffe also for more surety. When the day was come assigned to Page 427 the said Wickliffe to appeare, whiche day was Thursday, the 19. of February: Iohn Wickliffe accompanied with the foure Friers aforesayd, and with them also, the Duke of Lancaster, and Lord Henry Percy, Lord Marshal of England, the said Lord Percy also going before them to make rowme and way wherewith wickliffe should come.

Thus wickliffe (through the prouidence of god) being sufficiently garded,* was comming to the place where the Bishops sate: whome by the way they animated and exhorted not to feare nor shrink a whit at the company of the bishops there present, who were all vnlearned (said they) in respect of him. For so proceede y^t wordes of my foresaid author, whom I follow in this narration: neither that he shold dread the concourse of the people, whom they would themselues assiste and defend, in such sort as he should take no harme. With these wordes, and with the assistaunce of the nobles: wickliffe in hart encouraged, approcheth to y^t church of S.* Paule in London. where a mayne prease of people was gathered to heare, what shold be sayd & done. Such was there the frequencie and throng of the multitude, that the Lordes (for all y^e puissance of the high Marshall) vnneth with great difficulty could get way through. In so much,* that the bishop of London (whose name was William Courtney) seeing the stir that the Lord Marshal kept in the Church, among the people, speaking to y^t Lord Perry, sayd: that if he had knowne before what maistries he would haue kept in the church, he would haue stopped hym out, from comming there.

At which wordes of the Byshop, the Duke disdayning not a little, aunswered to the Byshop agayne, and sayd: that he woulde keepe such maisterie there, though he sayd nay.

At last, after much wrastling they pierced through and came to our Ladies chappell. Where the Dukes and Barons were sitting together with the Archbishops & other Bishops.* Before whome the foresayd Iohn Wickliffe according to the maner, stode before thē, to know what shold be laid vnto him. To whome first spake the Lord Percy, bidding him to sit downe, saying: that he had many things to answer to, and therefore had need of some softer seat. But the bishop of London cast eftsoones into a fumish chase w^t those words, sayd: he should not sit there. Neither was it sayd he: according to law or reason, that he which was cited there to appeare to answeare before his ordinary, should sit downe during the time of his aunswere, but shold stād. Upon these words a fire began to heat & kindle betweene them. In so much that they began to rate and to reuile one the other, that the whole multitude therewith disquieted, began to be set on a hurrey.

Then the Duke taking the Lord Percies part wyth hasty wordes began also to take vp the bishop. To whom the Bishops again nothing inferiour in reprochful checks and rebukes, did render & require not onely to him as good as he brought: but also did so far excell him, in this rayling arte of scolding, that to vse the words of mine author, Erubuit Dux quòd non potuit praeualere litigio. i. that the Duke blushed and was ashamed, because he could not ouerpasse the Bishop in brawling and rayling, and therefore fell to playn threatning, manasing y^t bishop, that he would bring down the pride not onely of him, but also of all the prelatie of Englande: And speaking moreouer vnto him: Thou (sayd he) bearest thy self so brag vpon thy parentes,* which shall not be able to helpe thee: They shall haue enough to do to helpe themselues. For his parentes were the Earle and countesse of Deuonshire. To whom the byshop again aunswered, that to be bold to tell truth, his confidence was not in his parentes, nor in any man els, but onely in God in whō he trusted.* Then y^e Duke softly whispering in the care of him next by him, sayd that he woulde rather plucke out the Bishop by the heyre of his head out of the Church, then he would take this at his hand. This was not spoke so secretly, but that the Londiners ouerheard him. Wherupon being set in a rage, they cryed out, saying: that they would not suffer theyr bishop so cōtemptuously to be abused. But rather they woulde loose their liues, then that he should so be drawen out by the heyre. Thus that councell being broken with scolding and brawling for that day, was dissolved before 9. of the cloke. And the Duke with the Lord Percy went to the Parliament. Where the same day, before dinner a bill was put vp in the name of the king by the Lord Thomas Wostock,* and Lord Henry Percy, that the Cittie of London shoulde no more be gouerned by a Mayor, but by a Captayne, as in times before. And that the Marshall of England shold haue al the adoe in taking the Arestes within the said Citty, as in other citties beside, with other petitions moe, tending to the like derogation of the liberties of London. which bill being read, standeth vp Iohn Philpot Burgesse then for the cit•y, saying to thē which read the bill, that that was neuer seene so before: & adding moreouer that the Mayor woulde neuer suffer any such things, or other arest to be brought into the citty, with mo such wordes of like stoutnes.

The next day following, the Londiners assembled thēselues in a councell, to consider among them vpon the Bill for chaunging the Mayor,* and about the office of the Marshall, also concerning the iniuries done the day before to theyr Bishop.

In which meane time they being busy in long consultation of this matter, sodenly and vnawares entred in the place two certaine Lodes, whether to come to spy, or for what other cause the author leaueth it vncertayne, the one called Lord Fizwalter: the other Lord Guy Brian. At the first comming in of thē, the vulgare sort was ready forthwith to flee vppon them, as spies, had not they made theyr protestation with an othe, declaring that their comming in was for no harme toward them. And so were compelled by the citizens to sweare to the city their truth and fidelity, contrary to the which othe if they shoulde rebell, contented to forfeit whatsoeuer goods and possessions they had within the citie.

This done,* thē began the Lord Fizwalter in this wise to perswade and exhort the Citizens: first declaring how he was bound and obliged to them and to theyr Citty, not for the othe onely now newly receiued, but of old and ancient good will from his great graundfathers tyme. Beside other diuers dueties, for the which he was chiefly bound to be one of their principall fautors: for so muche as what so euer tended to their damage and detriment, redounded also no lesse vnto his owne, for which cause he coulde not otherwise chuse, but that as he did vnderstand to be attempted against the publike profite and liberties of the Citty, he must needs communicate the same to them. who vnlesse they with speedy circumspection do occurre and preuent perils that may and are like to ensue, it would turne in the end to theyr no small incōmoditie. And as there were many other thinges, whiche required their vigilant care and diligēce, so one thing therr was, which he could in no wise but admonish them of: which was this, necessary to be cōsidered of them all, how the Lord Marshall Henry Percy in his place within himselfe had one in ward and custody, whether with the knowledge, or without the knowledge of them, he coulde not tell: this he coulde tell, that the sayd Lord Marshall was not alowed any suche ward or prison in his house, within the liberties of the Citty. Which thing if it be not seeke to in time, the example therof being suffered, would in fine breede to such a preiudice vnto their customes and liberties, as they shoulde not hereafter, when they would reforme the iniurie thereof.

These words of the Lord Fizwalter were not so soone spoken,* but they were as soone taken of the rash Citizens, who in al hasty fury running to their armour & weapons, went incontintently to the house of the Lord Percy, where breaking vp the gates, by violence they tooke out the prisoner, & burned the stockes wherein he sate, in the midst of London. Then was the Lord Percy sought for (whome sayth the story) they woulde doubtlesse haue slayne if they might haue found him. With their bils and iauelins, al corners and priuy chambers were searched, beds & hangings torne a sunder.* But the Lord Percy (as God would) was then with the Duke, whome one Iohn Yper the same day with great instance had desired to dinner. The Londiners not finding him at home, and supposing that he was wyth the Duke at Sauoy, in all hasty heat turned their power thither,* running as fast as they could to the Dukes house. Where also in like maner they were disapoynted of their cruell purpose. In y^t meane while as this was doying, cometh one of the Dukes men running post hast, to y^t Duke & to the Lord Percy, declaring what was done. The Duke being then at his oysters, without anye further tarying, and also breaking both his shinnes at the forme for haste, tooke boate with the Lord Percy, and by water went to Kingstone,* where then y^e princesse with Richard the yong Prince did lye. Who there declared vnto the Princesse all y^e whole matter, concerning the outrage of the Londiners as it was. To whom she promised againe, such an order to be taken in the matter, as shoulde be to his contentation. At what time the commons of London, thus as is sayd, were about the Dukes house at Sauoy, meteth with the a certain priest, who marueling at the sodain rage & concourse, asked what they sought. To whome aunswere was geuen agayne of some, that they sought for the Duke and Lorde Marshall, to haue of them the Lord Peter de la Mare, whom they wrongfully had detained in prison. To this the Priest aunswered agayne more boldly then oportunely. That Page 428 Peter (sayd he) is a false traytour to the king, and worthy long since to be hanged.* At the hearing of these words, the furious people with a terrible shoute cryed out vpon him, that he was a traytour and one that tooke the Dukes part and so falling vpon him with theyr weapons striued who might first strike at him. Who after they had wounded him very sore, so being wounded they had him into prison, where within few dayes vpon the sorennes of his wounds he dyed.

Neither would the rage of the people thus haue ceased had not the bishop of London leauing his dinner come to them at Sauoy, and putting them in remembraunce of the blessed tyme (as they terme it) of Leut, had perswaded them to cease and to be quyet.

The Londiners seeing that they could get no vantage against the Duke:* who was without theyr reach: To bewreke theyr anger they tooke hys armes, whiche in most despitefull wise, they hanged vp in the open places of y^e city in signe of reproch, as for a traitour. In so much that when one of his gentlemen came through the Citty with a plate conteyning the Dukes armes, hanging by a lace about his necke the cittizens not abiding the sight therof, cast him from his horse, and pluckt his scutchine from him, had were about to work the extremitie against him, and not the mayor rescued him out of theyr handes, and sent him home safe vnto the Duke his mayster. In such hatred was then the Duke among the vulgar people of London.

After thys, the princesse vnderstanding the hartes and broyle of the Londiners set against the foresaid Duke,* sent vnto London 3. Knightes, syr Albred Lewer, sir Symon Burle, and sir Lewes Clifford, to entreat the citizens to be reconciled with the Duke. The Londiners answered: that they for the honour of y^e princesse, would obey and do with all reuerēce, what she would require. But this they required & enioyned the messēgers to say to the Duke, by word of mouth, that he should suffer the byshop of Winchester afore mentioned and also the Lord Peter de la Mare, to come to their aunswere, & to be iudged by theyr pieres. Wherby eyther they might be quite if they were gilty: or otherwise, if they be found culpable, they might receaue according to theyr desertes after the lawes of the realme. What grieve and displeasure the Duke conceiued and reteyned in his minde hereof: Agayne what meanes & sute the Londiners for their part made to the old king for their liberties: What rymes and songes in London, were made agaynst the Duke: Howe the Bishops at the Dukes request were mooued to excōmunicate those malicious slaunders:^{} And moreouer, howe the Duke at last was reuenged of those contumelies & iniuries: How he caused them to be brought before the king: How sharply they were rebuked for their misdemeanour, by the worthy oration of the Lord Chamberlayne, Robert Aston in the presence of the king, Archbishops, Byshops, with diuers other states, the Kinges children, and other nobilities of the realme: In conclusion how the Londiners were compelled to this at length, by the common assent, and publike charges of y^t citty, to make a great taper of waxe, whiche with y^e Dukes armes set vpon it, shoulde be brought with solemne procession to the church of S. Paule, there to burne continually before the Image of our Lady:^{} And at last, how both the sayd Duke and the Londiners were reconciled together, in the beginning of the new king, with the kisse of peace, in the same reconcilment publikely denounced in the church of Westminster, and what ioy was in the whole citty therof: These because they are impertinent, and make to long a digressiō from the matter of Wickliffe, I cut off with breuitie, referring the reader to other historyes, namely of S. Albones, where they are to be found at large.

As these aforesayd for breuitie sake I passe ouer, so will I not be long and yet cannot omitte that,^{} which happened the same tyme and yeare, to the Bishop of Norwich, to y^e intent that this posteritie now may see, to what pryde the clergy then of the Popes Church was growne to. The same time as this broyle was at Lōdon,^{} the Bish. of Norwich a litle after the time af Easter comming to the towne of Lennam, belonging to his Lordship: being not contented w^t the olde accustomed honour due vnto him, & vsed of his predecessours before in the same town, required moreouer with a nue and vnused kind of magnificence to be exalted: In so much, that when he saw the chiefe Magistrate or Mayor of that towne to go in the streetes with his officer going before him, holding a certayne wand in his hand tipped at both endes with black horne,^{} as the maner was: He reputing himselfe to be Lord of that towne (as he was) and thinking to be higher then the highest, commaunded y^e honour of that staffe due to the Mayor, to be yelded & born before his Lordly personage: The Mayor or Bailiffe, with other the townesmen, courtuously answered to him again that they were right willing and contented with all theyr hartes to exhibite that reuerence vnto him, and woulde to do, if he first of the king and counsaile coule obtayne y^e iustome, and if the same might be induced after any peaceable way with the good willes of the commons and body of y^e town: Other els, sayd they, as the matter was dangerous so they durst not take in hand any such newe alteration of ancient customes and liberties least the people (whiche is alwayes inclinable and prone to euill) do fall vpon them w^t stones, & driue them out of the towne. Wherefore kneeling on theyr knees before hym, and humbly they besought him that he would require no such thing of them: that he would saue his owne honour and their liues, who otherwise if he intended that way,^{} were in great daunger. But the bishop youthfull and hauty, taking occasion by their humblenes, to swell the more in himselfe, answered that he would not be taught by their counsaile, but that he wold haue it done, though all the commons (whome he named Ribals) sayd nay. Also rebuked the Mayor and his brethrē for mecockes and dastardes, for so fearing the vulgar sort of people.

The citizens perceauing the wilfull stoutnes of the bishop, meekly answering againe, sayde, they minded not to resist him, but to let him doe therin what he thought good, onely desired him that he would licēce them to depart, and hold them excused for not wayting vppon him, & conducting hym out of the town with that reuerence which he required. For if they should be seene in his company, all the suspicion thereof would be vpon them, and so should they be all in daunger, so much as theyr liues were worth. The Byshop not regarding their aduise and counsaile, commaunded one of hys men to take the rod borne before the Mayor, & to cary y^e same before him. Which being done, & perceaued of the commons: the Byshop after that maner went not farre, but the rude people rūning to shut y^e gates came out with their bowes, some with clubbes and staues soome with other instrumentes,* some w^t stones, & let driue at the Bishop and his men, as fast as they might: in suche sort, that both the bishop & his horse vnder him with most part of his men were hurt & wounded. And thus the glorious pride of this iolly prelate, ruffling in hys new scepter, was receaued and welcomed there. That is, was so pelted w^t battes and stones, so wōded with arrowes and other instrumentes fit, for such a skirmishe, y^t the most part of his men, with hys mace bearer, & all running away frō him, the poore wounded bishop was there left alone, not able to keepe hys old power, which went about to vsurpe a new power more thē to hym belonged.* Thus at is cōmōly true in al, so is it wel exemplified here, which is commōly sayd, and as it is commonly seene, that pride will haue a fall, and power vsurped will neuer stand. In like maner if the Citizens of Rome, following the example of these Lēnam men, as they haue the like cause, and greater to doe by the vsurped power of theyr Byshop, would after the same sauce handle the pope,* and vnscepter him of hys mace and regalitie which nothing pertaineth to him: They in so doing both should recouer theyr owne liberties, with more honour at home, and also win muche more commendation abroad Ex chron. mon. D. Albani.

This tragedy with all the partes thereof, beyng thus ended at Lennam,* whiche was little after Easter (as is said) about the month of April. an. 1377. the same yeare vpon the 12. day of the moneth of Iune next after, dyed the worthy and victorious Prince king Edward the 3. after he had raygned yeares 51. A prince no more aged in yeares thē renoumed, for many snguler & heroicall vertues, but principally noted and lauded for his singuler meekenes & clemency toward his subiects and inferiors, ruling them by gentlenes and mercy, without all rigour or austere seueritie. Among other noble and royall ornamentes of his nature, worthely & copiously set forth of many, thus he is described of some, which may briefly suffice for the comprehēision of all the rest.*Orphanis erat quasi pater, afflictis compatiens, miseris condolens, oppressos releuans, & cunctis indigentibus impendens auxilia opportuna. That is. To the Orphans he was as a father, compacent to the afflicted, mourning with the miserable, relieuing the oppressed, and to all them that wanted an helper in time of neede. &c. But chiefly aboue all other thinges, in this Prince to be commemorate in my mynde, is thys: that he aboue all other Kinges of this Realme vnto the time of king Henry the eight was the greatest brideler of the popes vsurped power and outrageous oppressions during all the time of whiche king, neyther the Pope could greatly preuayle in thys Realme, and also Iohn Wickliffe was maintained with fauour and ayde sufficient.

Page 429 But before we close vpp the story of this king: there commeth to hand that which I thought not good to omit a noble purpose of the king in requiring a viewe to be taken in all his dominions of all benefices and dignities ecclesiasticall remayning in the handes of Italians and Alious with the true valuation of the same directed down by commission in the time of king Richard the second wherof the like also is to be found: the tenour of which commission of king Edward I thought here vnder to set down for worthy memory.

The king directed writtes vnto all the Byshop's of England in this forme.

Whereby may appeare that it was highe time for the king to seeke remedie herein, either by treatie with the Pope or otherwise: considering so great a porcion of the reuenues of his realme was by this meanes conueyed awaye and employed either to the reliefe of his enemies, or mayntenaunce of the forreners: Amongst whiche number, the Cardinals of the courte of Rome lacked not their share. Ex Bundello Breuium Regis de An. 2. Rich. 2. parte. 1.

King Richard the second.

AFfter king Edward the third succeeded hys sonnes sonne Richard the second beyng yet but yong,* of the age of eleuen yeares: who in the same yeare of his fathers decease in great pompe and solemnitie was crowned at Westminster, an 1377. who following his fathers steppes, was no great disfauorer of the way & doctrine of wickliffe: albeit at the first beginning, partly through the iniquitie of tyme partly through the popes letters, he could not doe that he would. Nothwithstāding something he did in that behalf, more perhaps then in the end he had thanke for of the Papistes, as more (by the grace of Christ) shall appeare. But as times do chaunge, so changeth commonly the cause and state of man. The bishop nowe seeing the aged king to be taken away, during y^e time of whose olde age all y^e gouernment of the realme depended vpon the Duke of Lancaster. And now the sayd Byshops agayne seeing the said Duke, with the Lord

Percy, the Lord marshall to geue ouer their offices, and to remayne in their priuate houses without intermedling, thought now the time to serue them,* to haue some vauntage against Iohn wickliffe, who hetherto vnder the protectiō of the foresayd Duke, and Lord Marshall had some rest and quiet. Concerning the story of whiche Wickliffe, I trust (gentle reader) it is not out of thy memory what went before pag. 427. how he being brought before the Byshops, by the meanes of the Duke and Lord Henry Percy, the councell was interrupted, and brake before ix. of the clocke. By reason whereof, Wickliffe at that tyme escaped without anye further trouble. Who not withstanding being by the bishops forbid to deale in that doctrine any more, continued yet with his fellowes going barefoot, and in long frise gownes preaching dilligentl̃e vnto the people. Out of whose sermons these articles most chiefelye at that time were collected.

That the holy Eucharist after the consecration,* is not the very body of Christ, but figurally.

That the church of Rome, is not the head of all churches more then any other church is: Nor that Peter hath anye more power geuen of Christ, then anye other Apostle hath.

Item, that the Pope of Rome hath no more in the keyes of the Church, then hath any other within the order of Priesthoode.

Item, if God be: the Lordes temporall may lawfullye and meretoriously take away theyr temporalities from the churchmen offending, habitualiter.

Item, if any temporall Lord doe know the Church so offending, he is bound vnder payne of damnation, to take the temporalities from the same.

Item, that the Gospell is a rule sufficient of it selfe to rule the life of euery christian man here, without any other rule.

Item, y^t all other rules vnder whose obseruances, diuers religious persōs be gouerned, do ad no more perfection to the gospell, then doth the white colour to the wall.

Item, that neyther the Pope nor any other Prelate of the church, ought to haue prisons wherin to punish transgressours.

Beside these articles,* diuers other conclusions afterward were gathered out of hys writings and preachings by the byshops of England, which they sent diligently to Pope Gregory at Rome: where the sayde articles being red and perused, were condemned for hereticall and erroneous by 23. Cardinals.

In the meane time the Archb. of Cant. sending forth hys citations, as is aforesayd: called before hym the sayde Iohn wickliffe in the presence of the Duke of Lancaster, and Lord Percy, who vpon the declaration of the Popes letters made, bound him to silence, forbidding him not to entreat any more of those matters. But then through the disturbaunce of the Bishop of London and the Duke, and lord Percy that matter was soone dispatched, as hath bene aboue recorded, pag. 427. And all thys was done, in the daies & last yere of king Edward the 3. and pope Gregory the eleuenth.

The next yere folowing,* which was the yere of our Lord 1378. being the first yere of king Richard the second. The sayd Pope Gregory taking hys time, after the death of king Edward,* sendeth his bull by the hands & meanes (peradventure) of one master Edmund Stafford, directed vnto the vniuersity of Oxford, rebuking thē sharply, imperiously and like a Pope, for suffring so long the doctrine of Iohn Wickliffe to take roote, and not pluckyng it vppe wyth the crooked cicle of their Catholike doctrine. Whych Page 423 Bull when it came to be exhibite vnto their handes,* by the Popes messenger aforesayd: the proctors and maysters of the Uniuersitie ioynning together in consultation, stood lōg in doubt deliberating with themselues, whether to receiue the Popes Bull with honour, or to refuse and reiect it wyth shame.

I cannot here but laugh in my minde to behold the authours of this story whom I follow: what exclamations, what wondrings and maruels, they make at these Oxford men, for so doubting at a matter so playne, so manifest of it selfe, (as they say) whether the popes Bull sent to them frō Rome was to be receaued or cōtrary. Which thing to our monkish writers seemed then suche a prodigious wonder, that they with blushing cheekes are feyne to cut of the matter in the midst with silence.

The copy of this wilde Bull, sent to them from the Pope, was this.

Gregory the Bishop, the seruant of Gods seruaunts, to his welbeloued sonnes, the Chauncellour and Vniuersitie of Oxford, in the diocesse of Lincolne greeting, and Apostolical benediction.

WE are compelled not onely to meruell,* but also to lament that you considering the Apostolicall seate hath geuen vnto your vniuersitie of Oxford so great fauour and priueledge and also for that you flow as in a large sea in the knowledge of the holy Scriptures, and ought to be champions and defenders of the ancient and Catholicke fayth, (without the which there is no saluation) by your great negligence and slouthe, will suffer wylde cockle, not onely to grow vp among the pure wheate of the flourishing field of your Vniuersitie, but also to wake more strong and choke the corne. Neither haue ye anye care (as we are enformed) to extirpe and plucke the same vp by the rootes, to the great bleblemishing of your renowned name, the perill of your soules, the contempt of the Church of Rome, and to the great decay of the auncient fayth. And further (which greueth vs) the encrease of that filthy weed was more sharply rebuked & iudged of in Rome then in England where it sprang. Wherefore let there be meanes sought by the help of the faithful, to roote out the same. Greuously it is come to our eares,* that one Iohn Wickliffe, parson of Lutterworth in Lincolne dioces, a professour of diuinitie (would god he were not rather a maister of errorrs) is runne into a kinde of detestable wickednes, not onely and openly publishing, but also vomiting out of the filthy dungeon of his brest, diuers professions false and erroneous conclusions, and most wicked and damnable heresies. Whereby he might defile the faythfull sorte, and bring them from the the right path headlong into the way of perdition ouerthrow the state of the Churche, and vtterly subuert the secular policy. Of which his mischieuous heresies, some seem to agree: (onely certayne names and termes chaunged) with the peruers... opinions, and vnlearned doctrine of Marcellius of Padua, & Iohn of Gandune, of vnworthy memory: whose bookes were vtterly abolished in the realme of England,* by our predecessour of happy memory Iohn 22. Which kingdome doth notonely florische in power, and aboundance of faculties, but is much more glorious and shyning in purenes of fayth: Accustomed alwayes to bring forth men excellentlye learned in the true knowledge of the holye scriptures, ripe in grautie of manners, men notable in deuotion, and defenders of the Catholicke fayth. Wherefore wee will and commaunde you by our writing Apostolicall, in the name of your obedience, and vpon payne of priuation of our fauour, indulgences and priueledges graunted vnto you and your vniuersitie, from the sayd see Apostolicall: that hereafter ye suffer not those pestilent heresies, that those subtile and false conclusions and propositions, misconstruing the right senses of fayth and good workes (how soeuer they terme it,* or what curious implication of wordes soeuer they vse) any longer to be disputed of, or brought in question: Least if it be not withstood at the first, and plucked vp by the rootes, it might perhaps be to late hereafter to prepare medicins when a greater number is infected with the cōtagion. And further, that ye apprehend immediately or cause to be apprehended the sayd Iohn Wickliffe,* and deliuer him to be deteyned in the safe custodie of our well beloued brethren, the Archbishop of Caunterbury, and the byshop of London or eyther of them. And if you shall finde any gaynesayers, corrupted wyth the sayde doctrine (whiche God forbid) in your sayd vniuersitie wythin your iurisdiction, that shall obstinately stand in the sayd errors: that then in lyke manner ye apprehend them, and committe them to safe custodie, and otherwise to doe in this case as it shall appertayne vnto you: So as by your carefull proceedynges herein, your negligence past concerning the premisses, may now fully be supplied and recompensed with present diligence. Whereby you shall not onely purchase vnto you the fauour and beneuolence of the seate Apostolicall, but also great reward and merite of almightie God.

Yeuén at Rome at S. Maries the greater. xi. Kalend. of Iune, and in the seuenth yeare of our consecration.

Beside this Bull sent to the Uniuersitie of Oxford,* the sayd Pope Gregory directed moreouer his letters the same tyme to the Archbyshoppe of Canterbury Symon Sudbury: to the Byshoppe of London named William Courtney, with the conclusions of Iohn Wickliffe therein inclosed, commaūdyng them, by vertue of those his letters Apostolicall, and straitly enioyning them to cause the sayd Iohn Wickliffe to be apprehended; and cast in prison: And that the king and the nobles of England should be admonished by them, not to geue any credite to the saide Iohn Wickliffe, or to his doctrine in any wise. &c.

Beside this Bill or Bull of the Pope, sent vnto the Archbyshop of Cāterbury and to the Byshop of London,* bearyng the date. 11. Kalend. Iuni. and the 7. yeare of the raigne of the Pope: I finde moreouer in the sayd story, two other letters of the Pope concernyng the same matter, but differyng in forme, sent vnto the same Byshops, and all hearyng the same date both of the day, yeare, and moneth of the raigne of the sayd Pope Gregory. Whereby it is be supposed, that the Pope either was very exquisite and solicitous aboue the matter, to haue Wickliffe to be apprehēded which wrote three diuers letters to one person, and all in one day, about one businesse: or els that he did suspect the bearers thereof, the scruple wherof I leaue to the iudgement of the Reader.

Furthermore beside these letters writtē to the Uniuersitie, and to the Byshops, he directeth also an other Epistle bearyng the same date vnto kyng Edward (as one of my stories sayth) but as an other sayth, to the kyng Richard, whiche soundeth more neare to the truth, forasmuch as in the 7. yeare of Pope Gregory the xi. which was the yeare of our Lord. 1•78. Kyng Edward was not aliue. The copy of his letters to the kyng here followeth.

The copy of the Epistle sent by the Byshop of Rome to Richard kyng of England, to persecute Iohn Wickliffe.

VNto his welbeloued sonne in Christ, Richard the most noble kyng of England health. &c.

The kyngdome of England which the most highest hath put vnder your power and gouernaunce,* beynge so famous and renowned in valiancy and strength, so aboundaunt and flowyng in all kynde of wealth and riches: but much more glorious resplendent and shynyng through the brightnesse and clearenesse of all godlynesse and fayth: hath accustomed alwayes to bryng forth men endued with the true knowledge and vnderstandyng of the holy Scriptures, graue in yeares, feruent in deuotion, and defenders of the Catholicke fayth: The which haue onely directed and instructed their own people through their wholesome doctrine and preceptes into the true path of Gods commaundementes, but also as we haue heard by the report and information of many credible persons (to our great grief & hart sorow) that Iohn Wickliffe Parson of Lutterworth, in the Dioces of Lincolne, professor of diuinitie (I would to God he were no author of heresie) to be fallen into such a detestable and abhominable madnes: that he hath propounded and set forth diuers and sundry conclusions full of errorrs and cōteinyng most manifest heresie, the which do tende vtterly to subuert and ouerthrow the state of the whole Church. Of the whiche, some of them (albeit vnder coloured phrase and speache) seeme to smell and sauour of peruerse opinions, and the foolish doctrine of condemned memory of Marsilius of Padua, and Iohn of Ganduno, whose bookes were by Pope Iohn the 22. our predecessour, a man of most happy memorye reprobued and condemned. &c.

Hetherto gentle reader, thou hast heard how Wickliffe was accused by the Byshop. Now you shall also heare the Popes mighty reasons and argumentes, by the which he did confute him to the kyng. It followeth.

Therefore, for so much as our Reuerend brethren the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Byshop of London haue receiued a speciall commaundement from vs by our autoritie,* to apprehend and committe the forenamed Iohn Wickliffe vnto prison, and to transporte his confession vnto vs: If they shall seeme in the prosecution of this their businesse to locke your fauour or helpe, we require and most earnestly desire your maiestie euen as your most noble predecessors haue alwayes bene most earnest louers of the Catholicke fayth (whose case or quarell in this matter is chiefly Page 432 handled) that you woulde vouchsafe euen for the reuerence of God, and the fayth aforesayd, and also of the Apostolicke seat, and and of our person, that you will with your helpe and fauour, assist the sayd archbishop and all other that shall goe about to execute the sayd busines. Wherby besides the prayse of men, you shall obtayne a heauenly rewarde and great fauour and good will at our hand, and of the sea aforesaid. Dated at Rome at S. Mary the greater, the 11. Kal. of Iune, in the 7. yeare of our Byshoprick. an. 1378.

The Articles included in the popes letters whiche he sent to the Bishoppes, and to the king against Wickliffe, were these as in order do follow.

The conclusions of Iohn Wickliffe exhibited in the conuocation of certayne Bishops at Lambeth.

ALL the whole race of mankinde here on earth besides Christ, hath no power simply, to ordayne that Peter and all his ofspring should politickely rule ouer the world for euer.

2. God cannot geue to any man for him and hys heyres anye ciuill dominion for euer.

3. All writinges inuented by men, as touching perpetuall heritage, are impossible.

4. Euery man being in grace iustifyng, hath not onely right vnto the thing, but also for his time hath right in deede aboue all the good thinges of God.*

5. A man cannot onely ministratoriously geue any temporal or continuall gift, eyther as well to his naturall sonne, as to his sonne by imitation.

6 If God be, the temporall Lordes may lawfully and meritoriously take away the riches from the Church, when they do offend habitualiter.

7. We know that Christes Vicar cannot, neyther is able by hys Bulles, neyther by his owne will and consent, neither by the consent for his colledge, eyther make able or disable any man.

8. A man cannot be excommunicated to his hurt or vndoing, except he be first and principally excommunicate by himselfe.

9. No man ought, but in Gods cause alone, to excommunicate, suspend, or forbid, or otherwise to proceede to reuenge by anye ecclesiasticall censure.

10. A curse or excommunication doth not simply binde, but in case it be pronounced and geuen out agaynst the aduersarye of Gods law.

11. There is no power geuen by any example, eyther by Christ or by his Apostle, to excommunicate any subiect, specially for the denying of any temporalities, but rather contrariwise.

12. The disciples of Christ haue no power to exact by anye ciuill authoritie, temporalities by censures.

13. It is not possible by the absolute power of God, that if the Pope or any other Christian, doe pretend by any meanes to bynd or to lose, that thereby he doth so bynde and loose.

14. We ought to beleue that the Vicar of Christ, doth at suche tymes onely bynde and loose, when as he worketh conformably by the law and ordinaunce of Christ.

15. This ought vniuersally to be beleued that euery priest righ^{ly} and duely ordered, according vnto the law of grace, hath power according to his vocation, whereby he may minister the sacramentes, and consequently absolue any man confessing hys faulte, being contrite and penitent for the same.

16. It is lawfull for kinges (in causes licenced by the lawe) to take away the temporalities from the spirituality, sinning habitualiter, that is, which continue in the custome of sinne, and will not amend.

17. Whether they be temporall Lordes or any other men whatsoeuer they be, which haue endowed any Churche with temporalities: It is lawfull for them to take away the same temporalities, as it were by way of medicine, for to auoyd sinne, notwithstanding any excommunication or other ecclesiasticall censure, for so much as they are not geuen but vnder a condition.

18. An ecclesiasticall minister, and also the Byshop of Rome may lawfully be rebuked of his subiectes, and for the profite of the Church, be accused eyther of the Clergy or of the Laitie.

These letters with the articles inclosed being thus receiued from the pope, the bishops tooke no litle hart, thinking and fully determining with themselues and that in open profession, before their prouinciall Councell, that all maner respectes offeare or fauour set apart, no person neither high nor low should let them, neither woulde they be seduced by the intreaty of any mā, nor by any threatnings or rewards, but that in this cause they would execute most surely vpriight iustice and equitie: yea albeit presēt danger of life should follow therupon. But these so fierce brags, & stout promise, with the subtile practises of these Byshops, which thought them so sure before: the Lord (against whō no determination of mans counsaile can prenayle) by a small occasion,* did lightly confound & ouerthrowe. For the day of examination being come: a certayn personage of the princes court, & yet of no great noble byrth, named Lewes Clifford, entring in among the Byshops: commaunded them that they shold not proceed with any diffinitive sentence against Iohn Wickliffe.* With which wordes all they were so amased and their combes so cut, that (as in the story is mentioned) they became so mute and speachlesse, as men hauing not one word in their month to answere. And thus by the wonderous worke of God his prouidence, escaped Iohn Wickliffe the second time out of the Byshops hands, and was by them clearly dismissed vppon his declaration made of his articles as anone shall follow.

Moreouer here is not to be passed ouer, how at the same tyme,* and in the sayd Chappell of the Archb. at Lamheth, where the byshops were sitting vpon Iohn Wickliffe, the story writing of the doing therof, addeth these wordes, say'ing: Non dico ciues tantū Londinenses, sed viles ipsius ciuitatis se impudenter ingerere praesumpserunt in eandem capellam, & verba facere pro eodem, & istud negotium impedire, confisi, vt reor, de ipsorum praemissa negligentia praelatorum. &c. That is, I say not onely, that the Citizens of London, but also the vile abiectes of the Citty, presumed to be so bold in y^t same Chappell at Lamheth, where the Byshops were sitting vppon

Iohn Wickliffe: both to entreat for him, and also to let and stoppe the same matter trusting as I suppose, vpon the negligence which they sawe before in the Byshops. &c.

Ouer and beside, here is not to be forgotten, how y^e sayd Iohn Wickliffe, the same time of his examination, offered and exhibited vnto the Bishops, in writing a protestation, with a declaration or exposition of his owne minde, vpon the sayd his articles, the effect whereof here followeth.

The protestation of Iohn Wickliffe.

First I protest (as I haue often before done) that I doe minde and intend with my whole hart (by the grace of God) to be a true Christian,* and as long as breath shal remayne in me, to professe and defend the law of Christ. And if it shall happen that through ignoraunce or otherwise, I shall fayle therein. I desire my Lord God of pardon & forgeuenes. And now againe as before also, I do reuoke and make retractation, most hūbly submitting my selfe, vnder the correction of our holy mother y^e church. And for somuch as the sentence of my fayth, whiche I haue holden in the scholes and els where, is reported euen by children, & more ouer, it is caried by children euen vnto Rome: Therefore left my deare beloued brethren should take any offence by me, I wil set forth in writing the sentēce and Articles, for the which I am nowe accused and impeached: the whiche also euen vnto the death I will defend. As I beleuee all Christians ought to doe, and specially the Bysh. of Rome and all other priestes and ministers of the Church. For I do vnderstand the conclusions after the sense and maner of speaking of the scriptures and holy doctours, the whiche I am ready to expound: And if they shall be found contrary vnto the faith, I am ready to reuoke and speedily to call them backe agayne.

An exposition vpon the conclusions of Iohn Wickliffe, exhibited by him to the Byshop.

ALL the race of mankinde, here in earth beside Christ, hath no power simply to ordayne, that Peter. &c.

This conclusion of it selfe is euidēt,* for as much as it is not in mans power to stop the cōming of Christ to hys finall iudgement, but he must needes come, according to y^e article of our Creede, to iudge both the quick and the dead. And then (as the scripture teacheth) shall surcease all ciuill and politicke rule here, I vnderstand the temporall and secular dominion, pertaining to men here dwelling in this mortall life. For so doe the Philosophers speake of ciuill dominion. And although the thing which is terminable, & hath an end, is called sometimes perpetuall: yet because in holy scripture, and in vse of the Church, and in the bookes of Philosophers most commonly that is takē to be perpetuall, which hath no ende of tyme hereafter to come: according to the which sense, the Church singeth Gloria Patri. &c. nunc & perpetuum. I also after the same signification do take here this woorde (perpetually) and so is this conclusion consonant to the principles of the Scripture, that it is not in mans power to ordayne the course and voyage of the Church, here perpetually to last.

2. God can not geue to any man. &c.

To the second conclusion I aunswere, vnderstanding Page 433 ciuil dominion,* as in the conclusion before. And so I hold, that God, first by his ordinate power cannot geue to any person ciuil dominion here for euer: Secondly, by his absolute power it is not probable for hym so to doe. For so much as he cānot euer detaine his spouse in perpetual prison of thys life, nor alwayes deferre the finall beatitude of hys Church.

3. To the third conclusion. Many wrytings or chartes inuented by men, as touching perpetual hereditage ciuile, be vnpossible.

The verity of this conclusion is incident. For we must not canonize all maner of Charts, what soeuer, as Catholicke, or vniuersal: for then it were not lawful by any meanes to take away or sequester thyngs geuen by Charte or charter, when any doth vniustly occupye the same. And so, if that stand confirmed and ratified by the fayth of the Church, great occasion thereby should be ministred to men so chartered, to trust to their temporall chartes, and so might grow thereby much libertie and licence to sinne. For like as by what supposition euery truth is necessary: so by the same supposition, euery false thyng is possible, as it is playne by the testimony of Scripture, & of holy Doctours speakyng of necessitie of thynges to come.

*4. Euery man beyng in grace iustifying finally, hath not onely right vnto the thyng, but also for his tyme hath right in deede, ouer all the good thynges of God.

The veritie hereof is euident, by holy Scripture Math. 24. Where veritie promiseth to euery mā entryng into his ioy: verely (sayth he) I tell you, he shall set & place him ouer all the goodes he hath.* For the right and title belōgyng to the cōmunion of Saintes, in their countrey (he meaneth in the kingdome of heauen) Fundatur obiectiuè super vniuersitatem bonorum Dei: That is: Hath his relation, as vnto his obiect, to all the goodes and possession of God.

5. A man can but onely ministratoriously, geue any temporall dominion or gift perpetuall, as well to his owne naturall sonne, as to his sonne by imitation.

It is euident. For euery mā ought to recognise himselfe in all his workes and doyngs, as an humble seruaunt, and minister of God. As the wordes of Scripture doth teach vs. Let a man so esteeme of vs as the ministers of Christ. Yea so Christ himselfe did teach his chief Apostles to minister, but in their countrey the Saints shall geue vnto their fellow brethren the dominion of their goodes vt pater de suis corporibus & bonis eis inferioribus in natura accordyng to the wordes of Luke. 6. They shall geue you and put into your bosomes a good measure and perfect, well filled and heaped vp, and runnyng ouer.

6. If God be, temporall Lordes may lawfully and meritoriously take away the goodes of fortune from the Church when they do offend, habitualiter.

This conclusion is correlatiue with the first. Article of our fayth: I beleue in God the father almighty. &c. Where I vnderstand this word (may) in this conclusion after the maner of autentique Scripture, which sayth & graunteth: that God is able, of these stones to rayse vp children to Abraham, for otherwise all Christian Princes were heretiques. For this conclusiō, thus stādeth the reason: If God be, he is omnipotēt: & if he be almighty, he is able to commaunde the Lordes temporall so to do: & if he way so commaunde, thē may they lawfully so take away such goods. &c. And so by the vertue of the same principle, Christian Princes haue practised the sayd sentence vpon the Church mē heretofore, as did William Rufus. &c. But God forbid that any should beleue hereby my intencion to haue bene, that secular Lords may lawfully take away what goodes soeuer and by what meanes soeuer, by their owne naked authority at theyr pleasure: but only by the authority of the church may so do, in cases and forme limited by the law.

7. We know that it is not possible that the vicare of Christ is able by his pure Bulles. &c.

This is manifest by the Catholique faith, for asmuch as the Church doth fully beleue that the abling of any mā, ought first to procede and come of God: wherfore, no man being Christ his vicar, hath any power in this matter, but onely as vicar in the name of the Lord so far forth as he is enabled of the Lord, to notify vnto the church whom God hath enabled. Wherfore if any mā do any thing not as vicar in the name of the Lord, whom he ought to forethinke to be his author and head: It is a presumption of Lucifer, for so much as Christ by his Apostle sayth. 1. Cor. 3. all our hability or sufficiency cōmeth of God. And so consequently, it commeth not purely by the ministerie of hys Uicarship, that he is inabled, but the ablenesse or vnablenesse of him being the Uicar of Christ, commeth to hym an other way from aboue.

8. A man can not be excommunicate to his hurt or vndoing, except he be excommunicate first and principally, of himselfe.

It is euident, forasmuch as all such excommunication ought to procede & begin originally of his owne sin which is damnified: wherupon Augustine sayth De verbis Domini, Sermon 51. Doe not thou conculcate thy selfe, and man ouercōmeth thee not. And moreouer the faith of the church doth teach, quòd nulla ei nocebit aduersitas, si nulla dominetur iniquitas, that is to say. No aduersitie shall hurt, if no miquitie haue the vpper hand. And yet notwithstanding, euery excommunication for many causes is also to be reared, although that the excommunication of the Church to the humble man being excommunicated, be not damnable but wholesome.

9. No man ought but in Gods cause alone to excommunicate, suspende.&c.

It is cleare, for asmuch as euery iust cause is the cause of God, whose respect ought chiefly to be wayed and pondered. Yea the loue of the person excommunicate ought to surmount the zeale of reuengement, and the desire of all temporall goodes whatsoever, for otherwise he that doeth excommunicate, doth damnify himselfe. To this 9. conclusion notwithstanding it is congruent, that a Prelate may excommunicate in the cause also of man, so that his principal respect in so doing be had to y^e iniury done to his God, as appeareth 13. quaest. 4 Inter querelas.

10. No curse or excommunication can binde simply, but in case it be geuen out against the aduersary of Christes lawe.

And it appeareth thus, because that God doth bynde simply euery one that is bound, who cannot excommunicate but onely for trāsgression of his law. Whereunto it is consonant notwithstanding, that the censure of the Church doth not binde simply, but secondarely in that case and respect, as it is denounced against the aduersary of the members of the Church.

11. There is no example of Christ which geueth power to hys disciples to excommunicate any subiecte (especially for denying of any temporalities) but contrary.

Which is thus declared by the fayth, whereby we beleue that God is to be beloued aboue all thynges, and our neighbour and enemy are to be beloued aboue all tēporall goodes of this world necessarily, for the law of God cannot be contrary vnto it selfe.

12. The disciples of Christ haue no power by any ciuill coaction, to exact temporall things by their censures.

This appeareth by the fayth of the Scripture. Luke 23. Where Christ did forbid hys Apostles ciuilly to raigne or to beare any lordship. The kings (sayth he) of the Gentiles beare rule ouer them, but you not so. And after thys sense it is expounded of S. Bernarde, of S. Chrysostome, and other holy men: which conclusion notwithstanding, yet may they exact temporal things by ecclesiastical cēsure incidently, if case be that it appertaine to the reuengement of their God.

13. It is not possible by the absolute power of God, that if the Pope or any other Christian doe pretende to binde or loose at their pleasure, by what meanes soeuer, that thereby hee doeth so binde and loose.

The contrary of this cōclusion will destroy the whol• Catholicke fayth, importyng no lesse but him to be a blasphemmer whiche so vsurpeth such absolute power of the Lord. And yet by this conclusion I entend not to derogate from the power of the Pope or of any other Prelate of the Church, but that he may by the vertue of the head so bynde and lose. But doe vnderstand the conditionall of this negative (to be impossible) after this sense: that it cannot bee that the Pope or any other Prelate of the Church can pretend by himselfe to bynde or lose (how and after what maner he lyst himselfe) except in such sorte, that hee doe in deede so bynde and lose before God as he doth pretend to doe.

14. We ought to beleue, that the vicare of Christ doeth at suche times onely binde and loose, when as hee worketh conformably by the lawe, and ordinaunce of Christ.&c.

The reason thereof is thys, because otherwise it is vnlawfull for hym so to do, except he should do it in the vertue of that law, and so consequently, vnlesse it be cōformable to the law and ordinaunce of Christ.*

15. To this conclusion, this ought vniuersally to be beleueed, that euery Priest rightly and duely ordered, hath power according to hys vocation,&c.

The reason heereof is this, because y^t the order of priesthode in his owne nature and substance, receaueth no such degrees, either of more, or of lesse. And yet notw^tstanding, the power of inferiour Priests, in these daies be vpon due consideration restrained, and some times againe in time of extreme necessity released. And thus according to the Doctours, a Prelate hath a double power, to wit, the power of order, & the power of iurisdictiō or regimēt. And according Page 434 to this second power, the Prelates are in an higher Maiestie, and regiment.

16. It is lawfull for Princes and Kynges (in cases by the law limited) to withdraw temporall commodities, from Church men abusing the same, habitualiter.

The reason therof is playne for that temporall Lordes ought rather to leaue to spirituall almes, which bryngeth with it greater fruite, then to corporall almes the case so standyng, that some tyme it were a necessary work of spirituall almes, to chastise such Clerkes by takyng from them their temporall liuinges, which vse to abuse the same to the damnifyeng both of their soule and body. The case, which the law doth limite in this matter, were the defect of correctyng his spirituall head or elles for lacke of correctyng the fayth of the Clerke which so offendeth,* as appeareth. 16. q. 7. filijs. Dist. 40. cap. Si Papa.

Whether they be temporall Lordes, or any other men whatsoever, which haue endued any Church with temporalities.&c.

The truth thereof is euidently sinne, for that, nothyng ought to stoppe a man frō the principall workes of charitie necessarily, because in euery action and worke of man is to be vnderstand a priuy condition necessary of God his good will concurring with all, as it is in the ciuill law de c. Conradi cap. 5. in fine collat. x. And yet God forbid, that by these wordes occasion should be geuen to the Lordes temporall to take away the goodes of fortune from the Church.

18. An Ecclesiasticall minister, yea the Byshop of Rome may lawfully be rebuked of his subiectes, and for the profite of the Church be accused, either of the Clergie, or of the laytie.

The proufe of this is manifest hereby, because the sayd Byshop of Rome is subiect to fall into the sinne agaynst the holy Ghost, as may be supposed, sauynge the sanctitude, humilitie and reuerence due to such a Father. For so long as our brother is subiect vnto the infirmitie of fallyng, he lyeth vnder the law of brotherly correction. And when the whole Colledge of Cardinals may be slouthfull in ministryng due correction for the necessary prosperitie of the Church: it is apparent that the residue of the body of the Church, which possibly may stand most of lay men, may wholesomely correct the same accuse and bryng him to a better way. The possibilitie of this case is touched. Dist. 40. Si Papa. If the Pope doe erre from the right fayth. &c. For like as such a great fall ought not to bee supposed in the Lord Pope without manifest euidence: so agayne such an obstinacie ought not to be supposed in hym, possibly beyng fallen, but that bee will humbly receaue the wholesome medicine of his superiour, correctyng him in the Lord. The practise of whiche conclusion also is testified in many Chronicles. Farre be it from the Church of Christ that veritie should be condemned, which soundeth euill to trāsgressours and other slouthfull persons, for then the whole •ayth of the Scripture were in a damnable case.

Thus Iohn Wicklesse in geuyng his Exposition vnto his foresayd propositions and conclusions, as is aboue prefixed, through the fauour and diligence of the Londoners, either shifted of the Byshops, or elles satisfied them so: that for that tyme he was dismissed and scaped clearely away, onely beyng charged and commaunded by the sayd Byshops, that he should not teach or preach any such doctrine any more, for the offence of the lay people.

Thus this good man beyng escaped from the Bishops, with this charge aforesayd, yet notwithstanding, ceased not to proceede in his godly purpose, labouryng and profityng still in the Church as he had begon.

Unto whom also (as it happeneth by the prouidence of God) this was a great helpe and stay, for that in the same yeare, or in the begynnyng of the next yeare folowyng, the foresayd Pope Gregory xi. whiche was the styrrer vp of all this trouble agaynst hym, turned vp hys heeles and dyed. After whom insued such a schisme in Rome, betwene two Popes, and other succeeding after them, one striuyng agaynst an other: that the schisme thereof endured the space of. xxxix. yeares, vntill the tyme of the Councell of Constance.

*The occasioner of whiche schisme first was Pope Urbane the 6. who in the first begynnyng of hys Popedome was so proude and insolent to his Cardinals, and other, as to Dukes, Princes, and Queenes, and so set to aduaunce his Nephew and kyndred, with iniuries to other Princes that the greatest number of his Cardinales and Courtyours by litle and litle shronke from him, and set vp an other Frenche Pope agaynst hym, named Clement, who reigned xi. yeares. And after hym Benedictus the 13. who reigned yeares 26. Agayne of the contrary side after Urbanus the sixth succeeded, Boniface the ninth, Innocentius the viij. Gregorius the xij. Alexander the fift, Iohn 13.

Papae,	yeares.	month.	Antipapae.	yeares.

Gregorius. 12.	2.	7

As touching thys pestilent & most miserable schisme, it would require heere an other lleade to comprehend in order all the circumstaunces and tragicall partes thereof, what trouble in the whole Church, what partes taking in euery Countrey, what apprehending and imprysoning of priests & prelates, takē by land and sea, what sheddyng of bloud did folow therof. How Ottho duke of Brunsewyke & Prince of Tarentum, was taken and murdered. Howe Ioane Queene of Hierusalem and Sicilia his wife, who before had sent to Pope Urbane, beside other gifts at hys coronation, xl. M. Duckets in pure gold: after by the sayd Urbane was committed to prison, and in the same pryson strangled. What Cardinales were racked, and miserably wythout all mercy tormented on gibbettes to death, what slaughter of men, what battails were fought betwene the two Popes,* whereof 5000. on the one side were slaine, beside the number of them which were taken prisoners. Of the beheading of 5. cardinals together after long tormēts, and how the bishop Aquilonensis, being suspected of pope Urbane, for not riding faster with the Pope, his horse being not good, was there slaine by the Popes commaundement, sending his soldiours vnto him, to slay him, and cut hym in peeces. All whych things, with other diuers moe acts of horrible cruelty, happening in the time of thys abhominable schisme, because they are abundantly discoursed at full, by Theodorike Niem, who was neare to the sayde Pope Urbane,* and present at all his doings: therefore as a thing needlesse, I here pretermit, referring them who couet to be certified more amply herein, vnto the 3. bookes of the sayd Theodorike aboue mentioned.

About the same time,* also about 3. yeres after, there fel a cruell dissention in England, betwene the common people and the nobilitie, the which did not a little disturbe and trouble the common wealth. In thys tumult, Symon of Sudbury Archbyshop of Canterbury, was taken by the rustical & rude people, and was beheaded. In whose place after, succeeded William Courtney, which was no lesse diligent then his predecessor had ben before him, in doing his diligence to roote out heretickes. Notwithstanding, in the meane season Wickleffes secte increased priuely, and daily grewe to greater force,* vntill the time that William Barton Uicechancellor of Oxford, about the yeare of our Lord 1380. had the whole rule of that vniuersitie: who callyng together 8. monastical doctors, and 4. other, with the consent of the rest of hys affinitie, putting the common seale of the vniuersitie vnto certaine wrytings: he set foorth an Edict, declaring vnto euery man, and threatning them vnder a greeuous penaltie, that no men should be so hardie, hereafter to associate thēselues wyth any of Wickliffs fautors or fauourers: and vnto Wickliffe himselfe, he threatned the greater excommunication, and farther imprisonment, and to all his fautors, vnles that they after 3. dayes canonical admonitiō or warning, or as they cal it, peremp'tory, did repent & amend.* The which thing whē Wickliffe vnderstood, forsaking the pope & all the clergy, he thought to appeale vnto the kings maiestie: but the Duke of Lancaster comming betweene, forbad hym that he shoulde not heereafter attempt or begin any such matters, but rather submit himselfe vnto the censure and iudgement of his ordinary. Whereby Wickliffe being beset wyth troubles and vexations, as it were in the midst of the waues, he was forced once againe to make cōfession of his doctrine: in the whych his confession, to auoid the rigor of things, he aunswered as is aforesaide, making his declaration, and qualifying his assertions after such a sorte, that he did mitigate and asswage the rigor of hys enemies.

The next yere after,* whych was 1382. by the commandement of William Arch. of Cant. there was a conuocation holden at London, where as Iohn Wickliffe was also commanded to be present. But whether he there appeared personally, or not, I find it not in story certainly affirmed. The mandate of the Archb. Wil. Courtney (sent abrode for the conuenting together of this councell) heere followeth vnder wrytten, truely copied out of his owne registers.

Memorandum,* that where as well amongst the nobles as commons of this realme of England, there hath a certain brute ben spread of diuers cōclusions both erroneous, Page 435 & also repugnant to the determination of the Church which tend to the subuersion of the whole Church, and to our prouince of Canterburie,* and also to the subuersion of the whole realme, being preached in diuers & sundry places of our sayd prouince, generally, commonly, & publikely: We William by Gods permission Archbishop of Canterbury, Primate of all England, and Legate of the sea Apostolicall, beeing minded to execute our office and duetie heerein: haue conuocated or called together, certaine our fellow brethren & others a great many, as well Doctours and Bachelers of diuinitie, as doctours of the Canon and ciuil law, and those whome we thought to be the most famous men, skilfullest men. and men of soundest iudgemēt in religion, that were in all the realme, whose names here vnder ensue. And the same being (the 17. day of the month of May) in the yere of our Lord 1382. in a certaine chamber within the territories of the priory of the friers preachers of London before vs and our foresayd fellow brethren assembled, then and there personally present: After that the sayd conclusions (the tenour whereof here vnder ensueth) were opely proponed, and distinctly and plainly read: We burdened our foresayd fellow brethren, doctours, and bachelers, in the faith wherin they stode bound to our Lorde Iesus Christ, and as they would aunswer before the hygh iudge in the day of iudgement, that they shuld speake their opinions touching the sayde conclusions, and what euery of them thinketh therein.

And at length, after good deliberation had vppon the premisses, the foresaid our brethren the bishops, doctours, & Bachelers, reassembled before vs the 21. day of the same moneth in the foresayd chamber, the foresayde conclusions being againe and againe repeated and plainly read: by vs and by the common consents of vs all it remaineth published and declared, that some of the said conclusions are hereticall, and other some erroneous and contrary to the determination of the Church, as heereafter most manifestly shall appeare. And for as much as by sufficient information we finde & perceiue, that the sayd conclusions in many places of our sayde prouince, haue bene as is sayde, bothe taught & preached: and that diuers other persons do hold and maintaine the same, and be of heresie vehemently and notoriously suspected: haue thought good as wel generally as specially, to send out thys processe vnder wrytten.

The names of the Iurers were these.

Although it may be thought, that some of them were made worsse by their sinister collecting, then he ment them in his owne workes and wrytings.

The articles of Iohn Wickliffe, condemned as hereticall.

The letter of the Archbyshop directed to the Byshop of London, agaynst Wickleffe and his adherentes.

William by Gods permission Archbyshop of Canterbury,* Metropolitane of all England, and of the Apostolicall sea Legate:

To our reuerend brother by the grace of God Byshop of London, salutation. The Prelates of the Church ought to be so much the more vigilant and attentue about the charge of the Lordes flocke committed vnto them: how much the more they shall vnderstand the Wolues beyng clothed in sheepes apparell, fraudulently to goe about to woory and scatter the sheepe. Truly, by the continuall cry and bruted fame (which it greeueth me to report) it is come to our knowledge: that although by the canonicall sanctions, no man beyng forbidden or not admitted, should either publickely or priuily without the authoritie of the Apostolicall sea or Byshop of that place, vsurpe or take vpon him the office of a Preacher: Some notwithstanding, such as are the children of damnation, beyng vnder the vale of blynde ignoraunce, are brought into such a dotyng mynde, that they take vppon them to Preache, and are not affrayde to affirme and teach diuers and sundry propositions and conclusions here vnder recited, both hereticall, erroneous, and false, condempned by the Church of God: and repugnaunt to the decree of holy Church, whiche tend to the subuerting of the whole state of the same, of our prouince of Canterbury, and destruction and weakenyng of the tranquillitie of the same: and that as well in the Churches, as in the streetes, as also in many other prophane places of our sayd prouince, generally, cōmonly, and publikely, do preach the same, infecting very many good Christians, causing thē lamentably to wāder out of the way, & frō the catholick Church, without which Page 436 there is no saluation. We therfore considering, that so pernicious a mischiefe whych may creepe amongst many, wee ought not to suffer, and by dissimulation to passe ouer, which may with deadly contagion slea the soules of men, least their bloud be required at our hands: are willing so much as God wil permit vs to do, to extirpate the same. Wherefore, by the counsaile and consent of many of our brethrē and Suffraganes, we haue conuented diuers and sundry Doctours of Diuinitie, as also professours and other Clerkes of the Canon and Ciuill lawes, the best learned wythin the Realme, and of the most soundest opinion and iudgement in the Catholicke faith, to geue their opinions and iudgements cōcerning the foresayde conclusions.* But for as much as the sayde conclusions and assertions: being in the presence of vs, and our fellowe brethren and other conuocates, openly expounded, and diligently examined, and in the end found by common counsaile and consent, as wel of them as of vs, and so declared that some of those conclusions were heretical, and some of them erroneous & repugnant to the determination of the Church, as here vnder are described: Wee will and commaund your brotherhoode, and by vertue of holy obedience straightly enioyne, all and singular our brethren and Suffraganes of our body and Church of Canterbury, that with all speedye diligence you possible can, you likewise enioyne them (as we haue enioyned you) and euery of them. And that euery one of them in their Churches & other places of their Citie and Dioces, doe admonish and warne, and that you in your Church and other Churches of your Citie and Dioces, do admonish and warne, as we by the tenor of these presents, do admonish and warne the first time, the second time, and the third time: and yet more straightly doe warne, assigning for the first admonition one day, for the second admonition an other day, & for the third admonition canonicall and peremptorie, an other day: That no man from hence forth of what estate or cōdition soeuer, do hold, preach or defend the foresayd heresies and errors or any of them: nor that hee admitte to preach any one that is prohibited or not sent to preach, nor that he heare or hearken to the heresies or errors of him or any of them, or that he fauour or leane vnto hym either publicquely, or priuely: But that immediatly he shonne hym as he would auoide a Serpent putting forth most pestiferous poison,* vnder paine of the greater curse, the which we commaund to be thundered against all and euery one which shalbe disobedient in this behalfe, and not regarding these our monitions, after that those 3. dayes be past which are assigned for the canonical monition, and that their delay, fault or offence, committed require the same: That then according to the tenour of these wrytings, wee commaund both by euery one of our felowe brethren & our Suffraganes in their Cities and Dioces, and by you in your City and Dioces (so much as belongeth both to you and them) that to the vttermost, both ye and they cause the same excommunications to be pronounced.* And furthermore, wee will and commaunde our foresayd felowe brethren, and all & singular of you a part by your selues, to be admonished, and by the aspersion of the bloud of Iesus Christ we likewise admonish you: that according to the institution of the sacred Canons, euery one of them in their Cities & Dioces, bee a diligent inquisitour of this hereticall prauitie: and that euery one of you also in your Cities and Dioces,* be the like inquisitor of the foresayd heretical prauitie: And that of such like presumptions they and you carefully and diligently inquire, and that both they and you (according to your duties and office in this behalfe) wyth effect do procede against the same, to the honor and praise of his name that was crucified, and for the preseruacion of the Christian faith and Religion.

Here is not to be passed ouer, the great miracle of gods diuine admonition or warning: for when as the Archbyshop and suffraganes, with the other Doctours of diuinitie, and lawyers with a great company of babling Friars, & religious persons were gathered together to consult, as touching Iohn Wickleffes bookes, and that whole secte: When as they were gathered together at the Gray fryers in Lōdon,*to begin their busines, vpon S. Dunstons day after dinner, about 2. of the clocke the very houre & instant y^t they should go forward with their businesse: a wonderfull and terrible earthquake fell, through out al England: wherupon, diuers of the suffraganes being feared, by the strange and wonderfull demonstration, doubting what it shuld meane, thought it good to leaue of from their determinate purpose. But the Archbyshop (as chiefe captaine of that army, more rash and bold then wise interpreting the chaunce which had happened, cleane contrary to an other meaning or purpose, did confirme & strengthen their harts and minds, which were almost daunted with feare, stoutly to proceede and go forward in theyr attempted enterprise. Who then discoursing Wickliffes articles, not according vnto the sacred Canons of the holy Scripture, but vnto theyr owne priuate affections and traditions, pronounced and gaue sentence, that some of them were simply and plainely hereticall, other some halfe erroneous other irreligious, some seditious, and not consonant to the Church of Rome.

Item,*the 12. day of Iune, in the yeare aforesaid, in the chamber of the Friars preachers: the foresayd M. Robert Rigges Chauncelor of the vniuersitie of Oxford, & Thomas Brightwell professors of diuinitie, beyng appoynted the same day and place, by the foresayde reuerend father in God Archbyshop of Canterbury: appeared before hym, in the presence of the reuerend father in God, Lord William, by the grace of God Byshop of Winchester, and diuers others doctours and bachelers of Diuinitie and of the Canon and ciuill lawe, whose names are before recited. And first the sayd Chauncelor by the said Lord Archb. of Cant. being examined what his opinion was touching the foresayd articles: Publicquely affirmed and declared, that certaine of those conclusions were hereticall, and certaine erroneious, as the other doctors and clerks afore mentioned had declared: And then immediately next after hym, the foresayd Thomas Brightwel was examined, which vpon some of the conclusions at first somewhat staggered, but in the end being by the sayd Archbishop, diligently examined vpon the same, did affirme and repute the same to be hereticall and erroneous, as the foresayd Chancelor had done. An other Bachelor of Diuinitie also there was named N. stammering also at some of those conclusions, but in the end affirmed that hys opinion therein was, as was the iudgement of the foresayd Chauncelour and Thomas as is aboue declared. Whereuppon, the sayde Lord Archb. of Cant. willing to let and hinder the perill of such heresies & errours: Deliuered vnto the foresayd Chauncelour there being publiquely read his letters patents, to be executed, the tenour whereof in these wordes doth folow.

William by the grace of God Archb. of Cant. primate of all England,* and Legate of the Apostolicall see: To our welbeloued sonne in Christ the Chancelor of the vniuersitie of Oxford, within the diocesse of Lincolne, greeting, grace and benediction. The prelates of the Church, about the Lordes flocke committed to their charge, ought so much to be more vigilāt as that they see the wolfe clothed in sheepes attire fraudulētly go about to worow and scatter the sheepe. Doubtles, the common fame & brute is come vnto our eares. &c. Vtin mandato praecedenti. We will therefore and commaunde, straightly enioyning you, that in the Church of our blessed Lady in Oxforde, vpon those dayes the which accustomedly the Sermon is made, as also in the schooles of the sayde Vniuersitie vpon those dayes the Lectures be read, ye publish and cause by others to be published to the clergie and people, as well in their vulgare tounge, as in the Latine tounge, manifestly and plainly without any curious implication, the same hereticall and erronious conclusions, so repugnant to the determination of holy Church, as is aforesayd: to haue bene & be condemned, and which conclusions also we declare by these our letters to be vtterly condemned: And that farthermore you forbid, and canonically admonish, and cause to be admonished, as we by the tenour of these presents doe forbid and admonish you, once, twice, and thrise, and that peremptorily: that none hereafter hold, teach, preach, or defende the heresies and errours aboue sayde, or any of them eyther in schoole or out of schoole by any sophistical cauillation or otherwise: or that any admit to preache, heare, or hearken vnto Iohn Wyckliffe, Nicholas Hereford, Philip Reppindon Chanon regular, or Iohn Ayshton, or Laurence Readman, which be vehemently and notoriously suspected of heresie, or els any other whatsoever, so suspected or defamed: or that either priuely or publiquely, they either aide or fauoure them or any of them, but that incontinently they shunne and auoide the same as a Serpent which putteth foorth moste pestiferous poyson. And farthermore, we suspend the sayd suspected persons from al scholasticall acte, till such time as they shall purge themselves before vs in that behalfe, and that you denounce the same publiquely, by vs to haue bene and be suspended, and that yee diligently and faithfully inquire, of all their fautours and fauourers, and cause to be inquired throughout all the haules of the sayde vniuersitie. And that when you shall haue intelligence of their names & persons,* that yee compell all and euery of them to abiure their outragies by Ecclesiasticall Censures and other paines Canonically whatsoever vnder paine of the greater curse, the whych against al and singular the rebellious in thys behalfe, and disobeying our monitions wee pronounce: so that their fault, deceit, and offence in thys behalfe, deserue the same (the sayde monition of ours being first sent) which in this behalfe we exteeme and allowe Canonically, that then and agayne accordyng to the effect of these our letters. &c. The Absolution of all and singular such, whych shall incurre the sentence of thys instrument by vs sent foorth (whyche God forbidde) Wee specially reserue vnto oure selues: exhortyng you the Chauncellour by the aspersion of the bloud of IESVS CHRIST, that to the vttermost of your power hereafter you doe your indeuoure, that the Clergie and people Page 437 being subiecte vnto you, if there be whych haue strayed from the Catholique faith by such errorrs, may be brought home againe, to the laud and honour of his name that was crucified, and preseruatiō of the true faith. And further our will is, that whatsoeuer you shal do, in the premisses in maner & forme of our processe in this behalfe, to be had and done: that you for your parte, when you shalbe required thereunto, plainly & distinctly do certifie vs by your letters patents, hauing the tenour hereof.

The conclusions and articles here mentioned in thys letter, are aboue prefixed. Of which some were cōdemned for hereticall, some for erroneous.

After this, within fewe daies the foresayd Archbyshop W. Courtney, directed down his letters of admonitiō to Robert Rigge commissary of Oxford, for the repressing of thys doctrine. Which yet notwithstanding both then, and yet to this day (God be praised) doth remaine. The copie of his monitiō to the Commissary here out of hys owne Register, foloweth.

The monitiō of the Archbyshop, vnto the foresayd Chauncellour.

*IN Dei nomine Amen. Where as we William by the permission of God Archbyshop of Canterbury Lorde Primate of England and Legate of the Apostolicall sea, by the consent of our suffraganes, haue caused to be assembled together diuers clerkes both secular and regular of the vniuersitie of Oxford, wythin our prouince of Canterbury and other Catholicke persons to informe vs of, and vpon certayne conclusions heretical and erroneous generally and commonly preached and published in diuers places of the sayd prouince of Canterbury to the subuersion of the whole state of the Church, and our sayd prouince: And also mature deliberation had vpon the same: by the common counsaile of the said our suffraganes & their conuocates, it was declared, that certain of the sayde conclusions, to haue bene and be condemned, some for heretical, and some for erroneous, and notoriously repugnāt to the determinatiō of the church, which we also our selues haue declared to be damnable: And haue vnderstode by credible information, and partly by experience that thou Robert Rigge, Chancelor of the vniuersity aforesaid, hast & doest incline partly to the foresaid damnable conclusions, whome also we in thys part haue partly suspected, doest intend to molest these our Clerkes aboue specified, & others adhering vnto vs in this behalf, as they ought to do: through thy subtill and sophisticall imaginations, sondry & manifold wayes, therefore we admonish thee M. Robert Chauncellour aforesaid, the first, second, and third time, and peremptorily: that thou doest not greue, let, or molest, iudicially or extraiudicially, apertly or priuely, or cause to be greued, let and molested, or procure directly or indirectly, by thy selfe, or any other, as much as in thee lieth to be greued, the foresayd Clerks secular or regular, or such as fauor them in the premisses, in their scholastical acts or in any other condition whatsoeuer. And that thou suffer none. hereafter to teach, maintaine, preach, or defend any such heresies or errorrs in the sayde Vniuersitie, either within or wythout the scholes: Neither that thou do admit I. Wickliffe, Nicholas Herford, Philip Repindon, Iohn Ayshton, or Laurēce Redman, which are vehemently and notoriously suspected of heresie, or any other so suspected or defamed, vnto that office of preaching. But that thou denounce the sayd persons to be suspended, whom we haue suspended from all scholastical act, whilst they cleare their innocencie in this part before vs, vnder the paine of the greater curse, which we here in these wrytings denounce against thy person if thou shalt not obey those our admonitions, with effecte, as thy crime, subteltie and offence in this behalfe shal require according to this our admonition premised, which we repute in thys parte for canonicall, as well then as now, and now as wel as then, reseruing the absolution of this sentence excommunicatorie, if it happen to light vpon thee, as (God forbid) specially vnto our selues. Testified with the handes of the Iurers, aboue in the page 410. before specified.

The examination of Nicholas Herford, Philip Repingdon, and Iohn Ayshton.

THE 18. day of the month and yere aforesaid in the chamber of the preaching Friers afore mentioned, before the foresayde Archb. in the presence of diuers Doctours and Bachelers of Diuinitie, and many Lawyers both Canon and Ciuil, whose names are vnder written: appeared M. Nich. Herford, Philip Repingdon, & Iohn Ayshton Bachelers of diuinity. Who after a corporal oth taken to shew their iudgements vpon the cōclusions aforesayd, were examined seuerally eache one by himselfe, before the Archb. Who there required day and place to deliberate vpon the conclusions aforesayd, and to geue their answeere vnto the same in wryting. And also required to haue a copie of the sayde conclusions to be deliuered vnto them. The which copy,* the sayd Nicholas & Philip (being openly read vnto them) receiued. Also the foresayd M. Iohn Ayshton lykewise was examined, and iudicially admonished by the said Archbishop by vertue of his othe, that hee setting aside all sophisticall words & suttelties, he fully and plainly would say his minde vpon the conclusions aforesayd. And being asked moreouer by the said Archbishop whether he would haue a further day to deliberate vpon his answers, as the foresaid Nicholas and Philip had before: said expresly that he would not, but would answer presently to those cōclusions.* And so for finall aunswere sayde, as concerning all these conclusions (containing them all together) that hys iudgement was in this behalfe to hold his peace. Wherefore the foresaid Archbishop reputing the saide Iohn herein to be suspected, admonished him in form of words as foloweth: We admonish thee Iohn Ayshton, whome we repute to be defamed, & notoriously suspected of heresie, the first, the second, and third time: that in our prouince of Canterbury hereafter, thou do not preach publickely or priuately w^tout our speciall licence, vnder paine of the greater curse, which we denoūce here by these presents against thy person, if thou obey not our monitions, for nowe as for then. And consequently, for as much as the sayd Iohn being asked of the Archb. confessed that hee had heard before of the publication of the Archbysshops Mandate, wherein was inhibited y^t no person prohibited or not sent,* should preach hereafter: the foresayde Archb. assigned to him Friday next folowing, which was the 20. day of the same moneth, after dinner to appeare before hym, either at Lamheth, or in the same place: to say for himselfe, wherefore he myght not be pronounced for an heretick, & for such a one to be denounced through hys whole prouince. Also the said Archbishop assigned to the foresaid Nicholas and Philip, the saide day & place to answer peremptorily, and to say fully & plainly to the conclusions aforesayde, all sophistication of woordes and disputation set a part.

In the 20. day aforesaid of the said month of Iune,* the yere and place aboue prefixed, before the foresayde Archbyshop, sitting in his tribunall seat, in the presence of diuers Doctours of Diuinitie, and lawyers, both Ciuil and Canon: personally appeared M. Nicholas Herford, & Phillip Repindon,* Bachelers of Diuinity, and Iohn Ayshton maister of Arte. Where, the foresaid Nicholas and Philip, being required by the sayd Archb. to answeere and say fully and plainly their iudgements vppon the conclusions prefixed, whereunto the sayde Archbyshop had assigned to the sayd Nicholas and Philip the same terme: did exhibite to the sayd Archbyshop there iudicially sitting, certaine aunsweres in wryting contained, after the maner of indētūre, the tenour whereof here vnder is contained, and after the same forme answered to the sayd conclusions. The tenour of which Indenture containing the foresaide conclusions vnto them moued as afore, foloweth in these wordes.

The protestation of Nicholas, Philip, and Iohn, with their Articles and aunsweres to the same.

WE protest here as before, publikely in these presēts: that we intend to be humble and faithful children to the church and holy scripture,* and to obey in all things the determinations of the Church. And if it shall chaunce vs at any time which god forbid, to swarue from this our intention, we submit our selues humbly to the correction of our reuerend father Lorde Archbishop of Cant. and primate of all England: and of all other, which haue interest to correct such swaruers. This protestatiō premised, thus we answeere to the conclusions aforesayd.

That the substance of material bread and wine, remaineth in the Sacrament of the aulter after consecration.

After the sense contrary to the Decretall, beginning Firmiter credimus, we graunt that it is heresie.

Page 438 That the accidents doe not remaine wythout the subiect after consecration of the Sacrament.

*After the sense contrary to that Decretall Cum Marthe, We graunt that it is heresie.

That Christ is not in the sacrament, the selfe same truly and really in hys owne corporall presence.

Although this conclusion as the words stand sound to be probable and intelligible: yet in the sense cōtrary to the decretal in Cle, Si dudum. We graunt that it is heresy. And briefly concerning this whole matter of the Sacrament of the aulter as touching also all other thyngs, we professe that we will both in worde and sense, holde wyth the holy Scripture, with the determination of the holy church and sayings of the holy Doctours.

Obstinatly to affirme that it hath no foundation in the Gospell that Christ ordained the Masse.

We graunt that it is heresie.

That God ought to obey the deuill.

In this sense that God in hys owne person or essence, ought to obey the deuill with the obedience of necessity.

We graunt that it is heresie.

If a man be duely contrite, that all externall confession is to him superfluous and vnprofitable.

We graunt that it is heresie.

If the Pope be a reprobate & an euill man, and consequētly a member of the deuill: He hath no power ouer the faithful of Christ, giuē to him of any, vnleast it be of Cesar.

We graunt that it is heresie.

That after Pope Urbane the 6. none is to be receyued for Pope, but that wee ought to liue after the maner of the Grecians vnder our owne lawes.

We graunt that it is heresie.

To say that it is against the holy Scripture for ecclesiasticall persons to haue temporall possessions.

If obstinacie be ioyned withall: wee graunt that it is heresie.

That no Prelate ought to excommunicate any man, vnles he know him before to be excommunicate of God.

We graunte that it is an error. Understanding thys knowledge to meane an experimental knowledge: so that heerewith may stand the Decree of the Church. 11. q. 3. Nemo Episco.

That he which doth so excommunicate, is thereby an hereticke or excommunicate.

After the sense agreeing w^t the other before, we graunt to be an error.

That a Prelate excommunicating a clerke, whych appealeth to the king or counsell of the realme, in so doing is a traitor to God, the king, and the realme.

We graunt it is an error.

That they whych leaue off to preache, or to heare the word of God & the gospel preached, for the excommunication of men, are excommunicate: and in the day of iudgement shalbe counted for traytors to God.

Understanding this cōclusion vniuersally so, as scripture and lawes do vnderstand such indefinit propositions: We graunt it is an error.

To affirme that it is lawful for any Deacon or Priest, to preach the word of God without the authority of the sea Apostolique or catholique Byshop, or of any other whose authority he knoweth sufficient.

We graunt it is an error.

To affirme that there is no ciuile Lord, no Bishop nor Prelate whilest he is in mortall sinne, wee graunt it is an error.

That temporall Lordes may at their pleasure take away the temporal goodes from Churches offending habitualiter: We graunt it is an error, after this sense that they may so take away temporall goodes of the churches wythout the cases limited in the lawes of the Church and kingdomes.

That the vulgar people may correct the Lordes offending at their pleasure: vnderstanding by thys word may, that they may do it by the law: We graunt it is an error, because that subiectes haue no power ouer theyr Lordes,

That tithes be pure almes, and that parishioners may for the offences of their Curates detaine the same and bestow them to others at theyr pleasure: vnderstanding by thys word may, as before, to may, by the lawe: we graunt it is an error.

That special praiers applied to any one person by prelates or religious men, do no more profit then the general praiers, if there be no let by the way to make them vnlike: Understanding thys conclusion vniuersally negatiuely, & vnderstanding by special prayers, the prayers made vpon special deuotion and general praiers of general deuotion: then after this sense, no such special prayers applied to any one person, by special orators do profite more specially the said person, then general praier doe, which are made o• y• same and for the same persons, we graunt it is an errour.

He that geueth almes to the friers, or to any frier that preacheth, is excommunicate both he that geueth, & he that taketh: Understanding thys proposition vniuersally or conditionally as is aforesayd: We graunt to be an errour.

That who so entreth into any priuate religiō what so euer, is thereby made more vnapt and vnmete to obey the commaundements of God: We graunt it is an errour.

That such holy men as did institute any priuate religions whatsoever, as well of secular hauing possessions, as of friers hauing none, in so instituting did sinne: Understanding thys reduplitatiuely or vniuersally: Wee graunt it is an error. After thys sense, that what Saint soeuer dyd institute priuate religiōs, instituting the sayd religion vpon that consideration as they did, did sinne.

That religious men liuing in priuate religiōs, be not of the religion of Christ: Understanding the proposition vniuersally as is aforesayd: We graunt it is an errour.

That friers are bound to get their liuings by the labor of their handes and not by begging: Understanding this propositiō vniuersally as before: We graūt it is an errour.

These things haue we spoken reuerend father & Lord, in all humility, vnder your gracious supportation and benigne correction, according to our abilities & slender capacities for this present (the honor of god, the verity of our belief, and safe cōscience in all poynts reserued) more humbly yet beseeching you: that if any other thing there be that semeth meete vnto your excellency & discretion to be more or otherwise said & spoken: that your gracious fatherhood would vouchsafe to informe vs as children by the sacred scriptures by the determination of the church, or authorityes of the holy Doctours. And doubtles with redy wils, and obedient mindes we wil consent and agree vnto your wholsom doctrine. May it therefore please your fatherhode right reuerende in God, according to y^e accustomed maner of your benignity, fauourably to accept these our wordes and sayings, forasmuch as the foresayde conclusions were neuer by vs either in scholes affirmed, or els in Sermons publicly preached.

Further examinations and proceedings against the foresayd Nich. Herford, Phillip Reppindon, and Io. Aishton.

WHen all these answers were made vnto the said lord Archb. of Canterb. the sayde Nicholas and Phillip,* for that they aunswered not vnto the meaning and words of the first conclusion expresly: but contrary to the sense of the decretall Firmiter credimus, were there iudicially examined what their sense and meaning was, but they wold not expresse the same. Then was it demaunded of them according to the sense of the same conclusion declared on the behalfe of the sayd Lord of Cant. whether the same materiall bread in numero, whych before the consecration is laid vpon the aulter, remaine in the proper substance and nature, after the consecration in the Sacrament of the aulter, and likewise of the wine? To this the said Nicholas & Phillip aunswered, that for y^t time they could say no more therein, then that they had already aunswered, as is afore alledged in writing. And for that vnto the sence and wordes of the second conclusion they aunswered not fully and expresly, but in a sence contrary to the Decretall Cum Marthe, beyng asked what was y^e meaning, would not expresse the same. Therefore it was demanded of them according to the sence of the same conclusion, declared in the behalfe of the sayde Lord of Caunterbury, whether those corporall accidences which formally were in the bread and wine before the cōsecration of them: after the consecration were in the same bread and wine, or els were subiected in anye other substaunce? To this they aunswered, that better to answeare, then before in theyr writinges they already had, for that time they could not. To the meaning also and wordes of the third conclusion, for that they aunswered not playnly and expresly, but in sence contrary to the decretall in the Clementines Si dudum, being asked what was that sence and meaning, woulde not declare the same: Wherefore it was then demaunded of them according to the sence of the same conclusion, declared on the behalfe of the sayd Lorde of Canterbury. Whither the same body of Christ whiche was assumed of the Uirgine, be in the sacrament of the aulter, secundum se ipsum, euen as he is really in carnall substance, proper essence, and nature. To this they aunswered, that for that time they could say no more then that they had sayd, as before is specified in writing.

Page 439 Furthermore, to the sence and text of the sixt conclusion, for that they aunswered not fully and expresly, beyng asked whether God ought any maner of obedience to the Deuill or not: they said yea, as the obedience of loue, because he loueth him, and punished him as he ought. And to proue that God ought so to obey the deuill, they offered themselues to the fire.

To the 11. conclusion, for that they aunswered not expresly, being asked whither a prelate might excommunicate any man being in the state of grace: said yea.

Unto the 20. cōclusion, for that they answered not fully, simply, and expresly, being demaunded whether special or genenerall prayers did most profit, and were of greater force? They would not say but that speciall.

Unto the last conclusion, for that they aunswered neyther simply nor expresly, and being demanded particularly, whether any frier were bounde to get his liuing wyth his manuall labour, so that it might not be lawfull for them to liue by begging? They would make no aunswere at all.

After that, the foresaid Lord Archb. of Cant. demaunded of all the foresaid Doctors,* what their iudgement was touching the answeres that were made vpon all & singuler such conclusions. All which doctors and euery of them seuerally, sayd: y^e there all the answeres geuen vnto the first second, third, and sixt cōclusions (as is before recited) were insufficient, hereticall and subtill, and that all the answeres made specially to the tenth, ninth, and last conclusions, as is aboue mentioned: were insufficiēt, erroneous and peruerse. Whereupon the Lord sayd Archbishop of Caunterbury, considering the sayd aunsweres to be hereticall, subtill, erroneous and peruerse, accordingly as the said Doctors (as is aforesayd) had wayed and considered: admonished the said Nicholas and Phillip sufficiently▪ vnder these forme of wordes.

The name of Christ being called vpon: we William by Gods permission,* Archbishop of Canterbury, Metropolitane of al England, and Legate of the Apostolique see, and through all our prouince of Caunterbury, Inquisitor of all heretical prauitie: do sufficiently and lawfully admonish and cite you Nicholas Herford and Phillip Repingdon professors of Diuinitie, hauing this day and place assigned you by your own consent and our prefictiō, peremptorily to answere and to say, fully and playnely your opinions touching these conclusions wherunto we do referre you (all subtyll, sophisticall, and Logicall wordes set apart) being therunto sworne, cited, & commanded: Which thyng to do, without cause reasonable or any licence geuen thereunto, you neither haue bene willing nor are willing, nay rather ye contemptuously refused to aunswere to some of those conclusions before vs iudicially, according to the effect of our monition, citation and commaundement before sayd. But for that, ye haue answered vnto some of them heretically, and to other some erroneously, although not fully, we admonish and cite you once, twice, and thrice, and that peremptorily: that plainely and fully (all subtile, sophisticall and logicall wordes set apart) you and euery of you answer vnto the same conclusions, and vnto that sense and meaning by vs limited: vnder the payne that otherwise such conclusions deserue by you confessed, and that for the same conclusions you ought to haue.

Which admonition being made and done, for that the foresayd Nicholas and Phillip would make none other answere: The said Lord archbish. of Caunterbury concluded that busines, prefixing and assigning vnto the foresayd Nichalas and Phillip 8. dayes space,* that is to say, vntill the 27. day of the same month: And that then they shoulde appeare before the sayd Lord Archbishop of Canterbury whersoever within the same his prouince of Caunterbury hee shoulde fortune to be, to heare his decree that shoulde be made in that behalfe. This done, the foresayd Archbish. of Caunterbury, monished and cited lawfully and sufficiently, Iohn Aishton vnder the the tenour of these wordes following.

In the name of God: we William by Gods permissiō, Archb. of Cant. Primate of all England, Legate of the see Apostolicall, and through all our prouince of Cant. of all heretical prauities chiefe Inquisitour: do monish & cite thee, Iohn Asheton maister of arte, and student in diuinitie appearing before vs, iudicially to say and speake the playne veritie touching these conclusions to the which we doe referre thee: and to the which we haue caused thee to sweare, laying thy hand vpon a booke: as being also otherwise by vs admonished and commaunded to keepe this daye and place by vs appointed, for the third time peremptorily, to propone such reasonable cause (if thou hast any) wherefore thou oughtest not to be pronounced an hereticke. And sufficiently and lawfully we monish and cite thee, the first, second and third time, and that peremptorily, that thou, fully and playnely (all subtyll, sophisticall, and logicall wordes for apart) doe aunswere vnto the same conclusions, vnder the payne that vnto such conclusions belong & on thy part confessed, and that thou for suche conclusions oughtest to suffer whiche monition, being thus premised: The sayde Archbishop read the first conclusion, and of the sayd Iohn inquired what was his opinion and meaning therein, and hereupon he said his minde conce•ning the foresayd monition. Then, the foresayd Iohn Asheton being often required by the archbishop that he would aunswere in the •a•me tongue to <◇> questions whi•h were demaunded of him,* because <◇> lay people that stood about him: he crying out into the Englishe tongue, vttered friuolous and approbrious <◇> to <◇> and excite the people against the sa•• Archbishop as it should seem. Neyther did he vnto the fi•st con•lusion nor vnto any of these other conclusions, effectually and pertinently seeme to them to aunswere: but rather by the subtilties, & shiftes, saying oftentimes and as expresly as Luke said, it was sufficiēt for him to beleue as the holy Church beleued. Then the said Archbishop examined him vpon the first conclusion touching y^e Sacrament of the an••r: whether, that after the wordes of consecration, there remayneth materiall bread particular bread,* or vniuersall bread? He sayde the matter passed his vnderstanding, and therefore said the woulde in that forme and maner aunswere and otherwise not. But amongst other things, he spake in deriding wise vnto the said Archb. against this worde Materiall, saying, you may put that in your purse if you haue any. Whereupon the said Archbishop, calling that an vnwise and foolishe aunswere as the rest of the doctors did (of whome mention was made before) rather for that he was a graduat in the schooles, farther proceeded against the said Iohn Asheton in this wise.

And thou Iohn Asheton monished and commaunded by vs as is aforesayd, after thine oth taken: without anye reasonable cause or any other other licence, neither wouldest thou nor yet will, but refused and yet doest contemptuously, to aunswere vnto such conclusions before vs, iudicially according to our monition & commandement aforesad doe hold all such conclusions by thee confessed, & thee the foresaid Iohn with all thy said conclusions, conuicted. And therefore we do pronounce and declare by sentence geuing, that thou Iohn Ashton cōcerning those cōclusions, which by vs with good deliberation of diuers prelates our suffraganes, and also diuers and sondry professours of diuinitie, and other wise men and learned in the lawe according to y^e Canonically sanctions, being condemned and declared for an hereticke and hereticall: to haue bene and still is, an hereticke, and thy conclusions heretical. And as touching thy other conclusions by vs hertofore counted erroneous, and for erroneous condemned: we doe pronounce and declare sententially by these our writings, that both thou hast erred and doest erre.

Upon the same 20. day of Iune in the yeare and place aboue recited:* the foresaid Lord of Caunterbury being desirous, as he pretended to be informed by Thomas Hilmā bachelor of diuinitie there being present and somewhat fauouring the said M. Iohn Asheton what his iudgement & opinion was touching y^e foresaid conclusions: prefixed and assigned vnto the said Thomas (for that time demaunding the same deliberation and day) 8. dayes after, that is to say, the 28. of the said month:* that he appeare before the Bishop of Cant. wheresoeuer within his said prouince of Canterbury, he should then happen to be, to declare playnely and fully what his iudgement and opinion was, touching the foresaid conclusions. The Friday next following,* that is to say, the 28. day of Iune: the foresaid M. Nicholas, Phillip, and Thom. Hilman, appeared before the said Archb. and lord Inquisitour of Canterbury, in the chappell of his manor of Otfurd, in Page 440 the Dioces of Canterbury, there sitting in his Tribunall seat. To whom the sayd bishop of Canterbury saying, that for because at that time he had not the presence & assistance of the doctors in diuinitie, and of the Canon and ciuil law: He continued the sayd busines touching the sayd Nicholas Phillip,* and Thomas, in the same state wherin thē it was till Tewesday next & immediately ensuing: that is to say, the first day of Iuly, the yeare of the Lord abouesayd, and prefixed vnto the said Nicholas, Phillip, and Thomas Hilman the same day to appeare before him, wheresoeuer within his prouince of Caunterb. he should then chaunce to be, to do that whiche vppon the sayd 28. day, they were purposed to doe together or a part.

Which Tuesday being come, the foresaid Archb. in the chiefe house of his Church at Canterbury, before the houre of 9. with the doctours, whose names are vnder conteined and other Clerkes a great multitude: Expected the foresaid Nicholas, Phillip, and Thomas, long•ime by the bedle calling them and looking after them. who neuerthelesse appeared not before two of the clocke after dinner the same day, continuing the foresayd busines in the pristine state til the same houre. At which houre the foresaid Archbishop of Cant. hauing assistentes, the doctors, & clerkes, vnder recited: examined the foresayd maister Thomas Hilman, thē and there iudicially appearing, what his opiniō was touching the foresayd conclusions: who at them and the meaning of them somewhat stammering, at last, to all and singuler the same conclusions then to him red and expounded thus aunswered.* I suppose and iudge all & singuler those conclusions lately condemned by my Lord of Canterbury that now is, together with the cōsaile and consent of hys clerkes, to be hereticall and erroneous, euē as the same my Lord of Caunterbury, and other doctours of Diuinitie of the Canon and ciuill law, by common consent & counsaile haue supposed and thought. And that the same (being for hereesies and errors as before is sayd condemned) doe as much as in me is condemne: protesting that I will holde and affirme the contrary of those cōclusions, & in the same sayth liue and dye.* Then sayd the archbishop of Caunterbury, then & there sitting as Tribunall or iudge, pronouncing the said maisters Nicholas and Phillip (long in court called before and taried for, and yet not appearing) guilty of contumacy and disobedience: excommunicated them for the penaltie of this their cōtumacie, in tenor of these words following.

We William by the grace of God archbishop of Caunterbury, Primate of Englande, Legate of the Apostolicall see, and thorough all our prouince of Canterbury, of al hereticall prauitie chiefe Inquisitour:* Do pronounce maister Nicholas Herford, and maister Phillip Repingdon, professours of diuinitie, hauing this day and place by our prefiction appoynted to heart & decree in this busines of hereticall prauitie (being in Court by our Bedle long called & taried for, and yet not appearing) to be stubburne and disobedient persons: and for the penalty of this their contumacie, we do excommunicate them and either of them by these presentes.

 The denouncing of the excommunication agaynst Nicholas Herford, and Phillip Reppington.

*William by Gods permission Archb. of Caunterb. &c. To our beloued sonne in Christ, whosoeuer he be, y^t this instaunt sonday shall preach at Paules crosse in London, Salutatiō, grace and blessing. For asmuch as we prefixed a certaine competent day and place to maister Nicholes Herford, and maister Phillip Reppingtō, Canon Regular of the Monastery of our Lady of Leicester, beyng Doctours of Diuinitie and of heretical prauitie, vehemētly suspected: After certayne aunsweres not fully made, but impertinently and nothing to the purpose, as also hereticall and erroneous: In diuers places of our said prouince commonly, generally, and publicly taught and preached, and therefore that they should iudicially appeare before vs, to doe & to receaue peremtorily in that behalfe, what thing soeuer the quallitie of that busines shoulde moue vnto vs: and that we haue for their contumacie in not appearing before vs at that day and place iudicially appoynted as right therein required: We by these presentes commaund & commit vnto you, firmly enioyning you, that when all the multitude of people shalbe gathered together to heare your sermō: that in the day and place appoynted, you publikely and solemnly denoūce the foresaid Nicholas & Phillip, holding vp a crosse, and lighting vp a candle, and then throwing downe the same vpon the ground, to haue bene so and in such maner excommunicated and still be.

And that both of the day of the receipt of this present citation, of the maner and forme thereof, or if that you shall apprehend by personall citation the sayd Nicholas and Phillip or either of them, or whither they shall be absent and hide themselves, as of euery thing els which in this behalfe you shall thinke meete to be done: that betweene this and the feast of S Laurence, you clerely certifie vs by your letters patentes contayning the effect of these thinges.

Against this blind excommunication of the said archb. the parties excommunicate,* commēced and exhibited their appeale vnto the bishop of Rome. Which appeale of theirs as insufficient, or rather to him vnpleasaunt, the said archbishop vtterly reiected (as might oftētimes ouercommeth right) proceeding in his preconceaued excommunication against thē, and writing moreouer his letters to hym that should preach next at Paules crosse, as is aforesaid, to denounce and to publishe openly the said Nicholas Herford, and Phillip Repington to be excommunicate, for that not appearing and theyr terme assigned.* Which was in the 13. day of the month of Iuly.

Which archbishop moreouer the said yeare, month and day aforesaid, sent also an other letter to M. Rigge Commissary of Oxford, straightly enioyning and charging him not onely to denounce the sayd sentence of excommunication, and to geue out publique citation against them, but also to make dilligent search and inquisition through all Oxford for them, to haue them apprehended and sent vp to him, personally before him to appeare, at a certain day prescribed for the same. Werby may appeare howe busie this Bish. was in disquieting & persecuting these pore mē, whō rather he should haue nourished and cherished vs his brethren. But as his labour is past, so his reward will follow at what day the great Archbishop of our soules, shall iudicially appeare in his tribunall seat, to iudge both the quick and the dead.

The archb. yet not contented with this,* doth moreouer by all meanes possible, sollicite the king to ioine withall, the power of his temporall sword, for that he well perceaued, that hitherto as yet the popishe Clergy had no authoritie sufficient by any publique law or Statute of thys land to proceede vnto death against anye person whatsoever, in case of Religion, but onely by the vsurped tyranny and example of the court of Rome. Where note (gentle reader) for thy better vnderstanding the practise of the romish prelates in seeking the kinges help to further their bloody purpose against the good saintes of God.* Which king being but young and vnder yeares of ripe iudgement partly enduced or rather seduced by importune suite of the foresayd Page 441 Archbishop, partly also eyther for feare of the Bishoppes (for kings cannot alwayes doe in their realmes what they will) or els perhaps entised by some hope of subsidie to be gathered by the Clergy was contented to adioyne his priuate assent (such as it was) to the setting downe of an ordinaunce which was in deede the very first lawe that is to be found made against Religion and the professors thereof bearing the name of an Acre made in the Parliament holden at Westminster Anno. 5. Rich. 2.* where among sundry other Statutes then published and yet remayning in the printed bookes of Statutes, this supposed Statute is to be found Cap. 5. & vltimo. as followeth.

Item forasmuch as, it is openly knowne that there be diuerse euill persons within the realme going from county to countie and from Towne to Towne in certayne habites vnder dissimulation of great holinesse and without the licence of the ordinaries of the places or other sufficient authoritie, preaching dayly not onely in Churches & churchyardes, but also in markets, fayres, and other open places where a great congregation of people is (diuers sermons contayning heresies and notorious errours to the great emblemishing of Christen fayth and destruction of the lawes, and of the estate of holy Church to the great perill of the soules of the people and of all the realme of England as more plainly is found and sufficiently proued before the reuerend father in God the Archbishop of Caunterbury and the bishops and other prelates maisters of Diuinitie, and doctors of Canon & of ciuil law, and a great part of the clergy of the said Realme specially assembled for this great cause, which persons do also preach diuers matters of slander to engender discorde and discention betwixt diuers estates of the said realme as well spirituall as temporall, in exciting of the people to the great perill of all the Realme, which preachers cited or summoned before the ordinaries of the places thereto: answered of that whereof they be impeached, they will not obey to their summons & commandements, nor care not for their monitions nor censures of the holy Church, but expressly despise them. And moreover by their subtile and ingenious wordes doe drawe the people to heare their Sermons, and doe maintayne them in their errors by strong hand and by great routes It is ordained & assented in this present parliament,* that the kinges commissions be made and directed to the Sheriffes and other ministers of our soueraigne Lord the king or other sufficient persons learned, and according to the certifications of the prelates therof to be made in the Chancery from time to time to arrest all such preachers, and also their fautors, maintayners, and abbettours, and doe hold them in arrest and strong prison till they will iustify to them according to the law and reason of holy Church. And the king will and commaund that the Chancellour make such commissions at all times that he by the Prelates or any of them shalbee certified and thereof required as is aforesaid.

An examination of the foresayd supposed Statute and of the inualiditie therof.

WHich supposed statute for as much as it was the principall ground whereupon proceeded all the persecution of that time, it is therefore not impertinent to examine the same more particularly, whereby shall appeare that as the same was fraudulently and vnduly devised by the Prelates onely: so was it in like maner most iniuriously and vnderly executed by them. For immediately vpon the publishing of this lawe, without further warrant eyther from the king or his counsell, commissions vnder the great seale of England were made in this forme. Richard by the grace of God &c.*vt patet act pag. 541. Witnesse my self at Westminster the 26. day of Iune in the sixt yeare of our raigne. Without more wordes of warrant vnder written such as in like cases are both vsuall and requisite. Viz. per ipsum Regem: per Regem & Concilium: or per breue de priuato Sigillo: all or any of which wordes being vtterly wanting in this place as may be seene in the kinges Recordes of that time: it must therefore be done eyther by warrant of this foresayd Statute, or els without any warrant at all. Whereupon it is to be noted, that whereas the said Statute appointed the commissions to be directed to the Sheriffe, or other ministers of the kings, or to other sufficient persons learned for the arresting of suche persons: the sayd commissions are directed to the Archbishop and his Suffragans, being as it appeareth parties in the case, autorising the further without either the wordes or reasonable meaning of the sayde Statute to imprison them in their owne houses or where els pleased them.

Besides also what maner of law this was, by whome devised and by what authoritie the same was first made and established iudge by that that followeth. Viz.

In the Utas of S. Michell next following at a parliament summoned and holden at Westminster the sixt yeare of the said king, among sondry petitions made to the king by his commons, whereunto he assented, there is one in this forme. Articl. 52.

Item,* prayen the commons, that whereas an Estatute was made the last parliament in these wordes. It is ordained in this present Parliament that commissions from the king be directed to the Sheri•fes and other ministers of the king or to other sufficient persons skilfull, and according to the certificates of the Prelates thereof to be made vnto the Chancery from time to time to arrest all suche preachers & their fautores maintainers and abbettours. And them to deteine in strong prison, vntill they will iustifie themselves according to reasō, & law of holy church. And the king willeth and commaundeth that the Chauncellor make such commissions at all times as shalbe by the prelates or any of them certified and thereof required as is aforesayd.* The which was neuer agreed nor graunted by the commens: but what soeuer was moued therein was without their assent. That y^e said statute be therfore disanulled. For it is not any wise their meaning y^t either thēselues, or such as shal succeed thē,* shalbe further iustified or bound by the Prelates, then were their ancesters in former times whereunto is answered, il pl[•]ist aa Roy. 1. y^e king is pleased.

Hereby notwithstanding the former vniust lawe of Anno. 5. was repealed, and the fraude of the framers therof sufficiently discouered: yet such meanes was there made by the prelates, that this acte of Repeale was neuer published nor euer fithence imprinted with the rest of the statutes of that Parliament. In so much as the sayd Repeale being concealed, like commissions and other proces were made from time to time by vertue of the sayd Basterd statute aswel during al the reign of this king as euer sithence against the professors of religion: As shall hereafter by the grace of God appeare in the second yeare of king Henry the fourth, where the Clergy pursued the like practise. And now againe to the story of our Oxford Diuines, and of the Archbishop to whom the king writeth his letters patents first to the Archbishop then to the Uicechauncellor of Oxford in forme as followeth.

The kinges letters patentes to the Archbishop.

RIchard by the grace of God king of England and Lord of Ireland:.* To all those to whome these present letters shall come, greeting. By the petition of the reuerend •ather in God, William Archb. of Caunterbury, Primate of England exhibited vnto vs, we right well vnderstand: That diuers and sondry conclusions very contrary to wholesome doctrine and redounding both to the subuersion of the Catholike fayth, the holy Church, and his prouince of Cant. in diuers and sundry places of the same of his prouince haue bene openly and publiquely preached, although damnably preached. Of the which conclusions, some as heresies, other some as errors haue bene condemned: but not before good and mature deliberation first therein had and vsed, and by common counsaile of the said Archbishop, his suffragans and many doctors in diuinitie and other clerkes and learned men in the holy Scriptures, were sententially and holesomely declared. Whereupon the sayd Archbishop hath made his supplication vnto vs: that both for the coercion and due castigation of such as shall henceforth of an obstinate minde preach or mayntaine the foresaid conclusions that we would vouchsafe to put to the arme and helping hand of our kingly power. We therefore moued by the zeale of the catholicke faith, whereof we be and will be defendours, and vnwilling that any such heresies or errors shoulde spring vp within the limites of our dominion: Geue and graunt speciall licence and authoritie by the tenour of these presentes, vnto the foresayd Archbishop,* and to his Suffraganes, to arest and imprison either in their owne prisons or any other, all and euery such person and persons as shall either priuely or apertly preach and mayntayne the foresayd conclusions so condemned, and the same persons so imprisoned there at their pleasures to detain, till such time as they shall repent them and amend them of suche hereticall prauities, or els shall be of suche arestes by vs and our counsaile otherwise determined and provided. Further charging and commaunding all and singuler our liegemen ministers, and subiectes, of what state and condition so euer they be, vpon their fidelitie & allegiance wherein they stand bound to vs that by no meanes they eyther fauour, counsaile, or helpe the preachers or els mayntayners of the sayde conclusions so condemned or their fauourers, vpon payn and forfeiture of all that euer they haue: But that they obey and humbly attend vpon the said Archbishop, his Suffraganes, and ministers in the execution of these presentes, so that due and manifest publication agaynst the foresaid conclusions and their mayntayners, Page 442 without any perturbation may be done and executed, as for the defence of our Realme and catholike fayth shalbe thought most meete and requisite. In witnesse wherof, we haue caused these our letters patentes to be made.

Witnesse our selfe at Westminster the 16. day of Iune, and 6. yeare of our reigne.

 The kinges letters patentes to the Uicechauncellour.

The king: To the Chauncellour and the procuratours of the vniuersitie of Oxford which now be, or for the time being shall be: Greeting. Moued by the zeale of christian fayth, where of we be and alwayes will be defenders, and for our soules health induced thereunto, hauing a great desire to repress, and by condigne punishmēt to restraine the impugners of the foresaid fayth, which newly and wickedly go about and presume to sow their naughty and peruerse doctrine within our kingdome of England, and to preach and hold damnable conclusions so notoriously repugnant and contrary to the same faith, to the peruertering of our subiectes and people as we vnderstand: Before they any further proceed in their malicious errors, or els infect others: We haue by these presentes appoynted you to be inquisitour generall (all the chiefe diuines of the sayd vniuersitie being your assistents) and the same likewise to be done of all and singular the Graduates, Diuines, & lawyers of the same vniuersitie. And if they shall know any which be of the iurisdiction of the sayd vniuersitie of Oxford, whiche be probablie of them to be suspected in the fauour, belyefe, or defence of anye heresie or error, and especially of any of the conclusions publiquely condemned by the reuerend Father, William Archbishop of Canterbury, by the Counsaile of his Clergye, or els of any other conclusion like vnto anye of them in meaning or in wordes: and that if henceforth you shall finde any that shall beleue: fauoure, or defend anye of the foresayd heresies or errors or anye other suche like, or els which shall be so bolde to receaue into their houses and Innes Maister Iohn Wickliffe, M. Nich. Herforde, M Phillip Repingdon, or M. Iohn Asheton, or anye other noted by probable suspicion of anye the foresayd heresies or erreurs, or any other like vnto them in meaning or in worde: Or that shall presume to communicate with anye of them, or els to defend or fauour anye of suche fauourers, receauers communicantes and defendours: within 7. dayes after the same shal appeare and be manifest vnto you, to banish and expell them from the Uniuersitie and towne of Oxford, till such time as they shall declare their innocency before the Archbishop of Caunterbury for the time being, by manifest purgation. So notwithstanding, that such as be compelled to purge themselves, you certifie vs and the sayd archbishop vnder your seales, frō time to time within one month that they be such maner of men. Commaunding furthermore, that thorough all the halles of the sayd vniuersitie, ye cause dilligently to be searched and inquired out of hād: If any man haue any book or tractation of the Edition or compiling of the foresayd M. you geue your diligent attendance vpō the premisses, and that well and faythfully you execute the same in maner and forme aforesayd. And that you obey the foresayde Archbishop, and his lawfull and honest mandates, that he shall thinke good to direct vnto you in this behalfe, as it is meete ye should. And we geue in charge vnto the Uicechauncellour and Mayor of Oxford for the time being, and to all and singuler our Sheriffes, vndersheriffes, Bayliffes, and subiectes, by these presents: that they ayde, obey, and be attendaunt vpon you in the execution of the premisses. In witnes whereof, &c.

Witnesse the King at Westminster, the 13. day of Iuly, the sixte yeare of hys raigne.

Besides these letters patentes the said young King moued by the vnquyet importunitie of the Archb. sendeth moreouer an other special letter to the Uicechancellor and proctors of the Uniuersitie of Oxforde. Wherein vnder a pretensed zeale of defence of Christian fayth, he straightlye and sharply enioyneth & assigneth them (for the vtter abolishing of those conclusions & opinions) to make a generall Inquisition through the whole vniuersitie as wel for the parties aforesaid, Iohn Wickliffe. Nicholas Herford, Phillip Repington, Iohn Ashton, & such other, as also for al other whō they know or iudge to be suspected of y^t doctrine, or to be mayntayners, receauers, and defenders of foresayd parties, or their conclusions any maner of way, to the intent that they being so apprehended through their diligent search, may be wⁱⁿ 7. dayes of their admonitions expelled the vniuersitie, and cited vp to the archb. of Cant. before him to appeare, and to stand to their answers. And that they will be obedient to the Archb. aforesayd in the ordering hereof, and all other his iniunctions to be obeyed in all thinges lawfull and honest. Robert Rigges.* The 2. proctors were Iohn Huntman, & Walter Dishe, who then as farre as they durst, fauoured the cause of Iohn Wickliffe and y^t side. In so much y^t the same time and yeare, which was an. 1382. when certaine publicke sermons should be appoynted customably at y^t feast of the Ascension, and of Corpus Christi, to be preached in the cloyster of S. Frideswyde (now called Christs church) before the people, by the vicechancellor aforesayd & the proctoures (the doinges thereof the vicechauncellor aforesaid and proctors had committed to Phillip Repington, and N. Her. so y^t N. Her.* shold preach on y^e Ascension day, and Repington vpō Corpus Christi day) First Herford beginning was noted to defend Iohn Wickliffe, opely to be a faythful, good, & innocent man: for the which no small adoe with outcries was amongst the Fryers. This Herford, after he had long fauoured & mayntayned Wickliffes part, grew first in suspicion amongst the enemies of the truth. For assoone as he began somewhat liberally and freely to pronounce & vtter any thing which tended to the defence of Wickliffe, by and by the Carmelites, and al the orders of religion were in his top, and laid not a few here sies vnto his charge, the which they had strayned here and there out of his sermons, & had cōpyled together in a certaine forme, by the handes of a certayne notaries, through the industry & diligence of one Peter Stokes a Carmelite a kind of people prone & ready to all kinde of mischiefe,* vprores, debate, and discention. After this the feast of Corpus Christi drue neare, vppon which day it was looked for that Repington should preach. This man was a Canon of Leicester, & had before taken his first degree vnto Doctorship: who preaching the same time at Bradgate for the same Sermon he became first suspected, and hated of the PharisaiCALL broode of the Fryers. But through the great amd notable dexteritie of his wit, (which all men did behold and see in him) accompanied with like modesty and honesty: he did so ouercome, or at the least asswage thys cruelty and persecution whiche was towardses him, that shortly after,* by the consent of the whole fellowship, he was admitted doctour. Who as soone as he had taken it vpon him, by and by he stepped forth in the schooles, and began immediately to shewe forth and vtter, that whiche he had long hidden and dissembled. Protesting opēly, that in all morall matters, he would defend Wickliffe. But as touching the sacrament he woulde as yet hold his peace, vntill suche time as the Lorde shall otherwise illuminate the hartes and mindes of the clergie.

Nowe the day of Corpus Christi aforesayd approaching neare, when the Fryers vnderstood that this man should preach shortly, fearing least that he would rub the galles of their religion, they conuented with the Archb. of Cant. that the same day a little before that Phillip shold preach: Wickliffes conclusions which were priuately condemned, should be openly diffamed in the presence of the whole vniuersitie.* The doing of which matter, was committed to Peter Stokes Fryer, stonderd bearer and chiefe champion of that side against Wickliffe.

There were also letters sent vnto the commissary, that Page 443 he shoulde helpe and ayde him in publishing of the same conclusions, as is before declared.

These thinges thus done and finished, Repingdon at the houre appointed proceeded to his sermon. In y^e which sermon among many other thinges, he was reported to haue vttered these sayinges, or to this effect

*That the Popes or Byshops ought not to be recommended aboue temporall Lordes.

Also that in morall matters he woulde defend maister Wickliffe as a true Catholicke doctor.

Moreouer that the Duke of Lancaster was very earnestly affected and minded in this matter, and would that all such should be receaued vnder hys protection: Besides many thinges moe which touched the prayse and defence of Wickliffe.

And finally, in concluding his sermon, he dismissed the people with this sentence: I will (sayd he) in the speculatiue doctrine, as appertayning to the matter of the sacrament of the au•ter, keep silence and hold my peace, vntill such time as God otherwise shall instruct and illuminate the hartes of the Clergie.

When the sermon was done, Repington entred into Saint Frideswides Church, accompanied with many of his friendes: who, as the enemies surmised, were priuilye weaponed vnder their garmentes, if need had bene. Frier Stokes the Carmelite aforesayd, suspecting all this to be against him, and being afrayd of hurt, kept to himself wⁱn the sanctuary of the church, not daring as then to put out his hed. The Vicechauncellor and Repington, friendly saluting one an other in the church porch, sent away the people, and so departed euery man home to his owne house. There was not a little ioy thorough the whole vniuersitie for that sermon,^{} but in the meanetime, the vnquiet & busie Carmelite, slept not his matter. For first by his letters he declared the whole order of the matter vnto the archbishop exaggerating the perils and daungers that he was in, requiring and desiring his helpe and ayd, pretermittig nothing, wherby to moue & stirre vp the archbishops minde, which of his owne nature was as hote as a toste as they say,^{} and ready inough to prosecute the matter of his owne accord, though no man had prickt him forward thereunto. Besides all this (3. dayes after) with a fierce and bold courage, the sayd Fryer breathing out threatninges and heresies agaynst them, tooke the way vnto the schooles: mynding there to proue, that the Pope and the Bishops ought to be prayed for before the Lordes temporall. Whiles thys Frier was thus occupied in the schooles, he was mocked and derided of all men, and shortly after he was sent for by the Archbishop to London: whom immediately after, the Vicechauncellor & Brightwell followed vp, to purge and cleare themselues and their adherentes from the accusations of this Frier Peter. At the length they being examined vpon Wickliffes conclusions y^t were condemned: they did all consent, that they were worthily condemned. The Vicechauncelor being afterward accused for the contempt of the Archbishops letters, when as he perceaued & sawe, that no excuse would preuayle to auoyd that daunger, hūbling himselfe vpon his knees, he desired pardon. The which when he had now againe (as is aforesaid) albeit very hardly obtayned: By the help of the Bishop of Winchester, he was sent away agayn with certayne commandementes, and suspencions of heretickes. Then began the hatred on eyther part somewat to appeare and shew, and specially all men were offended,^{} and in the toppes of these Friers and religious men, vpō whom whatsoeuer trouble or mischiefe was raysed vp, they did impute it as to y^e authors and causers of the same. Amongest whome there was one Henry Crompe, a monke Cistercion, a well learned deuine, which afterward was accused by the Byshops of heresie, He at that time was openly suspected by the Commissary,^{} because in his lectures he called the heretickes Lolardes, from his actes (as they terme them) in the schoole. Then he comming by and by vp to London, made his complaynt vnto the Archbish. and to the kinges counsell.

Whereupon he obtayning the letters of the king, and of his counsaile, by the vertue therof (returning againe to the vniuersity) was released & restored again to his former state: the wordes of whiche letter here followeth vnder written.

 The copy of the kinges letter.

^{*}The king to the Vicechauncellour and procuratoure of the Vniuersitie of Oxforde, greeting.

Where as we of late vnderstanding by the grieuous complaynt of Henry Crompe monke and regent in deuinitie within the sayd vniuersitie, howe that he, being assisted by the reuerend father in God the Archb. of Cant. and by other clerkes and deuines in the Citty of London,*to proceede in the condemnation of certayne conclusions erroneous and hereticall, hath bene therfore molested by you: And that you through sinister suggestion of some aduersaryes (pretending the peace of the sayd vniuersitie) to haue bene broken by the sayde Henry in his last lecture: did therefore call him before you to appeare and answeere: and for his not appearing, did therefore pronounce him as obstinate, and conuicte of peace breaking: also haue suspended the sayd Henry from his lectures, and all scholasticall actes. And whereas we, by our writte did call you vp for the same, to appeare and aunswere before our counsaile, vnto the premisses: so that all thinges being well tryed and examined by the sayd counsaile, it was found and determined, that all your processe agaynst the sayd Henry, was voyde and of none effecte: and commaundement geuen, that the sayd Henry shoulde be restored and admitted agayne to his former lectures and scholasticall actes. and to his pristine state as you knowe. To the intent therefore that this decree aforesaid shoulde be more duely executed of your part, we heare by these presentes straightly charge and commaund you: That you speedily reuoking agayne all your processe against the sayd Henry in the vniuersitie aforesayd, with all other that followed thereof: doe admitte and cause to be restored agayne the sayd Henry to his scholasticall actes, his accustomed lectures and pristine estate, without all delay according to the forme of the decree and determination aforesayd. Enioyning you moreouer and your commissaries or deputies and your successours, and all other maisters regent and not regent, and other presidentes, officers, ministers, and scholers of the vniuersitie aforesayd, vpon your faith and legeance you owe vnto vs that you doe not impeache,*molest, or greeue, or cause to be greued (any maner of way, priuy or apertly) the sayd Frier Henry for the causes premised, or Frier Peter Stokes Carmelite, for the occasion of his absence from the vniuersitie, or Fryer Stephen Packingtō Carmelite, or any other religious or secular person fauouring them, vpon the occasion of any eyther word or deed whatsoever, concerning the doctrine of maister Iohn Wickliffe, Nicholas Herford and Phillip Repindon, or the reprove and condemnation of their herefies and erroures, or the correction of their fauourers But that you doe procure the peace, vnitie and quiet, within the sayd vniuersitie, and chiefly betweene the religious and secular persons: and that you with all diligence nourishe, encrease, and preserue the same to the vttermost of your strength And that you in no case omitte to doe it accordingly, vppon the forfaytures of all and singular the liberties and priuiledgies of the vniuersitie aforesayd.

Witnesse my selfe at Westminster the 14. day of Iuly.

Mention was made, as you heard a little before, how M. Rigges Vicechancellor of Oxford, comming vp wyth M. Bryghtwell to the archb. of Cant. was there straightly examined of the conclusions of Wickliffe, Where he notwithstanding through the helpe of the B. of Wint. obtayned pardon, and was sent away agayn with commaundementes and charges, to seeke out all the fauorers of Iohn Wickliffe. This commaundement being receaued, Nicholas Herford,* and Phillip Repington (being priuily warned by the sayd Vicechauncellor) in the meane season cōueied them out of sight, and fled to the Duke, of Lācaster for succour & help, but the Duke whether for feare, or what cause els, I cannot say, in the end forsooke his poore and miserable clientes.*

In the meane time, while they were fled thus to the Duke, great search and inquisition was made for them to cite and to apprehend them where so euer they might be found. Wherupon, the archb.

of W. Courtney directed out his letters first to the Vicechauncellor of Oxford, then to the Bishop of London named Rob. Braybroke• charging them not onely to excommunicate the sayd Nicholas and Phillip, within their iurisdiction, and the sayd excommunication to be denounced likewise throughout all the dioces of his suffraganes: * but also moreouer, that dilligent search and watch should be layd for them, both in Ox•orde and in Londō, that they might be apprehended: requiring moreouer by them to be certified agayne, what they had done in the premisses. And thys was written the 14. day of Iuly. an 1382. Ex Regist.

Vnto these letters receaued from the archbishop, dilligent certificat was geuen accordingly, as well of the Byshop of London his part, as also of the Vicechauncello•, the tenour whereof was this.

 The letter certificatorie of the Vicechauncellor to the Archbishop.

*TO the reuerend father in Christ, Lord William Archbishop o Caunterbury Primate of all England, and Legate of the Apostolique Page 444 see, Rob. Rigges professour of diuinitie, and Vicechancellor of the vniuersitie of Oxforde, greeting with due honour.

Your letters bearing the date of the 14. of Iuly I haue receaued: By the authoritie wherof, I haue denounced and caused to be denounced effectually, the foresayd Nicholas and Phillip, to haue bene and to be excommunicate publikely and solemnly in the Church of S. Mary: and in the schooles, and to be cited also personally, if by any meanes they might be apprehended, according as you commaunded. But after dilligent search layd for them of my part to haue them personally cited and apprehended, I coulde not finde neyther the sayd M. Nicholas, not M. Phillip: who haue hyd or conuayed themselues, vnknowing to me, as here is well knowne. Whereof I thought here to geue signification to your Fatherhoode. *

Sealed and testified with the seale of mine office.

From Oxford the 25. of Iuly.

In y• meane time Nicholas Herford, and Repington being repulsed of the Duke, and destitute (as was sayde) of his supportation, whether they were sent, or of theyr owne accorde went to the archbish. it is vncertayne. This I finde in a letter of the foresayd archbishop, contayned in his register: * that Repington the the 23. day of October the same yeare 1382. was reconciled agayne to the Archbishop and also by his generall letter was released and admitted to his scholasticall actes in the vniuersitie. And so was also Iohn Ashton, of whom (Christ willing) more shall follow hereafter. Of Nicholas Herford all this while I finde no speciall relation.

In the meane time, about the 23. of the month of September the sayd yeare,  the king sent his mandate to the Archbishop for collecting of a subsidie and to haue a conuocation of the clergie sommoned, against the next parliament, which should begin the 18. day of Nouember. The Archb. likewise on the 15. day of October, directed his letters monitorie (as the maner is) to Robert Braybroke bishop of London, to geue the same admonition to al his suffraganes and other of the Clergie within his prouince for the assembling of the conuocatiō aforesayd. All which done and executed, the parliamēt begon being holden at Oxford the 18. day of Nouember, where the conuocation was kept in the Monastery of Frideswide in Oxforde. In the which conuocation, the Archbishop with the other bishops there sitting in their Pontificalibus, declared two causes of that their present assembly, whereby (sayth he) to repress heresies, which began newly in the realme to spring, and for correcting other excesses in the Church. The other cause (sayd he) was to ayde and support the king with some necessary subsidie of mony to be gathered, whiche thus declared, the conuocation was continued till the day following which was the 19. of Nouember.

*At the sayd day and place, the Archbishop with the other Prelates assembling themselues as before: The archbishop after the vsed solemnitie, willed the procuratoures of the clergy appoynted for euery dioces, to consult within themselues, in some conuenient seuerall place, what they thought for theyr partes touching y^e redresse of thinges, to be notified and declared to him and to his brethren. &c.

Furthermore, forsomuch (sayth he) as it is so noysed through all the realme, that there were certayn in the vniuersitie of Oxford, which did hold and mayntayne conclusions (as he called them) heretical and erroneous condemned by him,* and by other lawyers and doctours of Diuinitie. He therefore assigned the bishops of Saram, Herford and Rochester, with William Rugge then Vicechauncellour of the Vniuersitie of Oxford (for belike Robert Rigge was then displaced) as also William Berton, and Iohn Middleton Doctors,* geuing them hys full authoritie wyth cursing and banning, to compell them to search and to enquire with all diligence and wayes possible, ouer all & singular whatsoeuer, eyther Doctors, Bachellers, or schollers of the sayd vniuersitie, which did hold, teache, mayntaine and defend, in schooles or out of schooles, the sayd cōclusions heretical (as he called them) or erroneous, and afterward to geue certificat truely and playnly touching the premisses.* And thus for that day the assembly brake vp to the next, and so to the next, and the third being monday, the 24. day of Nouember. Ex. Regist. W. Courtney.

On the which day, in the presence of the Prelates and the clergy in the chapter house of Saint Frideswide, came in Phillip Repington (otherwise called of the brethren afterward Rampington) who their abiured the conclusions and assertions aforesayd, in this forme of wordes as followeth.

In Dei nomine Amen. I Phillip Repington, Canon of the house of Leicester, acknowledging one catholique and Apostolick sayth do curse and also abiure all heresie, namely these heresies and errours vnder written, condemned & reproued by the decrees canonicall, and by you most reuerend father, touching which hitherto I haue ben• dissamed: condemning moreouer & reprouing both them and the au|thors of them, & doe confesse the same to be catholically cōdemned: And sweare also by these holy Euangelics, which here I hold in my hand, and do promise, neuer by any perswasions of men, nor by any way hereafter, to defend or hold as true, anye of the sayd conclusions vnder written: but do & will stand and adhere in all thinges, to the determination of the holy Catholicke Church, and to yours, in this behalfe. Ouer and besides, all suche as stand contrary to this fayth, I doe pronounce them with their doctrine & followers worthy of euerlasting curse. And if I my selfe shall presume at any time to hold or preach any thinge contrary to the premisses. I shall be content to abide the seueritie of the Canons.

Subscribed with mine owne hand, & with mine own accord. Phillip Repington. And thus the sayd Rampington was discharged, who afterward was made Byshop of Lincolne, and became at length the most bitter and extreme persecutor of this side, of al the other bishops wⁱn the realm, as in proces hereafter may appeare.

After the abiuration of this Repington,* immediately was brought in Iohn Ayshton, student of Diuinitie: who being examined of those conclusions, and willed to say hys mynde, aunswered: that he was to simple and ignoraunt, and therefore would not, and could not answere any thing clearely or distinckly to those conclusions. Whereupon, the Archb, assigned to him Doctor W. Ruge the Vicechauncellour, and other deuines such as he required himselfe to be instructed in the mistery of those conclusions against the after no one: who then appearing again after dinner before the archbishop and the Prelates, did in like sort and forme of wordes abiure as did Repington before.

Of this Iohn Ayshton we read, that afterwarde by Tho. Arundell Archb. of Cant. he was cited and condemned,* but whether he dyed in prisō, or was burned, we haue yet no certainty to shewe. This is certayne by the playne wordes of the chronicle of S. Albans, that when the arch. with his doctors and fryers •ate in examination vpon this sayd Iohn Ashton, in London: the Londiners brake open the dore of the conclaue, ipsum{que} Archiepiscopum in ciuitate sedentem impediuerunt, cum processum fecisset contra Iohannē Ashton. &c. That is and did let the Archbishop himselfe sitting in the Citty of London, when he woulde haue made processe agaynst Iohn Asheton. an. 1382. And thus muche of Iohn Asheton.*

As touching Nicholas Herford during the time of this conuocation, he did not appeare: and therefore had the sentence of excommunication. Agaynst which he put hys appeale from the archb. to the king and his Counsaile. The Archb. would not admit it, but finding staves and stoppes caused him to be apprehended and enclosed in prison. Notwithstanding through the will of God, and good meanes he escaped out of the prison returning agayn to his former exercise, and preaching as he did before, albeit in as couert and secret maner as he could. Whereupon the Archbishop thundring out his boltes of excōmunication agaynst him, sendeth to al pastors and ministers, willing thē in al churches, and all festiuall dayes, to diuulge the sayd his excommunication against him, to al men. Writeth moreouer and sendeth speciall charge to al and singular of the laity, to beware that theyr simplicity be not deceaued by his doctrine, but that they like Catholicke children will auoyd him, and cause him of all other to be auoyded.

Furthermore, not contented with this, addresseth also his letters vnto the king, requiring also the ayde of his tēporall sword to chop of hys neck, whō he had already cast down. See and note reader, the seraphicall charitie of these priestly prelates towards y^e poore redemed flock of Christ And yet these be they whiche washing theyr handes wyth Pylate, say and pretend: Nobis non licet interficere quenquā. It is not our partes to kill any man. The cōpye of the letter written to the king, is this.

The letter of the Archbishop to the king.

*TO the most excellent prince in Christ, &c. William &c. greeting in him by whom kinges do reigne, & princes beare rule.

Vnto your kingly celsitude by the tenour of these presentes we intimate, that one M Nich. Herford D. of diuinitie, for his manifest contumacie and offēce in not appearing before vs being called at the day and place assigned, therefore is inwrapped in the sentence of the greater curse, publiquely by our ordinary authoritie. And in the same sentence hath continued nowe forty dayes, & yet still continueth with indurate hart, wickedly contemning Page 445 the keyes of the Church, to the great perill both of his soule, and to the pernicious example of other. For so much therefore, as the holy mother the church hath not to do or to proceed any further in this matter: we humblye desire your kingly maiestye, to direct out your letters for the apprehending of the sayd excommunicat according to the custome of this realme of England,*wholsomely obserued and kept hetherto: to the intent, that such whome the feare of God doth not restrayne from euill, the discipline of the secular arme may bridle and plucke backe from offending. Your princely celsitude the Lord long continue.

From Lambeth the 15. of Ianuary.

To this letter of the Archb, might not the king (gentle reader) thus aunswere agayne, and aunswere well?

*YOur letters with your complaynt and requestes in the same conteyned, we haue receiued and well considered. For the accomplishing wherof, ye shall vnderstand that as we are readely bent to gratify and satisfy your minde in this behalfe on the one side: so we must beware agayne on the other, that our authoritye be not abused either to oppresse before we know, or to iudge before we haue tryed. Wherefore for so much as you in your letters do excite and sharpen the seuer discipline of our secular sword, agaynst one Nich. Herford, for his not appearing before you: and yet shewing in the sayd your letters no certaine cause to vs what you haue to charge him withall: we therfore following the exāple of Alexander Magnus, or rather the rule of equity in opening both our eares indifferently, to heare as well the one part, as the other do assigne both to him, when as he may be found, & to you whē you shal be called a terme to appeare before vs. To the intēt that the controuersy betwene you and him, stāding vpon points of religiō, being tried by the true touchstone of Gods holy word due correction indifferently may be ministred according as the offence shall be founde. In the meane time, this we cannot but something maruell at in your sayde Letters: First, to see you mē of the Church and Aungels of peace to be so desirous of bloud. Secondly, to consider you again so fierce in prosecuting the breach of your lawe: and yet so colde in pursuing the breache of the expresse law of God and his commaundementes. Thirdly, to behold the vnstable doublenesse in your proceedings, who pretending in your publick sentence, to become as intreaters for them to vs in the bowels of Iesus Christ, that we will withdraw from them the rigour of our seuerity, and yet in your letters you be they which most set vs on. If not appearing before you▪ be such a matter of contumacy in case of your lawe, that is in no case to bee spared: what shoulde then our Princely discipline haue done to men of your calling: Henry Spencer Bishop of Norwich, being at Cant. was sent for by our speciall commaundement to come to our speach, denyed to come, and yet we spared him. Iohn Stratforde Archbyshop your predecessour, being required of our progenitour king Edward the third to come to him at Yorke, would not appeare: by the occasion whereof, Scotland the same time was lost, • yet was he suffered. The like might be sayd of Robert Winchelsey in the dayes of king Edward the first, and of Edmund Archb. of Cant in the daies of K. Henry 3. Stephen Langhton was sent for by K. Iohn to come,*he came not. The like cōtumacy was in Becket toward K. Henry. 2. Also in Anselme toward K. Henry. 1 All these for theyr not appearing before their princes, ye do excuse, who notwithstanding might haue appeared without daunger of life. This one man for not appearing before you, you think worthy of death: whose life you would haue cōdemned notwithstanding, if he had appeared. It is no reason if the Squirill climing to the tree from the Lyons clawes, would not appeare, being sēt for to be deuoured: that the Eagle therfore should seise vpon him without any iust cause, declared agaynst the party. Wherefore according to this, and to that aforesayde when he shall appeare, and you be called, and the cause iustly wayed, due execution shall be ministred.

And thus farre concerning Nicholas Herforde, & the other aforesayd, but all this meane while what became of Iohn Wickliffe it is not certaynly known. Albeit so farre as may be gathered out of Waldē, it appereth that he was banished, and driuen to exile. In the meane time it is not to be doubted, but he was aliue during all this whyle, wheresoeuer he was as by his letter may appeare, which he about this time wrote to Pope Urbane the 6. In the which letter he doth purge himselfe, that being commaūded to appeare before the Pope at Rome, he came not: declaring also in the same a brie•• confessiō of his fayth. The copy of which Epistle here followeth.

The Epistle of Iohn Wickliffe sent vnto Pope Urbane the 6. An. 1382.

*Verely I do reioyce to open and declare the fayth which I do holde vnto euery man. And specially vnto the Bish. of Rome, the which for so much as I doe suppose to be sound and true, he will most willingly confirme my sayd fayth, or if it be erroneous amend the same.

First I suppose, that the Gospell of Christ, is the whole bodye of Gods law, and that Christ which did geue that same law hymselfe, I beleue him to be a very man, and in that poynt, to exceed the law of the Gospell, and all other partes of the Scripture. Agayne I do geue and holde, the Bishop of Rome, for so much as he is the Vicare of Christ here in earth, to be bound most of all other men vnto that law of the Gospell. For the greatnesse amongst Christes Disciples, did not consist in worldly dignity or honours but in the neare and exact following of Christ, in his life and maners: wherupon I do gather out of the hart of the law of the Lord, that Christ for the time of his pilgrimage here, was a most poore man, abiecting and casting of all worldly rule and honour, as appeareth by the Gospell of Math. the 8. and the 2.. Corinthians. 8. chapter.

Hereby I do fully gather, that no faythfull man ought to follow, *neither the Pope himselfe, neither any of the holy men, but in such poynts, as he hath folowed the Lord Iesus Christ. For Peter and the sonnes of Zebede by desiring worldly honour, contrary to the folowing of Christes steppes did offend, and therfore in those errors, they are not to be folowed.

Hereof I do gather, as a Coūcell, that the Pope ought to leaue vnto the secular power, all temporall dominion and rule, & therunto effectually to moue and exhort his whole Clergy: for so did Christ, and specially by his Apostles. Wherefore, if I haue erred in any of these poyntes, I will most humbly submitte my selfe vnto correction euen by death if necessitye so require: And if I coule labor according to my will or desire in my owne person, I would surely present my selfe before the Bishop of Rome: but the Lorde hath otherwise visited me to the cōtrary, and hath taught me rather to obey God then men. For so much then, as God hath geuē vnto our Pope, iust and true Euangelicall instinctions, we ought to pray, that those motions be not extinguished by any subtle or crafty deuise.

And that the Pope and Cardinals, be not moued to doe anye thing, contrary vnto the law of the Lord. Wherefore let vs praye vnto our God, that he will so stirre vp our Pope Vrbane the sixt as he began, that he with his Clergye may folow the Lorde Iesus Christ, in life and maners: and that they may teach the people effectually, and that they likewise may faithfully folow them in the same. And let vs specially pray, that our Pope may bee preserued from all maligne and euill counsell, as which do know that euill and enuious men of his householde would geue him. And seing the Lord will not suffer vs to be tempted aboue our power, much lesse then will he require of any creature to do that thing which they are not able, forsomuch, as that is the playne condition and maner of Antichrist.

Thus muche wrote Iohn Wickliffe vnto Pope Vrbane:^{} but this pope Vrbane otherwise termed •urbanus was so hote in his warres against Clement the Frenche Pope his aduersary, that he had no leasure, and lesse lyst, to attend vnto Wickliffes matters. By the occasion of which schisme, God so prouided for poore Wickliffe, that he was in some more rest & quietnes. Cōcerning which schismaticall wars of these popes, for as much as we haue here entred into y^e mention therof, it shall not be unpertinent frō the order of our story, disgressyng a litle from the matter of Iohn Wickliffe, to touch something of the tragical doings of these two holy popes striuing for the triple crowne: to the intent that the Christian reader (iudging by their fruits and proceedings) may see and vnderstand what difference is betweene these popes, and Christ and his Apostles. For though in the story of the Gospel it is read,^{} that certaine of the disciples did striue which shuld be the greater, yet neither do we read that one of them tooke euer weapō against the other: and moreouer in the sayd story of the Gospell it doeth appeare, that they in so striuing as they did, were therefore sharply rebuked of our Sauour Christ, & were taught by him an other lesson.

About the beginning of the next yeare folowing, which was an. 1383. Pope Vrbane setting all his study howe to repress and cōquere the contrary Pope his aduersary, being then at Auinion (seing al his other means to sayle, and that his crosse keyes coulde doe no good) tooke to hym the sword of Romulus, & set vpō him with open warre. And first deuising w^t himselfe whom he might best chuse for hys chief champion: thought none meeter for such affaires thē Henry Spenser beyng then Bishop of Norwich, a young and a stout Prelate, more fitter for the camping cure, then for the peaceable church of Christ, as partly also might appeare before by his acts done at Lēuam in striuing for the Mayres Mace, mētioned before, pag. 428. Vnto this byshop of Norwich, the Pope had sent his bulles about this Page 446 tune, to Cro•sy whosoever would go w^t him into Fraūce, to destroy the Antipope which named himselfe Clemēt, & to make warre agaynst all those that took his part. Which Bulles, for that they gaue vnto him such great authority, he caused to be published in the Parliamēt house, & caused the cōpyes of the same to be sent all about, & to be set vp & fastened vpon all the church dores & monastery gates that al men might read thē. In the which Buls these priuiledges were graunted, the copy whereof here foloweth.

- 1. In primis,^{*} that the sayd Bishop of Norwich may vse his sword against the Antipope, & all his adherents, fauorers, and cou•ellers, and with violence put them to death.

- 2. Item, that he hath full power to inquire of all & singular such schismatikes, and to put them in prison: & to confiscate all their goods moueable and immoueable.
- 3. Item, that he hath power and authority to depriue all lay men that are such schismatikes of all maner secular offices whatsoever, and to geue theyr offices to other fit and conuenient persons.
- 4. Item, that he may depriue all such clerks, and declare them to be schismatickes, and in this behalfe to geue & bestow their benefices either with cure or without cure, their dignities personages or offices, to other persōs more meet for the same.
- 5. Item, he hath power & authority ouer lay persōs that are exempt, and Clerkes both secular and regular, yea although they be Friers mendicantes, or maisters & professors or other houses or hospitals of S. Iohns of Ierusalem, or S. Mary of Flaunders, or professours of what orders soeuer els.
- 6. Item, he hath power to dispense with what secular Clerkes soeuer▪ being beneficed either with cure or without cure; and also with such as haue dignities, personages or offices, being regulars either exēpt or not exempt, that euery one of them may be absent with him from their dignities & benefices, &c. vnder the stāderd of the crosse, without licence of any of thier Prelats required, and yet to receiue and take the intire cōmodities of their benefices, as though they had bene personally resident vpon the same.
- 7. Itē, there is graunted to all that passe the seas in this quarel, either at their own expenses or at the expēses of any other, full remission of their sins: & as large priuileges are graūted to all those that go ouer the sea with him, as to any that pay their mony, or go to fight for the holy land.
- 8. Also, all such as with their proper goods & substaunce shall geue sufficient s•ipend to able souldiors, at the discretiō of the foresayd Lord Bishop mustered, or by any other his deputy, although he himselfe be not personally at this busines aforesaid: yet shall he haue like remission, & indulgēce, as they which haue bene personally with him in this expedition.
- 9. Itē, all they are pertakers of this remissiō, which shal geue any part of theyr goods to the sayd Bishop to fight agaynst the sayd schismatikes.
- 10. Item, if any shall chaūce to dye in the iourney, that are souldiors vnder the sayd standard of y^r crosse, or els before the quarell by some meanes be finished: shall fully & wholly receiue the sayd grace, and shalbe partakers of the foresayd remission and indulgence.
- 11. Item, he hath power to excommunicate, suspend, and interdict what persons soeuer be rebellious or disturbers of him in y^e execution of his power & authority committed vnto him: of what dignity, state, degree, preheminēce, order, place, or cōditiō soeuer they shalbe: whether they shall be either of regal, queenly, or imperial dignity, or of what dignity els soeuer either ecclesiasticall or mundane.
- 12. Item, he hath power and authority to compell and inforce what religious persons soeuer, to appoynt them and send them ouer Sea, if it seeme good to him: yea although they be professors of the Friers mendicants, for the execution of the premisses.

The Popes absolution by the Bishop pronounced.

BY the authority Apostolicall to me in this behalfe committed, we absolue the A.B. from all thy sinnes confessed with thy mouth, and being contrite with thy hart, and wherof thou wouldst be cōfessed if they came vnto the memory: & we graunt vnto thee, plenary remission of all maner of sinnes,* and we promise vnto thee thy part of the reward of all iust men, and of euerlasting saluation. And as many priuileges as are graunted to them that go to fight for the holy land, we graunt vnto thee: & of all the prayers & benefites of the church the vniuersall Synode, as also of the holy Catholicke Church, we make thee partaker of.

This couragious or rather outrageous bishop armed thus with the Popes authority, and prompt with his priuileges, in the yeare aforesayd. 1283. about the time of lēt, came to the Parliament, where great consultation & contention, & almost no lesse schisme was about the voiage of this Popish Bishop in the Parliament, thē was betwene the Popes themselues. In the which Parliament many there were, which thought it not safe to commit the kings people & subiectes, vnto a rude and vnskilfull Priest. So great was the diuersity of iudgements in that behalfe, that the voiage of the sayd Bishop was protracted vnto the saterday afore Passion Sondag. In the which Sondag was song the solemne Antheme Ecce crucem Domini, fugite partes aduersae. That is, Beholde the crosse of the Lord: Flye away all you aduersaries. After which Sondag, the parties so agreed amongst themselues by common decree, that the Bishop should set forward in his voiage, hauing to him geuen the fifteen which was graunted to the king in the Parliament before. Which thinges thus concluded in the Parliament, this warlike Bishop preparing before all thinges in a readinesse set forward in his Pope holye iourney. Who about the moneth of May, being come to Canterbury, and there tarying for the winde, in the Monastery of S. Augustin, receiued a writ from the king that he should returne to the king, and to know further of hys pleasure. The Bishop fearing that if he turned agayne to the king, his iourny should be stayd, and so all his labor & preperance lost with great derision and shame vnto him: thought better to commit himselfe to fortune with that litle army he had, then by tarying to be made a ridicle to his aduersaries. Wherefore, he sent word backe agayne, to the king, that he was now ready prepared, well forward on his iourny. And that it was not expedient now to protract the time for any kinde of talke which peraduenture should be to no maner of purpose: and that it was more conuenient for him to hasten in his iourney to Gods glory, & also to the honor of the king. And thus he calling his men vnto him, entred forthwith the seas, & went to Calis: where he wayting a few dayes for the rest of his army, after the receipt of them, tooke his iourny first to the towne of Grauenidge which he besieged, so desparatly without any preparaunce of engines of warre or counsell, or of politicke men skilfull in such affayres: that he seemed rather to flye vpon them, then to inuade them. At lenth through the superstition of our men, trusting vpon the Popes absolution, he so harishly approached the walles and inuaded the enemies, that a great number of them were pitiously slayn with shot & wild fire: till at the end (the inhabiteurs being oppressed and vanquished) our men entred the town with their Bishop, where they at his commaundement destroyng both man, woman and childe, left not one aliue of all them,* which remayned in the whole town. Sic{que} crucis beneficio factum, vt crucis hostes ita delerentur, quòd v•us ex eis non remansit: That is. And so it came to passe by the vertue of the crosse, that our men croysed so preuayled against the enemies of the crosse,* that not one of them remained aliue. Ex Chron. Mon. D. Albani.

From Grauenidg this warlike Bishop set forward to Dunkyrke, where not long after the Frenchmen meeting with him, ioyned with them in battell: in which battell (if the story be true) 12. thousand of the Frenchmen were slain in the chase, and of our men but seuen onely missing. It would require a long tractatiō here to discourse all thing done in these popish warres. Also it would be no lesse ridiculous to view & behold the glorious temerity of this new vpstart captain.

But certes, lamētable it is to see the pitifull slaughter & murther of Christs people, by y^e meanes of th^ese pitillesse Popes, during these warres in Fraūce: As when the Bishop comming frō Dunkirke to the siege of Ypres a great number of Englishmen there were lost, and much mony consumed, and yet nothing done effect, to the great shame and ignominy of the Bishop. Agayne, after, the siege of Ypres (thus with shame broke vp) the sayd bishop proceeding with a small power, to fight with y^e frēch kinges ca^{••}e, contrary to the counsell of his captaynes, which counted him rash & vnskilfull in his attempt, was fayne to breake company with them, whereby part of the army wēt vnto Burburgh, & the bishop with his part returned to Grauenidg, which both townes shortly after were besieged by the french army, to the great losse both of the English and French men. In fine, when the Byshop could keepe Grauenidg no longer, the sayd Bishop with his croysies, crossing the seas, came home agayne as wise as he wēt, & thus making an end of this Pontificall war, we will returne agayne from whence we digressed, to the story and matter of Iohn Wickliffe.

Which Iohn Wickliffe returning againe within short space, either frō his banishment, or from some other place Page 447 where he was secretly kept, repayred to his parish of lutterworth, where he was parson, there quietly departing this mortall life, slept in peace in the Lord, in the beginning of the year 1384. vpon Siluesters day.

Here is to be noted the great prouidēce of the Lord in this man, as in diuers other: whom the Lord so long preserued in such rages of so many enemies, frō all their handes, euen to his olde age. For so it appeareth by Thomas Walden, writing agaynst him in his tomes entituled: De Sacramentis contra Wicleuum,* that he was well aged before he departed: by that which the foresayd Walden writeth of him in the Epiloge speaking of Wickliffe, in these wordes: Ita vt cano placeret, quod iuueni complacebat. &c. That is: so y^t the same thing plesed him in his old age, which dyd please him being young. Whereby seemeth that Wickliffe liued, till he was an olde man, by this report. Such a Lord is God, that whom he will haue kept, nothing can hurt.

This Wickliffe, had written diuers and sundry workes, the which in the yeare of our Lord 1410. were burnt at Oxford, the Abbot of Shrewsbury being then Commissary, and sent to ouersee that matter. And not onely in England, but in Boheme, likewise the bookes of the sayde Wickliffe were set on fire, by one Subincus Archbishop of Prage, who made diligent inquisition for the same, and burned them: The number of the volumes, whiche he is sayd to haue burned most excellently written, and richly adorned with bosses of golde,* and rich coueringes (as Eneas Siluius writeth) were aboue the number of two hundreth.

Ioannes Cocleus in his booke De historia Hussitarū, speaking of the bookes of Wickliffe, testifyeth: that he wrot very many bookes, sermons and tractations. Moreouer the said Cocleus speaking of himselfe, recordeth also: that there was a certaine Bishop in England which wrot vnto him declaring, that he had yet remayning in his custodie two huge and mighty volumes of Iohn Wickliffes workes, which for the quantity therof might seme to be equal with the workes of S. Augustine. Haec Cocleus.

Amongest other of his Treatises I my selfe also haue found out certayne, as de censu & veritate scripturae. Item, De Ecclesia. Item, De Eucharistia confessio Wickleui, whiche I entend hereafter: the Lord so graunting; to publish abroad.

As concerning certayne aunsweres of Iohn Wickliffe which he wrote to king Richard the 2. touching the right and title of the king, and of the Pope: because they are but short, I thought here to annexe them. The effect whereof here foloweth.

Iohn Wickliffes aunswere vnto K. Richard the second, as touching the right and title of the king and the Pope.

IT was demaunded, whether the kingdom of England, may lawfully in case of necessity, for his own defence, deteyne and kepe backe the treasure of the kingdome, that it be not caried away to forreine & straunge nations, y^e pope himselfe demaunding and requiring the same vnder pain of censure, and by vertue of obedience.

Wickliffe setting a part the minds of learned mē, what might be sayd in the matter, either by the canon law, or by the law of England or y^e ciuill law, it resteth (saith he) now onely to perswade and proue, the affirmatiue part of this doubt, by the principles of Christes law. And first I proue it thus, Euery natural body hath power geuen of God to resist agaynst his contrary, and to preserue it selfe in due estate, as the Philosophers knew very well.

In somuch, that bodyes without life, are indued with such kinde of power (as it is euidēt) vnto whom hardnes is geuen to resist those thinges that woulde breake it, and coldnes to withstād the heat that dissolueth it. Forsomuch then, as the kingdome of England (after the maner and phrase of the Scriptures) ought to be one body: & the clergy with the communalty, the members thereof, it seemeth that the same kingdome hath such power geuē him of god, and so much the more apparaunt: by how much the same body is more precious vnto God, adorned with vertue & knowledge. For somuch thē as there is no power geuē of god vnto any creature: for any end or purpose: but that he may lawfully vse the same to that end and purpose: It followeth that our kingdome may lawfully keep backe and deteyn theyr treasure, for the defence of it selfe, in what case soeuer necessity do require the same.*

Secondarily, the same is proued by y^e law of y^e gossell. For y^e Pope cannot challenge y^e treasure of this kingdom, but vnder the title of almes, & consequētly vnder the pretence of y^e works of mercy, according to the rule of charity.

But in case aforesayd, the title of almes ought vtterly to cease, Ergo, the right and title of chalenging the treasure of our Realme shall cease also in the presupposed necessitie.* For so much as all charitie hath his beginning of himselfe, it were no worke of charitie, but of meere madnes, to send away y^e treasures of y^e realme vnto forreine natiōs, wherby the Realme it selfe may fall into ruine, vnder y^e pretence of such charitie.

It appeareth also by this, that Christ the head of the Church, whom all Christen Priests ought to follow: liued by the almes of deuoute women. Luke. 7.8. He hungred and thyrsted, he was a straunger, and many other miseries he sustained, not onely in his mēbers, but also in his owne body, as the Apostle witnesseth, Cor. viii. He was made poore for your sakes, that through his pouertie, you might be rich wherby, in the first endowīg of the Church, what soeuer he were of the Clergy that had any temporall possessiōs, he had the same by forme of a perpetuall almes, as both writinges and Chronicles do wnesse.

Whereupon S. Barnard,* declaring in his 2. booke to Eugenius, that he could not challenge any secular dominion by right of succession, as being the vicar of S. Peter, writeth thus: that if S. Iohn should speake vnto the pope himselfe, as Barnard doth vnto Eugenius, were it to be thought that he would take it patiently? But let it be so, that you do challenge it vnto you, by some other wayes or meanes: but truely by any right or title Apostolicall, you can not so doe. For how could he geue vnto you that, which he had not himselfe? That which he had he gaue you, that is to say, care ouer the Church, but did he geue you any Lordships or rule. Harke what he sayth: Not bearing rule (sayth he) as Lordes in the Clergy, but behauing your selues as examples to the flocke. And because thou shalt not thinke it to be spoken only in humility, and not in verity, marke the word of the Lord him selfe in the Cospell. The kinges of the people do rule ouer them, but you shall not do so.

Here Lordship and dominion,* is plainly forbidden to the Apostles: and darest thou then vsurpe the same? If thou wilt be a Lord, thou shalt lose thine Apostleship, or if thou wilt be an Apostle, thou shalt lose thy Lordship. For truely thou shalt depart from the one of them. If thou wilt haue both, thou shalt lose both, or els thinke thy selfe to be of that number, of whom God doth so greatly complayne, saying: They haue reigned, but not through me. They are become Princes, and I haue not knowne it. Now if it do suffice thee to rule with the Lord,* thou hast thy glory, but not with God. But if we will keepe that which is forbidden vs, let vs heare what is sayd: he that is the greatest amongst you (sayth Christ) shalbe made as the least, and he which is the highest, shalbe as the minister: and for example, set a childe in the midst of thē. So this then is the true forme and institution of the Apostles trade. Lordship and rule is forbidden, ministration and seruice commaunded.

By these wordes of this blessed man whom the whole Church doth reuerence and worship,* it doth appeare that the Pope hath not power to occupy the Church goodes as Lord therof, but as minister, and seruaunt, and proctor for the poore. And would to God that the same proud & greedy desire of rule & Lordship, which this seat doth challenge vnto it; be not a preamble to prepare a way vnto Antechrist.* For it is euident by the Gospell, that Christ through his pouerty, humility, & suffering of iniury, got vnto him the children of his kingdome.

And moreouer, so farre as I remember, the same blessed mā Barnard in his 3. booke writeth also thus vnto Eugenius: I feare no other greater poyson to happen vnto thee, then greedy desire of rule and dominion.

This Wickliffe albeit in his life time, had many greeuous enemies, yet was there none so cruell vnto him, as y^e Clergy it selfe. Yet notwithstanding he had many good frends, men not onely of the base and meanest sort, but also nobility, amongst whom these mē are to be nūbred: Iohn Clēbon, Lewes Clifford, Richard Sturius, Thomas La'timer, William Neuell,* Bohn Mountegew, who plucked downe all the Images in his Church. Besides all these, there was the Earle of Salisbury, who for contēpt in him noted towards the Sacrament, in carying it home to his house: was enioyned by Radulph Ergom Bishop of Salisbury, to make in Salisbury a crosse of stone, in which all the story of the matter should be writtē, and he euery Friday during his life to come to the crosse barefoot and barehead in his shyrt, & there kneeling vpon his knees: to do pe'nance for his fact. Ex Chron. Mon. D. Albani in vita. Ric. 2.

The Lōdiners at this time somewhat boldly trusting to the Maiors authority, who for that yeare was Ihon of Northamptō: Took vpō them the office of the Bishops, in punishing the vices (belonging to Ciuill law) of suche persons as they had found and apprehēded in committing both fornication and adultery. For first they put the womē Page 448 in the prison which amongst thē then was named Doliū. And lastly bringing them into the market place, wher euery man might behold them, & cutting of their goldēlockes from theyr heads: they caused them to be caryed about the streets, with bagpipes and trumpets blowne before them to the intent they should be the better knowne & their cōpanyes auoyded: according to the maner then of certayne the eues that were named Apellatores, (accusers or pechers of others that were guiltles) which were so serued. And w^t other such like opprobrious and reprochfull contumelyes did they serue the men also that were taken with them in cōmitting the forenamed wickednesse and vices.* Here the story recordeth how the sayd Londiners were encouraged hereunto by Iohn Wickeliffe and others that folowed hys doctrine to perpetrāt this act, in the reproch of the Prelats being of y^r clergy. For they sayd, that they did not so much abho•re to see the great negligence of those to whom that charge belonged, but also their filthye auarice they did asmuch detest: which for gredynes of money were choked w^t bribes and winking at the penaltyes due to such persons by the lawes appoynted, suffered such fornicators and incestuous persons fauourably to continue in their wickednes. They sayd furthermore, that they greatly feared, least for such wickednes perpetrated within the city and so apparantly dissimuled: that God would take vengeance vpō thē & destroy their city. Wherefore they said, that they could do no lesse then to purge the same: least by the sufferaunce thereof, God would bring a plague vpon them, or destroy thē with the sword,* or cause the earth to swallow vp both them and theyr City. Haec ex Chron. Mon. D. Albani.

This story (gentle Reader) albeit the author therof whom I folow, doth geue it out in reprochfull wise, to the great discōmendation of the Lōdyners for so doing. Yet I thought not to omitte, but to commit the same to memory, which semeth to me rather to tend vnto y^e worthy cōmendation both of the Londiners that so did: & to the necessary example of all other Cityes to follow the same. After these things thus declared, let vs now adioyne the testimoniall of the Vniuersity of Oxford, of Iohn Wickliffe.

 The publicke testimony geuen out by the Vniuersity of Oxford, touching the commendation of the great learning and good life of Iohn Wickliffe.

VNto all and singular the Children of our holye Mother the Church, to whom this present Letter shall come: the Vicechauncellor of the Vniuersity of Oxford with the whole congregation of the Maisters,* wish perpetuall health in the Lord. Forsomuch, as it is not commonly seene, that the Actes and Mmonumentes of valiaunt men, nor the prayse and merites of good men should be passed ouer and hidden with perpetuall silēce, but that true report and fame should continually spread abroad the same in straunge & farre distant places, both for the witnes of the same, and example of others: Forsomuch also as the prouident discretion of mans nature being recompensed with cruelty, hath deuised and ordayned this buckeler and defence, against such as do blaspheme and slaunder other mens doings, that whensoever witnes by word of mouth can not be present, the penne by writing may supply the same.

Hereupon it followeth, that the speciall good will and care which we bare vnto I. Wickliffe, sometime childe of this our Vniuersity, and professor of Diuinity: mouing and stirring our minds (as his maners and conditions required no lesse) with one mind, voyce and testimony,* we do witnesse all his conditions & doings throughout his whole life, to haue bene most sincere & commēdable: whose honest maners and conditions, profoundnes of learning, and most redolent renowme and fame, we desire the more earnestly to be notified & known vnto all faithful, for that we vnderstand the maturity and ripenesse of his couuersation, his diligent labors and trauels to tend to the prayse of God, the helpe & sauegarde of others, and the profite of the Church.

Wherefore we signify vnto you by these presents, that his cōuersatiō (euen frō his youth vpwards, vnto the time of his death) was so praise worthy and honest, that neuer at any time was there any note or spot of suspition noysed of him. But in his aunswering, reading, preaching and determining, he behaued himselfe laudably, and as a stout and valiaunt champion of the fayth: vanquishing by the force of the Scriptures, all such who by theyr wilfull beggery blasphemed and slaundered Christes Religion.* Neither was this sayd Doctor conuict of any heresy, either burned by our Prelates after his buriall. God forbidde that our Prelates should haue condemned a man of such honesty, for an hereticke: who amongst all the rest of the vniuersitye, had written in Logicke, Philosophie, Diuinitye, Moralitye, and the Speculatiue art without peere. The knowledge of which all & singular things, we do desire to testify and deliuer forth: to the intent, that the fame and renowne of this sayd Doctor, may be the more euident and had in reputation amongst them, vnto whose handes these present letters testimoniall shall come.

In witnes wherof, we haue caused these our letters testimonial to be sealed with our cōmon seale.

Dated at Oxford in our congregation house, the fift day of October in the yeare of our Lord. 1406.

The testimony and wordes of Maister Iohn Hus, as touching maister Iohn Wickliffe.

VERely,* as I do not beleue neither graūt that M. Iohn Wickliffe is an horeticke: so do I not deny, but firmly hope that he is no hereticke: For so much as in all matters of doubt I ought, as neare as I can, to chuse the best part. Wherefore I surely trust, that M. I. Wickliffe is one of the number of thē which are saued. The words of Christ moneth me therunto, saying Math. 7. Doe ye not iudge that ye be not iudged, & Luke the 6. Do not condemn, & ye shal not be condemned: and the wordes of the Apostle. 1. Cor. 4 Do ye not iudge before the Lord himselfe do come, y^e which shall opē those things that are hid in darknes, to manifest the priuities of all hartes.

Secondly, the loue and charity which I ought to bear vnto my neighbor (louing him as my selfe) doth moue me thereunto. Luk. 10.

Thirdly his good fame & report moneth me, the which he hath of the good Priests, of the vniuersity of Oxford, & not of the wicked, & commōly of the vulgar sort, although not of the couetous, proud, and luxurious Prelates.

Fourthly, his owne workes & writings doe stirre me therunto, by the which he goeth about w^t his whole indeuor, to reduce all men vnto the law of Christ, & specially y^e clergy: that they shoulde forsake the pompe & dominion of this world, and with the Apostles lead the life of Christ.

Fiftly, his owne protestations, which he doth oftentimes vse in his sentences, often repeating the same, doth not a litle moue me.

Sixtlye, his earnest desire and affection which he had vnto the law of Christ, doth not a litle allure me therunto, disputing of the verity therof, the which cannot fayle in any one iote or title.* Whereupon he made a booke of the verity of the holy Scripture, approuing euen vnto the vtter most, the trueth of Gods law.

Wherefore it were too foolish a consequēt to say, that because the number of the Prelates and clergy in England. Fraunce, and Boheme do coūt Iohn Wickeliffe for an hereticke,* that therfore he is an heretick. &c. Like as the reason for burning of the bookes, for it is written in the first booke of Machabees first chapter: that they did burne the books of the Lord, tearing them in peeces, and whosoever was founde to haue kept any bookes of the Testament or will of the Lord, or the which obserued and kept the lawe of the Lord, they were by the kinges commaundemen put to death. If then the burning of these bookes by wicked men did argue or proue the euilnesse of the books, thē was the law of God euill and nought.

So likewise the burning of S. Gregories bookes, and diuers other sayntes and good men, should argue & proue that they were euill & naughty men.* Whereupon as it doth not folow, that because the Bishops, Scribes, and Phariseis, with the elders of the people, condemned Christ Iesus as an heretick, that therfore he is an heretick: So likewise doth it not follow of any other man. The Byshops, maisters of diuity, monkes and prelates condemned thys man as an hereticke.* Ergo he is an hereticke. For this consequēt is reproved by Iohn Chrisostom, which was twice condemned as an hereticke by the Bishops and the whole clergy. Likewise S. Gregory in his bookes, was condemned by the Cardinals.

By like prooffe also as they affirme M. Iohn Wickliffe to be an hereticke:* Iohn Duke of Lācaster (a man of worthy memory and progenitor of Henry king of Englande) should also be an hereticke. For the sayd Duke defēded, fauored, and greatly loued M. Iohn Wickliffe, Ergo, the sayd Duke is or was an hereticke, the consequent is good. The Minor is well knowne vnto the Englishmen. The Maior appeareth in the Canon, where it is sayd, he which defendeth an hereticke. &c.

But these thinges set apart, I demaund of the aduersary, whether M. Iohn Wickliffe be damned for euer or no? If he say that he is damned because he is an hereticke:* I propounde this vnto him, whether M. Iohn Wickeliffe whiles he liued held any false doctrine cōtrary to the holy Scripture: If he do affirme it, let him then shew what doctrine it is, and afterward declare that he held it obstinately: And he shall finde, that in his bookes he alwayes wrote most commendable protestations agaynst obstinacye and Page 449 stifneckednesse. And by and by after, M. Iohn Stokes in his intimation sayth, that M. Iohn Wickliffe in Englād, is counted for an hereticke. This seemeth also false by the letter testimoniall of the Vniuersity of Oxforde: vnto the which there is more credit to be geuē, then vnto him. And this shall suffice for this present.

Now as we haue declared the testimony of the Vniuersity of Oxford, & of Iohn Hus, concerning the praise of Iohn Wickliffe: It followeth likewise, that we set forth and expresse the contrary censure and iudgementes of his enemies, blinded with malicious hatred and corrupt affections against him: especially of the Popes Councel gathered at Constance,* proceeding first in condemning hys bookes, then of his articles, and afterward burning of his bones. The copy of which theyr sentēce geuen against him by that counsell here foloweth.

 The sentence geuen by the Councell of Constance, in condemning the doctrine and 45. Articles of Iohn Wickliffe.

THE most holy and sacred councell of Cōstance,* making and representing the catholick Church for the extirpation of this present schisme, and of all other errors and heresies, springing and growing vnder the shadow and pretence of the same: and for the reformation and amendment of the Church, being lawfully congregate and gathered together in the holy Ghost, for the perpetuall memory of the time to come.

We are taught by the acts and historyes of the holy fathers, that the catholicke fayth without the which, as the holy Apostle S. Paule saith, it is vnpossible to please God hath bene alwayes defēded by the faythfull and spirituall souldiours of the Church, by the shield of fayth, agaynst the false worshippers of the same fayth, or rather peruerse impugnors: which through their proud curiosity will seeme to know more, and to be wiser then they ought to be, & for the desire of y^e glory of y^e world, haue gone about oft times to ouerthrow the same. These kindes of warres and battelles haue bene prefigured to vs before in those carnall warres of the Israelites agaynst the Idolatrous people. For in those spirituall warres the holy catholick Church, through the vertue & power of fayth, being illustrate•••) the beames of the heauenly light, by the prouidēce of God, and being holpen by the helpe and defence of the Saints & holy men, hath alway continued immaculate, & (the darcknes of errours, as her most cruell enemyes being put to flight) •he hath most gloriously triumphed ouer all. But in these our daies, the old and vnclean enemy hath raysed vp new cōtētions & strifes, that the elect of this world might be knowne, whose Prince and captayne in time past was one Iohn Wickliffe a false Christian. Who during his life time, taught and sowed very obstinately many articles, cōtrary and agaynst the Christian Religion,* and the Catholicke fayth. And the same Iohn Wickliffe wrote certayne bookes which he called a Dialogue, & a Trialogue, besides many other treatises and works, the which he both wrot and taught, in the which he wrot the aforesayd, and many other damnable & execrable articles: The which his books for the publication and aduancement of his peruers doctrine, he did set forth opēly for euery man to read. Wherby beside many offēces, great hurt & damages of soules, hath ensued in diuers regions & countreyes, but specially in the kingdomes of England and Boheme. Against whom the maisters and Doctors of the Vniuersities of Oxforde and Prage, rising vp in the truth and verity of God, according to the order of schooles, within a while after did reprocue and condemne the sayd Arcicles.

Moreouer,* the most reuerent fathers the archbishops, and bishops, (for that time present) of Cāterbury, Yorke, and Prage, Legats of the Apostolick sea, in the kingdome of England and Boheme, did condemne the bookes of the sayd Wickliffe to be burnt. And the sayd Archbishoppe of Prage, commissarye of the Apostolicke sea, did likewise in this behalf determin & iudge. And moreouer he did forbid, that any of those bookes whiche did remayne vnburned, should not be hereafter any more reade. And agayne these things being brought to the knowledge & vnderstanding of the Apostolicke sea, and the generall counsell: The Bishop of Rome in his last Councell, condemned the sayde bookes, treatises and volumes, commaunding them to be openly burned. Most straightly forbidding, that any men which should beare the name of Christ, should be so hardy either to keep, read, or expound any of the sayde bookes or treatises, volumes, or workes, or by any meanes to vse or occupy them: either els to alledge thē opely or priuely, but to their reproofe & infamy. And to the intent that this most daūgerous and filthy doctrine should be vtterly wiped away out of the Church,* he gaue commaudemēt through out al places: that the Ordinaries should diligētly enquire and seeke out by the Apostolick authority and Ecclesiasticall censure, for all such bookes, treatises, volumes, & workes. And the same so being found, to burne & consume thē with fire: prouiding withall; that if there be any such foūd, which will not obey the same: processe to be made agaynst them, as agaynst the fauourers and mayntayners of heresies. And this most holy Synode hath caused the sayd 45. Articles to be examined and oft times perused,* by manye most reuerend fathers of the Church of Rome, Cardinals Bishops, Abbots, maisters of diuinitye and Doctours of both lawes,* besides a great number of other learned men: the which Articles being so examined, it was found (as in truth it was no lesse) that many, yea a great number of thē to be notoriously for heretical reproved and condemned by the holy fathers: other some not to be Catholick, but erroneous: some full of offence and blasphemy: Certayn of thē offensiue vnto godlye eares and many of thē to be rashfull and seditious. It is found also, that his bookes do contain many Articles of like effect and quality, and that they doe induce and bring into the Church, vn•ōūd and vnwholesome doctrine, contrary vnto the fayth and ordinance of y^e Church.* Wherefore in the name of our Lorde Iesu Christ, this sacred Synode, ratefying and approuing the sentēces and iudgements of the Archbishops & counsell of Rome: do by this theyr decree and ordinance, perpetually for euer more condemne and reproue, the sayd Articles and euery one of them, his bookes which he intituled his Dialogue and Trialogue, & all other bookes of the same author, volumes, treatises & workes, by what name so euer they bee entituled or called, the which we wil here to be sufficiently expressed and named. Also we forbid the reading, learning, exposition, or alledging of any of the sayd bookes, vnto all faythfull Christians, but so farreforth as shall tend to the reproofe of the same:* forbidding all and singular Catholick persons vnder the payn of curse, that from henceforth they be not so hardy openly to preach, teach, or holde, or by any meanes to alledge the sayd Articles or any of them, except (as is aforesayd) that it do tend vnto the reproofe of them: commaunding all those bookes, treatises, works, and volumes aforesayd to be openly burned, as it was decreed in the Synode at Rome, as is afore expressed. For the execution wherof duely to be obserued and done, the sayd sacred Synode doth straitly charge & commaund the ordinaries of the places, diligently to attend & looke vnto the matter, according as it appertayneth vnto euery mā's duty, by the Canonick lawes and ordinaunces.

What were these articles here condemned by this coūcell, collected out of all his workes, and exhibited to y^r sayd Coūcell, to the number of 45. The copy of them foloweth vnder written.

 Certaine other Articles gathered out of Wickeliffes bookes by his aduersaries, to the number of 45. exhibited vp to the Councell of Constance, after his death, and in the same counsell condemned.

BEsides the 24. Articles aboue mentioned,* there were other also gathered out of his books, to y^e number of 45. in all, which his malicious aduersaryes peruersly collecting, and maliciously expounding, did exhibite vp to the Coūcel of Constance: which to repeat all, though it be not here needfull, yet to recite certayn of them as they stand in that Councell it shall not be superfluous.

25. All such as be hyred for temporall liuing to pray for other, offend and sinne of simony.

26. The prayer of the reprobate preuayleth for no man.

27. Halowing of Churches, confirmation of children, the Sacrament of orders, be reserued to the Pope & Bishops onely for the respect of temporall lucre.

28. Graduations, and Doctorships in Vniuersities and Colledges as they be vsed, cōduce nothing to the church.

29. The excommunication of the Pope and his Prelates, is not to be feared, because it is the censure of Antechrist.

30. Such as foūd & build Monasteries, do offend & sinne, and all such as enter into the same be mēbers of the deuil.

31. To enrich the Clergy, is agaynst the rule of Christ.

32. Siluester the Pope, & Constantine y^e Emperor were deceiued in geuing & taking possessions into the Church.

33. A Deacon or Priest my preach the word of God with out the authority of the Apostolick sea.

34. Such as enter into order, or religion monasticall, are therby vnable to keep Gods commaundements, and also to atteine to the kingdome of heauen except they reurne from the same.

Page 45035. The Pope with all his Clergye, hauing those great possessions as they haue, be heretiques in so hauing, & the secular powers in so suffering them do not well.

36. The Church of Rome is the sinagoge of Sathan, neither is the Pope immediately the vicare of Christ, nor of y^e Apostles.

37. The Decretals of the Pope be Apochripha and seduce from the sayth of Christ, and the Clergy that study them, be fooles.

38. The Emperor and secular Lordes be seduced, which so enrich the Church with such ample possessions.

39. It is not necessary to saluation to beleue the church of Rome to be supreme head ouer all Churches.

40. It is but folly to beleue the Popes pardons.

41. All othes which be made for any cōtract or ciuill bargayne betwixt man and man, be vnlawfull.

43. Benedict, Fraunces, Dominicke, Bern, with all such as haue bene patrons of priuate religion, except they haue repented, with such also as haue entred into the same: be in a damnable state, and so from the Pope to the lowest Noues they be all together heretickes.

Besides these Articles to the number of 45. condemned (as is sayd) by the Counsell of Constance: Other articles also I finde diuersly collected or rather wrasted out of the bookes and writings of Wickliffe: some by William Wodford, some by Walden, by Frier Tyssington & other, whom they in theyr bookes haue impugned rather thē cōfuted. In the number of whom, William Wodford especially findeth out these Articles, and writeth agaynst the same, to the number of 18. as here vnder follow.

- 1. The bread remayneth in his owne substaunce, some after the consecration therof vpon the aultar, and ceaseth not to be bread still.
- 2. As Iohn was figuratiuely Helias, and not personally, so the bread figuratiuely is the body of Christ, and not naturally. And that without all doubt, this is a figuratiue speach, to say: this is my body, as to say: This Iohn, is •elias.
- 3. In the Decree, Ergo Berengarius, the Courte of Rome hath determined that the Sacrament of the holy Eucharist, is naturally true bread.
- 4. They which do affirme, that the infantes of the faythful departing without the Sacrament of baptisme, are not to be sauēd: be presumptuous, and fooles in so affirming.
- 5. The administration of the Sacrament of confirmatiō, is not onely reserued to the Bishops.
- 6. In the time of S. Paule, onely two orders of Clerkes did suffice in the Church: Priests, and Deacons. Neither was there in the time of the Apostles any destinction of Popes, Patriarches and Archbishops, and Bishops, but these the Emperors pride did finde it out.
- 7. Such as in times past either for couetousnes of temporall lucre, or of hope of mutuall succour by kindred, or for cause to excuse their lust (although they dispayred of issue) were maryed: were coupled together, not by true Matrimony.
- 8. The causes of diuorcement, either for spirituall consanguinity or for affinity, be not fouēd in Scripture, but are onely ordinaunces of men.
- 9. These words, I will take thee to wife, are rather to be taken in con•ract of matrimony, then these wordes I doe take thee to wife. And the contract with any party by the words of the future tence, ought not to be frustrate for the contract with any party afterward made, by the words of the present time.

- 10. There be 12. disciples of Antechrist, Popes, Cardinals, Patriarches, Archbishops, Bishops, Archdeacons, Officials, Deanes, Monkes, Chanons, Friers, and Pardoners.
- 11. In the booke of Numbers the 18. chapter & in Ezechiell. 44. chapter it is commaunded simply, that neither the Priestes of Aaron, nor the Leuites should haue any part of inheritance with other tribes, but should liue meerly of tithes and oblations.
- 12. There is no greater hereticke or Antechrist, then that Clerke which teacheth that it is lawfull for Priestes and Leuites of the law of grace, to be indued with temporall possessions. And if there be any hereticckes, Apostates, or blasphemers, these Clerkes be such.
- 13. It is not onely lawfull for the Lords temporal to take away goods of fortune from the Churchmen, sinning vsually: but also are bounde so to doe, vnder payne of eternall damnation.
- 14. He that is the more humble and more seruiceable to the Church, and more enamoured with the loue of Christ, he is in the church militant, the greater and the more nearest Vicar of Christ.
- 15. If corporall vnction or aneling were a Sacrament (as now it is fayned to be) Christ and his Apostles would not haue left the ordinaunce thereof vntouched.
- 16. Vnto the true dominion secular, is required vertuous life of him that ruleth.
- 17. All thinges that happen, doe come absolutely of necessity.
- 18. Whatsoeuer the Pope or his Cardinales can deduce clearely out of the Scripture: that only is to be beleued, or to be done at their monitiō: & whatsoeuer otherwise they do commaund is to be condemned as hereticall.

Besides this W. Woodford afore mentioued, diuers other there were which wrote agaynst these articles of Wickliffe aforesay,* maynteyning the Popes part, as seemeth for flatterye, rather then following any iust cause so to doe, or shewing forth any reason or learning in disprouing the same. Notwithstanding, on the contrary part some there were againe both learned and godly, which taking y^e part of Wickliffe, without all flattery, defended the most of the sayd articles, openly in scholes and other places, as appereth by the works of Iohn Hus: who in his publicke determinations in the vniuersity of Prage, stode in defence of the same agaynst all his aduersaries. As partly is here to be seene in these tractations vnder folowing.

THE PVBLICK DEFENCE of certayne Articles of Iohn Wickliffe, in the first Act before the whole Vniuersity of Prage, in Charles Colledge

The determination of I. Hus vpon the xiiij. Article of Wickliffe as touching the preaching and hearing of the word of God, made in the yeare of our Lord. 1412.

FOR so much as to condemne the trueth wittingly or without reasonable examination doth tende to greate daunger of saluation,* as the Lord sayth. Luke the sixt, doe ye not condemne, and ye shall not be condemned: Therefore to auoyd this great daūger, the Vniuersity of Prage, and the whole communalty there of the Rector Masters, Doctors, Bachelers and Studentes, in theyr generall assembly, not agreeing to the condemnation pronounced by the Doctors in theyr councell house, requireth of the sayde Doctors a reasonable prooffe of theyr condemnation, and that they should by scripture, authority or infallible reasō proue the falsehead of euery those fiue and forty Articles. The which being once done,* the sayd Vniuersity will agree to the sayd condemnation as iust: For the Vniuersity doth well know, that as Augustine sayth, in the end of his second booke of Christian doctrine: That what so euer a man doth learne besides the holy scriptures, if it be hurtfull, there it is condemned: If it be profitable, there it is founde. And when a man hath founde all thinges therein which he hath profitably learned els where, he shall much more abundantly finde those thinges which are found in no place els, but are learned in the maruelous deapth, and maruellous profoundnesse of those most sacred Scriptures onely.

Thus writeth Augustine:* And Gregory in his three & twenty booke of Moralles, sayth thus, God in the holye scripture hath comprehended whatsoeuer thing may happen vnto any man, and in the same hath, by the examples of those which are gone afore, taught them which are to come, how to reforme theyr liues. Whereby it appeareth that if euery of the fiue and forty Articles conteyneth in it wholly the thing that is false and vntruth, the same is either playnelye or darckly condemned in the holye Scriptures.

Secondly it followeth by the sentence and minde of this holy man that if the condemnation of the fiue and forty Articles be profitable, the same is founde in the holy scriptures. And where as agayne Saynt Augustine writeth vnto Saynt •ierome in his •ight Epistle and the ninth Distinction. I (sayth he) haue learned to attribute this honor and reuerence vnto those writers onely which are called Canonically, that I dare affirme none of them to haue erred in theyr workes or writinges. As for all other writers I doe so read them that although they abound wyth ueuer so much holynesse, or excell in doctrine, I do not by and by thinke it true because they themselues do so iudge: Page 451 but if they can by other Canonically Authors or probable reasons perswade or proue that they doe not degresse frō the trueth.

Also the sayd Augustine in his booke De vnico Baptismo Lib. 2. sayeth thus: Who doeth not knowe or vnderstande that the holy canonically scripture to be containd in hys owne bondes and limittes, and the same to be preferred before all other letters and decrees of Bishops. &c. And a litle after he hath the like saying: as for the letters of other Bishops, which haue bene written or be written (after the Canon. being confirmed) they may lawfully be reprehended and reprobued both by the word of them that be more skilfull in that matter, and also by the auncient authority of other Bishops, or by the prudēce and wisdom of such as be better learned, or more expert, or els by generall cōsels if it so chaunce that they in any poynt haue erred and gone a stray from the sincere truth.

By these sayings of S. Austen and other like. &c. The Vniuersity of Prague hath concluded and determined that they will not receiue the condemnation of the fiue and forty Articles made by the Doctors in their councel house as iust and true, except they which condemned them, will proue theyr condemnation by the holy Scriptures and probable reasons vpō euery of the fiue and forty Articles.

Wherefore for the dew examination of the foresayd cōdemnation, whether it be effectuell or no, we will at thys present take in hand the fouretenth Article of the number of the fiue and forty, which Article is this.

They which leaue of preaching and hearing of y^e word of God for feare of excommunicatiō of men,* are alreadye excommunicate, and in the day of iudgement shalbe counted the betrayers of Christ.

This Article containeth first that all priests omitting the preaching of the word of God for feare of the excommunication of men they are already excommunicate.*

Secondly, it containeth that all such as doe omitte the hearing of the word of God, for feare of excommunicatiō, are already excommunicated.

Thirdlye that both these sortes of men in the day of iudgement shalbe counted traitors of Christ.*

As concerning the first poynt, it is presupposed that the preaching of the word of God, is commaunded vnto the Apostles and theyr followers, as it appeareth in Mathew the tenth, where it is sayd. Iesus sent his xii. Disciples, commaunding them and saying goe and preach, that the kingdome of heauen is at hand. Also in the last of Mathew, and the tenth of Luke. Whereupon, Peter the Apostle of Christ, acknowledging this precept and commaundement for himselfe and for the other Apostles and successors in the 10. of the Actes, sayth thus, he commaunded vs to preach and to testifie, that it is he which is ordayned of God the iudge both of the quicke and the dead. This commaundement also, the other Apostles did acknowledge, & specially the chosen vessell pronouncing vnder a great threatning in the first Corinthians 9. chap. Wo be vnto me if I do not preach the Gospell. And Pope Nicholas considering that great threatning in 43. Distinction, sayeth: the dispensation and distribution of the heauenly seade is commaunded and enioyned vnto vs. Woe be vnto vs, if we doe not sow it abroode or if we hold our peace. Whiche thing when as the vessell of election did feare and cry out vpon, how much more ought all other inferiours to feare and dread the same. To the same purpose doth S. Gregory write in his pastorall in the distinction.* Sit rector. It is also euident by many other doctours and holy men as by S. Augustine, Hierome, Isidore, Bernard, whose words it were here to long to rehearse.

As touching the second poynt that the hearing of the word and law of God,* is commaunded vnto the people it is euident both by the olde and new law, for it is sayd in the 28. of the Prouerbes, he that turneth away his eare & will not heare the law of God, his prayer shall be cursed. And our Sauior rebuking the Scribes and Pharesyes concludeth thus in the 8. of S. Iohn saying, he that is of God heareth Gods word: But forsomuch as you are not of God therefore you heare not his word.

Thirdly it is to be noted that excommunication is a seperation from the Communion,* the 11. Question 3. Nihil & cap Canonica. And 27. question, first, Viduas. 34. Question 3. Cum sacerdos. And this excommunication is double that is to say, either secret or manifest. The secret excommunication is, whereby a man is seperated from the mysticall body of Christ, and so from God through sinne according vnto the 59. Psalme. Your iniquities haue made seperation betwene your God and you. And with this excommunicatiō doth the Apostle excommunicate euery man which doth not loue the Lorde Iesu Christ. Saying in the first Corinth. and the last Chapter. If any man do not loue the Lord Iesu Christ,* let him be accursed. The manifest and apert excommunication may be deuided into a manifest excommunication by God: Whereof it is spoken. Math. 25. go ye curied. &c. And often times els in the lawe of God: Also into a manifest excommunication by men, whereby the Prelate doth either iustly or vniustly cast out any man from the participation of the Communion of the Church. Whereof this shall suffice at this present.

Then as touching the first part of the article,* it is thus argued. &c.

Whosoeuer forsaketh or leaueth the commaundemēts of God vndone, they are excommunicate of God. But the Priestess which leaue of the preaching of the word of God for feare of y^e vniust excommunication of men do leaue the cōmaundement of God vndone. Ergo those Priests which do leaue of preaching of the word of God are excommunicated of God.

The first part of this Article is true: The maior appereth by the Psalme. Cursed be they which doe decline and swarue from thy preceptes. The Minor is euident by the first proposition which proueth that the preaching of the word of God, is the commaundement of God enioyned vnto those Priestess and ministers: Whereupon the saying of our Sauior, Mathew 15. is spoken vnto them. Wherefore do you transgresse the commaundements of God for your owne traditiōs, preaching the word of God for feare of vniust excommunication and so dishonouring the Father Christ and the mother the holy Church.

It is thus confirmed all they which do omit or let slip any maner of worke, principally and straightly enioyned them of the Lord Iesu Christ, vnder the cloake and coulour of grace for feare of any excommunication of men, they are already excommunicate. But Priestess and specially Curates admonished by the spirit of God, leauing of the preaching of the word of God for feare of the excommunication of men, they omit and leaue of for feare of the same excommunication a work principally and straitly enioyned vnto them of the Lord Iesus Christ, vnder the cloake and coulour of grace: Ergo, Priestess and specially Curates and such as be admonished and warned by the spirite of God, omitting the preaching of the word of God for feare of excommunication, are excommunicate. The consequence is well known. The Maior appeareth by the Psalme, Cursed be they which do decline and goe away from the commaundements. The Minor is also euident, agayne by the first suposition.

Item, if the apostles of Christ had left of the preaching of the word of God for feare of the excōmunication of men which the Lord did foreshewe vnto them in the 16. of S. Iohn,* saying. They shall excommunicate you out of their Sinagoges. They had bene excommunicated of God. Ergo, by like euidence the Priestess and Ministers of Christ, being inspired with the same spirite to preach and declare the word of God, if they leaue it vndone for feare of the excommunication of men: They are alreadye excommunicate. The consequent dependeth vpon a similitude. And the Antecedent is euident, for if the Apostles had left of preaching for feare of excommunication, they had broken the commaundements of God. And consequētly had bene accursed. Wherefore they willing to obserue and keepe the commaundementes of God, and to put of the excommunication of men, sayde vnto the hye Priestess, Elders and Scribes at Ierusalem, to Annas, Cayphas, to Iohn and Alexander, and al other of the kindred of the Priests which were gathered together and commaunded them that they should not preache nor teach in the name of Iesu: If it be iust in the sight of God, that we shoulde rather obey you then God, that iudge you? Acts 4. and in the 5. of the Acts, they sayde vnto them: we ought rather to obey God then man. By this saying of the Holy Ghost, it is concluded that the Priestres and ministers o• Christ, inspired by the holy Ghost to preach the word of God,* ought rather obey the holy Ghost then those which shall prohibite and commaund them to the contrary, and to suffer the excommunication of men patiently. Whereupon •. Anacletus spake very well in this, as it is writē distinction 43. We know (sayth he) that many doe goe about to molest and trouble the Doctors and Teache vs to this end that they might vtterly destroy them, and full theyr owne prope• lus•es & desires: yet notwithstanding the said Doctors as much as in them lyeth ought not to depart or goe backe from theyr good doinges and intent, knowing assuredly that blessed are they which suffer persecution for righteousnesse sake. Thus much writeth he: And the reuerēd Bede (vpon these words: Ye shall finde an Asse tyed vp, and an he fole with her, lose her and bring her vnto mee, & if any man say any Page 452 thing vnto you, say ye that the Lord hath need of them) writeth thus. Here it is mystically commaunded vnto the Doctors and Teachers, that if any aduersity do let or hinder, or any man doe prohibite or stop, that sinners cannot be losed from theyr bondes or snares, and be brought vnto the Lord, by the confessiō of theyr fayth that they notwithstanding shoulde not leaue of preaching but constantly & boldly affirme and say that the Lord hath need of such, to edify & build agayne his Church. For so did the Apostles: so likewise ought all the humb•e and meeke Ministers of Christ to do.* And S. Hierome writing vnto Rusticus the Bishop of Narbone saith thus, Let no Bishop frō hencefore be puffed vp or enflamed with y^e enuy of deuillish tēptation, if the Priestres now and then do exhort and teache the people or preache openlye in the Churches, or as it is sayd do blesse the people. For vnto him which shoulde deny vnto me the doing hereof, I would say in this maner: He that will not that Priestres shoulde doe those thynges which they are commaunded by God, let him say that he is greater and aboue Christ, by the which wordes S. Hierome doth openly declare, that Priestres are commaunded to exhort and teach the people and to preach in the Churches. Secondly that a Bishop denying or forbidding the same to be done, specially the Priestres or Ministers being apt men there vnto is extolled aboue Christ. And therefore consequently is not to be obeyed or heard in his doinges.

Item,* admit that the Pope be an Heretique and teach peruerse and contrary doctrine vnto the holy scriptures, and that the Bishop be a catholicke man vnto whom the Pope geueth in commaundement that he shall not suffer no man to preach contrary to his opinion. As it happened in Pope Leo and Saynt Hillary the Bishop, adding this also that the Bishop doe execute the Popes commaundement vnder payne of excommunication, this notwithstanding if the Catholicke Priestres, learned in the law of God do leaue of preaching against the Popes heresies for feare of excommunication of men they are already excommunicate. The which thing is euident for so much as they are accursed through the consent of theyr scilence, as S. Isidor sayth 11. Question. 1. He that doth consent vnto sinners or defendeth a sinner, he shall be cursed both before God and man, and shalbe punished with a most seuerer rebuke, and in the 7. Question. 4. Omnis, It is sayde without he that doth neglect to amend that which he may correct committeth no lesse fault then he which had before offended, for not onely they which do cōmit the offence, but also they which consent thereunto, are iudged partakers thereof. In lyke case Priests which do not preach agaynst the heresy which the Pope teacheth, are dum dogges not able to open their mouthes or barcke agaynst the Woofe which will kill the sheep of Iesus Christ: Ergo, how can it then be otherwise but they must needes be betrayers of the sheepe of theyr owne shepheard.

Item, let it so be that the Bishop with the chiefe Prelates be an aduouterer or otherwise an open offender and that he together with his Prelates doe commaund vnder payne of excommunicatiō,* that none be so hardy to preach agaynst adultery, in such a case they which do omitte theyr duety in preaching against adultery for feare of excommunication of men, are already excommunicated of God. Ergo the first part of the Article is true. The Antecedent is proued, for our sauior in the 8. of Marke sayth thus. He that acknowledgeth me and my wordes in this wicked and adulterous generation, the sonne of man shall also acknowledge and confesse him when he shall come in the glorie of his Father with his Aungels. Therefore he that shall cōfesse Christ and these wordes of Christ Math. 5. you haue heard, that it was sayd to them in olde time, thou shalt not commit adulterye: But I say vnto you, that euery one, which shall beholde a woman to lust after her, he hath already committed adultery, with her in his heart: Hee I say that shall confesse these thinges, before an adoulterous Bishop, with his chiefe Prelates, the which perchaunce are the wicked and adoulterous generation, the sonne of man shall also acknowledge him, when he shall come in y^e glory of his Father, and so consequently is he blessed. Cōtrary wise he which for the feare of excōmunication of men will not confesse Christ and his words, before the sinneful and adoulterous generation, is accursed. The consequent holdeth by the wordes of Christ. Luk. 9. He that is ashamed of me and my wordes, him shall the sonne of man be ashamed of, when he shall come in his maiesty, and in the glory of his Father and his holy Aungels, pronouncing that which is spoken Math. 25. Verely, I say vnto you, I know you not, go you cursed into euerlasting fire.

Also our Sauior Iesu Christ,* did not omitt or leaue of the preaching of the kingdome of God, for any pretended excommunication of the Bishops, Scribes and Pharisies: So likewise his true and humble Priestes, ought not to omit theyr preaching, for any pretensed excommunication of men, the consequent holdeth by the saying of Christ. Iohn. 15. be ye mindfull of the words which I haue spoken vnto you, the seruaunt is not greater then his master: If they haue persecuted me, they will persecute you also. The Antecedent is apparant by the saying of Saynt Iohn in his 9. chapter. Euen now the Iewes had conspired, that whosoever did confesse him to be Christ, shoulde be excommunicate. And likewise Iohn. 7. Whether did any of the Princes or rulers, or any of the Phareseis beleue in him. But this people which knoweth not the law are accursed.

Also the humble and iust ministers of God,* ought not vnder payne of sinne to cease from the fruitfull preaching of the law of God for any vniust excommunicatiō, or vnlawfull commaundement, and it is proued thus: the humble and iust ministers of Christ, ought to obey theyr Prelates, in such thinges as are not contrary to God: as all the holy Doctors, and such as are learned in the Lawe of God, do wholly with one consent affirme. And forsomuch, as an vniust excommunication, and vnlawfull commaūdement, are agaynst God, therefore the iust and true ministers of God, ought not to obey such vnlawfull excommunication, and commaundements, and consequently ought not to cease for them, from the fruitfull preaching of the Gospell of our Lord Iesu Christ. But ought boldely and gladly to preach the same. For so much, as the Lord doth comfort them in the 5. of Mathew, saying thus, blessed and happye are ye, when as men doe curse you, and persecute you, and speake all kinde of euill against you, making lies and slaunders vpon you, for my sake, reioyce and be glad, for great is your reward in heauen.

Also euery Minister hauing power geuen him from aboue,* to preach the Gospell, he hath the same geuen vnto him for the edefying of the Church, and not for the destruction of the same.

As the Apostle saith 2. Corinth. 10. But euery one, leauing of the preaching of the Gospell, for feare of any pretensed excommunication of men, he shoulde frustrate the power geuē him, for the edefying of the Church. And therefore in so doing should sinne agaynst God and his church: And consequently ought rather to chuse, not to cease from preaching, for feare of any such excommunicatiō, least that he be excommunicate of our Lord Iesu Christ.

Item,* set case that the Pope doth commaūd that there shall be no preaching in any place, then the Ministers of Christ, leauing of theyr preaching, for feare of the Popes curse, are already excommunicated of God. It is euident, for so much as they haue neglected the commaundement of God for the commaundement of men. And this case is possible: For by what reason the Pope may commaunde vnder payne of excōmunication that there shalbe no preaching in any place, neither in the parish Churches, by the same reason, he may command that no man should preach in any place.

The first part is euident by the prohibition of Pope Alexander, who in his bull, did prohibite to preach y^e word of God, vnto the people in Chappels, although the sayde Chappels were confirmed by the priuiledge of the Sea apostolicke. The which Bull, the Lord Subincon Archbyshop of Prage, with his Canons, obteyned. By these aforesayd, the first part of the Article is euident, which is this that all Priestes omitting the preaching of the woorde of God, for feare of the excommunication of men, are already excommunicate.

The seconde part of the Article is this,* that all they which doe omitte, the hearing of the woorde of God, for feare of the excommunication of men are alreadye excommunicate.

And it is proued thus, all such as neglect the cōmaundementes of God, are excommunicate. But they whiche neglect the hearing of the word of God, for the excommunication of men, are they which neglect the commaundementes of God. Therefore they which omit the hearing of the word of God for the excommunication of men are already excommunicate.

The Maior, is apparant by the 118. Psalme. Cursed be they which decline from thy commaundementes. And the Minor is euident, by the second supposition, which sayth, that the hearing of the word of God is commaunded vnto the people.

This is confirmed,* al such as omit the necessary mean vnto saluation, are excommunicate: but such as omitte the hearing of the woorde of God for the excommunication by men, be such as do omit the necessary mean vnto saluation. Page 453 Therefore, in so doing they are excommunicate: The consequent is playne: The Maior is made euident by this: That all suche as do omit the necessary meane vnto saluation doe also neglect theyr saluation, and so are out of the way of saluation, and be excommunicated of God. The Minor appeareth hereby that to heare the word of God is the meane more necessary vnto saluation, as the apostle doth proue in his 10. chapter to the Romans. How sayth he, shall they beleue on him, whō they neuer heard of? And how shal they heare without a preacher? And by & by after the Apostle inferreth vnto the purpose. That sayth commeth by hearing, and hearing by the word of God.

Item, what so euer is done contrary vnto conscience, doth edefy vnto eternall damnation: As it is said, as touching the restitutiō of the spoyled goods. Chap. Literas porro: But to omit the hearing of the word of God, for feare of excommunicatiō of men, is a thing which is done against conscience. Therefore to omit the hearing of the worde of God for excōmunication, doth edefy vnto eternal damnatiō. And therefore cōsequētly ought not to be done, for feare of any excommunication: Wherefore a woman being iudged vnto a man, whom she knoweth to be within the degrees of cōsanguinity, which Gods law hath prohibited, ought not to obey that iudgement least that she offend against God: but meekly & patiently to sustain y^e excommunication, as it appereth in the chapter before alledged: So likewise all true christians ought rather then to offend agaynst God, meekly to suffer the excōmunication of men, thē to omit the hearing of the word of God. To this purpose also, serueth that which is spoken in the 11. quest. 3. He that feareth the omnipotēt God, will not presume by any meanes to do any thing contrary vnto the gossell or apostles, either contrary vnto the Prophetes, or the institutions of y^r holy fathers. By these premises, the 2. part o. this article is manifest, that all such as do omit, the hearing of the word of God, for feare of excommunication of men, they are already excommunicated.

And forsomuch, as all christians, being of lawfull age, not repenting at y^e end,* shalbe counted, in a maner as traitors of Christ, in the day of iudgement, because that they were vnfaythfull seruauntes of Christ. Therefore they which through feare omit the preaching & hearing y^e word of God, for the excommunication of men, shall be counted as trayers of Christ, and shall render account therof, vnto the Lord: whereupon Chrisostome, touching both those sorts in the 41,* Homely, shewing how the Lord woulde haue some to be teachers, and other some to be disciples: sayth thus. For vnto those which he would haue to be teachers, he speaketh thus by his Prophet Esay: Ye priestes, speak in the harts of the people, for if y^e priestes do not manifest all the truth vnto the people, they shall rēder accoūt therof at the day of iudgemēt. And likewise if the people do not learne the truth they shal also geue an account at y^e day of iudgemēt. It is also made more euidēt by him, vpō the tenth of Mathew. Do not feare them which kill the body, least that through the feare of death, you do not frely speak that which you haue heard, neither boldly preach that vnto all mē, which you alone haue heard in your eares. So y^t hereby alone it is euidēt, that not onely he is a betrayer of the truth, which transgressing the truth, doth openly speak lyes in the stead of truth: But he also, which doth not freely pronounce or doth not freely defend the truth,* which he ought boldly to defēd, is also a traytor vnto the truth. For like as the Priest is a debter to preach the truth which he hath heard of the Lord: euē so the lay man is bound to defend the truth, which he hath heard of the minister approued by the scriptures, which if he do not, then is he a traytor vnto the truth. For stedfast beliefe, with the hart preuayleth vnto righteousness, the confession which is made with the mouth, helpeth vnto saluation. Thus much writeth Chrisostome: Who together with the people meekely bearing the excommunication of the Bishops freely preached truth, and the people heard him, and so by hys word and his workes he freely taught the truth, least he should be a Traytor vnto the truth, & consequently be counted as a Traytour vnto our Lord Iesu Christ, in the day of iudgement. And thus the third part of the Article aforesayde, is manifest.

The defension of the xv. Article of Iohn Wickliffe by Iohn Husse.

*IT is lawfull for any Deacon or Priest, to preach the worde of God without the authority of the Apostolicke Sea, or of his Catholickes.

Fir I vnderstand here, by the authority of the Apostolicke Sea,* properly his speciall consent, authorising. And likewise I vnderstand by authority of the Bishop, a speciall consent of the Bishop, authorising the sayde Deacon or Priest to preach.

Now as touching the truth of this Article, I thus argue, like as after matrimony once complete, the man and wife may lawfully without any speciall licēce of the Pope or Bishop,* procreate carnall children: So likewise Deacons or Priestes by the motion of God through the Gospell of Iesu Christ may lawfully without any speciall licence either of the Pope or Bishoppe generate spirituall children. Ergo, this Article is true and the antecedent is thus proued. For as it is an acceptable worke vnto God for man and wife without the speciall licence of the Pope or Bishop to generate carnall children, so it is acceptable vnto him, that Deacons or Priests by the motion of God through the Gospel of Iesu Christ, should lawfully generate spirituall children without the speciall licence of the Pope or of any other Byshop, Ergo, the assumptio is true.

But if any man wil deny this similitude, let him shew the diuersitye. Yea seing it is worse not to receiue, or to choake the seed of Gods word, then the carnall seed: So contrarywise, is it better to receiue and sow abroad that seed of the word of God whereby children might be raysed vp vnto God, then to receiue or geue such seede, whereby carnall children may be gotten. Whereupon our Sauour in the 10. of Mathew sayth thus: whosoever doth not receiue you, neither heareth your wordes, wpe of the duste from your feete, verelye I say vnto you that in the daye of iudgement, it shalbe more better vnto the Lande of Sodome and Gomer then to that City.

Also a Deacon or Priest being sturred by the spirite of Iesus Christ may preache the word of God without the speciall licence of the Pope or Bishop. Ergo, it is lawful for him so to do. The consequent is thus manifest, for so much as the spirite of God moo•ing the Deacon or Priest vnto the preaching of the Gospell, is of greater force then anye prohibition of Pope or Bishop inuented by man: Ergo, according vnto the rule of the Apostles they ought infallibly to be obediēt vnto the spirit of Christ which doth so moue them therunto, and rather to obey God then man. Actes. 5. Also by like reason as Heldad and Medad vpon whom the spirit of God did rest, did lawfully prophecy without requiring any licence at Moyse's handes, as it is written. Numery. 11. by the same reason may the meeke minister of Christ, vpon whom the spirite of God doth rest, without the requiring any licence, either of the Pope or Bishoppe, may lawfully preache the worde of God vnto the people. And would to God in this behalfe all Prelats had the spirite of Moyse,* for it is sayd: Numeri. 11. That when as Heldad and Medad were prophesying in the tentes, a childe ranne vnto Moyses and tolde him, saying, Heldad and Medad do prophecye in the Tentcs, and by and by Iosue the sonne of Nunne the seruaunt of Moyse which he had chosen out amongst many, (sayd) my maister Moyses forbid them, and he sayd, why enuiest thou for my sake, would God that all the people could prophecy, and that the Lord would geue them his spirite. O would to God the Pope and Bishops had the affection which this holyc man the frend of God had. Then would he not prohibite the meeke Deacons and Ministers of Iesus Christ, to preach the Gospell of Iesus Christ. The like affection had the blessed man Gregory which in his 22. booke of Morals writeth vpon these wordes of Iob. And I haue afflicted the soule of his husbandmen, he sayth thus, the husbandmen of this earth are these, which being set in small authority, with as feruent desire as they can, and with as great labor as they may, doe worke by the preaching, of grace to the erudition of the holy Churchc, the which husbandmen of this world not to afflict, is not to enuy their labors and doinges: neither ought the ruler of the Church, albeit he doe challenge vnto himselfe alone the title of preaching, through enuy gainesay others which do preach truly and vprightly. For the godly mind of the pasture which seketh not his owne glory amongst men, desireth to be holpen, the which thing also the faythfull preacher doth wish, if it might by any meanes, be brought to passe, that the trueth which he alone cā not sufficiētly expresse, all mēs mouthes might declare.

Wherefore when as Iosue woulde haue resisted the 2. which were prophecying in the host, why doest thou enuy (sayd he) for my sake, for he did not enuy that good in other which he himselfe had, this writeth S. Gregory.*

Also the meeke ministers of Christ haue by a speciall gift of God, knowledge and minde to preach the Gospell, but neither is it lawfull for the Pope or Bishop or any other Page 454 man to let or hinder them, least thereby they should let the word of God, that it haue not his free course. Ergo, this article is true, for the king doth not so much rule ouer the goods of his subiects, no not of his owne sonnes, but y^t they may geue almes to whom they will: muche more the bishop hath not so great authority ouer the knowledge of the meeke minister, with his other giftes of God, but that he may frely vnder the title of spirituall almes frely preach the gospell vnto the people. Ergo, forasmuch it should seme straunge that a Bishop should forbid any man to geue any corporall almes to the poore that are a hūgred, much more straūge and maruelous would it be, if that he should prohibite the spirituall minister of Christ to geue spirituall almes, by the preaching of the gospell of the word of God.

Item no catholicke man ought to doubt, but that a man able for the purpose is more bounde to teache them which are ignoraunt, to counsell & comfort the weake in spirit, to correct such as are vnruely, to forgeue those that do thē wrong, thē to do any other work of mercy, forsomuch then as he that hath sufficient, is bound vnder paine of dānation to geue corporall almes as it appeareth Math. 25. much more he which is able, is bound to doe spirituall almes. And this alms S. Barnard writing vnto Eugenius in his 3. book perceiued to be very necessary for the Bishop of Rome,* where as he said thus: I feare no greater poyso, nor greater sword or mischief will happen vnto thee, thē this vnsatiabie desire of dominion. With what face then cā the faythfull minister withdraw or keepe back, the spirituall almes from the Pope and any other, euen without the speciall licence of the Pope or of the Bishop, which licence through the far distance from the Pope, the ministers can not so easily obtaine or come by. For all prohibition of anye Prelate beeing broken through necessitye is not to be blamed. 11. Quest. 3. Intercessor, and also in the chapter folowing.

Item, all authoritye of preaching geuen vnto deacons and Priestes in theyr consecration were but vayne, except that in 〈◇〉 of necessitye without any speciall licence they might pr•ach the gospell. It is euident, forsomuch as it is not lawfull for them to vse that authority, by their aduersary without a speciall licēce. Ergo, it is geuē them in vain. The consequent is euident by the common saying of the Philosopher, that power is but vayne, wherof proceedeth no vse of action. But forsomuch as this Article doth as it were depend vpon the article before passed, therefore this shall suffice,* spoken therof at this present.

But agaynst the affirmations o• both these Articles, this is obiected, out of the 16. quest. 1. All faythfull people, and specially all priests deacons and all others of the clergy, ought to take heede that they doe nothing without the licence of theyr bishop. It is also objected out of the 5. book of Decretals, Titulo de hereticis cap. cū ex iniuncto. Where it is no man ought to vsurp to himself, indifferētly the office of preaching, forsomuch as the Apostle sayth, how shall they preach except they be sent. Where as also Innocentius doth declare,* that it is not sufficiēt for a man to say, that he is sent of God to preach except he do shew the same. As touching the first poynt, the Glose doth sufficiently aunswere vpon this word without licence, that is to be expounded, sayth he, without generall licence: the which is obtayned and geuen, when as a bishop doth appoynt any priest to gouern the people. For therby (sayth he) it semeth a bishop is thought to geue him generall power to minister vnto the people and to rule the church. Thus much in the glose. And to the same end and purpose it is sayd in the 7. quest. 1. chap. Episcopi Bishops or Priestes, if they come vnto the church of an other Bishop, for to visite the same, as it is said,* glose. 1. in honore suo. Let them be receiued in their degree, and desired as well to preach the word, as to do any other consecration or oblation. Secondly it is to be noted, y^t which is uery wel spoken in y^e same place, no man ought to vsurpe vnto himselfe the office of preaching, as a thing indifferent. For to vsurpe, is vnlawfully to vse any thing: ergo, the same deacon or priest, doth then vsurpe the office of preaching as indifferētly,* who liuing viciously, cōtrary vnto the law of Christ, or being ignorant of the law of God, doth preach either for gayne, or couetousnes of lyuing, either for his belly or dainty life, or for any vaynglory, but he whiche doth liue according vnto the lawes of Christ, & being moued with the affection of sincere charity intending purely the honor of God and the saluatiō of him selfe & his neighbors, doth preach no lyes nor vayne iests or other things not authorised, but only the law of Christ, & the minds of y^e holy doctors. And he that doth so preach, necessity occationing or mouing him therunto, in case there be no Pope or Bishop, or in case possible to withstand the preaching of heretickes, or false preachers, he in so doing doth not vsurpe the office of preaching, and in suche case there is no doubt but he is sent of God, and this doth also answere vnto that, which is consequently sayd, that if any man will peraduenture craftely answere, that such preachers are inuisibly sēt of God, although not visibly of mē, when as that inuisible sēding of God is much more better thē the visible sending of men: A man may reasonably answere therunto, that forsomuch as that interuall sēding is secret, it is not sufficient for a man onely to say that he is sent of God, forsomuch as euery hereticke may so say, but he ought to proue the same his inuisible calling, by y^e working of some miracle, or by some speciall testimony of the scripture.

Here it is to be noted,* according to S. Augustine in his 65. booke of quest. vnto Orosius, that there is 4. kindes of sending. The first is from God onely, whereof we read in Moises & other, which were inspired by God. And this kinde sending, loseth from the daunger of the statute: so that he whom the spirit of God hath enspired, this prelate geuing thankes, may proceed vnto a better life. Wherupō Pope Urbane sayd 19. quest. 2. There be (sayd he) 2. lawes y^e one publick the other priuate.* The publick law is that which is confirmed in writing by y^e holy fathers, such as is the canon law: which is only geuen for transgressions: As for example, it is decreed in the canons, that none of y^e clergy shall go frō one bishopricke vnto an other, without y^e letters commendatory of his bishop, the which was ordeined onely for offēders, that no infamed persons should be receiued of any bishop. For they were wont when they could not celebrate or do their office vnder their owne Bishopricke, to go vnto another: which now is forbidden by the lawes and precepts.* The priuate law is that which by y^e instruction of the holy Ghost, is written in y^e hart as the Apostle speaketh, of many, which haue y^e law of God, writ^ten in their hartes. And in an other place: Forsomuch as the Gentiles haue not the law of God, but naturally doe those things,* which are of the law, they are lawes vnto thēselues. And afterward he sayth, y^e priuate law is much more worthy, then the publicke law. For the spirit of god, is a law: And they which are moued by the spirit of God, are led by the law of God: And who is he, that can worthely resist agaynst the holy Ghost? Whosoeuer therefore is led by the spirit of God, albeit his bishop do say him nay, let him go freely by our authority, for y^e law is not appointed for the iust man, for where as the spirit of God is, there is liberty, and if ye be led by the spirite of God, ye are not vnder the law.

Beholde here it is affirmed, that the sending by God, through inspiration, is not bound vnder y^e bondage of the law, for that law is more worthy then the publicke law. Secondly that the law is made for transgressors & offenders, and not for the iust. Thirdly, that whosoeuer is ledd by the spirite of God, although his Bishop stand agaynst him, he may proceed vnto a better life. Whereby it is euident that a deacon or priest, disposed to preach, and being led by the spirit of God, he may freely preach the gospell of christ without the spiritual licence of his bishop. It is euident for somuch as it is good, that a deacon or priest, do liue well & preach fruitfully. Ergo, he may proceede from idlenes vnto the labor & office of preaching, and so vnto a better life.

But where as it is sayde afore,* that for so much as the inward sending or calling is secret, therefore it is not sufficient for a man, barely to affirme onely, y^e he is sent of god, when as euery heretick may so say, but it is necessary, that he do confirme & proue his inuisible sending, by the working of some miracle, or by some speciall testimony of y^e scripture.* Here is to be noted, that there are 2. kindes of preachers, some true preachers of our sauior Christ, & other seducers of Antechrist. The first sort following the mayster Christ, teach the people in truth: The other sort, being of a corrupt minde, and reprobate touching faith, resist against y^e verity. And through couetousnes, by their fained words do make marchandise of the people: And these mē do geue & shal geue miracles, as our sauior saith, Math. 24. There shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, the which shall shew great signes and wonders, in so much that euen the elect thēselues, if it were by any meanes possible, shoulde be brought into error. And the apostle in •he 2. to the Thes. 2. as touching their head Antechrist, writeth thus, whose comming shalbe according to y^e operation of sathan with al power and signes, false miracles, seducing vnto iniquity, those which do perish, because they haue not receiued y^e charity and loue of truth, that they might be saued: Therefore will the Lord send vpon them the operation of error, that they shall geue credit vnto lies. That all such as haue not belued the truth, but consent vnto wickednes, should be iudged: Behold, how expressly our Sauior by himself, Page 455 and by his Apostle doth teach vs, how the disciples of An'techrist, with theyr head,* should shine through their great signes and wōders: But the true disciples of Christ, shall not so do, in the time of Antechrist. For as S. Isidor sayth in his first book, 22. De summo bono: Before that Antechrist shall appeare, all vertues and signes shall cease from the Church, that he may the boldlier persecute the same, as an abiect. For this profit, shall all miracles and signes cease, vnder Antechrist, that thereby the patience of the holy mē might be known, and the lightnes of the reprobate, which are offēded, may be opened, & also that the cruelty of y^e persecuters shuld be made more scare. Thus writeth S. Isidor, & S. Gregory in his 24. booke of Morals,* sayth: For why by a terrible examination of Gods secret dispēsatiō, shall all signes of vertue, or power be takē away from the holy church, before that the Leuiathan appeare, in y^r most wicked and damnable man, whose shape, he doth take vpon him. For prophecy is hidden, the gift of healing is takē away, the vertue of lōg abstinēce, is deminished, y^e words of doctrine is put to silence, and the wonderfull workes of miracles are extinguished, which things, nothing can vtterly take away: but onely the dispensation of God. But this dispēsatiō, is not so openly & manifoldly declared, as it hath bene in times past, the which also is done by a maruelous dispensation, that through one onely thing, both Gods loue & iustice should be fulfilled. For a while y^e pow^rer of miracles, being taken away, the holy church appereth the more abiect and forsaken, and the reward of good men doth cease, which reuerēced the same for the hope of heauēly riches, & not for any present signes: And that the minds of euill men agaynst the same, might y^t sooner be knowne, which neglect to folow y^e inuisible thinges, which y^e church doth promise, whiles they be led with visible signes.

Forsomuch then, as the humility of the faithfull is, as it were destitute of the multitude, and appering of signes, by the terrible working of Gods secret dispensation, wher|by mercy is geuē vnto the good and iust, wrath heaped vpō the euill. For so much then it is truely said, that before this Liuiathan, shall playnely and manifestly come, pouerty shall go before his face, for before that time, y^e riches of miracles shalbe taken away from the faythfull. Then shall that auncient enemy, shew himselfe agaynst them, by open wonders: That as he is extolled through signes & wonders, so shall he the more manly be vanquished of y^e faythfull, without any signes or miracles. Also, in his 16. booke vpon this word,^{} which the blessed man Iob sayde, who shall reprehend his way before him, or who shall cast in his teeth, what he hath done, whilest he did speake of the body of all euill, he sodenly connected his speach vnto the head of all the wicked,^{} for he did see, that toward the end of the world Sathan should enter into man whom the scripture calleth Antechrist, he shalbe extolled with such pride, he shall rule with such power, he shal be exalted with such signes, & wonders, vnder the pretence of holmes, that his doing can not be cōtrolled of mē, for somuch, as his signes & tokens are ioined with power, & terror, & with a certain shew of holynes. Wherefore he saith who shall controll his wayes before him, what man is he, that dare once rebuke or check him, whose looke or countenance, is he afeard of? But notwithstanding, not onely Enoc & Elias the which are brought as ample for his exprobaton, but also all the elect do argue & reproue his way, whiles that they do contemne and by the force and power of their minde, resist his malice: But for somuch as this thing is not done by their owne power or strength, but by Gods helpe and grace, therefore is it very well sayd, who shall argue or reproue his waies before him who but onely God? By whose help the elect are ayded, and made able to resist.

And a little after, vpon the same booke of Iob Gregory saith, in so much as holy men do withstād his iniquity: It is not they thēselues which do so rebuke his wayes, but it is he, thorowe whose helpe they are strengthened. Also, in his second booke, he sayth: now the holy Church doth not regarde,^{*} but despise the signes and miracles of the heretikes if they do any: for so much as y^e Church doth sufficiently vnderstand, that it is no kind of holynes: for why, y^e prose of holines, is not to make signes or wōders, but to loue euery man as him selfe, to thinke truely of the very true God, & to thinke better of thy neighbor then of thy selfe: for trew vertue & holynes, cōsisteth in loue, and not in shewing of miracles. This y^e veretie declareth, saying: hereby shall all men know y^t ye are my disciples, if ye loue one an other, but he saith not, y^t hereby mē shal know y^t ye are my disciples, because ye worke miracles, but contrary wise: if ye loue one an other, declaring plainly therby, that it is not miracles, but the mere charitie & loue of God, which maketh vs the seruants of God. Wherefore the chiefe testimony of being Gods disciple, is to haue the gift of brotherly loue. This thorow out doth S. Gregory write, and often times in other places, he speaketh verie much of miracles, howe that they shall cease amongst the iust, and abound amongst the wicked.

Also Chrisostome in his lv. Homily,* sayth thus, it is a common & an indifferent woorke betwene y^e ministers of God & the ministers of the deuil, to cast out deuils, but to confesse y^e trueth and to worke righteousnes, is the onely worke of the saints and holy men, therefore whomsoeuer thou doest see casting out of deuils, if he haue not the confessiō of the trueth in his mouth, neyther righteousnes in his hands, he is not a man of God, but if thou doest see a man openly confessing & declaring the truthe and doing iustice, although he do not cast out no deuils, yet he is the man of God. And it followeth: let vs know that like as at the cōming of Christ, before him, y^e Prophets, and with him thapostles wrought miracles thorow the holy ghost, for such as the thing is which is sturred, such sent & sauor wil proceede frō the same. He writeth also vpon y^e beginning of Mathew. The whole world did maruel & wōder at three things, y^t Christ rose againe after his deth, y^t flesh ascendeth into heauē,* & that he did conuert y^e whole world by his xi. apostles: There is iiii. causes which wrought the same. That is to say, y^e contempt of riches or money. The dispising of pomp and glory. The seperation of thēselues from all worldly occupation and busines, and the pacient suffering of tormentes. Thus much writeth Chisostome, also saint Isydore in his first booke and xxv. cha. De summo bono, writeth thus, like as in the apostles the maruelous effect & power of works was much more cōmendable then the vertue of their signes, euen so now in y^e Church is it much more better, to liue wel thē to worke any signes or miracles.* And the cause why that the church of God doth not at this present worke miracles as it did in the time of the Apostles, is this. That it was necessary at that time that the worlde should beleue miracles, and nowe at this present euery faithful beleuer ought to shine with good workes, for to this end were signes & miracles then outwardly wrought, that their sayth thereby might be inwardly strenghtned and stablished, for what soeuer faithfull man he be that seketh to worke miracles, he seeketh vaine glory to be prayسد of mē, for it is written, miracles are signes and tokens vnto the infidels, & misbeleuers, and not vnto the faythfull. Thus muche wryteth Isidore.

Item Saint Augustine in his Booke of cōfession sayth thus,* there is no greater miracle amongst mē, thē to loue our enemies. By these wordes of these holy men, a man may easely gather that both in our dayes and in the time to come, y^e disciples of Antichrist both do & shall more flourish and shewe thēselues by strannge signes & miracles, thē the disciples of Christ, according to y^e saying of our sauior Iesu Christ. There shall rise vp amongst you false prophets which shall worke straunge miracles. Secōdly, it is approued, that they are greater & straūger miracles, to confesse y^e truth & to do iustice, then to worke any other kind of miracle. Thirdly, it is gathered therby, that what soeuer minister or deacon doth loue his enemies, contemneth riches, despiseth the glorie of the worlde, and flyeth frō al worldly troubles, meekely sustaineth & suffreth most terrible and cruel threatnings and strokes for y^e gospel sake, he worketh miracles, hauing thereby a testimony and witnesse, that he is the true disciple of Iesu Christ. And it is euident by the saying of our sauior Iesu Christ. Mathew.* V. Let your good workes so shine before men: y^t they may see your good works & glorify your father which is in heauen. And likewise Iohn x. Trust vnto your good workes, wherevpon Saint Gregory in his first booke of Dialoges, wryteth thus: the estimation of a true life, consisteth in y^e vertue of his workes, and not in y^e shewing of signes, whereby it is fourthly concluded, by y^t which is aforesaide, that it is a more effectual testimony and witnes for a priest or a deacon, that he is sent of God to confesse y^e truth and follow Christ in the aforesayde vertues then to cast out deuils, or to do any other miracles. As it is euident by the saying of Chrisostome before alleged, whomsoeuer thou doest see to cast out deuils, if the cōfession, or acknowledging of the trueth be not in his mouth, neither righteousnesse nor iustice in his handes, he is not a man of God. This is also confirmed by the wordes of Christ. Math. 7. Many shall say vnto me in that day, Lord, Lord, haue not we prophcyed in thy name: haue not we cast out Deuils in thy name: and haue not we also wrought many great wonders and miracles in thy name? Then I will aunswere & say vnto them, forsomuch as I haue not knowne you any time, depart frō me ye workers of iniquity, & as Page 456 touching y^e second part, Chrisostom saith: If you see a mā confessing & preaching y^e trueth, & working righteousnes, although he do not cast out deuils he is a man of God.

Hereby it appeareth that euery deacō, priest, or minister confessing the truth,* and working iustice, hath a perfect & sure testimony that he is sent of God, & that it is not necessary for him to approue this his sending by y^e working of any miracle, in stead of working righteousnes, neyther by any testimonial, the which should plainly declare hint by name, that he was sent of the Lord to preach.

The first part appeareth manifest, by that which is alreadye spoken, that all miracles in the time of Antichrist shal cease in the elect.

The second part is also euident, for so much as none of the present preachers, can shew by the scripture of y^t lawe of God, that he is specially named therevnto.

And likewise do I also affirme & say, as touching all preachers which shal come hereafter, that they are not na^med by name: But let no man here obiect Enoc & Elias, which were auncient preachers, & prophcyed by the holy spirit of God. And it is apparent, that like as it is not a cause sufficient to proue, that this priest or deacon is sent of God to preache, because he woorketh miracles, so is it not a cause sufficient to proue, that he is not sent of God to preach, because he doth no miracles, but to confesse the truth, to worke righteousnes, to contemne y^e world with the glory therof, patiently to suffer rebukes is a sufficient testimony for any priest or deacon hauing knowledge of y^e lawe of God, freely to preach the gospell of Iesus Christ. For so much as in such case he is sent of God, & this is the sending which the Apostles speaketh of in y^e x. Romains. How should they preach without they be sent? Wherevpō y^t glose of S. Augustine writeth thus. These things serue to set forth gods grace, declaring that all our goodnesse, is preuented of grace.

For be sayth, beleefe cōmeth of hearing, hearinge commeth of preaching, & preaching by the sending of God, so that altogether holly cōmeth out of the fountain of grace, & preaching truly, cōmeth of sending. This hath the glose how shal they then preach, without they be sent of God? And this is euident, that the first & principall sending is frō God alone, as it is proued by Moises.

The second sending is both from God & mā, as by the example of Iosue & others, which were sent both by God and the rulers to preach.

The third sending is from man alone, the which is not founded in y^e lawe of God, but in mens traditions, which they rather esteeme.

The fourth sending which hath but the name onely, is proper to them, which of themselues vnworthely vsurpe the office of preaching, as those false prophets, of whō god speaketh in y^t xxiii. of Ieremy, I did not send them, & they ran. I spake not vnto them, and they prophecied. If they had continued in my counsels, & had declared my wordes vnto my people. I would haue conuerted thē from their ruill waies, & wicked imaginatiōs, & our sauior speaketh of these Prophettes in Mathew, saying, There shall arise false Prophets. And peter his true vicar in his second Epistle, and second chapter prophecying vnto y^e faithful beleuers in Christ, speaketh thus of thē: There were amōgst the people false Prophets, as there shalbe amongst you also maisters of lies, thorow whom the truth shalbe blasphemed and slaundered. And that he might the better instruct the people to knowe them, he addeth that they shall go about w^t fained wordes, for couetousnes sake, to make merchaundice of you.

Wherefore euery faithful man, diligently waying these things in his minde, may now easely perceiue how great a number of false Prophets there be, thorowe whom the Christian truth is blasphemed. And all couetous dealyng is exercised, & these are they which freely preach lies. But the hūble & true ministers of Christ, wheresoeuer they do apneare, by & by they are persecuted, whereby y^e prophecie of y^t Apostle is verified, which is written in the second Epistle to Timothe the iij. All men sayth he which desire to liue godly, shall suffer persecution, but y^e euil men & seducers shal prosper in their wickednes running dayly more & more into al kinde of errorrs. The wicked haue now so much preuailed y^t they do preache lies, making heretikes of the faithfull christians, neyther is there any man y^t dare prohibet them their lying, so that they do not preache agaynst the byces of the prelates. Howe then can you say that Antichryst is not exalted aboue all that which is called God, suppressing downe the members of Christ in his office, fortelyng and fostrng his members in lying? Therefore the trew and faithfull disciples of Christ ought to stand ready girt about their loynes, and shewes vpon their feete in defence of the Gospell, takinge the sworde in hand, which is the word of God. Ephes. 6. And to fight agaynst the craftes of Antichrist, who goeth about vtterly to extinguish y^e true preaching of the Gospell of our Lord Iesu Christ.

The Second disputation in the Vniuersity of Prage, vpon the 17. Article of Iohn Wickliffe, most fruitfull to be read, prouing by 24. reasons out of the Scriptures, how that Princes and Lordes temporall, haue lawfull authority and iurisdiction, ouer the spiritualty and Church men, both in taking from them, and correcting their abuses, according to their doinges and desertes.

TO the honour of almighty God, and of our Lord Iesu Christ, both for the trying out of truth, and the profit of holy mother the church, according to the congregation of our Vniuersitye of Prage, which auoyding alwayes to doe that shall be preiudiciall to the trueth, hath differred to geue theyr consent vnto the condemnation of the 45.* Articles, wishing euen vnto this present, sufficient probation to be geuē of the condemnation of the said Articles, and perticularly of euery one of them. Whereupon the sayd Vniuersity, doth alwayes require due prooffe of the same, for so much as Pope Damasus in his Canon distinction 68. chapter. Chorepiscopi, sayth thus. That it is necessarye that what so euer thing standeth not by due reason, should be rooted out, whereby it appeareth that the condemnation of the 45. Articles, if it stand not with prooffe and sufficient demonstration for euery Article; it is necessary to be rooted out.

But if any man wil object and say, that to require a reason of euery thing is to derogate From Gods deuine power. Vnto this obiection Maister William doth answere himselfe in his Philosophy, the first booke almost at the end, where he entreating of the place, in Genes. 2. God made man of the slime of the earth &c. hath these wordes: For in what poynt (sayth he) are we contrary to the holy scriptures, if we seeke by reason to declare, Wherefore any thing is done, which is sayd in the scriptures to be done, for if that a wise man should say that a thing is done, and do not declare how it is done: And another manne speaketh the very selfe same thing, & declareth how it is done what cōtrariety is there? But forsomuch as they themselues, know not the force of nature, to the intent that they might haue all men partakers with them of their ignoraunce, they would haue no man to enquire it out. But they would haue vs beleue as ignoraunt people, neither to seeke any reasō of our belief, that the Prophecy might be fulfilled, such as the people is, such shall be the priest. But we truely do say, that in all thinges a reason is to be sought, if it may by any meanes be found. But if that any man doe stay at any thing, which the scripture doth affirme, let him commit the same vnto fayth, & vnto the holy ghost. For Moises sayth, if the Lambe cannot be eaten, let it not be by and by consumed in the fire: But let him first call hys neighbor, which dwelleth next house vnto him, and if they also be not sufficient to eat the Lamb, then let it be burned in the fire: So likewise when as we go about to seeke any thing as touching the Godhead, and that we be not able of our selues to comprehend the same,* let vs call our neighbor which dwelleth next house vnto vs: That is to say, let vs seeke out such a one, as dwelleth in the same catholicke sayth with vs, and if then, neither we, neither yet he be able to comprehend the same, let it then be burned with the fire of fayth.

But these men, albeit they haue many neighbours dwelling neare vnto them, yet for very pride, they will not call any mā vnto them, chusing rather to continue still ignorant, thē to aske any question. And if they do know any man to enquire for his neighbor in such case, by & by they cry out vpon him, as an hereticke. Presuming more vpon their own heads, then hauing confidence in their wisdom. But I exhort you geue no credit, vnto their out ward appearance, for already it is verified in thē which the satyricall Poet sayth, no credit is to be guen vnto the outward shew for which of them all is it that doth not abound with most strame full and detestable vices? And in another place he sayth. They are very daynty of their speach, and haue great desire to keep silence. And thus much hath maister Wilhelmus. Let all such here whom this parable doth touche. For I with the rest of the maisters, bachelers and studentes of our vniuersity considering how heard a matter the condemnation of the 45. articles of Wickliffe without reason is, and how greuous a thing it were, if we should thereunto consent, do call together my neighbors, the doctors of this Vniuersity, & all others which would object any thing agaynst the same, that we might presently finde out the reason of the comdēnation of this Article, concerning the taking away the temporalities from the Clergy.

Notwithstanding I do professe that it is not my intent,* like as it is not the meaning of the vniuersity, to perswade that Princes Page 457 or seculer Lordes should take away the goods from the cleargie when they would, or howe they would, and conuert them to what vse they list. But our whole intent is, diligently to search out whether this article, as touching the taking away of temporallities from the cleargie may haue in it any true sence, whereby it may be defended without reproofe Wherefore this article being the 17. in the nombre of the 45. is propounded vnder thys fourme. The Lordes temporall may at their owne will and pleasure, take away the temporal goodes from the cleargy, if they doe offend, and therein continue: It is thus prooued. The kings of the old Testament toke away the temporall goods at Gods commandement from the cleargie. That is to say from the priestes offending. Therefore the kings also of the new Testament, at Gods cōmandement, may do the like. When as the priests of the new law do offend. The consequent dependeth vpon a similitude. And the antecedent is euident. First it is prooued by Salomon in the 3. of the kings 2. chapter. Which Salomon deposed Abiathar the hygh priest, because hee had toke part with Adonias, the brother of Salomon, to make him king, without the aduice either of Daud, or of Salomon him selfe which ought to raigne: And set vp Sadoc the priest in the place of Abiathar, because he had not consented with Abiathar vnto Adonias, as it is writtē in the 3. boke of kings 1. chapter. Where it is sayde, Adonias the sonne of Agithe, exalted himselfe, saying: I will raigne, and made vnto him selfe chariotes and horsemen, and 40. men which should runne before him: neyther did his father rebuke him at any time, saying: Wherefore hast thou don this? For he was very comely being second sonne, next to Absolon, and his talke was with Ioab the sonne of Saruia and Abia•har the priest, which toke part with Adonias. But Sadoc the priest, and Banaias the sonne of Ioaida and Nathan the Prophet, and Semei, and Serethi, and Felethi, and all the power of Dauids host, were not on Adonias part.

This was the cause of the deposing of Abiathar, because hee toke part with Adonia, that he should be king against Salomon the eldest sonne of king Daud, wherefore it is wrytten in the thirde boke and second chapiter of the kings. The king sayd vnto Abiathar the priest, goe your wayes vnto Anatoth thine owne field, for thou art a man of death, but this day I will not slay thee, because thou hast caried the Arke of the Lorde before my father Daud, and diddest labour in all things wherein my father laboured. Then did Salomon cast out Abiathar, that hee should be no more the priest of the Lord, that the word of the Lord might be fulfilled which he spake vpon the house of Hely in Sylo.

Beholde the most prudent king Salomon, according to the wisdome which was geuen him of God, did exercise hys power vpon the sayd priests, putting him out of his priesthode, & setting in his place Sadoc the priest this was a greater matter thē to take away the temporalities. If then in the law of Christ whych nowē raigneth ouer vs, a byshop, should likewise rebell against the true heire of the kingdome, willing to sette vp another for king, why shoulde not the king or his heire, haue power in like case, to take away the temporalities from him so offending?

*Item, it is also euident by the king Nabuchodonozor whych had power geuen him of God, to lead away the children of Israel with their priests and Leuites, into the captiuitie of Babylon, as it is wrytten 4. booke of the kings 25. chapter.

*Item it is red in the 4. boke of kings and 12. chapter. How that Iosias the most godly king of Iuda according to the wisdō which God had granted him, toke away all the consecrate vessels, which Iosaphat, Ioram, and Ochosias, his forefathers kings of Iuda had consecrated, and those which hee himselfe had offered, and all the treasure that could be found in the temple of the Lord, and in the kings pallace, and sent it vnto Azahel king of Syria, & he departed from Ierusalem. Marke how this most holy king exercised hys power, not onely in taking away the temporalities of the priests, but also those things which were consecrate in the temple of the Lord, to procure vnto the common wealth, the benefite of peace.

*Item, in the 4. booke and 18. chapter of the kings, it is wrytten howe that the holy king Ezechias tooke all the treasure that was found in the house of the Lord, and in the kings treasurie, & brake downe the pillers of the temple of the Lorde, and all the plates of gold which he himselfe had fastned therupon, and gaue them vnto the king of the Assyrians, yet was hee not rebuked of the Lorde therefore, as hee was for his other sinnes, as it appeareth in the 2. booke of Paral. 32. chapter, for so much then as in time of necessity, all things ought to be in common vnto Christians, it foloweth then that the seculere Lordes in case of necessitie, in many other common cases, may lawfully take away the mooueable goodes from the cleargie, when they do offend.

Item, it is also read in the 12. of Mathewe, that the disciples of Iesus for to slake their hunger vppon the Saboth day, pulled the eares of corne, and did eate them, and the Pharisies rebuked them therefore, vnto whome Christ aunswered. Haue ye not read what Dauid did,* when hee was hungry, and those that were wyth him, howe he entred into the house of the Lorde, and did eate the shew breades, which it was not lawfull for hym, neither for them that were with hym to eate, but only for the priests. This story is written in the 1 booke of the kings and 21. chapter. And the commandement in the 12. of Deuteronomie. Whereby it appeareth that it is lawfull in time of necessitie to vse any thing, bee it neuer so much consecrate.* Otherwise children by geuing their moueables to the consecration of any temple, shoulde not be bound to helpe their parents, which is contrary and against the Gospel of S Mathew in the 16. chapter: whereas our Sauour sharply rebuked the Pharisies, that for their owne traditions they did transgresse the commaundement of God.

Item, Titus and Vespasian seculer princes had power geuen them of God 24. yeares after the Lordes Ascension to take away the temporallities from the priestes whych had offended agaynst the Lordes holy one. And thereby also berest them of their liues, and it seemeth vnto many they did,* and might worthely doe the same according to Gods good wil and pleasure. Then forsomuch as our priests in these dayes may transgresse and offend as much, and rather more against the Lordes annoynted, it followeth that by the pleasure of God, the seculer Lordes, may likewise punyshe them for their offence.

Our sauour being king of kings, and high bishop wyth hys disciples did geue tribute vnto Cesar, as it appeareth Mathewe 17. and commaunded the Scribes and Pharisies to geue the lyke [unspec 7] vnto Cesar Mat. 22. Whereby hee gaue example vnto all priestes that shoulde come after hym to render tribute vnto their kinges,* whereupon blessed S Ambrose in his 4 booke vppon these wordes in the 5. of Luke, (cast out your nettes) wryteth thus. There is an other kinde of fishing amongst the Apostles, after which manner the Lord commanded Peter only to fish, saying, cast out thy hoke, and that fish, which cōmeth first vp, take hym. And then vnto the purpose he sayth. It is truely a great & spirituall document, wherby all Christian menne are taught, that they ought to be subiecte vnto the higher powers, and that no man ought to thinke that the lawes of a king here on earth are to be brokē. For if the sonne of God did pay tribute, who art thou so great a man, that thinkest thou oughtest not to pay tribute? He payed tribute which had no possessions: and thou which daily seekest after the luker of the world, why doest thou not acknowledge the obedience and duetie of the worlde? Why doest thou thorowe the arrogancie of thy minde exault thy selfe aboue the worlde, when as thorowe thine owne miserable couetousnesse, thou art subiect vnto the worlde? Thus writeth S. Ambrose, and it is put in the 11. quest. 1. Magnum quidem. He also wryteth vpon these wordes in the 20 of Luke, shewe me a pennie,* whose Image it hathe, if Christ had not the Image of Cesar, why did hee pay any tribute? He gaue it not of hys owne, but rendred vnto the worlde, that which was the worldes: And if thou wilt not be in daunger of Cesar, possesse not those things which are the worldes, for if thou hast riches, thou art in daunger of Cesar.

Wherefore if thou wilt owe nothing vnto any earthly king, forsake all chose things, and followe Christ If then all ecclesiasticall ministers, hauing riches, ought to be vnder the subiection of kings, and geue vnto them tribute: It foloweth that kings may lawfully by the authoritie which is geuen them, take away theyr temporallities from them.

Here vpon S. Paule acknowledging him selfe to be vnder the iurisdiction of the Emperour, appealed vnto Cesar, as it appeareth Actes 25.

I stand sayth he,* at Cesars iudgement seat, there I ought to be iudged Whereupon in the 8: distinction, chapter quo iure. S. Ambrose alleageth, that all things are lawfull vnto the Emperour, & al things vnder his power. For the confirmation wherof, it is said Daniel second chapter, the God of heauen hath geuen vnto thee a kingdome,* strength, Empire, and glory, and all places, wherein the children of men do dwell, and hath geuen into thy power, the beastes of the field, and fowles of the aire, and set all things vnder thy subiection.

Also in the 11. question and 1. He sayeth, if the Emperour require tribute, we do not denie that the landes of the Church shall pay tribute, if the Emperour haue neede of our landes, hee hath [unspec 9] power to challenge them, let him take them, if hee will, I doe not geue them vnto the Emperour, neither doe I denie them. Thys wryteth S. Ambrose, expresly declaring that the seculare Lorde hath power at hys pleasure to take away the lands of the Church, and so consequently the seculer Lords haue power at their owne pleasures to take away the temporal goodes from the Ecclesiasticall ministers, when they doe offend.

Item S. Augustine wryteth, if thou sayest, what haue we to do wyth the Emperour. But nowe as I sayde, wee speake of mannes lawe.* The Apostle would be obedient vnto the kings, and honor them, saying. Reuerence your kings: and doe not say what haue I to doe with the king? What haste thou then to doe wyth possessions. By the kings law the possessions are possessed, thou hast said, what haue I to doe with the king: but doe not say, what hath thy possessions to doe wyth the king? For then haste thou renounced the lawes of menne, whereby thou diddest possesse thy landes. Page 458 Thus wryteth S. Augustine in his 8. distinction, by whose wordes it is manifest that the king hath power ouer the church goodes, & consequently may take them away from the clergie, transgressing or offending.

Item in his 33 Epistle vnto Boniface, hee sayeth, what sober man will say vnto our kings,* care not you in our kingdome, by whome the church of the Lorde is maintained, or by whome it is oppressed, it pertaineth not vnto you, who will bee eyther a religious man, or who will be a church robber? Vnto whome it may be thus answered. Doeth it not pertaine vnto vs in our kingdom, who will either liue a chast life, or who will be an vnchast whoremonger? Beholde this holy man sheweth heere howe that it is the duety of kings,* to punish suche as are robbers of Churches, and consequently the proud clergy when as they do offend.

Item, hee wryteth in the 33. quest. 7. si de rebus. The secular Lorde may lawfully take away the temporall goodes from heritickes, and for so much that it is a case greatly possible that many of the cleargie are vsers of Simonie, and thereby heretickes: Therefore the secular Lorde may very lawfully take away their temporallities from them. For what vnworthy thyng is it sayeth Saint Augustine, if the Catholickes doe possesse according vnto the will of the Lorde, those thynges whych the heretickes helde? For so muche as this is the worde of the Lorde vnto all wycked men.* Mathew 21. the kingdome of God shall be taken away from you, and geuen vnto an nation, whiche shall doe the righteousnesse thereof, is it in vaine whych is wrytten in the 11. chapter of the booke of Wisedome?* The iust shall eat the labours of the wicked.

And whereas it may bee objected as touching the desire of other mennes goodes,* Saynte Augustine aunswareth that by that euidence the seuen nations, whyche did abuse the lande of promesse, and were driuen out from thence by the power of God, may obiecte the same vnto the people of God, whyche inhabite the same. And the Iewes them selues from whome accordynge vnto the woorde of the Lorde, the kingdome is taken away and geuen vnto a people, whiche shall doe the woorkes of righteousnesse maye obiecte the same vnto the Church of Christ, as touching the desire of other mennes goodes, but Sainte Augustines aunswere is thus.

Wee, sayeth he, doe not desire another mannes goodes, for so much as they are oures by the commandement of him, by whom all things were made. By like euidence the clergie hauing offended, their temporall goodes are made the goodes of others, for the profite of the church,* to this purpose also, according to S. Augustine, serueth the 14. question 4. vnto a misbeleuer, it is not a halfepennie matter, but vnto the faithfull is a whole worlde of riches, shal we not then conuince al such to possesse an other mans goodes, which seemed to haue gathered great riches together, and know not howe to vse them, for that truely is not an others, whych is possessed by right, and that is lawfully possessed, whych is iustly possessed, and that is iustly possessed, which is well possessed. Ergo, all that is euell possessed is another mannes, and he doth ill possesse it, which doth euell vse it.

If then anye of the cleargie doe abuse the temporall goodes, the temporall Lorde maye at theyr owne pleasure, accordynge vnto the rule of charitie take away the sayde temporall goodes from the cleargie so transgressing. For then according to the allegation aforesayde, the cleargie doeth not iustly possesse those temporall goodes, but the temporall Lorde proceedynge according to the rule of charitie: Doe iustly possesse those temporallities, for so muche as all things are the iust mannes. 1. Corrinth. 3. chapter.* All thynges sayeth the Apostle are youre. Whether it be Paule or Apollo, or Cephas, eyther the worlde, eyther life, or death, or thynges present, or thynges to come, for all thynges be youre, you be Christes, and Christe is Goddes. Also 23. quest. 7. Quicunque.* It is wrytten. Iure diuino omnia sunt iustorum. The woordes of Sainte Augustine in that place, ad Vincentium, be these: Who so euer sayeth hee, vppon the occasion of this law or ordinaunce of the Emperour doeth molest or persecute you, not for loue of any charitable correction, but onely for hatered and malyce to doe you displeasure, I holde not wyth hym in so doynge.

And althoughe there is nothyng heere in thys earthe, that any manne may possesse assuredly, but eyther hee must holde it, by Goddes lawe, by whyche cuncta iustorum esse dicuntur: that is, all thynges be sayde to pertayne to the possession of the iuste: or else by mannes lawe, whych standeth in the kinges power to sette and to ordaine. &c. Hereby the woordes of Augustine alledged. Yee see all thinges belong to the possession of the iust, by Goddes lawe.

*Item, for so muche as the cleargie by meanes of their possessions are in daunger of the Emperour and King: It followeth that if they doe offend, the Emperour or King, may lawfully take away their possessions from them. The consequent dependeth on thys poynte, for so much as otherwise they were not in subiection vnder the Emperour or king, and the antecedent is manifest by the 11. question and 1. Parag. His ita respondetur. Where as it is specified in Latine thus. [His ita respondetur, clerici ex officio Episcopo sunt suppositi, ex possessionibus praediorum imperatori sunt obnoxij, ab Episcopo vnctionem, decimas, & primitias accipiunt: ab imperatore vero praediorum possessiones nanciscuntur:] that is to say. The cleargie by meanes of their office are vnder the Byshoppe, but by reason of theyr possessions they be subiect vnto the Emperour: Of the Byshoppe they receiue vnction, tithes and first frutes of the Emperour, they receiue possessions. This then it is decreed by the Emperiall lawe, that liuelyhoodes should be possessed, whereby it appeareth that the cleargie by the possession of their liuelyhoodes are in daunger of the Emperour, for hym to take away from them, or to correcte them accordyng to their deseruings, and to haue the controllement of them, as it shall seeme good vnto hym.

Item,* the temporall Lordes may take away the temporallities from such as vse Simonie, because they are heretickes. Ergo, thys Article is true.

The antecedent is manifest, for so much as the secular Lordes maye refuse suche as vse Simonie, and punishe them except they doe repent. For by the decree of Pope Paschasius in the first and laste question it appeareth,* that all suche as vsed Simonie, were to be refused of all faythfull people, as chiefe and principall heretickes, and if they doe not repent after they be warned, they are also to bee punyshed by the externe power. For all other faultes and crimes, in comparyson of Simonie, be counted but light, and seeme small offences.

Where vppon the glose expounding the same text,* sayth that by thys woorde externe, is vnderstande the laetie, whyche haue power ouer the cleargy, besides the Church, as in the 17 distinct. [Non licuit, & 23 quest. 5. principes.] Whereby it is euident that the temporall Lordes may take away the temporall goodes from the cleargie when as they doe offende.

Item,* Saint Gregorie in the Register vppon hys 7. booke 9. Chapter, wryteth thus vnto the Frenche Queene. For so much as it is wrytten that ryghteousnesse healeth the people, and sinne maketh them myserable: then is that kingdome counted stable, when as the offence whyche is knowen, is soone amended.

Therefore,* for so muche as wicked priestes are the cause of the ruyne of the people, (for who shall take vppon hym, to bee intercessour for the sinnes of the people, if the priest which ought to intreate for the same, haue committed greater offences) and vnder youre dominions the priestes doe liue wickedly and vnchastly: therfore that the offence of a few myght not tourne to the destruction of manye, wee oughte earnestly to seeke the punyshment of the same. And it followeth, if wee doe commaunde any personne, wee doe sende hym forth, wyth the consent of your authoritie, who together wyth other Priests, shall diligently seeke out, and according vnto Goddes worde correct and amende the same. Neyther are these things to be dissimuled, the whyche wee haue spoken of, for hee that may correcte any thyng, and doeth neglect the same wythout all doubte, he maketh hym selfe partaker of the sinne or offence.

Therefore foresee vnto your owne soule, prouide for youre newewes, and for suche as you do desire to raigne after you, prouide for your countrey, and wyth diligence prouide for the correction and punishment of that sinne, before our creatoure doe stretch out hys hand to strike.

And in hys next Chapter, hee wryteth vnto the French king, what so euer you doe vnderstande, to pertaine eyther vnto the honoure and glorie of oure God, to the reuerence of the church, or to the honour of the priestes, that doe you dilligently cause to bee decreed and in all poyntes to be obserued. Wherefore once againe wee doe mooue you,* that you commaunde a Synode to be congregated, and as wee wrote lately vnto you, to cause all the carnall vices whyche raigneth amongst your Priests, and all the wickednesse and Simonie of your Byshoppes, whyche is moste harde to be condemned and reprooued: vtterly to bee banished oute of your kyngdome, and that you wil not suffer them to possesse anye more substaunce vnder your dominion, then Goddes commaundement doeth allowe.

Beholde howe carefully blessed Gregorye doeth exhort the Queene and the Kyng to punishe the vices of the cleargie, leaste through theyr negligence they shoulde be partakers of the same: and howe they ought to correct their subiectes. For as it is conuenient to be circumspect and carefull against the outward enemies, euen so lykewyse ought they to bee agaynste the inward ennemyes of the soule. And lyke as in iuste warre agaynste the outward ennemyes, it is lawfull to take away theyr goodes, so long as they contynue in theyr malyce, so also is it lawfull to take away the goods of the cleargie, being the inward enemy. The consequent is prooued thus, for so much as the domesticall enemies are most hurtfull.

Item, it is thus argued, if God bee, the temporall Lordes may meritoriously and lawfully take away the temporall goodes Page 459 from the Cleargie, if they doe offende. For thys poynt lette vs suppose that we speake of power, as the true autentike scripture doth speake. Matt. 13. God is able euen of these stones to raise vp children vnto Abraham.

Whereupon it is thus argued, for if God be, he is omnipotent, and if he so be, he may geue like power vnto the seculer Lordes. And so consequētly they may meritoriously and lawfully vse the same power. But least that any man may object that a profe made by a strange thing is not sufficient, it is therefore declared howe that the temporal Lords haue power to take away their almes bestowed vpon the church. The church abusing the same, as ie shall be proued heereafter. And first thus, it is lawfull for kings in cases limitted by the lawe to take away the moueables from the clergie when they do offend, it is thus proued. For the temporall Lordes are most bound vnto the workes of greatest mercy most easie for them, but in case possible, it shuld be greater almes, & easier temporal dominion, to take away their almes frō such as build therewithal vnto eternal damnation, through the abuse therof, then to geue the saide almes for any bodely reliefe, Ergo the assumption is true.

Whereuppon first this sentence of the law of Christ in the 2. Thes. 3. is noted whereas the Apostle wryteth thus. When we were amongst you, wee declared this vnto you, that he that would not worke should not eate. Wherefore the law of nature doth licence al such as haue the gouernance of kingdoms, to correct the abuse of the temporalities which wold be the chief cause of the destruction of their kingdoms: whether the tēporall Lords or any other had endowed the Church with those temporalities or not. It is lawful for them in some case to take away the temporalities as it were by way of phisicke to withstand sinne, notwithstanding any excommunication or other Ecclesiasticall censure. For so much as they are not endowed, but only with cōditiō therunto annexed.

Heereby it appeareth that the condition annexed to the endowing or enriching of any church, is that God shuld be honoured, the which condition if it once fail the contrary taking place, the title of the gift is lost: and consequently the Lord which gaue the almes ought to correct the offence. Excommunication ought not to let the fulfilling of iustice,* Secondly according to the Canon lawe. 16. quest. 7. This sentence is noted where it is thus spoken as touching the children newewes and the most honest of the kindred of him which hath builded or endowed any church. That it is lawful for them to be thus circumspect, that if they perceiue the priest doe defraude any part of that which is bestowed, they should either gently admonish or warne him, or els complaine on him to the bishop, that he may be corrected. But if the bishop him selfe attempt to do the like, let them complaine of him to his Metropolitane, and if the Metropolitane do the like, let them not deferre the time, to report it in the eares of the king. For so saith the canon. Let them not deferre to report it in the eares of the king. To what ende I pray you? but that he shuld do correction, neither is it to bee douted but that correction doeth more appertaine vnto he king in this poynt for their goods wherof he is chiefe Lord by a substraction proportional, according to the fault or offence.

Item it is thus proued. It is lawful for the secular Lords by their power to do correction vpon the clergy by some kind of fearfull discipline appertaining to their secular power. Ergo, by like reason it is lawful for them by their power to do such correction, by all kind of fearful discipline pertaining vnto their secular power.* For so much then as the taking of their temporalities is in kinde of fearful discipline pertaining vnto the secular power: It foloweth that it is lawfull for them therby to doe such correction. And consequently it followeth that the truthe is thus to be proued. The consequent is euident and the antecedent is proued by Isidore 23 quest. 5. Principes. Where it is thus wrytten. There shuld be no secular powers within the church, but onely for thys purpose, that whatsoeuer thing the priests or ministers cannot bring to passe by preaching or teachings the secular powers, may command the same by the terror and feare of discipline: For oftētimes the heauēly kingdom is profited and holpen by the earthly kingdom, that they which are in the church and do any thing contrary vnto faith and discipline by the rigour of the princes, may be troden downe. And that the power of the rulers may lay that discipline vpon the neckes of the proude and stifnecked, which the vtility and profit of the church can not exercise or vse.

Item all things that by power ought to worke or bring to any perfect ende by the reasonable measuring of the meane thereto; it may lawfully vse by power, the substraction or taking away of the excesse and the addition of the want of the meanes according as shall be conuenient or meete for the measure to be made. For so much then as the secular Lordes ought by their power to prouide for the necessary sustentation of the Christian clergie by the reasonable measuring of their temporalties whych they are bounden to bestow vpon the Christian cleargie, it followeth that they may lawfully by their power vse the taking away or putting vnto of those temporallities according as shall be conuenient for the performance of that reasonable matter.

Item, it is lawfull for the clergie, by their power to take away the sacramentes of the Church from the laitie customably offending forsomuch as it doeth pertaine to the office of the Christian ministers by their power to minister the same vnto the lay people. Wherefore, for so much as it doeth pertaine vnto the office of the laitie, according vnto their power to minister, and geue temporallities to the clergie of Christ, as the Apostle sayeth. 1. Cor 9. It followeth that it is also lawfull for them by their power to take away the temporallities from the clergie, when they do customably sinne and offend.

Item, by like power may he which geueth a stipende or exhibition withdraw and take away the same from the vnworthy labourers, as hee hath power to geue the same vnto the worthy labourers, for so much then as temporallities of the clergie, are the [unspec 20] stipendes of the laitie: it followeth that the lay people may by as good authority, take away the same again from the clergy, which will not worthely labour, as they might by their power bestowe the same vpon those, which would worthely labour according to the saying of the Gospel. Mat. 21 The kingdome shalbe taken away from you, and geuen vnto a people which shall bring forth the frutes thereof.

Item, it is also lawfull for the secular Lodes, by their power to chastice and punish the lay people when they do offend, by taking away of their temporalties, according to the exigēt of their offence, forsomuch as the lay people are subiect vnder their dominion. [unspec 21] Wherefore the clergy being also subiect vnder the dominion of the secular Lodes, as appeareth Rom. 13. and many other places, it is euident that it is lawfull by their power to punish the cleargie, by taking away of their temporalties, if their offence do so deserue.

Item, the true and easie direction of the cleargie vnto the life of Christ and the Apostles and most profitable vnto the laity: that the cleargie shuld not liue contrary vnto Christes institution, semeth to be the taking away of their alms, and those things which [unspec 22] they had bestowed vpon them. And it is thus proued, that medicine is most apt to be laide vnto the sore, whereby the infirmitie might soonest be holpen, and were most agreeable vnto the pacient: Such is the taking away of the temporallities. Ergo, this article is true: The minor is thus proued, for so much as by the aboūdance of temporallities the worme or serpent of pride is spronge vp, where vpon vnsaciable desire and lust is inflamed, and thereby proceedeth all kinde of gluttonie and lecherie. It is euident in this poynt, for so much as the Temporallities being once taken away, euery one of those sinnes is either vtterly taken away, or at the least diminished, by the contrary, vertue induced and brought in: It semeth also most pertinent vnto the laity, forsomuch as they ought not to lay violēt hāds vpon their ministers or to abiect the priestly dignity, neither to iudge any of the cleargie in theyr open courts: It semeth also by the law of cōscience, to pertain vnto the lay people, for so much as euery man which worketh any worke of mercy, ought diligently to haue respecte vnto the habilitie of them that he bestoweth his almes vpon, least that by nourishyng or helping loyterers, hee be made partaker of his offence. Wherevpon if a priest doe not minister of their spiritualties, as Hostyensis teacheth in his 3. booke, of their tithes, first frutes and oblations, that the people ought to take away the almes of their tithes from them.

Item, it is confirmed by the last chapter of the 17. question, [unspec 23] out of the decre of rents appropriate vnto the church, quicun{que} Whereas the case is put thus, that a certaine man hauing no children, neither hoping to haue any, gaue all his goodes vnto the church, reseruing vnto him selfe the only vse and profites therof: it happened afterward that he had children, and the bishop restored againe his goodes vnto him, hoping not for it. The bishop had it in his power, whether to rēder again or no, those things which were geuen him, but that was by the lawe of man, and not by the lawe of conscience. If then by the decree of the holy doctoure S. Augustine in his sermone of the life of the cleargie Aurelius the Byshop of Carthage had no power by Gods lawe to with holde that which is bestowed vppon the church, for the necessitie of children, by the which law the wanton, proud, and vnstable clergy being more then sufficiently possessed, and enriched, do detain and keepe backe the temporallities to the detrement and hurt of their owne state, and of the whole Militant church, the seculare patrones being thereby so impouerished that they are compelled by penurie to robbe and steale to oppresse their tenants, to spoile and vndoe others, and oftentimes by very necessitie are driuen to beggerie.

Item, suppose that a priest and minister, howe greuously so euer [unspec 24] he doe offend by what kinde or signe of offence so euer it be, as it was in the bishop Iudas Iscarioth of the religious monk Sergius, of Pope Leo the hereticke, and many other priests, of whom the scripture and chronicles make mention, and daily experience doeth teache vs the same: It is euident that as it is supposed, the priestes in the kingdom of Boheme greuously offending, it is the kings part, forsomuch as he is supreme head next vnder God, and Lorde of the kingdome of Boheme, to correct and punish those priests. And for so much as the gentillest correction, & punishmēt Page 460 of suche as be indurate in their malice, is the casting away of their temporal goods, it followeth, that it is lawful for the king to take away temporallities. Wherefore it shuld seme very maruelous and strange, if that priests riding about, shuld spoile virgins, violently corrupt & defile honest matrones, if in such case it were not lawful for them to take away their armors, weapons, horses, gunnes and swordes from them. The like reason were it also, if they had vnlawfully conspired the death of the king, or that they woulde betray the king vnto hys ennemies.

[unspec 28] Item, whatsoever any of the clergy doth require, or desire of the seculer power, according vnto the law & ordināce of Christ, the seculer power ought to performe & graunt the same. But the clergy being letted by riches, ought to require helpe of the seculer power, for the dispensation of the said riches. Ergo the seculer power ought in such case by the law of Christ, to take vpon them the office or duty of getting, keping, & distributing all such manner of riches, the Minor is heereby proued, that no man ought to haue riches, but to that end, that they be helps, preferring & helping vnto the office which is appoynted of God. Therefore in case that seculer possession doe hinder the cleargy from their duetie. The seculer power ought to take it away, for so did the Apostles, Actes 6. saying, it is not lawfull for vs to leaue the worde of God vntaught, and to minister to Tables.

And thus hetherto hath Iohn Hus prosecuted Wyckleffs articles, with long arguments and reasons, the which were to long a trauaile, neither agreable for this place, to alledge all the whole order of his reasons and profes, which he vsed in that desputatiō, aboue the number of 20. more besides the testimonies of all the wryters before recited, the which hee alledgeth out of the scriptures, decretals, S. Ambrose in his booke of offices, S. August in his 5. booke & 5. quest. and also vnto Macedo, Isydore, the councell of Nice, Greg his 11. quest. Bernard vnto Eugenius in his 3. booke, and out of Lyncolniensis 61. Epistle, besides many other moe. The sum of al which testimonies tend vnto this end, that he might vtterly take away all earthly rule & dominion from the clergy, and to bring them vnder the subiection and censure of kings & Emperors, as it were within certaine bonds, the which is not onely agreeable vnto equity and Gods word, but also profitable for the cleargy themselues. Hee teacheth it also to be necessary, that they shuld rather be subiect vnder the seculer power, then to be aboue them, because that els it were dangerous, lest that they being intangled with such kinde of busines, they should be an easier pray vnto sathan, and soner trapped in his snares. And therby it should come to passe that the gouernance & principality of al things being at the length brought into the hands of the clergy, the lawful authority of kings & princes shuld not only be geuen ouer vnto them, but in a maner as it were growe out of vse: specially for so much as already in certaine kingdoms and common wealths, the ecclesiastical power is growen vnto such height, that not only in Boheme, but also almost thorowout al the common welths, they do occupy the 3. or at least the 4. part of the rents and reuenues. And last of al, he alleageth the exāple of Greg. and of Mauritius, & afterwarde the prophecy of Hildegardis wryting in this manner.*

As the Ecclesiastical ministers do willingly receiue rewarde and praise of kings & rulers for their good deedes: So also ought they when they do offend willingly suffer and receiue punishmēt at their hands for their euil doings. The consequent holdeth thus, forsomuch as the punishment mekely and hūbly receiued for hys offence doth more profit a man, then his praise receiued for any good work.* Wherupon S. Greg. wryteth thus vnto Mauritius the Emperour when he did persecute him, saying: I beleue that you do please almighty God so muche the better, in so cruelly afflicting me, which haue ben so euell a seruaunt vnto him. If then thys holy Pope did so humbly and mekely, without any offence suffer thys affliction of the Emperour, why should not any of the clergy, when they do offend, mekely sustaine punishment, at the kings or rulers hands, vnder whom he is boūden to be subiect? When as the true vicar of Christ sayth the 1. of Peter and 2. chap. Be ye subiect vnto euery creature for Gods cause, whether it bee vnto the kyng, as most excellent, or vnto the rulers, as men sent of God, for the punishing of the wicked, and to the praise of the good, for so is the good will of God.

*Wherupon Pope Leo, leaning vnto thys rule, submitted him self vnto Ludouicus the Emperour, as it is wrytten the 2. quest. 7. Vnder these words: if we haue done any thing incompetently, or that we haue not obserued the vpright path and way of equitie amongst subiects, wee will amende the same, either by your owne iudgement, either els by the aduise or iudgement of those whych you shal appoynt for that purpose. For if we which ought to correct and punish other mens fauts, doe commit more greuous our selues, we are not then the disciples of the trueth (but as with sorow we speake it) we shalbe aboue al other, the masters of error.

And in the 10. distinction hee wryteth thus, as touching the obedience vnto the Emperour, as concerning the precepts and commandements of our Emperors, and our predecessors bishops (the which the glose nameth Emperors, which are annoynted after the manner of Bishops) to be obserued & kept vnbroken, wee do professe our selues by all meanes possible, as much as in vs lieth; or that wee may and can by the helpe of God preserue and kepe them both now and euer.

And if peradventure any man do informe, or hereafter shall informe you otherwise, know you him assuredly, to be a liar and slaunderer.

Marke how this deuout and holy Pope, calling the Emperors bishops, submitted himself according to the rule of S. Peter the apostle vnder the obedience, and also punishment of the Emperor. Wherefore then should not the clergy of the kingdome of Boheme submit themselves vnder the obedience of their king, for Gods cause,* for to be punished if they do offende, and not onely submit themselves vnto the king, but also vnto the rulers, and not onely vnto the rulers, but vnto euery other creature? For by how much they do so humble, and abase themselves in this world for Gods sake, so much the more shal they be exalted with him, but what is the let therof, but only pride wherby Antichrist doeth exalt hym selfe aboue the most humble and meeke Lord Iesu Christ?

Also it semeth to appere by that which is aforesayd vpon the taking away of the temporallities out of the prophecie of Hildegardis the virgin,* the which he wryteth in his bokes vnder Eugenius the Pope in the councel of Treuerse approued & allowed by many bishops of France, Italy, & Almany, which were there present, whereas also S. Bernard himselfe was present, the which virgin prophecying, spake in this manner. The kings & other rulers of the world, being stirred vp by the iust iudgement of God shall set themselves against them & run vpon them saying, we wil not haue these men to raigne ouer vs with their rich houses, & great possessions, and other worldly riches, ouer the which we are ordeined to be Lords and rulers, and how is it mete or comely that those shauelings with their stoles and chisils shuld haue more soldiers or more, or richer armour or artillery then we? So is it not connenient that one of the clergy should be a man of warre, neither a soldier to be one of the clergy. Wherefore let vs take away from them, that which they do not iustly, but wrōgfully possesse. And immediatly after shee sayeth thus: The omnipotent father equally deuided all things: that is to say, the heauens he gaue vnto heauenly creatures, and the earth vnto the earthly. And by thys meanes was there a iust deuision made betweene the children of men, that the spiritualty shuld haue such things as belongeth vnto them, and the secular people, such things as are mete & necessary for them, so that neither of these 2. sorts shuld oppres eche other by violēce, for God doth not cōmand that the one sonne or child should haue both the cloke and the cote, and the other should go naked, but he willed that the one shuld haue the cloke, and the other the cote. Wherefore the secular sort ought to haue the cloke for the greatnesse of their worldly cares, and for their children, which daily increase and multiply. The cote hee geueth vnto the spiritualty, that they shuld not lacke clothing, & that they should not posses more then necessity doth require. Wherefore we iudge and thinke it good that al these aforesaid be deuided by reason & equity. And whereas the cloke and the cote are both found, there the cloke be taken away, & geuen vnto the nedy, that they do not perish for lacke or want. These aforesaid spake the virgin Hildegardis, plainly for shewing the taking away of the tēporalities from the clergy by the secular Lords, and shewing for what cause they shall be so taken away. And what manner of deuision shalbe made of those thinges that are taken away, that they be not consumed, and spent vnprofitably.

For so much as mention is heere made of Hildegardis, it shall not seme impertinent, moued by the occasiō hereof to geue forth vnto the reader such things as we haue found in certen olde volumes, touching her prophecie of the comming of certaine false Prophets, onely meaning as it seemeth, the begging friers, whych sprang vp shortly after her time. The tenour wherof is this, worde for word, as we finde it wrytten.

In those daies,* there shall rise vp a people without vnderstanding, proud, couetous, vntrusty, and deceitfull, the which shall eat the sinnes of the people, holding a certaine order of folish deuotion, vnder the fained cloke of beggery, preferring themselues aboue all other, by their fained deuotion, arrogant vnderstanding, and pretended holines, walking without shamefastnes, or the fear of God, inuventing many new mischiefs being strong & stout, but this order shalbe accursed of al wise men, and faithful Christians, they shal cease from labour, and geue them selues ouer vnto idlenes. Chusing rather to liue thorow flattery, thē by begging. More ouer they shall together study, howe they may peruersly resist the teachers of the trueth. And slay them together wyth the noble men, how to seduce and deceiue the nobility, for the necessitie of their liuing and pleasures of thys worlde, for the Deuill will graft in them foure principall vices: that is to say, flatterie, enuie, hypocrisie and slaunder. Flatterie, that they may haue large giftes geuen them. Enuie, when they see giftes geuen vnto other, and not vnto them. Hypocrisie, that by false dissimulation, they maye please men Detraction, that they may extoll and commend them selues, and backbite others, for the praise of menne and seducing of the simple. Also they shall instantly preache wythout deuotion or example of the Martyrs, and shall detract the seculer princes, Page 461 taking away the sacraments of the church from the true pastors, receiuing almes of the poore, diseased, and miserable, and also associating them selues with the common people, hauing familiaritie with women, instructing them howe they shall deceiue their husbandes and friendes by their flatterye and deceitfull wordes, and rob their husbandes to geue it vnto them, for they will take all these stollen and euill gotten, and say, geue it vnto vs, and we will pray for you, so that they beyng curious to hide other mens faultes, doe vtterly forget their owne, and alas, they will receiue all thinges of rousers, pickers, spoylers, theeues and robbers, of sacrilegious persons, vsurers, adulterers, Heretikes, Schismatikes, Apostataies, whores and baudes, of noble men, periurers, merchantes, false iudges, souldiours, tyrantes, princes, of such as liue contrary to the law, and of many peruers and wicked men, following the persuation of the deuill, the sweetnes of sinne, a delicate and transitory life, and fulnes euen vnto eternall damnation. All these things shall manifestly appeare in them vnto all people, and they day by day, shal waxe more wicked and hard hearted, & whē as their wickednes and disceits shalbe found out, then shall theyr gifts cease, and then shal they go about their houses hungry, & as mad dogs loking down vpon the earth, & drawing in their necks as doues, that they might bee satisfied with bread, then shall the people crye out vpon them. Woe be vnto you ye miserable children of sorow, the worlde hath seduced you, the deuill hath bridleed your mouthes, your flesh is frayle, and your heartes without sauour, your mindes haue bene vnstedfast, and your eyes delighted in much vanitie and folly, your daintie bellies desire delicate meates. Your feete swift to runne vnto mischief, remember when you were apparantly blessed, yet enuious, poore but rich, simple, mightie deuout flatterers, vnfaithfull betrayers, peruerse detractors, holy hypocrites, subuerters of the truth, ouermuch vpriight, proude, vnshamefast, vnstedfast teachers, delicate marters, confessours for gaine, meeke slaunderers, religious, couetous, humble, proud pitifull, hard harted liers, pleasant flatterers, peace makers, persecutors, oppressors of the poore, bringing in new sects newly inuented of your selues, mercifull, wicked, louers of the world, sellers of pardons, spoylers of benefices, vnprofitable orators, sedicious cōspirators, dronkards, desirers of honor, maintainers of mischiefe, robbers of the worlde, vnsaciable, preachers, men pleasers, seducers of women, and sowers of discorde, for Moyses the glorious prophet, spake very well of you in his song. A people without coucel or vnderstanding, would to God they did know, vnderstand and foresee the end. You haue builded vp an high, and when you could ascend no hier, then did you fall euen as Symon Magus, whom God ouerthrew, and did strike with a cruel plage, so you likewise thorowe your false doctrine, naughtines, lies, detractions and wickednes, are come to ruine, and the people shall say vnto them goe yee teachers of wickednesse, subuerters of the truth, brethren of the Sunamitie, fathers of heresies, false apostles, which haue fained your selues to followe the life of the Apostles, and yet haue not fulfilled it in no part, sonnes of iniquitie, we wil not follow the knowledge of your waies, for pride & presumption hath deceiued you, and insaciable cōcupiscence hath subuerted your erroneous hearts. And whē as yet would ascēd hier thē was mete or comely for you, by the iust iudgement of God, you are fallen backe into perpetual opprobry and shame. Thys blessed Hildegardis whose prophecy this is, flourished about the yeare of our Lord a 1546. as it is wrytten in Martins chronicles.

*Also Hugo in his second boke of sacraments, in the 2. parte, 3. chapter and 7. sayth, the laity forsomuch as they entermedle wyth earthly matters necessary vnto an earthly life, they are the least part of the body of Christ. And the clergy for so much as they doe dispose those things which pertainē vnto a spirituall life, are as it were the right side of the body of Christ, and afterward interpreting both these partes him selfe, he sayeth: A spirituall man ought to haue nothing, but such as pertaineth vnto God, vnto whom it is appoynted to be sustained by the tithes and oblations whych are offered vnto God: But vnto the Christian and faithfull laietie, the possession of the earth is graunted, and vnto the cleargie the hole charge of spiritual matters is committed, as it was in the old Testament. And in his 7. chapter he declareth howe that certaine things are geuen vnto the Church of Christ, by the deuotion of the faithfull, the power and authority of the seculer power reserued, least there might happen any confusion: For so much as God him selfe cannot alow no disordered thing. Wherupon oftētimes the worldly princes do graunt the bare vse of the church, and oftentimes vse and power to exercise iustice, which the clergy cannot exercise by any Ecclesiasticall minister, or any one person of the clergy. Notwithstāding they may haue certain lay persōs, ministers vnto that office. But in such sort sayeth he, that they do acknowledge the power which they haue to come from the seculer prince or ruler, and that they do vnderstand their possessions can neuer be alternate away from the kings power, but (if that necessity or reason doe require) the same possessions in all such case of necessity do owe him obeisance and seruice. For like as the kings power ought not to turne away the defence or sauegarde which he oweth vnto other: so likewise the possessions obtained and possessed by the clergy, according to the duty and homage which is due vnto the patronage of the kings power cannot by right be denied. Thus much wryteth Hugo:

In the third acte the same yeare, after the feast of S. Vitis, as touching Tithes. &c.

Tithes are pure almes.

Vpon this article it is to be noted, that for so much as almes is a worke of mercy, as S. Augustine, Chrysostome, and others do ioyntly affirme,* and that mercy (according to Lincolniensis minde) for the present is a loue or desire to helpe the miserable out of his misery: and for so much as the misery of mankinde is double:* that is to say spirituall and bodily: the whiche is the want or taking away of the good, and the goodes of man is eyther the goodes of the soule or of the body: And the goods of the soule is double (That is to say: the lighting of the minde, & the vprightnes of affection) the misery of the soule is also double as the darcknes of ignorance and a froward and wilfull sweruing from the truth. And both the goodes of the soule are wont to be comprehended vnder one title of name: * that is to say; wisdom, and both the miseries of the soule vnder the name of follie. Wherupon all the hole goodnes of the soule is wisdom, and all the hole misery thereof is ignoraunce, the miseries of the body are lacke of meat, that is to say, hunger, and lacke of drinke called thirst: and briefly all misery is the want of something which is desired. * Also these are bodely miseries, nakednes, lacke of harbour, sicknesse, and imprisonment. All the miseries therfore being nombred together, are but one of the soule, the which is folly and lacke of wisdom, and 6. of the body, the which the Lord in the 25. of Mathew doth plainly reherse. There are also commonly appoynted 7. bodely almes, that is to say, to feede the hungry, to geue drinke vnto the thirsty: To clothe the naked, to harbor the stranger or haberles, to visit the sick, & to bury the dead, the which altogether are cōteyned in these verses.

Visito, poto, cibo, redimo, tego, colligo, condo.
The which verse is thus Englished, word for word.
Visite the sicke, the hungry feede,
Geue drinke to the thirsty, cloth the naked:
Bury the dead, the captiue redeme,
The harbourles receiue to thy lodging.

There be also 7. other spirituall almes appoynted, * whych are these, to teache the ignoraunt, to counsell him that is in dout. To comfort him which is in heauinesse. To correct the offender. To forgeue him which hath offended against thee. To beare those which are greuous. And to pray for all men, the which are also contained in these verses following.

Consule castiga solare remitte fer ora.
The which verse is thus Englished, word for word.
Instruct the ignorant, the weake confirme,
Comfort the heauy hart, and correct sinner
Forgeue the offender, beare with the rude,
Pray for all men both euel and good.

So that notwithstanding vnder the same, counselles and doctrine be comprehended. Thus writeth Thomas in the 2. part of the 2. quest. 32, article. 2.

Secondly it is to be noted, that in this present article our intent is only to intreat of bodely almes (the which as Thomas writeth in his 2. part 2. questi. 32. Arti. 1.) according vnto some mens mindes is this defined. * Almes is a worke whereby any thing is giuen vnto the needy of compasiō for Gods sake. And for so much as this definition serueth as well for the spirituall, as for the corporall almes. Therefore to the purpose, almes is a worke, whereby any thing is giuen vnto the needy in body for compassion, & for Gods sake. Or that is giuen of compassion or pitie vnto the bodely needy for Gods sake.

Whereupon it is manifest that almes as S. Augustin & other holy men say, is a worke of mercy, as also to geue almes. As it appeareth by the name, for in the Greeke it is deriued frō this word Misericordia, which is mercy, for as in the Latine, this word Miseratio, which signifieth pitie, is deriued of Misericordia, which is mercy, so this word Eleemosyna, which signifieth almes, is deryued of the Greeke word Elemonia, which is to say mercy, and of the word Sina, which is to say commandement, as it were a commaundement of mercy, or otherwise of this word Elemonia. By this letter I, which is to say God, and this worde Sina, which is commaundement As if it were said, the commaundement of God as Ianuensis in his booke intituled Catholicō affirmeth.

For our Sauour doth commaunde in the xj. of Luke to geue almes, saying, geue almes and behold all thinges are cleane vnto you: least that in this point there may be any equiuocation it is supposed presently, that the almes giuē of mē is a corporal almes giuen simply vnder the name of almes. Secondly, it is to be noted, that Tythes in this effect are the tenth part of goods of fortune, giuen by a man simply vnder the name of almes for Gods sake.*

These things being thus noted and supposed the article is thus proued. Euery gift of fortune, or temporal gift, simply giuē vnder Page 462 the name of almes is almes. But some tiths are the gift of fortune, or temporall gift vnder the name of almes. Therefore some tithes are almes. This consequent is manifest of his selfe. The Maior appeareth by the first supposition. And the Minor by the seconde.

Item, euery gift geuen by a man euen of loue, to relieue and helpe the miserable out of his misery is an almes. The 10. part of the goodes of fortune geuen by a man, simply vnder the name of almes, for Gods sake, is geuen by the same man euen of loue, to helpe the miserable out of his misery: Therefore the 10. part of the goods of fortune being geuē by any man simply vnder the name of almes for Gods sake is almes. The consequent is manifest. The Maior appeareth by this, that euery such gift is either a spirituall or bodely almes. The Minor seemeth hereby true, for so much as many holy men haue geuen, and do geue, euen for loue to relieue the miserable out of his miserie. Neither is it to be doubted, but that such kinde of tithes are almes. For S. Augustine vpon these words of the Lord in the Gospell wryteth thus. Woe be vnto you Pharises which do tithe minte and anise. If they cannot be clēsed without they beleue in him, he which doth clense his heart thorow faith, to what purpose is it, that hee sayth, geue almes, and beholde all thinges are cleane vnto you. Let vs geue care, and peraduenture he doth expound it himselfe.* They did take out the 10. part of all their frutes, and gaue it for almes, the which any Christian mā doth not willingly. Then they mocked him, whē he spake these words to them, as vnto men which wold do no almes. Thys the Lord forknowing, said: Wo be vnto you Pharises which tithe mint and rue, and al kind of herbs. And passe ouer the iudgement & charity of God, for this it is to do almes, if thou dost vnderstād it, begin with thy selfe: For howe canst thou be mercifull vnto an other, which art vnmercifull vnto thy selfe. This wryteth S. Augustine, in plainly saying that tithes are almes.

Also in his Enchiridion 76. chap. vpon these wordes of Luke in the 11 chapter.* Notwithstanding that which is more then sufficient, geue in almes and all thinges shall be cleane vnto you, hee sayth thus: when he had rebuked them that they washed thēselues outwardly, and inwardly were full of iniquity & abomination, admonishing them, what, and howe a man ought first to bestowe almes vpon him self, and first to clense him self inwardly, he sayth. That which doth remaine, geue in almes, & beholde all things are cleane vnto you. Afterward, that he might the better declare what he had geuen them warning of, & what they neglected to do, that they shuld not iudge him ignorant of their almes: he sayth, Wo be vnto you Pharisies, as though hee shoulde say, I verely gaue you warning that you shuld geue such almes, wherby al things might be cleane vnto you: but wo be vnto you which do tith mint, rue, and all kinde of herbes, for I do know these your almes, that you shuld not thinke with your selues that you had geuē me warning therof: and neglect and passe ouer the iudgement and charitie of God, by the which almes ye might be clēsed from all your inward filthinesse. And your bodies also which you doe wash shoulde be cleane For all these things both inward, and also outwarde, as it is sayde in an other place, cleanse that which is wythin, and the outward things shalbe also cleane.

But least that he should seme to refuse those almes which are geuen of the frutes of the earth, he sayd, you ought to haue done these thinges: That is to say, the iudgement and loue of God, & not to neglect the same. That is to say, the almes of the frute of the earth This wryteth S. Aug expresly calling the tithes almes.

Also Chrysostome vpon the same wordes in the 11. of Luke, that which remaineth geue in almes, he sayth thus: wheras it was spoken of the Iewish kind of clensing it is wholly passed. But for so much as tithes is a certaine almes,* and the time was not yet expresly come to kil the sacrifices of the law, for this cause he saith, ye ought to do those things, & not to omit the other. And S. Thomas alledgeth him in his glose vppon S. Luke. And Chrysostome himselfe doth touch two poynts. First that tithes is almes. Secōdly, that tithes are in a manner lawfull, forsomuch as the gift therof vnto the priests did not cease in the time of Christ.

Also Augustin in a certaine Sermon of geuing almes, sayeth thus, what is to say: geue almes: And behold all things are cleane vnto you. Let vs geue eare, and peraduenture he doth expounde it him selfe. When he had spoken these words, without dout they thought within themselues, who did geue almes, and howe they did geue it. They tithed all that they had, and toke out the 10. part of all their frutes. And gaue it for almes: the which no Christian lightly doth so. Marke what the Iewes did, they tithed not onely their wheate, but their wine and oyle, and not that only, but also vile things. For the commandement of the Lord, as commin, rue, and anise, of the which they tooke the 10. part, and gaue it for almes. I thinke therefore, for so much as they called vnto theyr mindes and thought with them selues, that our Lord Christ spake in vaine vnto them that they did no almes, when as they knewe their owne workes, that they tithed the smallest, and worst of all their frutes, and gaue almes thereof: They mocked hym amongst themselues, because he did speake in such sort vnto them, as vnto men that did no almes. The which the Lord fore seeing, by and by added notwithstanding, wo be vnto you Scribes, Pharisies & hypocrites, which tithe your mint, commin, and rue, and all kinde of herbes: that you may know; I doe vnderstand your almes Truely, these are your tithes. These are your almes, you tithe out the least and worst of all your frutes, and haue left the waighty matters of the lawe vndone Here S. Augustin often expoundeth, that tithes are almes: Also he wryteth the like in his booke of homilies in his 6. homelie.

Item, for the prooffe of thys article that tithes are pure almes, it is thus argued. For this proposition, tithes are pure almes is infinite, taking the trueth for many of his particularities. It is moste certaine that it is not damnable, but most catholike, that God is something the which being false in all particulers, it is onely true for that alone which doth surmount all kinde. Ergo, by like reason this particuler is true, tenthes are pure almes: For it is thus proued. These tenthes of a good lay man being wholly distributed by a faithfull minister vnto a nedy lay man, according to a good entent, how can they be but pure almes, yea, and more pure then any almes geuen by any of the cleargie being a fornicatour. The whole Antecedent I suppose as possible, and doutfull vnto the condemners, if it be true.

Item, it is also thus proued, these tithes, and all other goodes of fortune, are pure almes in respect of God. Forsomuch as euery man, Emperour and king, is a begger of God. As S. Augustin doth oftentimes affirme, and consequently if he doe receiue frutefully any such goodnesse at the hand of God, the same is pure almes in respect of God: neither is there any faithfull man that will deny the same, but that it simply foloweth that the same is pure almes before God, Ergo it is pure almes.

It is also thus argued, all tithes are by themselues, and euery part of them almes, neither is there any reason cōtrary vnto this, that they are almes. Ergo, they are pure almes. For they are by no other meanes or reason, then almes, if they be all together themselues almes: Forsomuch as it followeth, if they be by any other meanes or otherwise then almes, then they are otherwise then some almes, and forsomuch as they themselues are some almes, it foloweth that they are otherwise then they are in dede, the which is false.

But now to passe beyond the bonds of Logicke,* it is to be demaūded, whether before the church was endowed, or that sustenance and clothing were geuen vnto the Apostles, there was any pure almes, or that they were geuen by any other meanes by bōd of det, amōgst men. And forsomuch as the reason is not to be fained, but that they were pure almes, so afterwarde the custome of the same thing according vnto like reasō doth not alter the kind of the reason. For so might beggers chalenge by custome beyond the purity of almes, the temporallities which they do beg. Neither doth det vtterly exclude the purity of almes before God: for euery man duely geuing almes, doth as he ought to do: as euery man duely receiuing his almes, ought so to receiue it as according to Gods will. And simplie to establish any humaine title, vppon the continuance of any such almes, it is altogether contrary vnto the reason of almes. Therefore they do continually obserue, and kepe the reason of the purity of almes, which they had from the beginning, when as the bond conditioned, doth not destroy the purity thereof. Wherefore there is no cause why it should be denied that tithes are pure almes: except that the proud should be maruelously extolled, contrary to the humility of Christ. For they doe chalenge by the title of their lacke or want so to be pleased for their tithes. For so might the begging Frier, by the continuance of hys daily begging chalenge according vnto the like quantitie or circumstance But it is no argument, that if the curate doe performe his corporall ministrie, that he ought therefore to chalenge tithes by any ciuill title, because that as wel on the behalfe of him, which geueth the tithe, as also in the behalfe of the Curate, euery suche ministry ought frely to be geuen, and not by any ciuill exchange. Forsomuch as it is not required, but that rather the comparison of such exchaunges are repugnant, forsomuch as also no mā frely geueth any almes except he doe looke for the duetie of recompence, by the law of conscience.

Item, all temporall goods bestowed vppon the clergie, by the lay people vnder condition, as the goodes of the church are the almes of them which geue it, it is prooued thus, for so much as all those goods are the goods of the poore, as it appeareth by many sayings of holy men and by the lawes.

But they were not the goods of the pore, after they were mere secular goodes, but onely by the meane of the woorke of mercie, wherby they were bestowed vpon the pore Ergo, they were pure almes. The cōsequent dependeth vpō the definitiō of pure almes.

Item, all things changed to the vse and power of an other, either by ciuill exchange or Euangelical is changed But the church goods are so changed by one of these ministries. But the Euangelical exchange is not to be fained, because it is not done, neyther by bying or selling, or any other ciuill exchange. Therefore there doth not remaine, but only a pure gift, for hope of a heauenly reward, the which is mercy, and so pure almes. And it semeth to followe consequently that all the Clergie receiuing such almes, are not onely in respect of God, as all other menne: But in respect of Page 463 men beggars. For they wold not so instantly require those almes except they had neede of them: neither ought we to be ashamed therof,* or to be proud beggars: for so much as Christ touching his humanitie became a begger for vs, because hee declared his need vnto his Father saying. &c.

Item, when any Kyng, Prince, Knight, Citizen, or anye other man doth geue vnto the clergy, or to anye priest for his stipend, he geueth the same vnto the Church of God, and to the priuate party, as a perpetuall almes, that he should attend to his vocation, preaching, praying and studying. But this kinde of geuing doth not suffice to ground any secular dominion amongst the clergye it followeth that the bare vse remayneth in them, or the secular vse without any secular power.

The maior appeareth hereby, forsomuch as otherwise almes should not be a worke of mercy. Whereby it may also appeare, that tenths are pure alms geuen to the church, to the vse of the pore.

And hereupon the holy men doe say that tenthes are the tributes of the needy soules. Whereupon S. Augustine in a sermon made vpon the restoring of tithes sayth.* The geuing of Tithes most deare brethren are the tributes of the poore soules therefore pay your tribute vnto the poore. And by and by after, he sayth, therefore who desireth eyther to get any rewarde, or to haue anye remission of sinnes, by geuing of his tenthes, let him study to geue almes euen of the ninth part: so that what soeuer shall remayne more then a competent liuing, and decent clothing: that it be not reserued for riot, but that it be layd vp in the heauenly treasure, by geuing it in almes to the poore. For what so euer God doth geue vnto vs more then we haue neede of: he doth not geue it vs specially for our selues: but doth send it vs to be bestowed vpon others by our handes, if wee doe not geue it, we inuade an other mans possessions.

Thus much wryteth S. Augustine, and is repeted in the xvi. question 1. Decime.

Also S. Ierome in an Epistle, and it is put in the 16. question, and 2. chap Quicquid. What soeuer the clergy hath it is the goods of the poore.

Also S. Augustine in his 33. Epistle vnto Boniface, and it is aleaged in the 1. question and 12.

Also in the 23. question 7. If we doe possesse any thinge priuately, the which doth suffice vs, they are not oures, but the goods of the poore, whose stewardest we are, except we doe challenge to ourselues a property by some damnable vsurpatiō. The glose vpon that part of the 23. question 7. sayth. The Prelates are but onely the stewardest of the church goodes, and not Lordes thereof.

S. Ambrose also vpon this saying of the Gospell. Luke the 16. Geue accompt of your bailiship, or stewardship: Hereby then doe we learne, that they are not Lordes, but rather stewardest and baliffes of other mens substaunce.

And S. Ierome, writing to Nepotianus saieth, howe can they be of the clergie, which are commaunded to contemne and dispise their owne substaunce, and to take away from a frend, it is theft, to deceiue the Church it is sacriledge, and to take away that, which should be geuen vnto the poore.

[illustration]

The order and maner of taking vp the body of Iohn Wickliffe and burning his bones 41. yeares after his death.

And S. Bernard in his sermon,* vppon these wordes (Symon Peter sayd vnto Iesus, chap. 17) sayd. Truely the goodes of the Church, are the patrimony of the poore: And whatsoeuer thyng the ministers and stewardest of the same, not Lordes or possessours do take vnto themselues more then sufficient, for a competent liuing, the same is taken away from the poore, by a sacrilegious crueltie.

And Eusebius in his treatise vpon the pilgrimage of S. Ierom writeth thus, if thou doest possesse a garment, or anye other thing more then extreme necessitie doth require and dost not help the needy, thou art a thief & a robber. Wherefore dearly beloued children, let vs be stewardest of our temporallities, and not possessors.

And Isidore in his treatise De summo Bono chap. 42. sayth. Let the byshop know that he is the seruaunt of the people,* and not Lord ouer them.

Also in the 5. booke of decretals, extra de donationibus, sub autoritate Alexandri tertij. Episcopi paristensis. He sayth, we beleue that it is not vnknowne vnto your brotherhoode, that a Byshop, and euery other Prelate is but a steward of the Church goodes, and not Lord thereof. By these sayinges of these holy men it is euidently declared, that not only tithes, but also al other substaunce which the clergie hath by gift of worke of mercy, are pure almes, which after the necessitie of the clergie once satisfied, ought to be transported vnto the poore.

Secondly it is declared how that the Clergye are not Lordes and possessours of those goods, but ministers & stewardest therof.

Thirdly it is shewed, that if the Clergye doe abuse the same, they are theeues, robbers, and sacrilegious persons, and except they doe repent, by the iust iudgement of God they are to be condempned.

ANd thus hetherto I may peradventure seeme to haue made sufficient long resitall out of Iohn Dus, but so notwithstanding that the commoditie of those thinges, maye abundantly recompence the prolixitie thereof. Wherefore if I shall seeme vnto any man in the rehearsall of this disputation to haue passed very farre the boundes of the history: let him thinke thus of me, that at what tyme I tooke in hand to wryte of these Ecclesiasticall matters, I could not omit these thinges whiche were so straightly ioyned with the cause of the Church.

Neither that I did make more accompt of the historye which I had taken in hand then of the common vtilitie, whereunto I had chiefe respect. There were besides these certayne other articles. Whereupon the sayde Iohn Dus had very wisely and learnedly disputed, but these shal suffice vs for this present. And for the residue we will passe them ouer, to the intent we may the more spedely retourne whereas our story left, declaring what cruelty they vsed not onely against the bookes and articles of Iohn Wickliffe, but also in burning his body and bones, commaunding them to be taken vp 41. yeares after he was buried, as appeareth by the decree of the sayde Synode, the forme wherof, we thought hereunto to annexe as followeth.

The decree of the Synode of Constance touching the taking vp of the body and bones of Iohn Wickliffe to be burned 41. yeares after he was buried in his owne parish at Lutterworth.

FOrsomuch as by the authoritie of the sentence & decree of the Councell of Rome, and by the cōmaundement of the Church and the Apostolical see after due delayes being geuen, they proceeded vnto the condemnatiō of the said I. Wickliffe, and his memory: hauing first made proclamation, & geuen cōmaundement to cal forth whosoeuer would defend the said Wickliffe, or his memory (if there were any such) but there did none appeare, which would either defēd him or his memory. And moreouer witnesses being exami'ned by Commissioners appoynted by Pope Iohn & thys Councell, vpon the impenitencie and finall obstinacie and stubburnes of y^e said Iohn Wickliffe (reseruing that which is to be reserued, as in such busines, the order of the lawe requireth) and his impenitencie and obstinacy euen vnto his end, being sufficiently proued by euident signes and tokens, and also by lawfull witnesses of credite, was lawfully geuen thereunto. Wherefore at the instaunce of y^e steward of the treasury, proclamation being made to heare & vnderstand the sentence agaynst this day: the sacred Synode declareth, determineth and geueth sentence, that the said Iohn Wickliffe was a notorious obstinate hereticke, and that he died in his heresie, cursing and condemning both him and his memory.

This Sinode also decreeth and ordeineth, that the body & bones of the said Iohn Wickliffe, if it might be decerned and knowne from the bodyes of other faithfull people to be taken out of the ground, & throwne away farre from the buriall of any church, according vnto the canon lawes & decrees. Which determination and sentēce definitiue being red & pronounced, the lord president, & the foresaid presidentes of the 4. nations, being demaunded & asked whether it did please them or no? They all answered (and first Hostiensis the president, and after him the other presidents of the nations) that it pleased them very well, and so they alowed and confirmed all the premisses, &c.

Page 464 What Heraclitus would not laugh, or what Democritus would not weep, to see these so sage & reuerend Catos, to occupy their heads to take vp a poore mans body, so long dead and buried before, by y^e space of 41. yeares? & yet peradventure were not able to finde his right bones, but took vp some other body, & so of a catholick made an heretike. Albeit, herein Wickliffe had some cause to geue them thanks that they woulde at least spare him so long till he was dead, and also to geue him so long respite after hys death 41. yeares to rest in his sepulchre before they vngraued him, and turned him from earth to ashes: which ashes also, they took & threw into the riuer. And so was he resolued into 3. elements, earth, fire, and water, thinking therby vtterly to extinct and abolishe both the name and doctrine of Wickliffe for euer. Not much vnlike to the example of y^e old Phariseis & sepulcher knightes, which when they had brought the Lord vnto y^e graue, thought to make him sure neuer to rise againe. But these and all other must knowe, that as there is no coūsaile against the Lord: so there is no keeping down of veritie, but it wil spring and come out of dust and ashes, as appeared right well in this man. For though they digged vp his body, burnt his bones, & drowⁿed his ashes, yet y^e word of God and truth of his doctrine with the fruit & successe therof they could not burne: which yet to this day for the most part of his articles do remaine. Notwithstāding, the transitory body and bones of y^e man was thus consumed and dispersed, as by this picture here aboue set forth to thine eyes (gentle reader may appeare.

These things thus finished and accomplished, whiche pertayne to the story and time of Wickliffe: let vs now (by the supportation of the Lord) proceede to entreate & write of the rest, which either in his time or after his time, springing out of the same vniuersitie, and raysted vp (as ye wold say) out of his ashes were pertakers of the same persecution.* Of whom speaketh Thomas Walden in his book, De sacramentis & sacramentalibus. cap. 53. Where he saith, that after Wickliffe many suffered most cruell death, and many mo did forsake the realme.

In the number of whome was William Swinderby, Walter Brute: Iohn Puruey: Richard White: William Thorpe:* Raynold Pecock B. of S. Assaph, and afterward of Chichester.

To this Catalogue also pertayneth (mentioned in ancient writers) Laurence Redman maister of Arte, Dauid Sautre deuine, Iohn Aschwarby vicar as they call him of S. Peter Payne, who flying from Oxford into Boheme, did stoutly contend agaynst the Sophisters, as touchyng both kindes of the sacrament of the last supper. Who afterward among the rest of the Oratours was one of the 14. that was sent into the Councell at Basill: whereas by the space of 3. daies, he disputed vpon the 4. article, which was as touching the ciuill dominion of the clergy, an. 1438. Bish. of Lincolne hath certified vs. we therefore willing to withstand all defenders and fautors of such heresies doe will and commaunde as well the forenamed as namely the foresaid Iohn Woodward to be apprehended straightly charging the same to be imprisoned by theyr bodies or otherwise punished as shall seeme good to the Iustices, vntill they and euery of them shall submit them selues to the obedience of the foresayd Bishop in this behalfe: accordingly. Whereof fayle you not vnder payne of C.li. witnesse our selues, yeauen at our Mannor of Langley the viii. day of Marche, the 12. yeare of our Reigne.

To these aboue rehearsed and other fauourers of Wickliffe within this our countrey of Englande we may adde also the Bohemians: for so much as the propagation of the said doctrine of Wickliffe, in that Countrey also take roote, comming from England to Boheme, by thys occasion as in story here followeth.

There chaunced at that time a certayne student of the coutry of Bohemia to be at Oxford,* one of a welthy house and also of a noble stocke. Who returning home from the vniuersitie of Oxford, to the vniuersitie of Prage: caryed with him certayne bookes of Wickliffe, De realibus Vniuersalibus, De ciuili iure, & Diuino: De ecclesia, De questionibus varijs contra clerum &c. It chaunced the same time, a certayne noble man in the Citty of Prage, had founded and builded a great Church of Mathias and Matheus, which Church was called Bethleem: geuing to it great landes, & finding in it two preachers euery day, to preach both holy day and working day to the people. Of the whiche two preachers, this Iohn Hus was one, a man of great knowledge, of a pregnant wit, and excellently fauoured for his worthy life amongst them.* This Iohn Hus hauing familiaritie wyth this yong man, in reading and perusing these bookes of Wickliffe, tooke such pleasure and fruit in reading therof, that not onely he began to defend this author opely in the schooles, but also in his sermons: commending him for a good man, an holy man and heauenly man, wishing himselfe when he should dye, to be there placed, where as the soule of Wickliffe should be. And thus for the spreading of Wickliffes doctrine enough.

And thus much briefly concerning the fauourers & adherentes of Iohn Wickliffe, in generall. Now particularly & in order let vs (by Christes grace) prosecute the stories and persecutions of the said parties aforenamed, as the course of their times shall require, first beginning with the valiant champions wil. Swinderby and Walter Brute.

The history of William Swinderby.

IN the yeare 1389.* William Swinderby priest within the dioces of Lincolne being accused and detected vpon certayn opinions, was presented before Iohn bishop of Lincolne, and examined vpon certayne articles in the Church of Lincolne, after the forme and order of the popes law, according to theyr vsuall rite obserued, his denouncers were these: Fryer Frisby obseruant, Frier Hincely Angustine: & Tho. Blaxton Dominican. The articles wherewith they charged him, although in forme of wordes as they put thē vp, might seeme something straunge here to be recited: yet to the entent that all men may see the spitefull malice of these spider Fryers, in sucking al things to poyson, and in forging that is not true, as in processe (Christ willing) here after shall better appeare by his aunsweres, I thought good here to notifie the same.

Page 465 That men may aske their debtes by charitie, but in no maner for debt to imprison any man: and that he so imprisoning is accursed.

That if parishners do knowe their Curate to be a lechour incontinent, and an euill man: they ought to withdraw from him their tithes, or els they be fautours of his sinnes.

That tithes purely be almose, and in case that Curates be euill men, the same may lawfully be conferred to other men.

That for an euill Curate to curse his suget for withholding of tithes: is nothing els, but to take with extortiō wickedly and vnduely from them theyr money.

That no prelate may curse a man, except he know before that he is cursed of God.

That euery Priest may absolute any sinner being contrite and is bound (notwithstanding the inhibition of the Bishop) to preach the Gospell vnto the people.

That a Priest taking any annuall pension vppon couenant, is in so doing a simoniacke and accursed.

That any priest being in deadly sinne, if he geue himselfe to consecrate the body of the Lord, he committeth idolatry rather then doth consecrate.

That no priest entreth into any house, but to euill intreat the wife, the daughter or mayde. And therefore he admonished the goodman of the house, to take heede what priest he let into his house.

An other conclusion falsly to him objected. That a child is not truely baptised, if the priest that baptiseth, or y^e godfather or godmother be in deadly sinne.

Item, that no man liuing agaynst the law of God is a priest, how euer he were ordeined priest of any Bishop.

These articles or conclusions vntruely collected, were as cruelly exhibited agaynst him by the Fryers in the Byshop of Lincolnes court. The which articles although he neuer preached, taught or at any time defēded, as appereth more in the processe following: yet the Friers with theyr witnesses standing forth against him,* declared him to be conuict: bringing also dry wood with them to the towne to burne him, and would not leaue him, before he made them promise and sweare for feare of death neuer to hold them, teach them, nor preach them priuily, nor apertly vnder payne of relapse: and that he shoulde goe to certayne churches to reuoke the foresayd conclusions, which he neuer affirmed. As first in the Church of Loncolne, then in S. Margarets Church of Leycester. Also in S. Martines Church in Leycester, and in our Ladies churches at Newarke: and in other Parishe Churches also, of Melton Moubray, of Haloughton, Hareburgh, and Lenthburgh. Which pennaunce being to him enioyned, he did obediently accomlishe: with this forme of reuocation, whiche they bound him vnto, vnder these wordes.

The reuocation of William Swinderby whereunto he was forced by the Friers.

I William Swinderby priest, although vnworthy of the dioces of Lincolne, acknowledging one true Catholique, and Apostolique fayth of the holy Church of Rome, doe abiure all heresie and error repugning to the determinatiō of the holy mother church wherof I haue bene hetherto infamed, namely the conclusions and articles aboue prefixed, and euery one of them to me iudicially objected, by the Commissary of the reuerend father in Christ and Lord, L. Iohn by the grace of God Byshop of Lincolne: and do reuoke the same, & euery one of them, some as hereticall, some as erroneous, and false, and do affirme and beleue them to be so, and hereafter will neuer teach, preach, or affirme publicly or priuily the same. Neither will make any sermon within the diocesse of Lincolne, but asking first and obtayning the licence, of the foresayd reuerend father and Lord the Byshop of Lincolne. Contrary to the which if I shall presume hereafter, to say or doe, to holde or preach: I shalbe content to abide the seueritie of the Canon, as I haue iudicially by the necessitie of the lawe, sworne, and doe sweare &c.

Thus haue you the conclusions and articles of thys good man, falsly objected to him by the malicious and lying Fryers: and also the retraction, whereunto they by force compelled him: wherby it may likewise be coniectured, what credite is to be geuen to the articles and conclusions which these caueling Fryers wrasting all thinges to the worst, haue objected and imputed both to Wickliffe & all other of that sort, whō they so falsly do infame, so slannderously doe bely, and so maliciously doe persecute. After these thinges thus done and wrought in the diocesse of Lincolne: it so befell, the sayd W. Swinderby to remoue to the diocesse and countrey of Herford, where, he was as much or more molested by y^e friers again, & by Ioh. Tresnant B. of Herford, as by the processe & story here ensuing set out at large out of their owne registers may appeare.

Here followeth the processe of Iohn Tresnant Bishop of Herford had against the aforesaid William Swinderby in the cause of hereticall prauitie as the popishe heretickes cal it.*

THE glorious name of the prince of peace, and his counsaile (whose counsaillour no man is,* & whose prouidēce in his disposition is neuer deceaued) being inuocated: To all and singuler beleuers of Christ, which shall see or heare this our processe vnderwritten, Iohn by the sub•erance of God B. of Herford: greeting, and peaceable charitie in the Lord. Forasmuch as God the creator of all things, the keper of iustice, the louer of right, and the hater of malice, beholding from the high throne of his prouidence the sonnes of men, now through the fall of their first father, prone and declining to dishonest and filthy & detestable mischifes and to keep vnder their malice (which wicked transgressiō did first gender) hath appoynted diuers presidentes of the world stablished in sundry degrees, by whome and theyr circumspect prouidence, mans audacitie should be restrayned, innocency should be nourished amongst y^e good, & terror should be stricken into y^e wicked not to deceiue: also that their power to hurt, & theyr insolency should be bryddled in all places. And whereas amongst many kindes of cares whiche come to our thoughtes, by the duety of the office committed vnto us, we are specially bound to extend our strēgth, chiefly that the catholicke fayth may prosper in our tymes, and hereticall prauity may be rooted from out of y^e borders of the faythfull: we therefore being excited through the information of many credible and faythfull Christians of our dioces,* to roote out pestiferous plantes, as sheep diseased with an incurable sicknes, going about to infect the whole and sound flocke, are by the care of the shepheard to be remoued from the flock, that is to say, Preachers, or more truly execrable offendours of the new sect, vulgarly called lollardes, which vnder a certayn cloked shew of holynes, running abroad through diuers places of our diocesse, & endeuoring to cut a sunder the Lords vnsowed coat that is to say, to rent the vnity of the holy Church, & of the Catholicke fayth, and also to teare in peeces with their tēpestious blasts y^e power of S. Peter, that is to say, to weaken the strēgth of the ecclesiasticall states and degrees, and the determination of the same holy church, haue wickedly presumed & do presume from day to day to speak, to teach, to mayntayne (and that which is more horrible to be vttered) to preach openly many things hereticall,* blasphemies schismes, and sclaunderous diffaminges, euen quite contrary to the sacred Canons and decrees of the holy fathers so that they knowe not to direct their pathes in the wayes of righteousnes and trueth, in that, y^t they expounde to the people y^e holy scripture, as the letter soundeth, after a Iudiciall sort, otherwise then the holy Ghost will needs haue it: wheras the words wander from their proper significations, and appeare to bryng in by gessing new meanings: whereas the wordes must not be iudged by the sense that they make but by the sense whereby they be made, where as the constructiō is not bound to Donates rules: where as fayth is farre placed from the capacitie of reason: But they labour by their pernicious doctrines & teachings pu• like and priuy,* to boyle out the poysō of schismes betwene the clergie and the people. We to encounter agaynst suche kinde of preachers, nay rather deceauers, and horrible seducers amongst the people, aduauncing and rowzing vp ourselues in Gods behalfe, and holy mother Church, with the spirituall sword, whiche may strike them wisely, and wounde them medicinably, for theyr health and welfare: and namely William Swynderby Priest (so pretending himselfe to be) as a teacher of suche kinde of pernicious doctrine,* and an horrible seducer amongst the people: to whom personally appearing before vs on y^e wednesday to wit, the 14. of the month of Iune, in the parishe Church of Kington of our diocesse, in the yeare of our Lord. 1391. he being vehemently diffamed to vs of heresie, schisme and his peruerse doctrines both manifest and priuy: we therefore haue caused many cases and articles cōcerning the catholicke fayth to be ministred vnto him, that he should answer to the same at a day and place for him meet and conuenient, of his owne choyse and freewill: that is to say, on the Friday, being the last of the same month of Iune, next following assigned to him, at the Church of Bodenham of the same our diocesse. Of whiche cases and articles exhibited vnto vs, by many of Christes faythfull people,* zelous Page 466 followers of the catholike fayth to make information to our office (which cases and articles also were by vs administred, as is before sayd, to the same William Swinderby) the tenor therof followeth, and is thus.

Reuerend father and high Lord, Lord Iohn. by gods sufferance bishop of Hereford: It is lamentably declared to your reuerend fatherhood on the behalf of Christs faythful people your deuout children of your diocesse of Herford that notwithstanding the misbeliefe of very many lollards, which hath to long a time sprong vp here in your diocesse, there is newly come a certayn child of wickednes, named William Swinderby: who by his horrible perswasions & mischieuous endeouours, and also by his open preachings and priuate teachings, doth peruert as much as in him is the whole ecclesiasticall state, and stirreth vp with all hys possible power, schisme betwene the clergy and the people. And that your reuerend fatherhood may be the more fully informed, who and what maner of man the same William Swinderby is: there be proposed and exhibited hereafter to the same your fatherhood on the behalf of the same faithful people of Christ, against the same William Swinderby, ca'ses and articles. Which if the same William shall deny, thē shall the same cases and articles most evidently be prooued against him by credible witnesse worthy of beliefe, & by other lawfull prooffe and evidences to the end that those being proued, the same fatherhood of yours, may do and ordeine therin, as to your pastorall office belongeth.

* In primis, the same William Swinderby pretending himselfe priest, was opēly and publicquely conuicted of certayne articles and conclusions being erroneous, schismaticall, and hereticall, preached by him at diuers places and times before a multitude of faythfull christian people. And the same Articles and conclusions did he by force of lawe reuoke and abiure, some as hereticall, and some as erroneous and false. Aduouching and beleuing them for such, as that from thenceforth he would neuer preach, teach, or affirme openly or priuily any of the same conclusions. And if by preching or aduouching he shoulde presume to doe the contrary: that then he shoulde be subiect to the seuerity of the Canons, accordingly as he did take a corporall oth, iudicially vpon the holy Gospels.

2. Also the conclusions, which by the same William were first openly taught and preached, and afterward abiured & reuoked as is aforesaid: are contained before in the processe of the B. of Lincolne, euen as they be there written worde by worde. And for the cases and articles, they were consequently exhibited by the forenamed faithfull christian people against the said William Swinderby together, with y^e conclusions before sayd, & hereafter written: of which cases and articles, the tenour hereof ensueth.

3. Item, the sayd William, contrary to the former reuocation & abiuratiō, not conuerting to repentance, but peruerterd from ill to worse, and geuen vp to a reprobate sense came into your diocesse, where, he running about in sondry places hath presumed to preach or rather to peruert and to teach of his own rashne many heretical, erroneous, blasphemous, and other slaunderous things contrary and repugnant to the sacred Canons and the determination of y^e holy Catholike Church. What those things were, at what place and what time, it shall hereafter more particularly be declared.

Item, the same William, notwithstanding your commaundementes and admonitions sealed with your seale, & to all the Curates of your diocesse directed: contayning amongst other thinges, y^t no person of what state, degree, or condition soeuer he were, shold presume to preach or to teach or els expound the holy scripture to the people, either in hallowed or prophane places, within your diocesse, with out sufficient authoritie, by any maner of pretence y^t could be sought, as in the same your letters monitorie & of inhibition (the tenor wherof hereafter ensueth) is more largely contained: which letters the same William did receiue into his handes, & did read them word by word in the towne of Monemouth of your diocesse, in y^e yeare of our Lord .1390. so that these your letters and the contentes thereof came to true and vndoubted knowledge of the same William: yet notwithstanding hath the same William presumed in diuers places and times to preach within the same your diocesse, after and agaynst your commaundement aforesayd. The tenour of the same letters before mentioned followeth and is this.*

IOhn by the sufferance of God Bishop of Hereford, to the deane and Chapter of our Church of Hereford, and to all and singuler Abbots, Priors, Prouostes, Deanes rurall, Parsons and Vicars of Monasteries, Prioeres Churches, Colledges and Parishes, and to other hauing cure of soules within the Citty and diocesse of Herford, and to all and euery other being within the same Citty and diocesse. Greeting, grace, and blessing. Forasmuch as the golden laurell of teaching doctorall, is not from aboue indifferently euery mans gift, neyther is the office of preaching graunted, saue to such as are called, and especially by the Church admitted therunto: we doe admonishe and require you all and singuler Clerkes aforesayd, and do straightly enioyne you all in the vertue of holy obedience, that you nor any of you do admitte any man to preach or to teach the Catholique fayth, sauing such as the same office of preaching shall by the authoritie Apostolicall or els your Byshop be specially committed vnto: but that as much as in you shall lye, you doe by worde and deede, labour to let those that woulde attempte the contrary. And you Lordes, Ladyes, Knights, Barons, Esquires,*and all and singular persons, of what estate, degree, preheminance, or condition soeuer ye be, remayning within the city and diocesse of Herford, we doe beseech and exhort in our lord that following the wordes of our sauour, you beware of the leauen of the Phariseis.

Item according to the saying of the Apostle, be not ye caryed away with diuers and straunge doctrines: and that in the meane while (as sayth the Apostle) you be not remoued from the sense of the holy auncient fathers, least that any man by any meanes shold seduce you, but you agreeing together in one minde see that you honor God with one mouth. But if any man to whom that thing is not specially (as is aforesayd) committed, shall attempte to instructe or in this your life to directe you into the Catholicke faith do ye denye to geue them audience, and refuse you to be present at their assembles and shun ye theyr teachings, because they be wicked and peruerse. And as for vs we will not omitte to proceede according to the sacred Canons and preceptes of the holye fathers, agaynst such as doe the contrary. Dated at London in the house of our habitation vnder our seale, the last day saue one of December, in the yeare of our Lorde, 1389. and of our consecration the first.

5. Item, the same William in his preaching to y^e people, on Monday being the first of August, in the yeare of our Lord 1390. in the parishe of Whitney of your diocesse, dyd hold and affirme: That no Prelate of the world of what estate, preheminance or degree so euer he were of, hauing cure & charge of soule, he being in deadly sinne, & hearing y^e confession of any vnder his hand in geuing him absolutiō, doth nothing: As who neither doth lose him frō his sinne, nor in correcting or excōmunicating him for his demerites doth bind him by his sentence,* except y^r prelate shall be free himself from deadly sinne, as S. Peter was, to whom our Lord gaue power to binde and lose.

6. Item y^r same William in many places said & affirmed in the presence of many faythfull christen people, that after the sacramentall wordes vttered by the priest hauing the purpose to consecrate: there is not made the very bodye of Christ in the sacrament of the aulter.

7. Item, that accidencies cannot be in the sacrament of y^e aulter without a subiect:* and that there remayneth materiall bread there to such as be partakers communicant wyth the body of Christ, in the same sacrament.

8. Item, that a priest being in deadly sin, cannot be able by the strength of the sacramentall words, to make the body of Christ, or bring to perfection any other sacrament of the Church, neither yet to minister it to the members of the Church.

9. Item, that all priestes are of like power in all things, notwithstanding that some of them, in this world• are of higher and greater honour, degree, or preheminance.

10. Item, that onely contrition putteth away sinne, if so be that a man shal be duely contrite: and that, all auricular and outward confessiō is superfluous, and not requisite of necessitie to saluation.

11. Item, inferior Curates haue not their power of hynding and losing immediately from the pope or Bishop, but immediately from Christ. And therefore, neither can y^e pope nor bishop, reuoke to themselues such kind of power, whē they see time and place at their lust and pleasure.

12. Item, that the pope cannot graunt such kinde of annuall & yerely pardons, because there shall not be so many yeares to y^e day of iudgement, as are in y^e Popes bulles or pardons containyd. Wherby it followeth that the pardōs are not of such like value as they speake of, & praysed to be.

13. Item, it is not in the popes power to graunt vnto any person penitent, forgeuenes of the punishment or of the faulte.

14. Item, that person y^t geueth his almes to any, whiche in his iudgement is not in necessitie, doth sinne in so geuing it.

15. Item, that it stands not in the power of any Prelate, Page 467 of what religion soeuer he be of, priuately to geue letters for the benefite of his order, neither doth suche benefite graunted, profite them to the saluation of their soule, to whom they be graunted.

16. Item, that the same William vnmindeful of his own saluation, hath many and oftentimes come into a certayn desert wood, called Derualdwood of your diocesse, & there in a certain chappell not hallowed, or rather in a prophane cottage: hath in contempt of the keyes, presumed of hys own rashnes to celebrate, nay rather to prophanate.

17. Item, the same William hath also presumed to doe such thinges in a certayne prophane Chappell being situate in the park of Newton nigh to the town of Leintwarbin of the same your dioces.

Vpon Friday being the last of the month of Iune, in the yeare abouesayd, about 6 of the clocke, in the sayd parishe Church of Bodenhone, hath the sayd William Swinderby personally appeared before vs. And he willing to satisfie the terme to him assigned as before specified, hath read out, word by word before all the multitude of faythfull christian people, many answeres made and placed by the same William (in a certayne paper booke of the sheete folded into foure partes) to the sayd Articles, and the same answers for sufficient hath he really to vs exhibited, aduouching them to be agreeable to the lawe of Christ. Whiche thing beeing done the same William (without any moe with him) dyd departe from our presence, because that we, at the instaunce of certayne noble personages, had promised to the same William free accesse, that is to wit, on that day for the exhibiting of those aunsweres, and also free departing without prefixing of anye terme, or without citation, or els anye other offence or harme in bodye or in goodes.

As for the tenour of the same answers, exhibited vnto thē by the same William, as is before specified: we haue here vnder annexed word for worde, and in the same olde language, vsed at that time, when it was exhibited. And followeth in these wordes.

The protestation of William Swinderby with hys aunsweres to the articles by the promotors, layd agaynst him to the bishop of Herford, taken out of the Registers in the same olde Englishe wherein he wrote it.

*IN the name of God amen. I William Swinderby priest vnworthy, couenting and purposing wholly with all my hart to be a true christian man, with open confessiō knowledging mine owne defaultes and vnwise deedes: making openly this protestation, cleping god to record here before our worshipfull Bishop Iohn, through the sufferance of God Bish. of Herford, with witnesse of all this people: y^t it is not mine intent any thing to say or affirme, to mayntain or to defend that is, contrary to holy writte, agaynst the beliefe of holy church, or that should offend the holy determination of Christes Church, or the true sentences of holy doctors. And if I haue here before through mine vncunning, bene vnordered, or by euill counsaile bene deceiued, or any thing sayd, preached, holden, mayntayned or taught contrary to the law of God: wholly and fully for that tyme for now and euer with ful will I reuoke it and withdraw it, as euerich christen man should: Praying and beseeching •che christen man, to whom this writing shal come to, that gif I ought erre (as God forbid that I do) or euer erred in any poynt, contrary to holy writ, that it be had and holden of them, as for thing nought sayd. And all the trothes that I haue sayd according with the law of God, that they mayntayne them, and stand by them for life or death to Gods worship, as a true Christen man shoulde, submitting me meekely to the correction of our Byshop that here is, or of any other christen man, after Christes lawes and holy writ: in will euer ready to be amended, and with this protestation I say and aunswere to these conclusions and articles that here followen after, the which bene put to me to aunswere to.

*The first is this: that I William of Swinderby pretending (he sayth) my selfe a priest, was iudicially conuented of certain articles, & conclusions of error, false schismatick & heresie, by me in diuers places & tymes preached (he sayth) before multitudes of y^e true christen men: & the s••e articles and cōclusions by need of law reuoked & for sworn some as heresies, and some as erroures and false: & suche I affirmed and veleued them to be. And that none of them from that time forth I should preach, teach, or affirme, openly or priuily, ne that I should make no sermon to the people, ne preache but by lawfull leaue asked and gotten. And if I would presume in doing or affirming the contrary then to the seueritie of the lawe, I should be buxom, as by nede of the law I swore.

To this I say, witnessing God that is in heauen, to my wit and vnderstanding, that I neuer preached, helde, ne taught these conclusions and articles, the whiche falsely of Friers were put vpon me, and of lecherous priestes to the Bishop of Lincolne. For I was ordayned by processe ^{} yet sayd, of theyr law, by the byshop and his commissaryes, so as I graunted them to bring my purgation of 13. priestes of good same. And so I did, with a letter, & 12. scales therby, from the Mayor of Leycester, and from true Burgeses and 30. men to witnes with me, as the Duke of Lancaster knew and heard, the Erle of Darby, and other many great men that were that tyme in the towne, that I neuer sayd them, taught them, ne preached them. But when I should haue made my purgation, there stooden forth fiue friers or moe, that some of them neuer sawe me before, ue heard me, ^{} and three lecherous priestes openly knowne, some liuing in their lechery xx. yeare (men sayden) or more as by their childer was openly known. Some of these they clepinden, denunciations, and some weren cleped comprobations, that weren there falsely forsworne, they suing busily and crying with many an other Frier, with great instaunce to geue the dome, vpō me, to burne me & boughten dry wood before, as men tolden in that towne: & these sleighes, and swearing, and mony geuing, as men faiden, w^t fauor of the bishop (by what law I wor not, but sothly not by Gods law) they sayden they held me as conuicted, and might not haue forth my purgatiō. So as I fully forsooke them, and neuer graunted that I sayd them. Ouer this they made me sweare neuer to hold them, teach them, ne preach them, priuily ne apertly: and that I would go to certayne Churches to reuoke the conclusions that I neuer sayd, in sclaunder of my selfe, by great instance of the Fryers. And so for drede of death and for fleshly counsell that I had, I assented, and so I did. And also they maden me to sweare, that I should not preach (by instance of y^e Fryers) within that diocesse, withouten licence asked & granted, and neuer sithen I did. And now the same conclusions bene rehearsed to me agayne: whether by Fryers counsell I will not deme, God wot, but in slaunder of me it is: and therefore I will answere now (with Gods helpe) to the conclusions. Of the which the first is this.

That men mowen asken theyr debtes by charitie, ^{*} but in no maner for debt to imprison any man: and that he so emprisoning, is accursed.

So I sayd not: but thus I haue sayd, ^{*} and yet say with protestation put before: that who so pursues his brother with malice, prisoneth him cruelly for debt without mercy that fayne would pay it if he might: he sinneth agaynst Christes teaching, estote misericordes, sicut pater vester misericors est.

The second conclusion, ^{*} that false Friers and lecherous priestes putten vpon me was this: that if the parochiens know her Curate to bene a lechour, incontinent, and an euill man: they owen to withdraw from him tithe, and els they bene fautours of his sinnes.

Thus I sayd not but on this wise, ^{*} and yet I say wyth protestation put before: that if it be knowne openly to the people, that persons or Curates come to her benefice by simonie, and liuen in notory fornicatiō, and done not their office & her dueties to her parochiens by good ensample of holy life, in true preaching, liuing & residence, wendyng away frō his cure, occupied insecular office: he owes nought to haue of the parochiens, tithes, ne offrings, ne hemowes not to hold him for her Curate, ny hemowes not to geuen him tithes, left they bene gyltie to GOD of consent and mayntayning of her open sinne. Nemo militans deo, implicat se negotijs secularibus. 1. q. 1. ca. quisquis per pecuniā, & dist. 8 o. ca. Siquis.

The thirde conclusion was this,* that friers and priests putten vpon me, that tithes purely bene almesses: And in case that curates bene euill men, they mowen leefully be geuen to othermen, by temporal Lords, and other temporalties bene done away from men of the Church, actually and openly trespassing.

This I sayd not in these termes,* but thus I saye with protestation made before: that it were medefull and leeful to secular Lordes by way of charitie, and power geuen to him of God, in default of prelates that amend not by gods law, cursed curates that openly misusen the goods of holy church, that ben poore mēs goods and customably agaynst the law of God: the which poore men, Lordes ben holden to maintaine and defend, to take away & withdrawe from such curates, poore mens goods, the which they wrongfully holden in helpe of the poore, and their owne wilful offeringes, and their bodely almes deedes, and geue them to Page 468 such that duely serue God in the Church, and bene needy in vpbearing of the charge that prelates shoulde doe, and done it not. Alter alterius onera portate & sic adimplebitis legem Christi. And as anenste taking away of temporalties I say thus with protestation made before: that it is leefull to Kynges, Princes, Dukes, and Lordes of the worlde to take away fro popes, Cardinals, fro Bishops and prelates, possessions in the Church, theyr temporalties, and theyr almes that they haue geuen them, vppon condition they shoulde serue God the better, when they verely sene that their geuing and their taking bene cōtrary to the lawe of God, to Christes liuing and his Apostles: and namely in that, that they taken vpon them (that shoulde be next followers of Christ and his Apostles in poorenes & meeknes) to be secular Lords: against the teaching of Christ and Saint Peter, Luc. xxii. Reges gentium. Et. 1. Pet. 5. Ne{que} dominantes in clero. And namely when such temporalties maken them the more proud, both in hart and in araye, then they shoulde bene els, more in strife and debate agaynst peace and charitie, and in euill ensample to the world more to be occupied in worldly busines. Omnem sollicitudinem proicientes in eum. And drawes them from the seruice of God, from edifying of Christes Church, in empouering and making lesse the state and the power of kings, princes Dukes, and Lordes that God hath set them in: in wrongfull oppression of commons for vnmightfulnes of realms. For Paule sayth to men of the Church (whose lore, Prelates shoulde souerainly followen) Habentes victum, & vestitum, hiis contenti simus.

*The fourth conclusion is this, that Friers and priests putten vppon me falsely: that an euill Curate cursing hys

Soget for withholding of tithes, is naught els, but to take with extortion wickedly and vnduely mony from thē.

Thus said I not, but thus I said, and yet do with protestation made before:* that an euill Curate cursing his parochiens, vnmighty to pay their tithing, with vengeance without pitty, for his singuler worldly winning agaynst charitie, and not for heed of their soules, there he is holde by his power reasonably to helpe his needy parochiens, and doth nought of the goodes of the Church: wickedly and vnduely he withholdes from them, that which is due to them by the law of God. Dimittite & dimittetur vobis: date, & dabitur vobis: verum mihi vindictam, & ego retribuam, dicit dominus.

*The fift conclusion is this, that Friers and Priestes falsely putten vpon me: that no man may curse anye man, but if he were were him cursed of God, ne the commers w^t him rennen not into sentence of cursing in any maner.

Thus sayd I not, but thus I sayd, and say with protestation put before: * that no man ought to curse any man, but for charitie and with charitie. Omnia vestra cum charitate fiant. And sikerly I say, that no wrongfull cursing of Pope or any Prelate in earth, bindes * anenst God, but when they wrongfully and wittingly cursen men, for that men will not do their singular wil, vnreasonable bidding, with highnes of hart and cruelty (standing pacience and charity in them that they cursen wrongfully) he is blessed of almighty God, and they themselfe bene cursed. Math. 5. Beati eritis cum maledixerint homines. &c. Et in Psalmo: Maledicent illi, et tu benedices Et Augustinus. xi. q. iij chap. illud.

*The sixt conclusion is this, that Fryers and Priestes putten vppon me falsely: that each Priest may assoyle hym that sinneth, contrition had: and notwithstanding forbiddinges of the Bishop, is * holden to preach to the people the Gospell.

Thus I sayd not, but thus I sayd, and yet say with protestation made before: that each true Priest may counsaile sinfull men, that shewen to him her sinnes, after the witte and cunning that God had geuen him, to turne fro sinne to vertuous life. And as touching preaching of the Gospell, I say that no B. owes to let a true priest, that god had geuen grace, witte, and cunning to doe that office: for both Priestes and Deacons, that God had ordeyned Deacons and Priestes, ben holden by power geuē hem of God to preach to the people the Gospell, and namely & somely, popes, bishops, prelates, and curates: For this is due to the people and parochiens, for to haue and aske of hem, and they duely and freely owen to done it: *Math. 5. *The 7. conclusion is this, that Fryers and Priests falsely putten vpō me, that a Priest taking any thing for annuell, through couenaunt: in that, he is schismaticke & cursed.

This sayd I, * neuer in these termes: But thus I sayde, & yet say with protestation put before: that no Priest owes to sell by bargaining and couenaunt, his ghostlye trauaile, ne his masses, ne his prayers, ne Gods worde, ne hallowinges, baptisme, ne confirming, order geuing, for a codinges, for Christ, for housell, or for ennoynting, any worldly mens reward to aske or take for these or for any of there, or for any ghostly thing, he erres and doth simony. Vt patet 1. q. 2. ca. Nullus. Et ex consilio Triburenti. capit. Dictum est. Et Christus in euangelio vendentes, et ementes eiecit de templo. Math. 22.

The viii. * conclusion is this, that Fryers and Priestes putten vnto me falsely, saying that I beleeeue sadly as my tell sayes: that yche priest being in deadly sinne, yet he put him to make Christes body, rather he dos idolatrye then makes it.

Thus sayd I not,* but thus I sayd, and yet saye wyth a protestation put before: that what Priest that puts himselfe presumptuously and vnworthily in deadly sinne, wittingly to minister and to receaue that holy sacramēt, and so records hit cursedly and damnably, he receaues his dome. Qui manducat et bibit indignè, iudicium sibi manducat & bibit 1. Corin. 11.

The ix.* conclusion is this, that Friers & Priestes falsely putten vpon me: that no Priestes entres into any house but euill for to treat the wife, the daughter, or the wenche: and therfore they saydē, that I prayed the people that their husbandes should beware, that they suffer no priest to enter into her house.

And if I had sayd thus,* then I had prayed agaynst my selfe, for I come oft into mens houses: But thus I sayde, and yet I do, praying christen men to beware y^t they nourish nor mayntayne no lecherous Priestes in their sinnes: for there be where (as men well knowne) they ben mayntained in many places, continuing homely w^t her women And ich man there sayne they payne therefore a certaine to the B. almes. Et ideo ait Ysido. 11. q. 4. Qui consentit peccantibus & defendit alium delinquentem, maledictus erit apud deū & homines.

The x.* conclusion is this, that Friers and priestes putten vpon me falsely: that a childe is not verely baptised, if the priest that baptiseth, the godfather, or the godmother, ben in deadly sinne.

God wot in heauen they sayd full false:* but thus I said and yet I say: that the prayers that an euill Priest prayes (liuing in lechery or other deadly sinne) ouer y^r child when it shalbe holowed, ben not acceptable to God as ben the prayers of a good priest. And the better & clenner the priest is, the Godfather, and the godmother: the more graciously God will heare him, if all they bene not greatest nor most rich in this worlde. Vnde gg. xiiij. q. vij. cap. in grauibus. Cum is qui displicet ad intercedendum peccator admittitur, irati animus proculdubio ad deteriora prouocatur.

The xi.* conclusion is this, that Friers and priests putten vpon me falsely: that no man, liuing against the law of God is a priest, how euer he were ordayned Priest of any Byshop.

Certes this is false, for I sayd neuer thus in these termes: but thus I sayd,* and thus I say with a protestation put before, that what euery pope, or Cardinall, Byshop or Priest, or any Prelate of the Church comes to his state or dignitie by Simony, & in simony occupies that office, & holy churches goodes: I say that he is a theefe, and that by the dome of God, and comes but to steale and kill. Iob. 10. Fur non venit nisi vt furetur, & mactet, & pardat. And furthermore I say, that what Pope, Cardinall, Byshop, prelate, or priest, in maner of liuing, or teaching, or lawes making contrary to Christes liuing and hys lawes, or anye other ground put in ruling of the church of Christ, but by Christ & his lawes:* is very Antichrist, aduersary to Iesus Christ and his Apostles. Aliud fundamentum nemo potest ponere, praeter id quod positum est, quod est Christus. Et patet 1. q. 3. c. Si quis Et 1. q. 6. c. Ego autem. Quicun{que}.

But this worshipfull father B. of Hereford, that here is, sayes thus in hys writing: that I William of Swinderby, notwithstanding the foresayd reuocation and abiuration (not setting at hart, but from euill to worse he sayes peruerted so his dioces) he sayes I come running about by diuers places: and by mine own folly he sayes that I haue presinner to preach manye heresies, errors, blasphemies, schismes, and other diffauies, and to holy canons and determinatiō of holy church contrary and repugnant, which where & when within forth more specially it shalbe shewed, that ye be false enformed that I haue presumed in diuers places in your dioces to preach heresies, errors, blasphemies, schismes and other diffames. And syr, all the coutry knowes whether this be sooth or not: for sire I presum Page 469 not, sithen it is the office of a priest, by the law of Christ to preach the Gospell? ne nought I did it for presūption, but for the charge y^t I haue of God by priesthood (if al I be vnworthy) & to y^e worship of God, & helpe of christen soules, freely without gathering of her goods for my preaching. If I erred in this, I will be amended. And sir touching your maundement that ye sendē to me, there was sēt none. And sir I made neuer yet disobediēce vnto you, ne to your ministers: & yef all I had, me owes more to obeyche to God thou to you, in that that ye bidden contrary to Christes bid ding. And sir as ye sayne, that I had no minde of my hele, it is to lightly demet: for God forbid, but yef there lye hele more then in your bidding. For God w^t for hele I did it, of mine and of the people, and that was in any minde. But sir it semes me that ye charge not by euidence of the punishing so greatly the breaking of Gods hests, as ye done of your own. And sir if it be your wil, in default that the people wanted, you to teache hem (and her curates did not) by the desire of the people that weren hungry and thirsty after gods word, ichone to beare vp others charge as gods law bids: I preached, not for disobedience to you, but sir in fulfilling of y^c obediēce that Gods law bids me do in excusing of my selfe to you of that ye blame me of, in opē shewing to holy Church, with y^p protestation that I first made, I aunswere thus to the Articles that ye haue put to me.

The first is this, that I William of Swinderby, the Monday the first of August, the yeare of our Lorde. 1390. preaching to the people in the Church of Whitney of your Dioces, held and affirmed (as ye sayne) that no Prelate of the world, of what state or degree that he be, hauing cure of soules, being in deadly sinne, and hearing confession of his suget,* does nought in assoyling him, ne he assoiles him not of his sinne: and also in amending his suget opēly sinning and him for his desertes cursing, his sentence byndes nor, but if that Prelate be as cleane out of deadly sinne as was S. Peter, to whom our Lord gaue power of binding and vnbinding.

I neuer thought this ne spake this, ne heard it to the time that I saw it written in our booke, and that will witnes the Lord of the towne that has the same sermon written, and many gentiles and other that heardē me that day: But thus I said, and thus I say with protestation put before: that there is no man, Pope, ne bishop, prelate ne Curate, that bindes soothly, verily and ghostly, but in as much as his binding or vnbinding accordes with the keyes of heauen that God gaue to Peter. And as S. Gregory saies that power han they only, that hold together the ensample of the apostles with heere teaching. Illi soli in hac carne positiligandi atque soluendi potestatem habent,*sicut sancti Apostoli qui eorum exempla simul cum doctrina tenent: gg. li. quarto sententiarum.

The second article that is put vpon me, is this, that I should haue sayd, preached, & affirmed in many places before many true men of Christ: that after the Sacramentall wordes sayd of the priest, hauing entention of consecratiō: That in the Sacrament of Gods body, is not very Gods body.

*This sayd I neuer God wote, and true men that haue heard me.

*The third article is this, that our bishop puts vpō me, that I should haue sayd in many places, and affirmed, that accidents mow not be in the sacrament of the aultar without subiect, and y^t material bread leues not therwith Gods body in the sacrament.

This conclusion I haue not holdē, ne taught, ne preached: for I haue not medled me of that matter, my wit suffiseth not thereto. But here I tell my beliefe with protestation put before: that the Sacrament of the aultar made by vertue of heauenly wordes, that Christ himselfe sayd in the Cene, when he made this sacrament, that it is bread & christes bodye, so as Christ himselfe sayes in the Gospell, & S. Paul sayes, and as Doctors in the common law haue determined to this sentēce. Math. 26. Mar. 14. Lu. 22. Pa. 1. Cor. 10. & 11. de con. distinct. 2. panis: & de consecra. dist. 2. Corpus. Iohn. 6 verus panis.

*The 4. article is this, that our Bishop accuseth me of, that I should haue preached about and sayd: that a Priest being in deadly sinne, may not by the strength of the Sacramentall words make gods body, or none other Sacrament of the Church, either performe to minister them to members of the same.

*Thus I neuer said, thought it, preached it, ne taught it for well I wot, the wickednesse of a Priest may appaire no very sacrament: but the wickednes of the Priest appayres himselfen, and all that boldnes & example of his sinne causen the people to liuen the worse agaynst Gods law. Vnde Greg. Et si sacerdos in peccatis fuerit, totus populus ad peccandum conuertitur.

The 5.* article is this, that our bishop puts vnto me: y^t all priestes ben of euē power in all things, not withstāding that some of this world bene of higher dignity or more passing in highnes of degree.

Certes no man would say thus as I suppose,* no more did I, ne neuer heard it that I wot of: But this I say with protestation made before, that what Priest liues most holily next following the law of God, he is most loue of God, and most profitable to the Church. If men speakē of world ly power and Lordships and worships, with other vices that raigen therin, what Priest that desires and has most hereof (in what degree so he be) he is most Antichrist of all the priestes that ben in earth.*Vnde Augustinus ad Valerium scribens ait. Nihil est in hac vita, & maximè hoc tempore facilius & leuius, & hominibus acceptabilius, Episcopi, praēsbiteri aut decani officijs: sed si profunctoriè aut adulatoriè, nihil apud Deum miserabilius aut tristius & damnabilius.

The sixt Article is this,* that onely contrition does away sinne, if a man be duely contrite: and all outward cōfession by word is superfluous and not requiēt of need of health.

This conclusiō said I neuer that I know of.* But thus I say with protestation put before, that veray contrition of hart,* that is neuer without charity and grace: dos away al sinnes before done of that man that is verely contrite. And all true confessiō made by mouth outward to a wise priest, and a good, profiteth much to man, and it is needfull & helping that men shew their life to such,* trusting full to gods mercy, and that he forgeues thy sinne. Vnde August. de conse. distict. 4. Nemo tollit peccata mundi nisi solus Christus qui est agnus, tollens peccata mundi.

The 7. article is this,* that I should say that lower curates haue not here power of binding & assoiling, by mean of pope and bishop, but of Christ without mony. And ther fore neither pope ne bishop may reuoke such maner power for time and place at her will.*

Thus sayd I not, but * not for thy it seemes me thus, that no man should graunt any thing after his owne will, ghostly, ne bodily. But euerich man should be wel aduiser, that he graunt nothing but if it be the will of God that he so graunt it. And it is no doubt that ne God grauntes* by meane persons, as does Antichrist to torment Christes people. Vnde & Ioh. 19. ait Pilatus Nessis quia potestatem habeo dimittere te Et Christus. Non haberes potestatem aduersum me vllam, nisi esset tibi datum desuper.

The 8. article that our bishop puts me to,* is this: that I should say that the pope may not graūt such maner indulgence of yeres, for there shall not be so many yeres vnto y^r day of doome, as hene contained in his buls, or in y^e Popes indulgences: wherof it folowes that indulgences bene not so much worth as they semen and bene preached.

This article I sayd not thus:* but I say that the Pope may graunt indulgences written in his letter of yeres, all so farre forth that he may graunt him in Gods law, so farre to graunt, and farther not: yeres may he graunt no moe then God hath set.* Yf indulgence ben forgeuenes of sinne, I wot wel all onely God forgeues sinne. Yf it be releasing of paines in Purgatory ordeiner of God, if God haue bidden him release so many, or ordeined that be should release so many, he may then release him: if it be in his own disposing to release whom him likes, & how much, then he may destroy Purgatory and let none come there and release his owne payne, as charity wottes. So it semes he may be liker to be saued, if himselfe list. If any go to Purgatory, thē it semes he full fayles charitye. If Bulles bene the indulgence that men bringen from the Court, then ben they not so much worth, as they costen there: for lightly they might be lost, drenched, or brend, or a rat might eatē them: his indulgence then were lost. Therefore sir haue me excuser, I know not these termes: teach me these termes by Goddes law, and truely I will learne hem.

The 9. Article is this that I should haue sayde:* that it is not in the popes power to graūt to any man (doing penance) remission from payne, ne from blame.

Leude I am, but this Article sayd I not thus leudly: But thus I say,* that sithen it is onely due to God to geue and to graunt plenary remission from paines & frō blame: that what euer he be, Pope or other, that presumptuously mistakes vpō him that power that is onely due to God: in that (in as much as in him is) he makes himselfe Christ, & blasphemeth in God, as Lucifer did, when he sayd: Ascendam & ero similis altissimo. Farther I say, if the Pope holde men of armes, in mainteining his temporalties & Lordship to venge him on hem that gilten & offenden him, and Page 470 geues remissiō to fight & to slay hem that contraryen hem,* as men sayden he did by the bishop of Norwich, not putting his swerd into his sheath, as God commaunded Peter. Mitte. &c. he is Antichristus, for he dos contrary to the commaundements of Iesus, that bad Peter forgeue to his brother seuēty sithe seuen sithe. Si peccauerit in me frater meus, quotiens demittam ei? Septies? &c. Et Christus: non dico tibi septies, sed septuagesies septies.

*The 10. Article is this, that our Bishoppe puts to me that I should haue sayd: that a man geuing his almes to any man after his dome (not hauing neede) sinnes, in so geuing,

This article sothly I sayd not in these termes: But of this matter I haue spoken, & will with protestation made before on this wise: that it is medefull to geue almes to ich man that asketh it bodely or ghostly, but not to geue to ich shameles begger, strong & mighty of body, to get his lifeloode leuefull & will not, in what degree so he be, men owē not to geue it to such a one, that he vnreasonably asketh, for if he geue it to him wittingly, he sins as fautor of his idlenes. Vnde Sap. 12. Si benefeceris, scito cui benefeceris, & erit gloria in bonis tuis multa.

The 11. Article is this, that is put to me, that I shoulde haue sayd, that it is not in y^e power of any prelate of what euer priuate Religion, to graunt letters of the good deeds of her order, ne such benefices graunted profits not to hele of soules to hem that they ben graunted to.

I said neuer thus i[•]•hese termes: but thus I say with protestation, that prelates of priuate religion mowē graūt letters of the good deedes of her order: But the gostly mede that comes of good deedes,* they mow not graunt, for that is onely propriēt to God. And if they blinde, the people in misbeliefe for her worldlye winning, wittingly behetting hem of her owne graūt gostly medes in heauen by her letters and her seale (vncertaine, who shall be damned) but make the people bolder to sinne by trust of her praier: hit is none heal to the soules, but harmes to that one & to that other. For God shall yeld to echone after here werkes. Ipse reddet vnicuique secundum opera sua•

The 12. Article is this: that our Bishops puts to me, that I mony times and oft haue come (he sayes) to a desert woode, cleped Derwaldswode of his dioces: and there in a Chappell not hallowed, but accurset*shepherds hulke, by mine own folly he sayes haue presumed to sing (but rather to curse) in contempt of the keyes.*

Hereto I say, that this is falsly put vpō me of hem that told you this.* For it is a chappell where a priest sings certaine dayes in the yeaere, with great solemnity: and certes I neuer song therein seth I was borne into this world.

The 13. Article is this, that I should also presume to sing in an vnhallowet Chappell, that stondes in the parke of Newton, besides the town of Leyntwardy of this same Dioces.

Truely I wot not where the place stondes.

*The 14. Article is this, that I should say that no man owes to sweare for any thing, but simply withoutē oth to affirme or to deny, and if he sweare he sinnes.

This article sayd I not that I haue minde of, in thys maner: But oft I haue sayd and yet will, that men should not sweare by any creature by the law of God, and that no man should sweare in idel, as wel nigh al the people vseth, & therefore me thinkes it is no neede to comfort the people in swearing. For from the olde vnto the young, & namely men of holy Church, breken his hest, and few Bishoppes pursuen hem therfore.

*The 15. Article is this, that I shoulde haue taught to true men of Christ, that on no maner they should worship the Image of him that was done on the crosse, or the Image of the blessed mayd his mother, or of other Sayntes into honor and worship of the same ordeinet in the minde of them. And oft sithes, the worshipper of such Image, he has reprouet, saying and strongly affirming, that Church men sinnen and done Idolatry.

This conclusion haue I not sayd in these termes. But this I say with protestation.* that God commaūdes in his law in diuers places. Exod. 20. Leuit. 19. & 26. Deut. 5. & 7. Tobiae 1. Baruc. 6.2. ad Corin. 10. Esay. 45. Iere. 2.6.8. & 10.22. & vltimo,Sapient. 13. & 14. & 15. Mac. 5. & Threnorum 4. & postremo: that men should not worshippē grauen Images that ben werkes of mens handes: And also he bids that mē should not make to hem grauen Images in likenesse of the thinges that bene in heauen, to that end to worshippen hem: sethen neither God ne Christ by his manhood gaue neuer commaundement to make thes Images, ne expresse counsell, ne his Apostles in all his law, ne to worship such that bene made. But wel I wote, that by mens owne relation that haue misbeleuet in hem, that many mē sinnen in manmetry worshipping such dead Images. Notforthy, to tho men bene Images good to whom they bene but kalēdars, and through the sight of hem they knowen the better and worshippen oft God and his Saints. And to such mē they done harme that settē her hope and trust in hem or done any worship to hem agaynst Gods law & his hest. Vnde ait Gregorius in Registro libro. 10. in Epistola ad Serenum Episcopum. Si quis imagines facere voluerit,*minimè prohibe: adorare omnino prohibe. Sed hoc sollicitè fraternitas tua admoneat, vt ex visione rei gestae, ardorem compunctionis percipiant, vt in adoratione totius trinitatis prosternantur.

These conclusions, poyntes, and articles that I haue vnder protestation, in this booke affirmed: I will stand by hem, and maintayne hem (with the grace of almighty god) to the time that the cōtrary be prouet dewly by Gods law: And this protestation I make for my fayth and my beliefe as I did the beginning: that whensoever this worshipfull or any other Christē man shewes me verayly by gods law the contrary of this, I will holy forsake hem, and take me to the veray trouth and better vnderstanding of wiser men, redy to be amended by the law of Iesu Christ, and be a true Christen man & faythfull sonne of holy church: And of these I beseech you all bere witnes where ye commen.

Subsequenter vero,*quia fide dignorum relatione recepimus, quod idem Gulielmus Swinderby latitabat, quo minus posset in propria person a citari, ipsum Gulielmum vijs & modis per Edictum publicum ad instar albi praetoris in Ecclesia nostra cathedrali Herfordensi & parochialibus ecclesijs de Kington Croste, & Whitney nostrae diocesis: vbi idem Gulielmus solebat commorari citari fecimus, prout & quemadmodum in modo citatorio continetur, cuius tenor sequitur in haec verba.

The Citation.

IOhn by Gods permission Byshop of Hereford, to his deare sons our Deane of Leamster,* to the persons of Croft, Almaly, and Whitney, and also to the Vicars of Kingston, Iardersley, Wiggemore, and Monmouth Clifford, and of S. Iohns aultar in our cathe|drall Church of Hereford, and to the rest of the Deanes, Parsons, Vicars, Chapleines, parish Priestes, and to other, whosoeuer in any place are appoynted through our city and dioces of Hereford: sendeth greeting, grace, and benediction.

We bid and commaund, charging you straitly, in the vertue of holy obedience, that you cite or cause to be cited peremptorily (and vnder the payne of excommunication) William Swinderby, pretending himselfe to be a Priest: That he appeare before vs, or our Commissaryes the 20. day of this present moneth of Iuly, at North Lodebury, within our dioces, which the continuance of the dayes following in other places also to be assigned vnto him if it be expedient, till such thinges as haue bene and shall be layde agaynst him be fully discussed, to aunswere more at large to certayne positions and articles, touching the Catholicke fayth, and the holy mother Churches determination, that haue bene exhibited and ministred vnto the sayd William. And to see and heare also many thinges that haue openly in indgement before vs and a great number of faythfull Christians by him bene euen in writing confessed, to be condemned as hereticall, false, schismaticall and erroneous. And to see and heare positions and Articles denied by the sayd William, to be proued by faythfull witnesses and other lawfull trials against the sayd William. And to receiue for his false hereticall, erroneous and schismaticall doctrine that iustice shall appoynt, or els to shew causes why the premisses shoulde not bee done.

And if the sayd William lieth priuely, or els cannot be so cited in his proper person: we will that in your Churches when most people shall then come together to diuine seruice, you opely with a loud voyce, and that may be vnderstanded, cause the said William peremptorely to be cited vnto the premisses: certifying the same William, that whether he shall appeare the day and place appointed or no, we notwithstanding will proceed vnto the premisses agaynst the sayd William according to the canonically decrees by forme of law, in the absence or contumacy of the sayde William notwithstanding. We will moreouer if the sayd William shall appeare at the sayd day and place as is aforesayde before vs, frendly heare him, and honestly, and fauorably, as farre as we may with Gods leaue, deale with him: graunting free licence to come and to go for his naturall liberty without any hurt either in body or goods. And see that you fully certify vs of the thinges that you or any of you shall do about the execution of this our commaundement, and that by your letters patentes signed with your seale autenticall: geuing also faythsully to the sayde William or to his lawfull Proctor, if he require it, a cōpye of this our present commaundement.

Geuen at our house of Whitburne vnder our seale the fift day of the moneth of Iuly, in the yeare of our Lord. 1391.

The act of the first day.

On Thursday, the xx. of Iuly, in y^t yeare of the Lord aforesaid: * We in the parish church of North Lidebury afore sayd, about 6, of the clocke, sitting in iudgement, after that it was reported vnto vs how the foresayd Williā was personally taken and lawfully cited: Caused the sayd William then and there openly in iudgement to be called out, * to do, heare and receiue such thinges, wherto he was afore cited, & to do otherwise that which iustice should perswade. And the sayd William appeared neither by himselfe, nor by proctor: but onely by a seruau^t (whose name we know not) he sent a certayn schedule of paper, made like an indenture vnto vs to excuse him. After which schedule sene, read and with ripe deliberatiō wayed, and in any wise notwithstanding we adiudged the sayd William, after he was oftē called, & long euen to the due hour taried for, & by no meanes appering: worthely for his obstinacy, & for his stubberⁿnes assigned vnto him the

29. day of Iuly in the Church of Ponsley, to appeare before vs with the foresayd sauegard, to aunswere more fully to suche articles, and otherwise to heare, receiue, and do as before is noted.

The second dayes act.

*Upon Saturday being the 29. of Iuly, and in the yeare of the Lord aforesayd, we Iohn by Gods permission y^e fore remembred Bishop in the Church of Pontesbury, of our Dioces, at sixe of the clock, or there about, sitting in iudgement: made the sayd Williā of Swinderby to be opēly called, that (as was to him appointed aud assigned) he should appere before vs, to answere to the foresayd articles more fully and to declare the sayd articles as the darknes of his aunsweres did worthely require. And that the sayd William being called, & long for a due time looked for, did make no meanes to appere: and so we pronounced him to be obstinate, and for his obstinatnes (to ouercome his malice, & of our exceeding fauor) thought good to appoynt and dyd appoynt the 8. of August, thē next following, at Cleobury Mortemere of the same our dioces, vnto the sayd William for the same thing.

The third dayes act.

Upon Tewsdays, *the 8. of August, the yeare aforesayd, I Iohn by Gods permission Bishop of Hereford aforesayd, in the Church of Cleobury Mor•emere, about 6. of the clocke, sitting in iudgement, caused the foresayd Williā Swinderby, to be called many times openly to do and receiue about the premisses, according to the appoyntment of the same day that iustice should aduise, which William did not appeare at all. Wherupō, we after that the sayd Williā was called, and often proclaymed, and long looked for but not appering at all, did iudge him worthely (as of right ap'pertainēd) obstinate: and for his obstinatnes, assigned him the 16. day of the same moneth of August next folowing, in the parish Church of Whithorne of the same our dioces, to bring forth, or to see brought forth, all lawes, muniments, and other kinds of proofes, & to see also witnesses brought forth, admitted and sworne, by whom and which thinges we intend to proue the foresayde articles, or at least wyse some of the same.

The fourth dayes act.

*Upō wednesday the 16. day of the moneth of august the yeare aforesaid we Iohn y^e bishop in the parish Church of Whithorn aforesayd of our dioces, sitting in iudgement, caused the sayd William Swinderby often times to be called, who (as is aforesayd) appeared not at all: *whom after that hee was so called, proclaymed & long looked for, & yet by no means appering, we pronōced to be obstinate. We receiued also by certayne faithfull Christians, and zealous men for the catholicke fayth of our dioces a certayne proces made and had at an other time agaynst the same William, before y^e reuerend father in God and Lord, Lord Iohn by the grace of God, Bishop of Lincolne confirmed by the hanging on of the seale of the same reuerend father, y^e Lord Bishop of Lincolne. The tenor wherof word for word is contayned before. And these faythfull Christians moreouer agaynst the obstinatenes of the sayd William Swynderby brought forth discreet mē, M. William Leuiet, parson of the parish Churche of Kyuers•y, and also Edmunde Waterdon parish Chaplaine of the Chappell of N. & Roger Newton, and Hugh Sheppert, lay men of the dioces of Lincolne, asking instantly that they might be receiued for witnesses, to proue some of the foresayd articles who agaynst the obstinatenes of the sayd William Swinderby we thought good to receiue and did receiue, and their othes to the holy Gospels of God being layd handes on corporally in our hand. And did diligētly •ramine them in proper person seuerally in forme or law: whose sayinges & depositions are afterward brought in, & at the instance of the same faythfull Christians, we assigned the second day of Septēber then next folowing, to the sayd William Swinderby, to say and alledge agaynst the sayd proces: witnesses, and their sayinges, in the sayd Church of Whythorne: decreeing, that a copy should be made for him of these thinges that were brought forth, and of the depositions of the witnesses.

Here we fayle in our copy, till the Register come to our handes agayne.

by the dore, but wendith vpon an other halfe, he is a night theefe and a day theefe. And there he relieth how he that •ieth from theyr flock, is not the shepheard but an hired mā, and it pertayneth not to him of the sheepe.

☞ To the second conclusion that he saien is errour or heresy,* that toucheth taking away of the temporalties and of Lordships of priests that bene euill liuers.

I say me seemeth that the conclusion is true,* & is thys: that it were medefull and leefull to secular Lords by way of charity, and by power geuen to them of God, in default of Prelates that amend naught by Gods law: cursed Curates that openly misuse the goodes of the holye Church, that ben poore mens goods: and customably ayens the law of God, (the which poore men, Lords ben holden to mayntayne and defend) to take away and to draw from such curates, poore mens goodes in helpe of the poore, and theyr owne wilfull offeringes, and theyr bodely almose deedes of worldly goodes, and geue them to such as duely seruen God in the Church: and bene ready in vpbearing of the charge that prelats shoulde do and done it not. And as anences taking away of temporalties:* I say thus, that it is leefull to Kinges, to Princes, to Dukes, and to Lords of the world to take away from Popes, from Cardinals, frō Bishops, Prelates, and possessioners in the Church, theyr temporalties, and theyr almes that they haue geuē thē vpon conditiō, that they shoulde serue God the better: whē they verely seen that theyr geuing & taking bene cōtrary to the law of God, contrary to Christes liuing, and his Apostles, and namely in that that they takē vpon thē, that they shouldē be next folowers of Christ & his apostles, in poorenes and meeknes, to be secular Lords against the teaching of Christ and of S. Peter. Truely me semeth that all Christen men, and namely Priestes shoulde take keepe, that their doing were according with the law of god, either the old law either the new. The Priestes of the olde law wern forbidden, to haue Lordshippes among theyr brethren, for God sayd, that he would be theyr part and theyr heritage. And Christ that was the highest Priest of the new Testament forsooke worldly Lordship, and was here in fourme of a seruaunt, and forbad his Priestes such Lordships, and sayd, Reges gentium dominantur eorum. &c. vos autem non sic. That is. The kinges of the heathen, beare dominion and rule. &c. But you shall not do so. And as Saynt Peter sayeth. Neque dominantes in clero &c. Not bearing rule and dominion ouer the Clergy. &c. So it seemeth me: that it is agaynst both lawes of God, that they haue such Lordships, and that theyr title to such lordships is not ful good: And so it seemeth me, that zif they bene thereto of euill lining, it is no great perill to take away from them, suche Lordships but rather medefull, if the taking away were in charity, and not for singular couetousnesse ne wrath. And I suppose that if friers,* that be bounden to theyr fōunders, to liue in pouerty, would break theyr rule and take worldly Lordships: might not men lawfully take from thē suche Lordships, and make them to liue in pouerty as theyr rule would?

And forsooth it seemeth me, that Priestes oughten also well to keepe Christes rule, as Friers owne to keepe the rule of theyr founder. Ieremy witnesseth, how God cōmended Rachabs children, for they would not break theyr faders bidding in drinking of wine. And yet Ieremy profered thē wine to drinke. And so I trow, that God would commend his Priestes, if they woulden forsake worldlye Lordships, and holden them a payd with lifelot, and with clothing: and busy them fast about theyr heritage of heauē. And God sayth. Numeri. 18. In terra eorum nihil possidebitis, nec tenebitis partē inter eos: Ego pars & haereditas vestra in me dio filiorum Israel. &c. Et Deut. 18. Non habebitis sacerdotes & Leuitae & omnes qui de eadem tribu estis, partem & haereditatem cum reliquo Israel, quia Sacrificia Domini & oblationes eius cō•dent, & nihil accipient de possessione fratrum suorum. Dominus enim •ipse hereditas ipsorum, sicut locutus est illis. Et Lucae 14. Sic ergo omnis ex vobis, qui non renunciauerit omnibus Page 472 quae possidet, non potest meus esse discipulus. Et Ieronimus in Epistola. 34. Et Bernardus libro. 20. ad. Eugeneum Papam. Et Hugo de Sacramentis, parte. 2. libri Secundi. cap. 7. Et 12. q. pri cap duo sunt: Et ca. clericus. Et Bernardus in Sermonē de Apostolis, super illud. Ecce nos reliquimus omnia. Et Chrisost super Math. & vetus Testamentum. That is, You shall haue no inheritaunce in theyr lād, nor haue no part amōgst them: I wil be your part and inheritaunce amongst the children of Israell. &c. Deut. 18. The Priestes and Leuites, and all that be of the same tribe shall haue no part nor inheritance with the rest of Israell: because they shall eate the sacrifices of the Lord and his oblatiōs, and they shall take nothing of the possession of theyr brethren. The Lord himselfe is their possessiō, as he spake vnto them. And the 14. chap. of Luke: Euen so euery one of you, which forsaketh not all that he possesseth, cannot be my disciple. And Ierome in his 14. Epistle hath the like wordes. And Bernard in his 20 booke to Eugenius the Pope. And also Hugo in his booke De Sacramentis, the second part of his secōd booke the 7. chap. Also in the 12. q. first. chap Duo sunt, and in the chap. Clericus. And agayn, Bernard in his booke De sermone de Apostolis, vpon thys place: Ecce nos reliquimus omnia. Behold we leaue all. &c. & Chrisostome vpon the Gospell of S. Math. &c.

*☞ The third conclusion toucheth the matter of preaching of Priestes, withouten leaue of Bishops, and is this that such true Priestes may counsel sinnefull men: that shewen to them their sinnes, after the wit and cunning that God hath geuen, to turne hem from sinne to vertuous life, & as touching preaching of the Gospell.

I say, that no Bishop oweth to let a true Priest, that God hath giffen grace,* wit and cunning to do that office. For both Priestes and Deacons that God hath ordeyned Deacons or Priests, bene holden by power geuen to them of God, to preach to the people the Gospell: and namely, & souerely Popes, Bishops, Prelates and Curates: for this is due to the people and the parishners, to haue it and aske it. And hereto seemeth me, that Christ said generally to his Disciples: Ite & praedicate Euangelium omni creaturae, Goe and preach the Gospell to all creatures, as well as he sayd Ite & baptizate omnes gentes, Goe and baptise all nations, that also as well longeth preaching to Priestes without leaue of a Bishop as doth baptising:* and then why may he not preach Gods word withouten a Bishops leaue. And sithen Christ bod his Priestes preach, who should forbidden them preaching? The Apostles were forbidden of a bishop at Ierusalem to speake more of the name of Iesus, but Peter sayd: Si iustum est in conspectu Dei, vos potiùs audire quàm Dominum iudicate. That is. Whether it be iust in the sight of God to heare and obey you before the Lord: be your selues Iudges. A Bishop may not let a Priest of geuing bodily almes in his Dioces: much more may he not let the doing of spiritual almes in his dioces by gods law. A Priest may say his Mattines withouten the Byshops leaue: for the Pope that is aboue the Bishop, hath charged Priestes therewith: And me thinketh that Christes bidding should be all so much of charge as the Popes. And Beda vpon this place. Messis quidem multa: the haruest is great. Also Isidorus, De summo bono. cap. 44. And Gregorius in the Canon dist. 43. And Augustine vpon this place. Homo quidam peregrinus. A certayne traoueller.

☞ The fourth conclusion toucheth the Sacrament of the aaltar, and is this.

That wholly I beleue that the Sacramēt of the aaltar made by vertue of heauenly words, is bread and Christes body, so as Christ himselfe sayth in the Gospell and as S. Paule sayth, and as Doctors in the common law haue determined: To this sentence Iohn. 6. Moses hath not geuē you bread from heauen, but my father will geue you bread from heauen. He is the true bread that came downe from heauen and geueth life vnto the world. My father geueth vnto you bread in deed: the very true bread of God is that, which came downe from heauen and geueth life vnto the world. I am the bread of life: The bread which I wil geue is my flesh. And in the Canon of the Masse Panem sanctum vitae aeternae: the holy bread of life. And Corinth. the 10. cap. and first Epistle. The bread which we breake, is it not the communicating of the body of the Lord? Let a man proue himselfe and so eat of that bread. &c. And Canon De consecratione distinction. 2. Under the authority of Hilarius the Pope: Corpus Christi quod sumitur de altari &c. And Augustine in the foresayd distinctiō. That which is sene, is bread &c. That which fayth requireth, is bread and is the body of Christ. And in the foresayd distinction. cap. Omnia quaecunque &c. By these two sentēces it is manifestly declared, that that bread & this, bee not two but one bread and one flesh. Note the woordes for that he sayth, the breade and fleshe. And the author, De diuinis officijs, and also Augustine in his booke De remedijs poenitentiae: why preparest thou thy teeth &c. And Ambrose, De Sacramentis: de consecratione: distinct. 2. Reuera mirabile est. &c. This meat which you receiue, & this bread of one which descended from heauen: doth minister the substaunce of eternall life, and whosoever shall eate the same shall not dye euerlastingly, and is the body of Christ. Note how he sayth and is the body of Christ.

☞ The 5. article telleth of forgeuenesse of sinnes & is this.* That very contrition withouten charity and grace, do away all sinnes before done of that man, that is verely contrite, and all true confession made by mouth outward to a wise Priest and a good, profiteth much to a man and it is needfull and helping, that men shew theyr life to such, trusting fully to Gods mercy,* that he forgeueth the sinne.

And herto I say, that there bene 2. remissiōs of sinnes: one that longeth onely to God: And that remission is the clensing of the soule from sinne. And the other remission, a certifying that one man certieth an other, that his sinnes bene forgeuen of God, if he be sory with all his hart for thē: and is in full wil to leaue them for euer: and this maner of forgeuenes longeth to Priests.* Of the first maner of forgiuenesse. Dauid sayth: And I sayd I will confesse my vnrighteousnes vnto the Lord, & thou forgauest me my misdeed. And Zachary sayth. And thou O childe shalt be called the Prophet of the highest. &c. To geue knowledge of saluation vnto his people for the remission of theyr sinnes, by the bowels of Gods mercy. And Iohn Baptist. Behold the lamb of God that taketh away the sinnes of the world. And S. Iohn the Euangelist sayth in his Epistle: If we confesse our sinnes, he is faythfull & iust to forgeue vs our sinnes and clense vs from al our iniquity. And it foloweth. If any man sinne, we haue an aduocate with the father, euen Iesus Christ and he it is that is the propitiatiō for our sinnes. And of the other remissiō of sinnes Christ speaketh in the Gospell, and sayth. Whose sinnes ye forgeue, they shalbe forgeuen.* And mans forgeuenes auayleth litle, but zif God forgeue our sinnes through his grace.

☞ The 6. conclusion teacheth indulgences and pardons, that the Pope graunteth in his Buls, and men callen it an absolution A poena & a culpa.*

Of this maner of speach I cannot finde in the Gospel, ne in no place of holy write,* ne I haue not read that Chryst vsed this maner of remission, ne none of his Apostles. But as me semeth, if the pope had such a power sithē the paines after a mās death bene much greater thē any bodily paines of the world: me thinketh he should of charity keep mē out of such paynes, and then men needed not to finde so many vicious Priests after theyr life, to bring theyr soules out of Purgatory. An other thing me thinketh, that sithe the popes power ne may not keep vs in this world fro bodely paynes as from cold, from hunger, from dread, frō sorow, and other such paynes, how should his power help vs frō spirituall paynes, when we bene dead? But for that no mā commeth after his death to tell vs the sooth in what payne they bene, men mow tell thereof what him lust. S. Iohn sayth in his Apocalips, that he sawe vnder the aultar, the soules of them which were slaine for the word of God, and for the testimony which they had. And they did cry with a loud voice, saying: how long Lord holy and true, doest not thou reuenge our bloud of them which dwel on the earth. And white stoles were geuē to euery of thē,* to rest a while, till the number of theyr felow seruaunts & brethren should be fulfilled, which also remayned to be slayne as they were. &c. Here semeth it, that these soules were not assoiled a poena, that is from payne: for theyr desire is not fulfillen. And they were bidden abide a while, and that is a payne. And if Martyrs were not assoyled from payne, it is hard for any mā to to say, y^t he assoyleth other mē a poena. Also good mēs soules haue not but spirituall blisse, and they want bodely Page 473 blysse, vntill their resurrection in the day of dome.* And after they desiren to haue that blysse, and abiden it, and that is paine to them. And I cānot see that y^r Pope hath power to bring him from this paine. But if any man can shew me, that he hath such a power graunted in the troth of holy write, I will gladly leefen it.

☞ The vii. point speaketh of the Pope and is this: Sith it is onely due to God, as I haue syd before, to geue & to graunt plener remissiō, from paine, and from blame: that whatsoever he bee Pope or other that presūptuously mistaketh vpon him the power that onely is due to God, in that,* in as much as in him is, he maketh him selfe euen w^t Christ, & blasphemeth God, as Lucifer did, when he sayd: Ascendam, & ero similis altissimo, That is, I will ascend, and be lyke the highest &c.

For that I say, if y^e Pope holde men of armes in maintayning of his temporal Lordship, to venge him on them that gilten and offenden him, & geueth remission to fight and to slay them, that contraricn him, as men sayden he did by the Byshop of Norwich, not putting his sword in his sheath, as God commaunded to Peter: he is Antichrist. For he doth the contrary of the commaundement of Iesus Christ, that had Peter forgeuen to his brother. 70. sithe. 7. sithe. wel I finde in the Gospel, that when Christ sent his Disciples to Samarye, the Samaritanes would not receiuen them. And some of them bidden Chryst, that he should make a fire come down from heauen, to destroy the City. And he blamed them and said: Nescitis cuius spiritus estis: Filius hominis non venitanimas perdere, sed saluare. That is, ye know not of what spirit ye are: The sonne of man is not come downe to destroy,* but to saue y^e lyues and soules of mē. &c. If Christ then come to saue men, and not to slea them: who that doth the reuers hereof, is against Christ, and then he is Antichrist. Christ bad Peter put his sworde in his sheath and sayd:*Omnes qui gladium acceperunt, gladio peribunt. That is: All which take the sword, shall perish with the sworde. And I cannot fynde that Peter drew out his sword after that time, but suffered as Christ sayd: Cum senueris, alius cinget te, & ducet quò tu non vis. That is, when thou shalt waxe old, an other shall gird thee and lead thee whether thou wilt not. And therefore sayd Peter, Christ suffered for vs, leauing vs example that we shoulde followe his steps. And Paule sayth: Not defending your selues, but geue place to anger: leaue reuenging to mee, and I shall rewarde them &c. And therfore it, seemeth to me, that it is much against Christes lore, that his Uicar should bee a fighter, sithen that hee mote be a shephearde, that shoulde go before his sheepe, and let them come after him, and not with swordes to driue them away from him. For as Christ sayth, a good shepheard shall put his lyfe for his sheepe. And zif al that Christ had two swordes when that hee was taken of the Iewes, he sayd himselfe, it was for that the Scriptures moten zit be fulfilled:Quoniam cum iniquis deputatus est, that is: he was reputed among the wicked: and not to figure two swordes, that men sayen the Pope hath to gouerne with the church. And when I see such doinges of the Pope, & many other that accorden not with Christs lore, ne his liuing: And when I reade diuers Scriptures of holye writte, I am foule astenied whether they shoulde be vnderstanded of him, or of any other. And I pray you for Gods loue tell mee the sooth. Chryst sayth: Many shall come in my name, saying: I am Christ, and shall seduce many. &c. Christ (I wot well) is as muche to say, as he that is anointed, & two annointinges there weren in the lawe, one of Kinges, an other of Priestes. And Christ was both King and Priest, and so the Pope sayth that he is. And if all that haue bene Emperours of Rome, and other heathen kinges haue bene Antichrists, they come not in Christes name. But who so commeth in Christes name, and fayneth him Christes frend, and he be priuely his enemy, he may lightly beguile many. S. Paul saith: before there commeth a defection first, and y^e sonne of perdition shalbe reuealed, which is y^e aduersary, and is extolled aboue al that is named God, or which is worshipped: so y^e he shal sit in the temple of God, shewing himself as God. And it followeth in the same place: And now ye knowe what holdeth till he be reuealed in his time, for he worketh already the mistery of iniquitie.* Onely he y^e holdeth, let him holde till he come abroad, & then that wicked one shall be reuealed, whom y^e Lord Iesus shal slay with the spirite of his mouth. &c. And S. Iohn saith in the Apocalips: I saw an other beast ascending out of the erth, and two hornes like to the lambe. He spake like y^e Dragō, & had the power of the first beast. Many such authorities astonick me oft sithes: and therefore I pray you for y^e loue of God, to tell me what they meane.

The sentence.

THE which schedule afore mencioned,* with the cōtentes thereof diligently of vs perused, we considering y^r diseases which be not easely cured wth gētle remedy, must haue harder playsters. Cōsidering moreouer these his articles with his aunswers to y^e same, & to other articles also lastly against him produced, first mature deliberatiō had before vpon y^e whole matter wth the foresaid masters & Doctors, as wel secular as regular, to a great number, obseruing in the same al thinges to be obserued in this behalfe, haue geuē sentēce against y^e said w. in forme as foloweth.

The name of Christ being inuocated, we Iohn, by the permission of God,* Bishop of Hereford, sitting in tribunal seate, hauing God before our eyes, weying & cōsidering y^e articles by the foresaid faithfull Christians put vp against y^r said Swinderby, pretēding himselfe to be priest, with his aunswers vpō the same, Actis & Actitatis before vs in the cause of hereticall peruersitie, with mature deliberation had before in this behalfe, with masters & doctours of diuinitie, and also of other faculties, with their counsel and cōsent: Do pronounce, decree, and declare the sayd w. to haue bene and to be an hereticke, scismaticke, and a false informer of the people, & such as is to be auoided of faithfull Christians. wherefore we admonish, vnder y^r paine of the law, all & singular Christians, of what sex, state, condition, or preeminence soeuer: y^t neither they, nor any of thē wthin our dioces, or any other, do beleue, receaue, defend, or fauor y^e said w. til he shal deserue fully to be reconciled to the bosome againe of holy Church.

The appeale of W. Swynderby from this sentence of the Bishop prefixed, vnto the king and his counsaile.

IN nomine patris,et filij, et spiritus sancti, Amen. I. W. Swynderby priest, knowledge openly to al men, that I was before the Bishop of Hereford, the thirde day of October, and before many other good clerkes, to aunswer to certaine conclusions of y^e faith that I was accused of. And mine aunswere was this, that if the Bishop or any man couthe shew me by Gods law, y^r my conclusions or mine aunsweres were errour or heresie, I would be amended, and openly reuoke them before al y^e people. Knowes in any of my conclusions, but sayden singly with word, that there was errours in them, and bidden me subiect me to y^e Bishop, & put me into his grace & reuoke mine errour, and shewed me nought by Gods law ne reasō, ne proued which they weren. And for I would not knowledge mee guiltie, so as I knew no errour in thē, of which I should be guilty, therfore y^e Byshop sate in dome in mine absēce, and deemed me an heriticke, a schismaticke, and a teacher of errours, and denounced me accursed, that I come not to correction of y^e Church. And therefore for this vnrightfull iugement, I appeale to the kinges Iustices for many other causes.

One cause is, for the kynges Court, in such matter is aboue the Byshops court:.* For after that the Byshop has accursed, he may no feare by his law, but thē mote he sech succour of the kinges law, and by a writ of Significauit, put a man in prison.

The second cause is, for in cause of heresie there liggeth iudgement of death, & that dome may not be geuen without the kinges Iustices. For the Byshop will say: Nobis non licet interficere quenquam, That is: It is not lawfull for vs to kill anye man: as they sayden to Pilate, when Christ should be deemed. And for I thinke that no Iustice wil geue sodenly & vntrue dome as the Byshop did, and therefore openly I appeale to hem and send my conclusiōs to the Knightes of the Parliament, to be shewed to the Lordes, and to be taken to the Iustices, to be wel auiset or that they geuen dome.

The thirde cause is,* for it was a false dome: for no man is an hereticke, but he, that maisterfully defends his error or heresie and stifly maintaines it. And mine aūswere has ben alway cōditional, as y^e people openly knows, for euer I say, & yet say & alway will: that if they ca•nen shew me by Gods law that I haue erret, I wil gladly ben amēdet, and reuoke mine errours and so I am no hereticke, ne neuer more in Gods grace will ben en no wise.

The fourth cause is.* For the Bishops lawe, that they deme men by, is full of errours and heresies, contrary to y^e truth of Christes law of the Gospell.

For there as Christs law biddes vs loue our enemies, the Popes law geues vs leaue to hate them & to sley them, and grauntes men pardon to werren againe heathē men, and sley hem. And there as Christes lawe teache vs to be Page 474 mercifull, the Bishops lawe teaches to be wretchfull. For death is the greatest wretch that mē mowen done on him that guilty is.

There as Christes law teaches vs, to blessen him that diseazen vs, and to pray for him: the popes law teacheth to curse them, and in theyr great sentence that they vsen, they presume to damne hem to hell that they cursen. And this is a foule heresy of blaspheme, there as Christes law byddes vs be patient, the Popes law iustifies two swords, that wherwith he smiteth the sheepe of the Church. And he has made Lordes and Kings to sweare to defend him and his Church.

There as Christes law forbiddeth vs leche•y, y^e popes law iustifies the abhominable whoredome of cōmon women, and the Bishops in some place haue a great tribute or rent of whoredome.

There as Christes lawe byddes to minister spirituall thynges freely to the people: the Pope with his law selles for mony, after the quātity of the gift, as pardons, orders, blessing, and Sacraments, & prayers, & benefices, & preaching to the people, as it is knowne amongst them.

There as Christes law teaches peace: the Pope wyth his law assoyles mē for mony to gader the people, priests, and other to fight for his cause.

*There as Christes law forbids swearing: The popes law iustifieth swearing, and compels men therto.

Wheras Christes law teacheth his Priests to be poore; the Pope with his law, iustifies and mayntaynes Priests to be Lordes.

And yet the 5 cause is, for the Popes law that byshops demen men by, is y^e same vnrightfull law that Christ was demet by of the Byshops, with the Scribes and with the Pharises. For right as at that time they gauen more credens to the 2. false witnesses that witnessed agaynst Christ then they deden to al y^e people that witnesseden to his true preaching and his miracles: so the Bishops of the Popes law geuen more leuen by their law to two hereticks & Apostats, or two comen wymen that woulde witnesseden agaynes a man in the cause of heresy, than to thousands of people that were trewe and good. And for the Pope is this Antechrist and his law contrary to Christ his law,* fully I forsake this law and so I reed all Christen menne. For thus by an other poynt of this law, they mighten cōquere much of this world: For whan they can by this law presēt a man an hereticke: his goods shulen be forfet from him & frō his heyres, and so might they lightly haue 2. or. 3. false witnesses to recorde an heresy agayne what true man so hem liked. Herefore me thinkes, that whatsoeuer that I am a christen man I may lawfull appeale frō a false dome of the law, to be righteously demet by the trowth of Gods law. And if this appeale will not serue, I appeale opēly to my Lord Iesu Christ that shall deme all the world, for he I wot well, will not spare for no man to deeme a trowth. And therefore I pray GOD almighty with Dauid in the Sauter booke Deus iudicium tuum regi da, & iustitiam tuam filio regis: Iudicare populum tuum in iustitia & pauperes tuos in iudicio. That is. O God geue they iudgement to the king, and thy iustice to the kings sonne: to iudge thy people in iustice, and thy poore ones in iudgement. &c.

A letter sent to the Nobles and Burgesies of the Parliament, by M. William Swinderby.

*Iesu that art both God and man help thy people that louen thy law, and make knowne through thy grace thy teaching to all christen men. Deare sirs, so as we seen by many tokens that this world drawes to an end, & all that euer haue bene forth brought of Adams kinde into this world shulē come togeder at domesday riche and poore, ichone to geue accompt and receiue after hys deedes, ioy or paynen for euermore: Therefore make we our werks good, ye while that God of mercy abides, and be yee stable and true to God, and ye shulen see hys helpe about you. Constantes estote & videbitis auxilium Domini super vos. This land is full of Ghostly cowardes, in Ghostly battayle few dare stand. But Christ the comforter of all that falleth (to that his hart barst for our loue) agaynst the fiend the doughty Duke comforteth vs thus: Estote fortes in bello. &c. Be ye strong in battell, he sayes, and fight ye with the olde adder. State in fide, viriliter agite. &c. Wake ye & pray ye, stonde ye in beleue, do ye manly and be ye comforted, and let all your thinges be done with charity: For Saynt Paule bidde thus in his Epistle, that saw the preuetyes of God in heauen: Euigilate iusti. &c. Awake ye that bene righteous men, be yee stable and vnmoueable: Awake ye quickly and sleepe nought, and stonde now strongly for Gods law. For Saynt Iohn in the Apocalips sayes, blesset be he that awakes: for nought to sleepers but to wakers God has behite the crowne of life. For the hower is now as Paule sayth to vs, from sleepe for to arise, for he that earely awakes to me, he shall finde me sayth Christ himseluen. This waking gostly is good liuing out of sinne: this sleepe betokens that which cowardeth a mans hart from gostly comfort and to stand in the same through a deceauable sleepe is this that lets a man of the blisse of heauen: the fende makes men bold in sinne and ferd to do worship to God: death is a likening to a theefe that preuely steales vpon a man that now is riche, and full of wele, an one he makes him a needy wretch: therefore sayd God by S. Iohn in the Apocalips in this wise: Be thou waking, for if thou wake nought, I shall come to thee as a theefe, and thou shalt not wit what houre. And if the husbandman (sayes Christ) wist what houre the theefe should come, he shoulde wake and suffer him not to vndermine his house. Saynt Peter therefore warneth and sayth: wake and be ye ware, suffer ye no man (he sayes) as a theefe but wilfullye for Gods loue, for it is time (as Peter saies) that dome begin from the house of God: Ye bene the body of Christ (sayes Poule) that needes must suffer with the head, or els your bodyes bene but deade and departed from

Christ that is the head. And therefore curset be he (sayes Poule) that loues not Iesu Christ. And who it is that loues him, Christe himselfe telles in the Gospell: he that has my hestes, and keepes them, he it is that loues me. Cursed he be therfore (sayes Poule) that doth Christes workes deceiueably. Be ye not therefore (sayes Poule) ashamed of the true witnesse of Iesu Christ, for Christ our God sayes in his Gospell, he that shames me and my wordes, him shall mans sonne ashame when he shal come for to set in the siege of hys Maiesty. And each man he sayes, that knowes me and my wordes before men in this sinnefull generation and whorish, mans sonne shall knowledge him before my father sayes Christ himselfe, when he shall come with hys Aungels in the glory of his Father: Sithe ye therefore bene Christenmen, that is to say, Christes men, shew in deede that ye bene suche as ye daren shew you the kings men: for hit h•d bene, as Peter saies, better not to haue knowen the way of trueth, then after the knowing thereof to be conuerted backward there from. We knowen Christ, that is tought, we sain all through our beliefe if we turne from him for dred, truely wee deny the troth: And therefore sith our time is short, how short no man knowes but God, do we the good that we may to Gods worship, when we haue time: Be true (sayes God) to the death and you shall haue the crowne of life: And thinke on Iudas Machabeus, that was Gods true knight, that comforted hartelye Gods true people, to be the folowers of his law. And geue ye, he sayd, your liues for the Testament of your fathers. And ye shulen winne, he sayd, great ioy, and a name for euermore. Was not Abraham, he sayd, in temptation founden true, and was arectet vnto him euermore to righteousness, Ioseph in time of his anguish he kept truely Gods hest, he was made by Gods prouidence Lord of Egypt, for his trouth. Phinees our fadure louing, he sayth, the zeale of God tooke the testament of euerlasting Priestthoode. Iosue for he fulfillet the worde of God was domes man in Israell. Caleph that witnessed in the Church, he tooke therefore the heretage, he sayth: Dauid in his mercy hee gat the siege of the kingdome in worldes. Hely for that he loued the zeale of Gods lawe, was taken vppe into heauen. Ananie, Azary, and Misaell, he sayes, weren deliuerer thoore through true beliefe out of the hoat flame of fire. True Daniel in his simplenes was deliueret from the Lyons mouthe. Bethinke ye therfore, he sayes, by generation and generation, and thou shalt neuer finde that he sayled that man that truely trusted in him. And therefore dread you nought, he sayes of the wordes of a sinnefull man: hys glory is, he sayes, but wormes and tordes: he is to day, he sayth, y made hye, to morow he sayes he is not foundē for he is turned, he sayes, into his earth agayn, & the minde of him is perisher. Sonnes therefore he sayes, be ye comforter, and dye manly in the lawe: for when ye han done that that Gods commaundes you to doe, ye shulen be glorious in him. And Dauid the king sayes also on this wise in the Psalter booke: blesset be they (Lord) that keepen thy law, in worldes of worldes they shall prayse thee. And in Leuiticus sayes God thus, gif that ye wenden in mine hestes & keepen my commaundementes, and done hem, I shall I shall bring forth theyt fruit,, and trees shall be fulfilled with apples. And ye shallen eat your bread in fulnes, ye shoulē dwell in your lande without drede, I shall geue peace in your costes, ye shall sleep and no man shall feare you. Euill beastes I shall done away from you, and sword shall not passe your termes, ye shuln pursue your enemies, and they shall fall before you, fifty of yours shulne pursue an hundreth of heren, an hundret of yours, a thousand of theirs: your enemies, hee saieth shulen fal through sword, and your sute. I shall he sayes behold you and make you to waxe, and ye shall be multiplier: And I shall strength with you my couenaunt, ye shall eat the aldest, and the new shull come in theron. And ye shuln cast forth the old, I shall dwell in the midst of you. And I shall wend amonges you, and shalbe your God, and ye shulne be my people. If that ye heare me not, ne done nought all my hestes but dispisē my law and my domes, and that ye done not tho thinges that of me bene orderer, and breken my commaundements and my couenant: I shall do these thinges to you. I shall visite you surely in Page 475 nede and brenning, which shall dimme your eghenen, and shall wast your liues about nought: Ye shulne sow your sede for hit shalbe deuouret of enemies, I shall put my face agaynst you, and ye shall fall before your enemies. And ye shulen be vnderlings to them that han hatet you, ye shall flee, no man pursuing. And if ye will not be buxome to me, I shall adde thereunto thornes and seuen folde blame. And I shall all to brast the hardnes of you, I shall geue the heauen aboue you as yron, & the earth as brasse. About nought shall your labour be, for the earth shall bring you forth no fruit, ne tree shall geue none apples to you. If that ye wenden agaynst me, and will not heare me, I shall adde hereto, seuen folde woundes for your sinnes, I shall send amongst you beastes of the field that shall deuour you and your beastes, I shall bring you into a field, and wayes shuln be desart. And if that ye will not receiue lore, but wenden agaynst me, I will also wenden agaynst you, and I shall smite you seuen sithes for your sinnes. I shall leade in vpon you, sword, venger of my couenaunt and vpon the fleeen into Cities, I shall send pestilence in the middest of you. So that tenne women shall bake their bread in one furnace, and yeld thē agayne by wayght, and ye shall eat, & not be fillet. If that ye heare me not by these thinges, but wenden agaynst me, I shall wend in agaynst you in a contrary woodnesse, and blame you with seuen plagues for your sinnes, so that they shoulde eat the flesh of your sonnes and of your daughters. And in so much my soule shall loth you, that I shal bring your Cities into wilderness, and your Sanctuaries I shall make desart, ne I shal not ouer that receiue sweet oder of your mouth. And I shall disperkle your land, and enemies shulen maruell thereon, when they shulen inhabite it, I shall disperpel you among Heathen, and draw my sword after you. These vengeaunces and many moe, God sayde should fall on them that breake his bidding, and dispiseth his lawes, and his domes. Than sithe Christ become man, and bought vs with his hart bloud, and has shewed vs so great loue, and geuen vs an easy law, of the best that euer might be made, and to bring vs to the ioy of heauen, and we despise it and louen it nought: what vengeaunce will be taken here on, so long as he has suffered vs, and somercifully abidden, when he shall come that righteous iudge in the cloudes to deme this worlde? Therefore turne we vs to him, and leaue sinne that he hates and ouer all thinges mayntayne his lawe that he confirmed with his death. For other lawes that men had made, shoulde be demed at that day by the iust law of Christ, and the maker that them made, and then we wonne that long life and that ioy that Paule speaketh of, that eye ne see not, ne eare heard not, ne into mans hart ascended not, the blisse and ioy that God hath ordeyned to them that louen him and his lawes.

Deare worshipfull sirs in this world I beseech you for Christes loue, * as ye that I trow louen Gods law & trouth (that in these dayes is greatly borne abacke) that they wollen vouchsafe these thinges that I send you written to Gods worship, to let them be shewed in the Parliament as your wittes can best conceiue, to most worship to our God, and to shewing of the trouth and amē'ding of holy Church. My conclusions and mine appeale & other true matters of Gods law (gif any man can finde therein errour, falsenesse, or default, prouet by the law of Christ clearly to christen mens knowledge) I shall reuoke my wrong conceit, and by Gods law be amendet: euer redy to hold with Gods law opely & priuely with Gods grace, and nothing to holde, teach, or maynetayne that is contrary to his law.

Of the proces, answeres, & condemnation of this worthy priest and true seruaunt of Christ, Williā Swinderby, you haue heard, what afterward became vpō him, I haue not certainly to say or affirme, whether he in prisō died, or whether he escaped theyr handes, or whether he was burned

there is no certayne relation made. This remayneth out of doubt that during y^e time of K. Richard. 2. no great harme was done vnto him. Which was to the yeare. 1401. at what time K. Richard being wrongfully deposed, Hēry the 4. inuaded the kingdome of England. About the beginning of whose reigne we read of a certayn Parliament holden at Londō, mentioned also of Thomas Walden (as is aboue specified) in which parliamēt it was decreed: that whosoever shewed themselues to be fauorers of Wickliffe they should be apprehended, who at that time were called Lollards, and if so be they did obstinately perseuere in that doctrine, they should be deliuered ouer vnto the bishop of the dioces, & from him should be cōmitted to the correctiō of the secular magistrate. This law (sayth y^e story) brought a certaine priest vnto punishmēt the same yeare, who was burned in Smithfielde in the presence of a great number. This we haue drawne out of a piece of an old story, & it is most certaine that there such a Priest was burned for the affirmation of the true faith, but it doth not appeare by the story, what the Priestes name was. Notwithstanding by diuers coniectures it appeareth vnto me that his name was Swinderby that was forced to recant before by the Bishop of Lincolⁿ. Whereby what is to be conicetured by the premisses, let other men iudge what they think. I haue nothing here of expressly to affirme. This is plain for al men to iudge (which haue here sene and read his story) that if he were burned, then the bishops, Friers & priestes, which were the causes thereof, haue a great thing to answeere to the Lord, when he shall come to iudge y^e quicke and the dead, & seculum perignem.

The story and processe agaynst Walter Brute.

AFTER the story of William Swinderby,* I thought good and conuenient, next to adioyne the actes and doinges of Gualter Brute his ioynte fellow and companion, being a lay man, and learned: brought vpp as it seemeth in the Uniuersitie of Oxforde, being there also graduate. The tractation of whose discourse as it is something long, so therein may appeare diuers thinges worthye to be read and considered.

First, y^e mighty operation of gods spirit in him, his ripe knowledge, modest simplicitie; his valiant constancie, hys learned reactations and manifolde conflictcs susteyned aagaynst Gods enemies.* On the contrary part in hys aduersaryes may appeare, might against right mans authoritie agaynst plaine veritie: against which they hauing nothing directly to aunswere, proceede in condemnation agaynst whom they are able to bring forth no confi^ration. The chieftest occasion that seemed to stirre vp the heart and zeale of this Walter agaynst the pope: was the in udent pardons and indulgenses of Pope 〈◇〉, graunted to Henry Spenser Bishop of Norwich 〈◇〉 against pope Clement, mentioned before pag. 428. Secondly the •orōgfull condemnation of the articles and conclusions of William Swinderby, the whole order wherof, in the processe here following more playnly may appeare.

The processe had by Bohn Byshop of Hereford, agaynst Walter Brute lay man, and learned, of the dioces of Hereford, touching the cause of heresie, as they called it, set forward by the way of the Byshops office &c. at the instruction of certain faithful Christians, as he termed them, but in deed cruell and false promoters.

IN y^e name of God,* Amen. To all maner of faithful christian people that shall see and heare this our presēt proces. Iohn by y^e sufferance of God bishop of Hereford sendeth greeting & cōtinual charitie in y^e Lord. We would y^e you al should know, that of late by many faithfull christian people, & specially zealous followers of the catholicke faith, it was lamētably done vs to vnderstand by way of complaine: that a certain sonne of ours going out of kind, named Walter Brute lay person, learned, of our dioces, hath vnder a cloked shew of holynes, dānably seduced the people: & setting behind him y^e feare of God, doth seduce thē as much as he cā, frō day to day, informing & teaching openly and priuely, as well the nobles as the commōs, in certaine conclusiōs hereticall, schismatical, and erroneus & also heretofore condēned. And they haue also probably exhibited against y^e same Walter, articles vnder writtē, uⁿ maner and forme as followeth.

Articles exhibited and denounced to the bishop, against Walter Brute.

REuerend father and Lorde, we the faythfull people of Christ,* we the faythfull people of Christ, & zelous louers of the catholicke faith, and also your humble and deuout children: do minister & exhibite to your reuerend fatherhood, the articles vnder written, touching y^e catholicke faith, cōtrary and against malicious persons, & detractours of the same faith, & the determinations of holy mother church, & namely agaynst the childe of Belial, one Walter Brute, a false teacher and seducer amongst y^e people. Hūbly beseeching, y^e you would vouchsafe to haue regard to y^e correction of the enormities vnder written, according vnto y^e Canonically constitutions, euen as to your office pastorall doth lye and belong.

In primis,* we do geue and exhibite and entēd to proue, that the same Walter Brute being vnmyndfull of his saluation, hath bene by many and diuers faythfull Christian people sundry times accused of the cursednes of heresy: As by the swift report, slaūder, and rumour of the people, proceeding before the most reuerend father & Lord, Lord William Archb. of Caunterbury, and also before the reuerend father & Lord, Lord Iohn late B. of Herford, your predecessor, Page 476 and now Bishop of S. Asse, hath bene testified, and also hath bene many & diuers times cited to answeere vnto articles by him agaynst the Catholicke fayth auouched, & openly and publicly taught: But he in this matter of hereticall cursednes (so greeuously and shamefully spoken of) hath neuer regarded to purge his innocency, but luckingly and running into corners, hath many and sundrye yeres labored to aduance things erroneous, schismaticall, and also heresy, & to imprint them in the harts of faythfull people.

*Item, the foresayd Walter Brute hath opēly, publicly, and notoriously auouched, and commōly sayd & taught and stubbornly affirmed: that euery Christen man (yea & woman) being without sinne may make the body of christ so well as the priest.

*Item, the same Walter hath notoriously, opēly & publicly auouched and taught, that in the Sacrament of the alter there is not the very body, but a signe and a memoriall onely.

*Item, the foresayd Walter hath sayd commonly and auouched, and also hath labored to informe mē and companyes, that no man is bound to geue tithes, nor oblations: and if any man will needes geue, he may geue his tithes, and oblations to whom he wil, excluding therby theyr curates.

*Itē, that such as do preach and prefer croised matters, and pardons (graunted by the high bishop to them y^e helpe the purpose of the reuerēd father Lord Henry by the grace of God Bishop of Norwich, when as he tooke his iourney vpō him to fight for the holy father the Pope) are schismatickes and heretickes, and that the Pope cannot graunt such maner of pardons.

*Item, the sayd Walter hath oftentimes sayd, and commonly aduouched, that the Pope is Antichrist, and a seducer of the people, and vtterly agaynst the lawe and life of Christ.

*Item, wheras of late your reuerence did (at the instāce of faithfull christen people) proceed in forme of law against William Swinderby, and that the sayd Williā Swinderby had vnto the said articles objected against him, geuē vp his answeres in writing, cōteining in thē errors, schismes & heresies, euen as you with the mature counsel of maisters & doctors in diuinity, & other faculties haue determined & geuen sentence, and haue pronounced the same William Swinderby to be an heretick, & a schismatick, and an erroneous teacher of y^e people: Neuertheles y^e forenamed Walter hath openly, publickly, & notoriously said, aduouched, & stubbornly affirmed, that the sayd Williams aunsweres (whereof notice hath bene geuen before) are good, righteous, and not able to be conuincid, in that they conteyne none error, and that your sentence before sayd, geuen agaynst the same William, is euill, false & vniust: And that your assistants haue wickedly, naughtely, peruersly, & vniustly condemned the answeres aforesayd.

*Now therupon immediately, those same faythful christian people haue instantly required that we would vouch safe that other articles geuen by y^e same faythfull christiās against the sayd William Swinderby, together w^t the writings and answeres of the same William therunto: should be admitted agaynst Walter Brute, mentioned of in this matter of cursed heresy: of which Articles and aunswers, the tenors do folow in these wordes.

In primis, that one William Swinderby pretending himself priest, was of certayne articles and cōclussions erroneous, false, schismaticall & heretical, by him preached, at diuers places & times, before a great multitude of faithful Christians, iudicially cōuincid: and the same articles and conclusiōs did he (inforced by necessity of law) reuoke and abiure, some as hereticall, and other as erroneous & false: and for such did he aduouch thē euer afterward promising so to take and beleue them & that frō thenceforth he would opēly or priuily preach, teach, or affirme none of them: nor that he should make sermon or preach within your dioces without licence demaunded and obtained. And in case he should to the cōtrary presume, by preaching or auouching that then he should be subiect to the seueritye of the Canōs euen as he iudicially sware accordingly as the law inforced. Also the conclusions abiured by the sayd William doe folow and are such.

- *1. In primis, that men by the rule of charity, may demaund debts, but by no meanes imprison any man for debts: and that the party so imprisoning a body, is excommunicated, before. pag. 466.
- 2. Item, that if the parishioners shall knowe theyr Curate to be incontinent and naughty: they ought to withdraw from him theyr tythes. &c. pag. 467.

- 3. Item, that tithes are mere almosies, and in case that the Curates shal be ill, that they may be lawfully bestowed vpon others by the temporall owners. &c. pag. 467.
- 4. Item, that an euill Curate to excommunicate any vnder his iurisdiction for withholding of tithes, is nought els. &c. pag. 467.

- 6. Item, that euery Priest may absolue euery sinner being contrite, and is bound to preach the Gospell vnto the people, notwithstanding the prohibition of the Bishops, pag. 467.
- 7. Item, that a priest receiuing by bargaine any thing of yearly annuity, is in so doing a schismaticke, and excommunicate. pag. 467.
- 8. Item, he doth assuredly beleeeue (as he auoucheth) that euery priest being in deadly sinne, if he dispose himselfe to make the body of Christ, doth rather commit idolatry thē make Christes body. pag. 467.
- 9. Item, that no priest doth enter into any house, but to handle ill the wife, the daughter, or the mayd, and therefore &c. pag. 467.
- 10. Item, that the child is not rightly baptised, if the priest &c. ibid.
- 11. Item that no maner of person if he liue agaynst Gods law. &c. ibid.
- 12. Item, the same William agaynst the thinges premised, and his reuocation and abiuration (not to his hart cōuerting, but from euill to worse peruerting) did turne aside into our dioces: where running to and fro in diuers places, hath of his owne rash head presumed to preach or rather to peruert. &c. 467.
- 13. Item, after that we had heard diuers rumors, & slaunders of very many, we directed diuers monitions and cōmaundementes comminatorye, to be sent abroad by our Commissaries to sundry places of our dioces: that no person of what estate, degree or condition so euer he were of, should presume to preach or to teach the sacred scripture to the people in places holy or prophane, within our dioces. &c. page. 466.
- 14. Item, that the same sort of monitions, inhibitions and precepts confirmed by our seale, came to the true & vndouted knowledge of the sayd William.
- 15. Item, the same William vnmindefull of his owne saluation hath sithens & agaynst those monitions,* inhibitiōs and preceptes, and (that which is more abhominable to be spoken) in contempt of the high Bishops dignity, & to the slaūder & offence of many people, presumed in diuers places of our sayd dioces, to preach or rather to peruert & to teach the forementioned, & other heretical, erroneous and schismaticall deuises.
- 16. Item, the same William in preaching to the people: on monday, to wit, the first of August, in the yere of our Lord 1390. in the Church of Whitney in our dioces, held and affirmed: that no Prelate of the world, of what state, preheminece or degree soeuer he were of, hauing cure of soule & being in deadly sinne. &c. pag. 466.
- 17. Item,* the same William in many places sayd & affirmed in the presence of many faythfull •hristian people, after the sacramentall words vttered by the priest, hauing y^e intent to consecrate, there is not made the very bodye of Christ in the sacrament of the Eucharist. pag. 466.
- 18. Item, that accidences cannot be in the sacramēt of the aulter without theyr subiect: & that there remayneth materiall bread Concomitanter with the body of Christ in the sacrament. Vide supra pag. 466.

- 20. Item, that all priests are of like power in all poynts, notwithstanding that some of them are in this worlde of higher dignity, degree, or preheminance. pag. 466.
- 21. Item, that contrition onely putteth away sinne, if a man shall be duely contrite: and that all vocall confession and exercise, is superfluous, and not requisite of necessitye to saluation. Ibidem.
- 22. Item, that inferior Curates haue not theyr power of binding and loosing mediatly from the pope or bishop, but immediately of Christ. &c. pag. 466.
- 23. Item, that the pope cannot graunt such kind of annuall pardons, because there shall not be so many yeares to the day of iudgement as is conteyned in the popes buls or pardons. Whereby it followeth, that pardons are not so much worth as they are noysed and praysed to be. Ibid.
- Page 47724. Item that it is not in the Popes power to graunt to any penitent body forgeuenes of the paine or of the trespasse. pag. 466.
- 25 Item that one geuing his almes to any bodye which as he iudgeth hath no neede thereof, doth sinne in so geeuyng it. pag. 466.
- 26 Item that it standes not in the power of any prelate, of what priuate religion soeuer he bee, to geue by letters benefites of their order. Neither do such kind of benefites geuen profit them to whom they be geuen for the saluatiō of soules. Vide supra. pag. 466.
- 27 Item that the same William vnmindfull of his owne saluation, hath many times and often resorted to a certain desert wood called Derwalswood of our dioces, and there in a certayne vnhalloved Chappell (nay a prophane cottage) hath presumed of his owne propre rashnesse,* to celebrate. &c. pag. 466.
- 28 Item the same William hath also presumed to do the like thinges in a certayne prophane chappel, situate in the parke of Newton, nigh to the towne of Leyntwardyn, in the same our dioces. pag. 466.

*Which thinges being done, the same faithful Christen people, and specially sir Walter Pride the penitentiarie of our Cathedrall Church of Hereforde, personally appearing before vs, sitting in our iudgement seate in the parish Church of Whiteborne of our diocesse: brought forth and exhibited two publike instruments against the same Walter Brute, in y^e case of cursed heresie aforsaid, of which instrumentes here followeth the tenours and Articles in this sort.

In the name of God Amen. Be it euidently knowē to all persōs by this presēt publike instrumēt:* y^e in the yeare frō y^e incarnatiō, after y^e course and cōputation of y^e church of England. 1391. the indiction xv. of y^e pontifical office of our most holy father and Lord in Christ, Lord Boniface y^e ix. by Gods Wisedome Pope, the second yeare the xv. day of y^e month of October, in the dwelling house of the worshipful mā maister Iohn Godemoston, Chanon of y^e Cathedral Church of Hereford, in the presence of me the publike Notary vnder written, and of witnesses subscribed: Walter Brute lay man learned, of Hereford dioces, personally appearing sayde, auouched, and stifly maintayned: that the sayde Bishop of Hereforde and his assistaunces, which were with him the third day of the foresayde month of October, the yeare of our Lord aforesayd, in the Church of Hereford:* did naughtely, wickedly, peruersly, and vniustly condemne y^e aunsweres of sir William Swinderby Chaplaine, geuen by the same sir William to y^e same Lord byshop in wryting, and also the articles ministred by the same sir William.

And furthermore he sayd, held, and aduouched, that the same conclusions geuen by y^e same sir Williā, euen as they were geuen, are true and Catholike.

*Item, as touching the matters obiected agaynst hym by them that stooode by, concerning the sacrament of y^e aulter: he sayd, that after the sacramentall words: there doth remaine very bread, and the substance therof after the cōsecration of y^e body of Christ, and that there do not remain accidencies without substance or subiect after the cōsecration of the body of Christ. And touching this matter, the doctors holde diuers opinions.

*Furthermore as concerning y^e Pope, he said, helde, and auouched: that he is the very Antichrist, because y^e in lyfe and maners he is contrary to the lawes, doctrines, and deedes of Christ our Lord.

All and euery of these things were done, euen as they be aboue writtē and rehearsed in y^e yeare of our Lord, pōtificall office, month, day, & place aforesayd, at supper time of the day aforenamed, thē and there being present y^e worshipful and discrete men. *sir Walter Ramsbury, chiefe chāter of the sayde Cathedrall Church of Hereforde, Roger Hoore Chanon of the same Church, Walter Wall, Chaplain of y^e said church of Hereford, being a vicar of y^e Choral & certaine other worthy witnesses of credit, that were specially called and desired to y^e premisses. Ex Regist. Herford.

*And I Richard Lee whelar, clerke of Worcester, being a publike notarye, by y^e authoritie Apostolike: was personally present at all and singuler the premisses, whylest that (as is before rehersed) they were done and a doing, in the yere of our lord. 1391. pontisical office, month, day, place, & y^e houre aforesaid: & I did see, write, and heare all and singuler those things thus to bee done, and haue reduced thē into this publike maner and forme: & being desired truely to restifie the premisses, haue sealed the sayde instrument, made hereupon, with mine accustomed scale and name.

In the name of God, *Amen. Be it plainly knowē to all persons, by this present publike instrumēt: that in y^e yere from the incarnation of the lord after y^e course and co•p•tation of y^e church of England. 1391. the indiction fiftene, in the 3. yere of the pontifical office of y^e most holy father in Christ, and our Lord, Lord Boniface Pope by the prouydēce of God the 9. & in y^e 19. day of the month of Ianuary. Walter Brute layman, of Hereford dioces, personally appearing before y^e reuerēd father in Christ and Lord. Lord Iohn by gods grace B. of Herford, in y^e presence of me being a publike notarie, & one of y^e witnesses vnder written: did say, *hold, publish, & affirme, y^e cōclusiōs hereafter written, y^e is to say: y^e christen people are not boūd to pay tithes neither by the law of Moses, nor by the law of Christ.

Item, that it is not lawful for Christians for any cause in any case, to sweare by y^e creator neither by the creature.

Item he confesseth openly and of his owne accord: that within the same month of Ianuary, he did eate, drink, and communicate with William Swinderby, not being ignorant of the sentence of the said reuerend father: whereby y^e same William Swinderby was pronounced an heretique, schismaticque, and a false seducer of the common people. Which conclusions, the same reuerend father caused to bee writtē, and in writing to be deliuered to the same Walter. Which when he had seene and red, he sayd also that he did maintaine and iustifie them according to the lawes aforesayd. These thinges were done in the chamber o^r the sayd bishop of Herford,* at his manor of Whitborne of the sayde dioces of Hereford: then being there present the same Byshop abouesaid. M. Reynold of Wolsten, Canon of Hereford, sir Phillip Dileske parson of y^e parish church of Blamurin, Thomas Guldefeld parson of the Church of Englisbyknore, Iohn Cresset parson of the church of Whytborne, and Thomas Wallewayne housholde seruante, for witnesses specially called and desired to the premisses of y^e dioces of Hereford and S. Asse.

And I Benedict Come clerke of the dioces of S. Asse,* publike notary by y^e Apostolike authoritie of the dioces of S. Asse, was personally present together with the witnes before named, at all and singuler these and other thinges here premised whilest they were so done and a doing, & did see, heare, & write those things so to be done, as is before mencioned: and did write the same and reduce them into this publike forme, & with my wonted & accustomed seale and name haue sealed it, being desired and required truly to testifie the premisses.

At the last, the aforesaid Walter Brute, did present and cause to be presented to vs (at diuers places and times assigned by vs to the same Walter, to aunswere to y^r former conclusions and articles) diuers scroules of paper writtē with his owne proper hand, for his aunswers to the same Articles and conclusions aboue written: he partly appearing by his owne selfe, before vs sitting in our iudgement seat, and partly by his messengers, specially appoynted to that purpose: of which scroules, y^e tenors do follow in order worde by worde, and be on this maner.

In the name of the father,* and of the sonne, and y^e holy ghost, Amen: I Walter Brute, sinner, layman, husbādmā & a Christian (hauing mine ofspring of the Brittons, both by my father & mothers side) of the Britons, haue ben accused to y^e B. of Hereford, that I did erre in many matters concerning the catholike Christen fayth: by whō I am required, y^r I should write an aunswere in Latin to all those matters. whose desire I wil satisfie to my power, protesting first of al, before God & before al the world: y^e like as it is not my mind through Gods grace, to refuse y^e knowē truth,* for any reward greater or smaller, yea be it neuer so bigge, nor yet for y^e feare of any temporal punishment: euē so it is not my mind to maintain any erroneous doctrine for any cōmodities sake. And if any mā, of what state, sect or condition so euer he be, wil shew me that I erre in my writings or sayings by the authoritie of the sacred scripture, or by probable reason grounded in y^e sacred scripture, I wil humbly and gladly receiue his information.* But as for y^e bare wordes of any teacher (Christ onely excepted) I wil not simply beleue, except hee shalbe able to stablish thē by the truth of experience, or of the Scripture: for because, that in the holy Apostles elected by Christ, there hath beue fōūd error by the testimony of the holy scripture, because that Paule himselfe doth cōfesse that he rebuked Peter, for that he was worthy to be rebuked, Galat. the 2. Chapter. There hath ben errors fōūd in the holy doctors, that haue ben before vs, as they themselues confesse of them selues. And oftentimes it falleth out, that there is error founde in the teachers in our age: who are of contrary opinions among themselues, and s^{ome} of them do sometimes determine Page 478 mine one thing for truth, and others do condemne the selfe same thing to be heresye or error. Which protestation premised, I wil here place 1. suppositions or cases for a groūd and a foundatiō of all things that I shall say, out of which I would gather two probable conclusions stablished vpō the same, and vpon the sacred Scripture. By which cōclusions, when as they shall be declared after my maner and fashion, it shal playnely appeare what my opiniō & iudgement is concerning all matters that I am accused of.* But because I am ignoraunt & unlearned, I wil get me vnder the mighty defences of the Lord. O Lord I will remēber thine onely righteousnesses.

*God the father almighty vncreate, the maker of heauē and earth, hath sent his sonne (that was euerlastingly begotten) into this world: that he should be incarnated, for y^e saluation and redemption of mankind, who was cōceiued by the holy ghost, euerlastingly proceeding from the father and the sonne, and was borne of Mary the virgin, to y^e end that we might be borne a new. He suffered Passion vnder Pōtius Pilate for our sinnes, laying down his life for vs, that we should lay down our life, for our brethrē. He was crucified, that we should be crucified to the world, and the world to vs. He was dead, that he might redeeme vs from death, by purchasing for vs forgeuenes of sinnes. He was buried, that we being buried together with him into death by Baptisme, and that we dead to sins, should liue to righteousnesses. He descēded into hell, therby deliuering man frō thraldom, and from the bondage of the Deuill, & restoring him to his inheritaunce, which he lost by sinne. The thyrd day he rose from the dead, through the glory of his father, that we also should walke in newnes of life. He ascended vp to the heauens, to which no body hath ascended, sauing he that descended from heauē, euē the sonne of man which is in heauē. He sitteth at the right hand of God the father almighty, vntill his enemies be made his footstool. He being in very deed so muche better then the Aungelles, as he hath obteyned by inheritaunce a more excellent name then they. From thence he shall come to iudge the quick and the dead, accordingly to theyr workes, because the father hath geuen all iudgemēt to the sonne. In whose terrible iudgement we shall rise agayne, and shall all of vs stand before his iudgement seat, and receiue ioy as well bodely, as spiritually for euer to endure, if we be of the sheepe placed at the right hand: or els punishment both of bodye and soule if we shall be fōūd amongst goates, placed on the left hand. &c.

Iesus Christ the sonne of God, very God & very man a king for euer, by stablishing an euerlasting kingdome, breaking to ponder all the kingdoms of the world:* Dan. 2. a priest for euer after y^e order of Melchisedech, wherby also he is able euermore to saue such as by him come vnto god & alwayes liueth to intreat for vs. Hebr. 7. He offering one sacrifice for our sins, hath made perfect for euer by one oblation, those that be sanctified. Heb. 10. Being y^t wisdom that cannot be deceiued, & the trueth that cannot be vttered: he hath in this world taught the will of the godhead of his father, which will he hath in worke fulfilled, to the intent that he might faithfully instruct vs, and hath geuē the law of charity to be of his faythfull people obserued, whiche he hath written in the hartes and mindes of the faythful with the finger of God, wher is the spirit of God, searching the inward secrets of y^e Godhead. Wherefore his doctrine must be obserued aboue all other doctrines, whether they be of Angels or of men, because that he could not nor would not erre in his teaching. But in mens doctryns there chanceth oftentimes to be error, and therefore we must forsake theyr doctrines, if cloyedly or expresly they be repugnant to the doctrine of Christ. Mens doctryns being made for the peoples profit must be allowed and obserued, so that they be grounded vpon Christes doctrine, or at least be not repugnant to his words.

If the high bishop of Rome, calling himself the seruante of the seruantes of God,* and the chiefe vicare of Christ in this world, do make & maintaine many lawes contrary to the Gospell of Iesu Christ: then is he of those that haue come in Christes name,* saying, I am Christ, & haue seduced many a one, by the testimony of our sauour in Math. cap. 24. and the idoll of desolation sitting in the Temple of God, and taking away from him the cōtinuall sacrifice for a time, times, and halfe a time. Which idoll must be reueled to the christian people by the testimony of Daniel. Wherof Christ speaketh in the Gospell. When you shall see the abhomination of desolation that was tolde of by Daniell the Prophet, standing in the holy place: let him that readeth, vnderstand, and he is the pestiferous mountayn infecting the whole vniuersall earth, as witnesseth Ieremy. chap. 51. & not the head of Christes body. For the auncient person in yeares, & honorable in reuerence, he is the head, & the prophet teaching lies is the tayle, as Esay alledgeth. chap. 9. And he is that wicked and sinnefull Captayne of Israell, whose foreappointed day of iniquity is come in time of iniquity, who shall take away Cidarim, and take away the crowne, Ezech, chap. 21. to whom it was sayd: Forasmuch as thy hart was exalted, and did it say, I am a God, & sittest in the seat of god, in the hart of the sea, seing thou art a man and not God,* and hast geuen thine hart, as if it were the hart of God: therfore behold I will bring vpō thee the most strong and mighty straungers of the nations, & they shall draw theyr swords vpō the beauty of thy wisdom & shall defile the commaundements & kill thee, and pul thee out, & thou shalt dye in the destruction of the slayne, and it foloweth.

In the multitude of thine iniquities, & of the iniquities of thy marchandise,* thou hast defiled thy sanctification. I will therefore bring forth a fire, from the midst of the whole earth, & will make thee as ashes vpon earth. Thou art become nothing,* & neuer shalt thou be any more. Eze. cha. 28 Furthermore he is y^e idle shepheard forsaking his flock hauing a sworde on his arme, & an other sworde in his right eye.* Zach. 11. & sitting in the temple of God, doth aduaunce himselfe aboue all thing that is called God, or whatsoever is worshipped, by the testimony of Paule to Thes, 2. epist. 2. chap. And in the defection or falling away shall the man of sinne be reueled, whom the Lord Iesus shall slay with the breath of his mouth.* For euery kingd••e deuided in it selfe, shall be brought to desolation. He ••so besides, the beast ascēding vp out of the earth, hauing two hornes like vnto alambe, but he speaketh like a dragon, & as the cruell beast ascending vp out of the sea, whose power shall continue 42. monethes.* He worketh the things that he hath geuen to the image of the beast. And he compelled small and great, rich and poore, freemen and bondslaues, to worshyp the beast, and to take his marke in theyr forehead or theyr hands. Apo. 13 chap. And thus by the testimony of all these places is he the chiefe Antechrist vpon the earth, and must be slayne with the sword of Gods word, and cast with the dragon, the cruell beast and the false Prophet that hath seduced the earth, into the lake of fire and brimstone to be tormented world without end.

If the city of Rome do allow his traditiōs, and do disalow Christes holy commaundements, and Christes doctrine, that it may confirme his traditions:* then is she Babilon the great, or the daughter of Babilon, and the great whore sitting vpō many waters with whom the kings of the earth haue committed fornication, and the inhabitants of the earth are become dronken with the wine of her harlotry lying opē to baudry. With whose spiritual whordom enchauntments, witchcraftes, and Symon Magus marchaundises, the whole roūd world is infected and seduced: saying in her hart, I sit as a Queen, and widow I am not neither shall I see sorrowe and mourning. Yet is shee ignoraūt y^t within a litle while shall come the day of her destruction & ruine by the testimony of the Apoc. cha. 17.* Because that from the time that the continuall sacrifice was taken away, & the abhomination of desolatiō placed, there be passed 1299. dayes by the testimony of Daniell, and the Chronicles added do agree to the same.* And the holy City also hath bene troden vnder foot of the heathen, for 42. monethes, and the woman was nourished vp in the wildernes (vnto which she fled for feare of the space of the serpēt) during 1260. dayes, or els for a time, times, & halfe a tyme which is all one. All these thinges be manifest by the testimony of the Apocalips, & the Chronicles therto agreeing. And as concerning the fall of Babilon aforesayd,* it is manifest in the Apoc. where it is sayd: In one day shall her plagues come, death, lamentation, and famine, and she shal be burned with fire. For strong is the Lord whych will iudge her. And agayn Babilon that great Citty is fallen, which hath made all nations to drinke of the wine of her Whoredome. And thirdly, one mightye Aungell tooke vp a myllstone that was a very great one, and did cast it into the Sea, saying: with suche a violence as this is, shall that great Citty Babylon be ouerthrowne, and shall no more bee founde. For her Marchauntes were the Princes of the earth, and with her Witchcraft all Nations haue gone astray, and in her is there founde, the bloud of the Sayntes and Prophetes. And of her destruction speaketh Esay in the 13. chapiter.* And Babilon that glorious Citty, being so noble amongst kingdomes in the pride of the Caldeans, it shall be that like as the Lorde did ouerturne Sodome and Gomorre vpside downe, it shall neuer more be inhabited, nor haue the foundation layde in no age, from generation to generation.* Jeremy sayeth: Your mother that hath borne you, is brought to very great confusion and made euē with the ground. And agayne: The Lord hath deuised and done as he hath spokē agaynst the inhabitors of Babilō, which dwel richly Page 479 in their treasures vppon many waters, thine ende is come. And thirdly: Drouth shall fall vpon her waters, and they shall beginne to be drye, for it is a land of grauen imagies, and boasteth in her prodigious wonders: It shall neuer more be inhabited, neyther be builded vp in no age nor generation. Verely, euen as God hath subuerted Sodome and Gomorre with her calues.

Pardon mee (I beseeche you) though I be not plentiful in pleasaunt wordes: For if I should runne after the course of this wicked world, & should please mē, I should not be Christes seruant. And because I am a poore man, & neyther haue nor cā haue notaries hyred to testifie of these my writings: I call vpon Christ to be my witnes, which knoweth the inward secrets of my hart, that I am redy to declare the things that I haue writtē after my fashion, to y^e profit of all Christen people, & to y^e hurt of no mā liuing, & am ready to be reformed, if any mā will shew me where I haue erred: being redy also (miserable sinner though I be) to suffer for y^e cōfession of y^e name of Christ & of his doctrine, as much as shal please him by his grace & loue to assist me a miserable sinner. In witnes of al these things, I haue to this writing set y^t seale of our Lord & sauior Iesus Christ, which I besech him to imprint vpon my forehed, & to take frō me al maner of marke of Antichrist. Amen.

These two suppositions (as they are termed in the scholes) written by Walter Brute, and exhibited vnto the Bishop, although they conteyned matter sufficient eyther to satisfie the bishop if he had ben disposed to learne, or els to haue prouoked him to replye agayne, if his knowledge therin had ben better thē his: yet could they worke neither of thē effect in him. But he receiuing & perusing the same when he neither could confute y^t which was said, neyther would reply or aunswere by learning to that whych was truth, finding other by causlations, said that this his writing was too short and obscure, and therefore required him, to write vpon the same againe more plainely and more at large. Whereupon the said Maister Walter (satisfying the Bishops request, and ready to geue to euery one an accōpt of his faith) in a more ample tractatiō renueth hys matter agayne before declared, writing to the Byshop in wordes and forme as followeth:

*REuerend father, forsomuch as it seemeth to you y^t my motion in my two suppositions or cases, & in my two conclusions, is too short and somewhat darke: I wil gladly now satisfy your desire, according to my smal learning, by declaring the same conclusions. In opening wherof, it shall plainly appeare, what I do iudge in all matters, y^t I am accused of to your reuerence, desiring you first of al, that your discretiō would not beleue that I do enterpryse of any presumption to handle the secretes of y^e scriptures, which the holy and iust, & wise Doctours haue left vnexpounded. It is not vnknown to many, that I am in all points farre inferiour to thē, whose holynes of life & profoundnes in knowledge, is manifold waies allowed. But as for mine ignorance, and multitude of sinnes, are to my selfe and others sufficiently knowen: wherefore, I iudge not my selfe worthy to vnloose or to cary their shooes after them. Do you therefore no otherwise deeme of me, then I do of mine owne selfe. But if you shal finde any goodnesse in my writings, * ascribe it to God only: who according to the multitude of his mercy, doth sometimes reueale those things to Idiotēs and sinners, which are hidded from the holy and wise, according to this saying: I will prayse and confesse thee O father, for that, y^u hast hidden these things from the wyse and prudent, and hast disclosed them to the litle ones. Euen so O father, because it hath thus pleased thee. And in an other place. I am come to iudgement into this world, that they which see not may see, and that they which see, may be made blinde. And Paule saith: that God hath chosen the weake things of the world, to cōfound the mighty, that no man shal boast in him selfe, but that al mē should geue the honour to God.

It was commaunded to Esay, bearinge the type of Christ: *Go and say to this people: Heare ye with your hearing, and do not vnderstand? Beholde ye the vision, and yet knowe ye not the thing that ye see? Make blinde the hart of this people, & make dull their eares, and shut their eyes, least that perchaunce with their eyes they should see, and with their eares they shoulde heare, and with their harts they should vnderstand and bee conuerted, and I should heale thē. And I sayd, how long Lord? And he sayd, vntill that the cities be made desolate without inhabitants, and the house without any person within it. * Also in Esay thus it is written: And the multitude of all nations, which shall fight against Ariel, and all persons that haue warred, and besieged and preuailed agaynst it, shall bee as a dreame that appeareth in the night, & as the hungry person dreameth that he eateth, but whē he shall awake out of sleepe, hys soule is empty. And lyke as the hungry person dreameth that hee eateth, and yet after that hee shall awake, he is still wearye and thirstye, and hys soule voyde of nourishment: euen so shall it bee wyth the multitude of all nations that haue fought agaynst the mount Sion. Be you amased, and haue great wonder: reele ye to and fro, and staggre ye: be ye druncken, and not with wyne: staker, but not through drunckennes: for the Lorde hath myngled for you the spirite of drousines. He shall shut your eyes, he shall couer your Prophets and Prynces that see visions. And a vision shalbe to you all together, lyke the wordes of a sealed booke, which when hee shall geue to one that is learned, he shall say: Reade here, and he shall aunswere, I cannot, for it is sealed. And the booke shalbe geuen to one, that is vnlearned and knoweth not his letters, and it shal be sayd vnto him, Reade, And he shall aunswere, I knowe not the letters, I am vnlearned, Wherefore the lorde saith: For asmuche as this people draweth nigh me with their mouthes, and glorifyeth me with their lips, but their hart is farre from me, and they haue rather feared the commaundements of men, and haue cleaued to their doctrines: *Beholde therefore I will ad besides, and bring such a muse and maruell vpon this people which shal make men amased with marueling. For wisdomē shal perish from their wise men, and the vnderstanding of their prudent persons shalbe hidden. * And soone after it followeth in the same place, yet a litle while and Libanus shalbe turned into Charmell, and Charmell counted for a cops or groaue, and in the same day shall the deafe folkes heare the worde of this booke, and the eyes of the blinde (changed from darkenes and blindnes) shall see.

Nabuchodouoser enquiring of Danyel said. Thinkest thou that thou canst truely declare mee the dreame that I haue sene, and the meaning thereof. And Danyel sayd: As for the mistery whereof the king doth aske, neyther the wise men, magitiens, southsayers, nor enchaunters can declare to the king: But there is a God in heauen, that discloseth misteries, who will declare to thee (O king Nabuchodonosor) what things shal come to passe in the last times of all. To me also is this sacrament or misterie disclosed (not for any wisdom that is in mee more then in all men liuing) but to that the interpretatiō might be made manifest to the king, & that thou shouldest know the cogitacions of thy minde.

It was also sayd to Daniel, *And thou Daniel, shut vp the wordes, seale vp the booke, vntill the time appointed. Verely many people shall passe ouer, and many folde knowledge shall there be: And Daniel sayde to the man that was clothed with linnen garments, who stode vpon the waters of the floud: How lōg wil it be before the end shal come of these marueilous thinges? And I heard the man that was clothed in linnen apparel, who stode vpon the waters of the flouds, when he had lift vp his right hād and his left hand into heauen, and had sworne by him that liueth for euermore: that for a time, tymes, and a halfe tyme. And when the scattering abroad of the hand of the holye people shalbe accomplished: then shal al these things be finished. And I heard and vnderstoode not, and I sayd: O my Lorde, what shall bee after these things, and he sayd: Go thy wayes Daniel, for this talke is shut & sealed vp, vntil the time that is before appointed.

All these thinges haue I written to shew, that he that hath the key of Dauid, who openeth and no man shutteth, shutteth and no man openeth: doth (when and how lōg it pleaseth him) hide the mysteries, and the hid secrets of the Scriptures, from the wise, prudent, and righteous: and other whiles at his plesure, reuealeth the same to sinners and lay persons. & simple soules, that he may haue the honor & glory in all things. Wherefore as I haue beforesaid, if you shall finde any good thing in my wrytinges, ascribe the same to God alone: If you shal finde otherwise, think ye the same to be written of ignorance, and not of malice. And if any doubt or errour be shewed me in all my wrytynges, I wil humbly allow your information & fatherly correction.

But why that such maner of matters are moued touching the disclosing of Antichrist in this kingdome, more then in other kingdomes, and in this time also more then in time past: the aunswere, as concerning the time of the motion is, that it is the last coniunction of Saturne and Iupiter in the signe of the * Twins, which is the house of Mercury, being the signifyer of y^e Christian people: which coniunction seemeth to me to betoken the secōd comming of Christ, to reforme his Church, and to call men agayne by the disclosing of Antichrist, to the per•fection of the Gospell, from their Hethenish rytes and wayes of the Gentiles. By whom the holy citie was trampled vnder foote, for 42. monethes, euen as the coniunction of the sayd two planets being inclosed in the signe of the Virgine, which is also the house of Mercury: dyd betoken the first commyng of Christ, for the saluation of all people that were perished of the house of Israel, wherby to call thē through the same comming, to the full perfection of the Gospell. Page 480 As touching this calling of the Heathen, speaketh Christ in the Gospell, I haue also other sheepe, that are not of this folde, and those must I bring, and they shall heare my voyce, and there shall be one shepefolde, & one shepherd. For although the Gentiles be conuerted, from the infidelitie, of their idolatrie, to the fayth of Christ: yet are they not conuerted to the perfection of the law of Christ, And therefore did the Apostles in the primitiue Church, lay no burthen vpon the Gentiles,* but that they shoulde abstaine from haynous thinges, as from thynges offred to idols, and from bloud, and strangled, and fornicatyon. As touching this second comming, speaketh Esay: On that day the roote of Iesse which standeth for a signe or marke to the people, to hym shall the heathen make theyr homage and supplication, and hys sepulchre shall be glorious: and in that daye shall it come to passe, that the Lorde shall the second tyme put to his hande, to possesse the remnant of hys people &c. And he shall lift vp a token toward the nations, and hee shall assemble the runnagate people of Israel that were fled, and those that were dispersed of Iuda shall he gather together from the fower quarters of the earth. And the zealous emulation of Ephraim shall be broken to peeces, and the enemyes of Iuda shall come to nought. Paule to the Thessalonians sayeth: We beseeche you brethren, by the comming of our Lorde Iesus Chryst, and of our gathering together before him: that you be not soone remooued from your vnderstanding, neyther that you bee put in feare, as though the day of the Lorde were at hand, neyther as it were by letter sent by vs, neither by spirite, nor yet by talke. Let not any bodye by any meanes bring you out of the waye, or seduce you: For except there shall first come a departyng, and that the man of sinne, the sonne of perdition shalbe disclosed, whych maketh resistaunce, and is aduaunced aboue all thing that is called God, or that is worshipped: so that he doth sitte in the temple of God,*shewing hymselfe as if he were God. Do ye not remember that whilst I was as yet with you, I tolde you of thys: and nowe you knowe what keepeth hym backe, that he may be vttered in hys due tyme: For euen nowe doth he worke the mysterie of iniquitie, onely that he which holdeth, may holde styll vntill he be come to light: and then shall that wicked one be disclosed, whom the Lorde Iesus shall slaye wyth the breath of hys mouth, and shall destroy with the brightnesse of his comminge, euen hym whose comming is accordyng to the workyng of Sathan, in all power, with signes and lying wonders, and in all deceipfull leading out of the truthe towards those that do perysh, because that they receiue not hartely the loue of truth, that they might be saued.

Christ being demaunded of the Apostles, what should be the token of his comming, & of the end of the worlde: sayd vnto them. There shall come many in my name, saying, I am Christ, and they shall seduce many. Also he telleth them of many other signes, of battayles, famine, pestilence, and earthquakes. But the geatest signe of all he teacheth to bee this.*When you shall see (sayth he) the abomination of desolation stādyng in the holy place, he that readeth, let him vnderstand. But Luke 21. in his Gospel speaketh more plainely hereof. When you therefore shall see Ierusalem to be compassed about with an army, then knowe ye that the desolation thereof shall drawe nigh. And afterward it followeth: And they shall fall by the face of the sword, and shalbe led away captiue to all nations, and Ierusalem shalbe troden vnder foote of the heathen, vntill the tymes of the nations bee fulfilled. Now in Daniel thus it is writtē of this matter. And after 72. weekes, shal Christ be slain, neyther shall that be his people, that will deny him. And as for the Citie and Sanctuarie, shall a people (wyth his captayne that will come with them) destroy the sayde Citie and sanctuarie,*and hys ende shalbe to be wasted vtterly, till it be brought to naught, and after the ende of the warre, shall come the desolation appoynted. In one weeke shall he confirme the couenant to many, and wythin halfe a weeke shall the offering and sacrifice cease. And in the temple shall there bee the abomination of desolation, and euen vnto the end shall the desolation continue. And els wher••n Daniel, thus it is written. From the tyme that the continuall sacrifice shalbe offered,*and that the abhominatyon shalbe placed in desolation, there shal be 1290. dayes.

Nowe, if any man will beholde the Chronicles, he shal finde, that after the destruction of Ierusalem was accomplished, and after the strong hand of the holy people was fully dispersed, and after the placing of the abhominatyon, that is to saye, the Idoll of desolation of Ierusalem, wythin the holy place, where the temple of God was before, there had passed 1290, dayes taking a day for a yere, as commonly it is taken in the Prophets. And the times of the heathen people are fulfilled, after whose rytes and customes God suffered the holy Citie to be trampled vnder foote for 42. monethes.* For although the Christyan Church, which is the holy Citie, contynued in the fayth from the Ascension of Chryst, euen till thys time: yet hath it not obserued and kept the perfection of the fayth all this whole season. For soone after the departure of the Apostles, the fayth was kept wyth the obseruatyon of y^t rites of the Gentiles, and not of the rites of Moses law, nor of the lawe of the Gospell of Iesus Chryst, Wherefore seing that this time of the errour of the Gentiles is fulfilled: it is likely that Christ shall call the Gentiles from the rytes of their gentilitie, to the perfection of the Gospell, as hee called the Iewes frō the lawe of Moyses to the same perfection, in his first comming: that there may be one shepefolde of the Iewes and Gentiles, vnder one shepeheard Seing therefore that Antichrist is knowen which hath seduced the nations: then shall the elec• after that they haue forsaken the errours of their Gentilitie, come through the light of Gods word, to the perfection of the Gospel, & that same seducer shalbe slayne with the sword of gods worde. So that by these things it doth partly appeare vnto mee, why y^t at this time rather then at an other time, this matter of Antichrist is moued.

And why that this motiō is come to passe in this kingdome, rather then in other kingdomes: me thinkes there is good reason, because that no nation of the Gētiles was so soone conuerted to Chryst as were the Brytons the inhabitauntes of this kingdome: For to other places of the worlde there were sent preachers of the fayth, who, by the workyng of miracles and continuall preaching of y^e word of God,* and by greuous passion and death of the bodye, dyd conuert the people of those places: But in this kingdome, in the time of Lucius kyng of the Brytons, and of Eleutherius Byshop of the Romaines did Lucius heare of the Romaines that were Infidels (by the waye of rumors and tales) of the Christian fayth, whych was preached at Rome. Who beleued straightwayes, and sent to Rome, to Eleutherius for men skilfull to informe hym more fully in the very fayth it selfe: at whose comming he was ioyfull, and was baptised with his whole kingdom. And after the receiuing of the fayth,* they neuer forsooke it, neyther for any maner false preaching of other, neyther for any maner of tormēts, or yet assaults of the Paynims, as in other kindomes it hath come to passe. And thus it seemeth to me the Britons amongst other natiōs, haue ben, as it were by the spirituall election of God, called & conuerted to the fayth.

Of them as me seemeth,* did Esay prophecy saying: For they did see to whō there was nothing told of him, & they did behold, that had not heard of him. And againe, behold, thou shalt call a nation which thou knewest not: & natyons that haue not knowen thee, shall runne vnto thee: for the lord thy God, & y^e holy one of Israel, shall glorify thee.

Of this kingdome, did S. Iohn in the Apocalips prophecy (as me semeth) where he said, The Dragō stode before the woman, which was about to be deliuered of child, to the intent y^t when she had brought it forth into y^e world, he might deuour vp her sōne: & she brought forth her child which was a māchild,* who should gouern al natiōs with an yron rod. And the same sonne was taken vp to God, & to his throne.* And y^e womā fled into the wildernes, wheras she had a place prepared of God, y^t they may feede her. 1260. dayes. And agayne in the same chapter, after that the Dragon saw that he was cast out vpō y^e earth, he did persecute the womā, which brought forth the manchild. And there were geuen to the womā two wings of a great Eggle, that she might flee into the wilderness into her place, where as she is fostred vp for a time, times, & a halfe time, from the face of the Serpent. And the Serpent did cast as it were a floud of water after the woman, to the intēt that he might cause her to be drowned by y^e floud: and the earth opening her mouth, did heare the woman, & did swallow vp the floud which the Dragon did cast out of his mouth. Let vs see how these sayinges may bee applyed vnto this kingdom rather then to other kingdomes. It is wel known y^t this kingdome is a wildernes or a desert place, because that the Philosophers & wisemen did not passe vpon it, but did leaue it for a wildernes and desert, because it is placed without the clymates.*

Vnto this place fled y^e woman, that is to say, y^e Church (which by fayth did spiritually bring forth Christ into the world) where as she was fed with the heauenly bread, the flesh and bloud of Iesus Christ, for 1260. daies, seing that for so many daies, taking a day for a yere, the Brytons cōtinued in y^e faith of Christ, which thing cannot be found so of any Christen kingdome, but of this desert: and wel is it said, that she flew to this place. For whom y^e East came the faith into Brytaine, not by walking in iourney, nor yet by sayling: for then should it haue come by Rome, Italy, Almaine, France, which cānot be found: & therefore she flew ouer those places, & rested not in them, euen as a birde flying Page 481 ouer a place, resteth not in the same: but rested in thys wildernes for a time, times, and halfe a time, that is, 1260. yeres from the first comming of the faith into Britaine vntill this present.

In saying for a time, times, and halfe a time, there is a going forward from the greater to the lesse. The greatest time that we name, is a 1000. yeres, there is a time: and the next time that is lesse in the singuler number, is one 100. yere. In the plural number, times signifie that there be mo hundreths then one, at lest 200. yeres. Wherefore if they be put vnder a certaine number, it must nedes be that they be two, but the same two cānot fitly be called some times; except they be hundreths. For in that, that there is a goyng downe from the greater to the lesse, when as it is sayde a time, times, and half a time, and that the number of a 1000. is likely assigned for a time: it must nedes folow that times must be taken for hundreths, and half a time for 60. because it is the greater halfe of an hundreth yeres, though that 50. be the euen half. And when that the serpent sent the water of the persecution after the woman to cause her to be drowned of the floud: then did the earth, that is to wit, y^e stablenes of faith helpe the woman, by supping vp the water of tribulation. For in the most cruel persecution of Dioclesian and Maximiane against the Christians, when as christianity was almost euery wher roted out: yet did they in this kingdom stand continually in the faith, vnmoueable. And so, considering that the Britons, were conuerted to y^e faith of Christ, as you would say, by an election and piking out amongst all the nations of the heathen, and that after they had receiued the faith, they did neuer starte backe from the faith for no maner of tribulation: It is not to be meruailed it in their place y^e calling of the Gentiles, be made manifest to the profiting of the gossell of Iesus Christ, by the reuealing of Antichrist.

But besides this, me seemeth that Ezechiel doth specially speake of them, whereas hee speaketh of the fall of the prince of Tyre, saying: for asmuch as thy heart is lifted vp as if it were the hart of God, therefore beholde: I wil bring vpon thee, some of the strongest of the heathen, & they shall draw their naked swords vpon the beauty of thy wisdom, and they shall defile thy comelines, and they shall slay thee, and pull thee out, and thou shalt die in the slaughter of the slaine persons, in the heart of the sea.

This prince who sayth, that he himself is God, & doth sit in Gods chaire in y^e heart of the sea, doth signify (as most likely it seemeth to me) that Antichrist shalbe destroyed by the most mighty persons of the Gentils folke, through the sworde of the worde of God.* Because that amongst the other Gentiles, there haue bene none more strong then the Britones, either in their body or their faith, & in their bodely warres there haue bene none more mighty then they. For neuer in warres haue they bene vanquished, but by their owne sedition or treason. But how many kingdomes haue they conquered? Yea, and nother by the most mighty city of Rome, could they be driuen out of their kingdome, vntill that God sent vpon them pestilence and famine: whereby they being wasted, were compelled to leaue their country, which thing I haue not hard of any other people. Now, in the faith, haue they bene amongst all the people, the strongest, as before is sayd, because that by no tribulation, could they be compelled to forsake the faith.* Wherefore of them, this seemeth to me to be vnderstanded. Thē I wil bring vpon thee, some of the most strongest people, & they shal draw their naked swordes, &c. By these things it may plainly appeare, why at this time (rather then in time past) thys matter is stirred vp: and why in this kingdome (rather then in other kingdomes) the calling of the Gentiles is intreated of, to the verifying of the Gospell, through the disclosing of Antichrist.

But forasmuch as many tales and fables are tolde of Antichrist and his comming, and many things whych doe rather seduce then instruct the hearers, are applied to hym out of the scriptures of the prophets: we will briefly wryte those things which are spoken of hym, and we will shewe that the same fable sprang from the error of people imagining, & from no truth of the scriptures prophesying. Now then they do say, that Antichrist shall be borne in Babylon of the tribe of Dan, & conceiued of the mixture of man and woman in sinne, because that Christe was borne of a virgin, and conceiued of the holy ghost. They say, that he shall be an ill fauoured personage, because that it is wrytten of Christ: comely and beautifull is he, beyonde the sonnes of men. They say that he shall preach three yeres and an halfe where Christ preached, & that he shall circumcise himselfe, and say that he is Christ, and the Messias sent for the saluation of the Iewes. And they say, that he shal 3. maner of waies seduce the people by false miracles, giftes, and torments. So that whom he shall not be able to ouercome w^t myracles nor with gifts, those shall he goe about to ouercome with diuers kinds of tormēts. And those that he shal seduce, will he marke with hys tokens in their forehead or hands. He shal sit in the temple of God, and cause himselfe to be worshipped as God. He shall fight (as they say) with the 2. witnesses of Christ, Enoch & Hely, and shal kill thē, and he himselfe shall finally be slaine with lightening.* To this imagined man of their own imagination, but of none of the prophets foreshewed (at least in no such wyse as this is) do they apply the Prophets, as this of Daniel: When y^r cotinual sacrifice shalbe taken away, & abomination shall be placed to desolation: That is (say they) when the worshipping of God shalbe taken away, & desolation (to wit, Antichrist) shall abominably shewe foorth hymselfe to be worshipped, then shall there be 1290. dayes: that is to say, 3. yeres and a halfe. And this time doe they say is the time, times, and halfe a time. And when it is sayde in Daniell: Blessed is hee that looketh for, and cōmeth to a 1335. dayes. This do they say, is thus to be vnderstanded. 45. dayes of repentance to such as haue worshipped Antichrist: whych 45.

dayes added to the 1290. make 1335. daies. Which dayes they that shall reach vnto, shalbe called blessed.

They apply also to thys Antichrist,* this saying of the Apocalips: I saw a beast rising vp out of the Sea, hauing 7. heads, and 10. horns, who had power geuē him to make 42. moneths. Which moneths (as they say) do make 3. yere & a halfe, in which Antichrist shall raigne. And many other things there are told, and applied vnfitly to this imagined Antichrist, y^t are not truly grounded vpon the scriptures.

Now,* let vs shew the errors of this fable. First of al, if there shall come such one (saying expresly that he is Christ) what Christian would be seduced by him, though he shuld do neuer so many miracles: neither shall he come after the maner of a seducer, which shal shew himself an expresse aduersary. Neither is it likely that the Iewes can be seduced by such a one,* seeing that Christ is not promised vnto them of the stocke of Dan by any of the Prophets, but of y^e stocke of Iuda: nor yet is he promised to thē to be a king warlike, but peaceable, taking warre away, & not making warre. For of Christ sayeth Esay:* And in the last dayes, shall there be prepared the mountaine of the house of the Lorde, in the toppe of the mountaines, and it shalbee exalted aboue the hilles: and to it, shall all the nations haue great recourse, and manye people shal goe and say: Come, let vs go vp to the mountaine of the Lord, and to the house of the God of Iacob, and hee shall teache vs his wayes,* and wee shall walke in his pathes. For out of Sion shall there goe a lawe, and the word of the Lord from Ierusalem, and he shall iudge the nations, & reprove much people. And they shall turne their swordes into plowshares, and their speares into sithes. There shall not a nation lift vp it selfe against an other nation, nor yet shall they bee any more exercised to warre.* And againe: A litle babe is borne to vs, and a sonne is geuen to vs, and his Imperiall kingdome vpon his shoulder, and his name shall bee called: The great counsaillour: The mighty God: The father of the world to come: The Prince of peace. His Empire shall be multiplied, and there shalbe no ende of his peace. He shall sit vpon the seat of Daud, and vpon his kingdom: that he may make it stedfast and strong in iudgement, and in iustice, from hencefoorth & for euermore. Zachary doeth say of Christ:* Reioyce thou greatly, O thou daughter Sion, be thou exceeding merrie, O daughter Ierusalem: Beholde thy king shall come a righteous person, and a Sauior vnto thee, and yet he a poore man, and getting vp vpon an asse, euen vpon a yong colt of the she asse. And I wil scatter abroad the chariot of Ephraim, and the horse of Ierusalem. And the bow of warre shalbe dispersed,* and he shall speake peace to the nations, and hys power shall be from the sea to the sea, and from the floud vnto the borders of the earth.

By which thinges it is manifest, that the wise Iewes knewe well inough, Christ to be promised to them of the stocke of Iuda and not of the stocke of Dan: & that he was geuen, all to peace & not to warre: Therefore it is not likely, that they cā be seduced by such a one. But if there should haue beene in time to come some such singular Antichrist, then would Christ (seing he loued his) haue sayd somewhat vnto thē of him. Now, of one singularly doth he not speak: but of many, saying. Many shall come in my name, & say, I am Christ: and they shal seduce many persons. But now let vs see, how the prophecies in Daniell, & the Apocalips (aforesayd) be falsly and erroneously applied to the same imagined Antichrist.* For in Daniel the ix. chapter thus it is written. And after 72. weekes shall Christ be slaine, and they which will deny him shall not be his people. And the Citie and sanctuary, shal a people, with their Captain that shal come with them destroy, whose end shalbe vtter desolation, and after the end of the war a determined destruction. Now, he shall in one weeke confirme his couenaunt Page 482 towards many, and in the halfe weke shal the offring and sacrifice cease, and in the temple shall there be an abomination of desolation, and euē to the fulfilling vp of all, and to the end, shal the desolation continue. It is plaine & manifest that this prophecy is now fulfilled. For the people of Rome with their Captaine, destroyed Ierusalem euen to the ground, and the people of the Iewes was slayne and scattered.* And the abomination, that is, the Idol of desolation was placed of Adrian, in the last destruction in Ierusalem in the holy place, that is to say, in a place of the tēple. And from that time hetherto haue passed neare about 1290. dayes, taking a day for a yeare, as Daniel takes it in hys prophecies, and other prophets likewise. For Daniel speaking of 62. weekes, doeth not speake of the weekes of daies but of yeares. So therfore when he sayth: From the time that the continual sacrifice was taken away. &c. 1290. dayes must be taken for so many yeares, from the tyme of the desolation of Ierusalem, euen vnto the reuealing of Antichrist: and not for 3. yeares and an halfe, which they say, Antichrist shall raigne. And againe, whereas Daniel sayd, How long till the ende of these marueilous matters? it was aunswered him.* For a time, and times, and halfe a time. Beholde also, how vnfitly they did assigne this time, by 3. yeares and a halfe, which they say, Antichriste shall raigne. For when as it is sayde, a time, times, and halfe a time: there is a going downward from the greater to the lesse: from the whole to the part, because it is from a time to halfe time. If therefore, there be a going downward from the whole to the part, by the middest (which is greater then the whole it selfe) the going downwarde is not meete nor agreeing. And thys is done when as it is sayd, that a time, times, and halfe a time is a yeare, two yeares, and halfe a yeare. Wherefore more fitly it is sayd, that a time, times and halfe a time, doth signifie 1290. yeares, as is before sayde in the chapter preceding. Thus therefore is the prophecie of Daniel falsly applied to that imagined Antichrist.

Likewise is the proces of the Apocalips applied to the same imagined Antichrist,* too much erroneously. Because that the same cruell beast which came vp out of the sea, hauing 7. heads, and 10. hornes, to whome there was power geuen ouer euery tribe, people, and tounge, and the power geuen for the space of 42. monethes: Thys beast doth note thē Romaine Emperors, which most cruelly did persecute the people of God, aswell Christians as Iewes. For whē as the condēnatiō of the great whore sitting vpon the many waters was shewed to Iohn: he saw the same woman sitting vpon the purple coulored beast full of the names of blasphemy,* hauing 7. heads, and 10. hornes: and he saw a woman being dronken with the bloud of the Saintes and Martyrs of Iesu.* And the angell expounding and telling him the mistery of the woman and the beast that caried her sayde: That 7. heades are 7. hilles, and are 7. kinges: Fiue are fallen, one is, the other is not yet come: & when he shall come, he must reigne a short time. And y^e 10. hornes whiche thou sawest, are 10. kinges, who haue not yet taken theyr kingdome,* but shall receiue theyr power as it were in one hour, vnder the beast. And finally he sayth, y^e woman whō thou sawest, is the great Citty, which hath the kingdome ouer the kings of the earth. And it is manifest that the City of Rome, at the time of this prophecy, had the kingdom ouer the kings of the earth. And this City was borne vp & vpholden by her cruell & beastly Emperors: who by theyr cruelty and beastlynes did subdue vnto thēselues in a maner, all the kingdomes of the world, of a zeale to haue lordship ouer others, and not vertuously to gouerne the people that were theyr subiectes, seeing that they thēselues did lacke all vertue, and drew backe others from the fayth and from vertue.

Wherefore what cruell beast comming vp out of the sea, doth rightly note the Romain Emperors,* who had power ouer euery language, people and couētry. And the power of this beast was for 42. moneths: because that from the first Emperour of Rome, that is to say, Iulius Cesar, vnto the ende of Fredericke the last Emperour of Rome there were 42. monethes, taking a moneth for 30. dayes, as the monethes of the Hebrues and Grecians are, and taking a day alwayes for a yeare, as commonlye it is taken in the Prophetes. By whiche thinges it may playnely appeare, how vnfitly this prophecy is applied to that imagined Antichrist, and the 42. moneths taken for three yeares and an halfe, which (they say) he shall reigne in agaynst the saying of the Prophetes, because that dayes are taken for yeares. As in the 1.* of the Apocal. They shall be troubled 10. dayes. Which do note the most cruel persecution of Dioclesian against the Christians that endured 10. yeares. And in an other place of the Apocalips,* it is written of the smoke comming vp out of the bottomles pit. Out of which pit there came foorth Grashoppers into the earth:* and to them was power geuen, as scorpions haue power, to vexē & to trouble men 5. moneths. Now it is manifest, that from the beginning of the Friers minours and preachers, to the time that Armachanus, began to disclose and vncouer their hypocrisie, and their false foundation of valiant begging vnder the pouertie of Christ, were 5. monethes, taking a moneth for 30. dayes, and a day for a yeare. And to Ezechiel were dayes geuen for yeares. Wherefore it is an vnfit thing to assigne the 42. moneths being appoynted to the power of the beast, vnto 3. yeares and a halfe, for the reigne of that phantasticall and imagined Antichrist: specially seing that they do apply to his reigne y^r 1290.* dayes in Daniel, which make 42. moneths, and in the Apocalips they assigne hym 42. moneths. It is plaine that the Psalterie and the harpe agree not. And therefore seing that it is sufficiently shewed, that the same fabling tale of that imagined Antichrist to come, is a fable and erroneous: Let vs goe forward to declare whether Antichrist be already come, and yet is he hid from many, and must be opened and disclosed wythin a litle while, according to the truthe of the holy Scripture, for the saluation of the faithfull.

And because that in the first conclusion of mine aunswere, I haue conditionally put it, who is that Antichrist lying priuie in the hid Scriptures of the Prophets: I will passe on the declaration of that cōclusion, bringing to light those things, whych lay hid in darkenesse, because nothing is hid which shal not be disclosed, and nothing couered that shal not be knowen: And therefore, the thing that was sayd in the darkenesse, let vs say in the light: and the thyng that we haue heard in the eare, let vs preache vppon the house toppes. I therefore as I haue before sayd, so say, that if the high bishop of Rome, calling himselfe the seruant of God, and the chiefe Vicare of Christ in this world, do make and iustify many lawes contrary to the gospell of Iesu Christ:* then is he the chiefe of many, whych comming in the name of Christ, haue said, I am Christ, who haue seduced many. Which is the first part of the first conclusion, and is manifest. For Christ is called of Hebrues the very same, that we call annoynted.* And amongst them there was a double sort of legall annoynting by the lawe, the one of kings and the other of Priestes. And aswell were the kynges, as the priestes, called in the lawe, Christes. The kings, as in the Psalme. The kings of the earth stode vp together, and the Princes assembled them selues in one agaynst the Lorde and against hys Christ or annoynted. And in the bookes of the kings very often are the kinges called Christes.* And our Sauour was Christ, or annoynted king, because hee was a king for euermore vpon the throne of Dauid, as the Scriptures doe very oftentimes witnesse. The Priestes also were called annoynted, as where it is wrytten: Doe not yee touch my Christes, that is, mine annoynted ones, and be not ye spitefull against my Prophetes. And so was our Sauour Christ, a Priest for euer according to the order of Melchisedech.

Seyng then, that the Byshops of Rome do say, that they are the high Priestess: they say also therein that they are kynges,* because they say that they haue the spirituall sword pertainyng to their Priesthode, and the corporall sword which agreeth for a kynges state. So is it playne, that really & in very deede, they say that they are Christs, albeit that expresly they be not called Christes. Now that, they come in the name of Christ, it is manifest, because they say that they are his principal Vicars in this world, ordeined of Christ specially for the gouernement of the Christian Church.* Therefore, seyng they say, that really and in very deede they are Christes, and the chief frendes of Christ: If they make and iustifie many lawes contrary to the Gospell of Iesu Christ, then is it playne that they themselues in earth are the principal Antichristes, because there is no worse plague and pestilence, then a familiar enemy. And if in secret they be agaynst Christ, and yet in open appearaunce they say that they are his frendes: they are somuch the more meete to seduce and deceiue the Christiā people, because that a manifest enemy shall haue much a doe to deceaue a man, because men trust him not: but a priuey enemy pretendyng outward frendshyp, may easly seduce, yea those that be wise.

But that this matter may the more fully be knowē, let vs see what is the law & doctrine of Christ, that ought to be obserued of all faithfull people:* which beyng knowen, it shalbe an easy thing to see, if the bishop of Rome doe make or maintaine any lawes, contrary to the law of the gospell of Iesu Christ.

I say then, that the lawe of Christ is charitie, whych is the perfect loue of God and of Christ. This thing is plaine and manifest. For Christ being demaunded of a certayne Page 483 doctour of the law: What is the greatest commaundement in the lawe▪ answered.* Thou shalt loue the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soule, and with all thy minde: This is the principall & greatest commaundement. And as for the second, it is like vnto this: Thou shalt loue thy neighbor as thine owne selfe. In these two commaundements, doth the whole law and Prophets depend. And in an other place Christ sayeth: All maner of things therefore, y^t you would that men should do to you, the same also do ye vnto them. For thys is the lawe and the Prophets. And in Iohn the 13. chap. sayth Christ. And now doe I say vnto you,* I geue you a new commaundement, y^t you shuld loue eche other: as I loued you, in like maner that you also shuld loue one another. In this shal all men know that you are my disciples, if you shall haue loue one towards an other.* And Iohn 15. chapter: This is my commaudemēt that you loue together as I haue loued you. Greater loue then this, hath no body, that a man shuld geue his life for his frendes. The Apostle Peter sayth in his first Epistle 4.* chapter: Aboue all things, hauing continually charity one towards an other, for charitye couereth the multitude of sinnes. Be yee harborers, and intertaine ye one an other without grudging: euery one as hee hath receaued grace, so let him bestowe it vpon an other man, as the good stewards of the manifold graces of God. If any mā speak, let him speake as the word of God. If any man doe ought for an other, let it be don with singlenes and vnfained verity, ministred of God to vs ward, that in all thyngs God may be honoured through Iesus Christ our Lord. Iames in his Epistle the 2.* chapter. If ye performe the royal lawe accordingly to the Scriptures (thou shalt loue thy neighbour) ye do wel: But if ye be parcial in receiuing and preferring mens personages, ye worke wickednes being blamed of the law as transgressors. And againe, so speake ye, and so do ye, as ye should nowe begin to be iudged by the law of libertie. What shall it auaille (my brethren) if a man say he haue faith, and haue no workes? Neuer shall y^t faith be able to saue him. For if a brother or sister be naked, and haue neede of daily foode, and some of you say to them, goe ye in peace, be ye made warme and satisfied: and if ye shall not geue those things that are necessary for the body, what shall it auaile? Euen so faith, if it haue not workes, is dead in it selfe.

John in his first epistle the 3. chap. This is the tidings whych you haue heard from the beginning, that you shuld loue one another. And againe, we know that we are tra^slated from death to life, if we loue the brethren: He that loueth not, abideth in death. And againe, herein do we know the loue of God, because that he hath laide downe hys life for vs, & we ought to lay down our liues for the brethren. He that shall haue the substaunce of thys world, and shall see his brother haue neede, and shall shut up hys bowelles from him: howe abideth the loue of God in hym? My little children, let vs not loue in worde nor tounge, but in deede and truth. And againe 4. chap. Most dearly beloued, let vs loue together. For loue is of God, he y^t loueth not, knoweth not God, for God is loue. In thys thing hath the loue of God apeare in vs, that God hath sent his only begotten sonne into the world, that we shuld liue by him. Herein is loue: not y^t we haue loued God, but that he hath first loued vs, and hath sent hys sonne an attonement for oure sinnes. Most dearly beloued, if God haue loued us: we so ought to loue together. No mā hath sene God at any time: if we loue together, God abideth in vs, & hys loue is perfect in vs. And againe, let vs loue God, for he hath first loued vs. If a man shall say, I loue God, & do hate hys brother, he is a lyar. For he that loueth not his brother whom he seeth, how cā he loue God whom he seeth not? And this commaundement haue we of God, y^t who so loueth God, should loue his brother also. Paule the Apostle in his epistle to the Rom. 13.* chapter. O we ye nothing to no body, sauing that ye should loue together, for he that loueth hys brother hath fulfilled the lawe. For thou shalt not commit adultery, thou shalt not murder, thou shalt not steal, thou shalt not beare fall witness, thou shalt not couet thy neighbors good: and if there be any other commaundement, it is plētifully fulfilled in this word: thou shalt loue thy neighbor as thy selfe. Wherefore the fulfilling of the law is loue.

Paule to the Corinthians 5. sayeth: If I shoulde speake with the tonges of men and angels, and yet haue not charitie, I am become as it were a peece of sounding mettall or rinking cimball. And if I shall haue all prophecie, & know all misteries, and all knowledge, and shall haue all faith, so that I might remooue mountaines, and yet shall not haue charitie: I am nothing. And if I shall geue abroade all my goodes to feede the poore, and shall geue vp my body to be burned, and yet haue not charitie: it profite mee nothing. To the Galathians 5. sayeth Paule: For you my brethren, are called into liberty: doe ye not geue your liberty for an occasion of the flesh, but by charity of the spirit, serue ye one an other. For all y^e law is fulfilled in one saying: thou shalt loue thy neighbor as thine owne self.* To the Eph. 4. chap. he saith: I therefore that suffer bonds in the Lord, do beseech you, that you would walke worthy of the calling where w^t ye are called, with all humblenes and mildnes, with patience forbearing one another in loue, being carefull to kepe the vnitie of the spirit, in the bond of peace: that you be one body, and one spirite, euen as you be called in one hope of your calling.* And againe in the 5. chap. Be ye followers of me, as most deare children, and walke ye in loue as Christ also hath loued vs, and hath deliuered vp hymselfe for vs, an offring and sacrifice to God of a sweete fauour,* To the Phil. thus hee speaketh in the 1. chap. Onely let your conuersation be worthy of the Gospell of Christ, that eyther when I shall come and see you, or els in mine absence. I may heare of you, that you stand stedfast in one spirit, laboring together with one accorde for the faith of the Gospell. And in nothing be ye afraide of the aduersaries, whych is to them a cause of damnation, but to you of saluation, and y^t of God. For to you it is geuen, not onely that you should beleue in him, but also that you shuld suffer wyth him, you hauing the lyke fight and battaile that both you haue seene in me, and also now do heare of me. If therefore there be any consolation in Christ, if any comfort of charitie, if any felowship of the spirite, if any bowels of compassion fulfill you my ioy, that you may be of one iudgement, hauing one and the self same charitie, being of one accord, of one maner of iudgement, doing nothing of contention, nor of vaine glory, but in humblenes, accompting other amongst you, euery one better then your selues, not euery body looking vppon the things that be hys owne, but those that belong vnto others.* And to the Coloss. 3. chapter thus he writeth: You therefore as the electe of God, holy, and beloued, put vpon you the bowels of mercy, gentlenesse, humblenesse, lowlinesse, modestie, pacience, bearing one wyth an other, & geuing place to your selues (if any haue a quarel against any body) euen as the Lord forgaue you, so do you also. Aboue all things haue ye charitie, which is the bonde of perfection, and let the peace of Christ triumph in your hearts, in whych peace you also are called in one body. And be yee kinde & thankfull. And to the Thessalonians thus Paule writeth in the 4.* chapter. As concerning brotherly charity, we haue no neede to wryte vnto you: for you yourselues haue learned of God, that you shoulde loue one an other. And the same thing ye do towards all y^e brethren throughout all Macedonia.

Out of all these & many other places of the holy scripture it sufficiently appeareth, that the law of Christ is charitie, neither is there any vertues commaunded of Christ, or any of hys Apostles to be obserued of the faithfull people, but that it commeth out of charitie, or els doeth nourish charitie.

The lawe is geuen by Moses, and the truth by Christ. Christ came not to vnlose the lawe and the Prophetes,* but to fulfill them. But yet many things were lawful & might haue bene obserued in the time of the law, whych in y^e tyme of grace must not be obserued. And many things wer vnlawfull to them that were vnder the law, which in the time of grace are lawful inough. After what sort then he did not loose the lawe, but did fulfill it, it is necessary to declare, for those thyngs which hereafter must be sayd. For amongst Christians, many things are iudged to be lawfull, because in the former testament in the law, they were lawfull: and yet they be expresly contrary to Christes Gospell. But the authors of such thinges doe argue and reason thus: Christ came not to loose the law of the prophets. Now after what sort he did not vnlose them, it is manifest by the holy scripture: that the law geuen by Moses, was written in tables of stone, to declare the hardnes of y^e peoples hart towards the loue of God, or of Christ. But Christ hath wrytten his law in the harts and in the minds of his, that is to say, the law of perfect loue of God & of Christ. Which law whosoeuer obserueth, he doth obserue the law of Moyses, & doth much greater works of perfection, then were the works of y^e law. Thus therefore were the morals of the old law fulfilled in the law of the charitie of Christ, and not vnloosed: because they are much more perfectly obserued, then of the Iewes. This I say, if the Christians doe obserue the commandements of Christ in such sorte, as he commanded the same to be obserued. Christ hath fulfilled the lawes morall of the old testament, because that the morals and iudicials were ordained, that one person should not do iniury to an other, & that euery man should haue paid him that is hys. Now, they that are in charity, wil do no iniury to others, Page 484 neither do they take other mens goodes away from them. Nay it seeketh not her owne things. For charitie seeketh not the things that be her owne. Wherefore, much lesse by a stronger reason it ought not to seke for other mens goods. And whē as the iudicials & morals were ordained: Christ did not by y^e workes of the law iustifie the beleuers in him, but by grace iustified them frō their sins. And so did Christ fulfill that by grace, that the lawe could not by iustice.

Paule to the Romaines declareth in a godly discourse,* and to the Galath. likewise: that none shall be iustified by the workes of the lawe, but by grace, in the faith of Iesu Christ. As for the morals & ceremonies of the lawe, as circumcision, sacrifices for offence and for sinnes,* first fruites, tenthes 〈◇〉, diuers sortes of washings, the sprinkling of bloud, the sprinkling of ashes, abstaining from vnclean meats whych are ordeined for the sanctifying and clensing of the people frō sinne, no nor yet the praiers of the priests, neither the preachings of the prophets, could clense a man from his sin. For death raigned euen from Adam to Moises, and sinne from Moises to Christ, as Paule declareth to the Romaines in the 5. chapter.* But Christ, willing to haue mercy,* and not sacrifice, being a Priest for euer after the order of Melchisedech, & an high Priest of good things to come: did neither by the bloud of goats or calues but by his owne bloud enter in once vnto the holy places, when as euerlasting redemption was founde:* neither did Iesus enter into the holy places that were made wyth handes, which are the examples of true thynges, but into the very heauen, y^t now he may appeare before the countenaunce of God for vs. Nor yet he did so, y^t he should offer vp himselfe oftentimes,* as the high Byshop entred into the holy place euery yeere w^t straunge bloud (for otherwise he must nedes haue suffred oftentimes sithens y^e beginning of the world) but now in the latter end of the world hath he once appeared by his owne sacrifice, for the destruction of sinne. And like as it is decreed for men once to die, and after that commeth iudgement: euen so was Christ once offred vp to cōsume away the sinnes of many. The second time shall hee appeare without sinne, to the saluation of such as looke for him. For the law hauing a shadow of good things to come, and not the very image or substaunce it selfe of the things: can neuer, by those sacrifices which they offer (of one selfe same sort continually yere by yere) make them perfect that come vnto her. Otherwise men would leaue of offring because that those worshyps being once clensed, should haue no more pr•••e of conscience for sinne afterwarde. But in them is their remembrance made of sinnes euery yere. For it is impossible,* that by the bloud of goats & bulles, sinnes should be taken away. Wherefore, he entring into y^e world, doth say, as for sacrifice and offring thou woldst not haue, but a body hast thou framed vnto mee. And sacrifices for sinne haue not pleased thee, then said I, behold I come. In the head or principall part of the booke it is wrytten of me, that I should do thy wil, O God. Wherefore he said before, that sacrifices, oblations and burnt offerings, and that for sinne thou wouldest not haue: neyther were those thyngs pleasāt to thee whych are offred according to the law: then sayd I, behold I come, that I may do thy wil O God: He taketh away the first, that he may stablish that that folowed. In whych will, we are sanctified and made holy by the offering vp of the body of Iesus Christ, ones. And verely euery Priest, is ready euery day ministring, & oftentimes offring the self same sacrifices, which neuer can take away sinnes. But this man offering one sacrifice for sinnes, doth for euer and euer sit at Gods right hād, looking for the rest to come till that hys enemies be placed to be his footestoole. For with one offering hath hee for euer made perfect those that be sanctified. By which thinges it plainly appeareth, y^t Christ by one offring hath clensed hys from their sinnes: who could not be clensed from the same, by all the ceremonies of the law, and so did fulfill that which the priesthoode of the law could not. Wherefore onely the morals and iudicials he fulfilled by the lawe of charitie, and by grace: and the ceremonials, by one offering vp of hys body in the aultar of the crosse. And so it is plaine, that Christ fulfilled the whole lawe.

Wherefore sithens that the holy things of the law, were a shadowe of those things that were to come in the time of grace: * it were meete that all those thynges should vtterly cease amongst Christians, which should either be against charity, or the grace of Christ. Although in the time of the lawe, they were lawfull, and not vtterly contrary to it, but were figures of perfections in Christes faith: yet it were meete that they should cease at y^e comming of the perfection whych they did prefigure: as circumcision, the eating of the paschal lambe, and other ceremonial points of the law. Whereupon also Paul to the Hebrues the 7. chapter sayeth thus. If therfore the making vp of y^e perfection of all was by the Leuiticall priesthode (for the people receiued the law vnder hym) why was it necessary besides, that an other Priest should rise vp after the order of Melchisedech, * & not be called after the order of Aaron. For whē the Priesthode is remoued, it must needes be, that the lawe also be remoued. For he, in whom these things are spokē, is of an other tribe, of which, none stode present at the aulter. Because it is manifest that our Lorde had hys offspring of Iuda: in which tribe Moises spake nothing of the Priests. And besides this, it is manifest: if according to the order of Melchisedech there doe rise vp an other Priest, which was not made according to the law of the carnal commaundement, but according to the power of the life that cannot be losed. For thus he beareth witnes, that thou art a priest for euer, * after the order of Melchisedech: so that, the cōmandement, that went before, is disallowed for the weakenes & vnprofitablenesse thereof. For the lawe hath brought no body to perfection. By which things it appeareth that Christ making an end of the priesthode of Aaron, doth also make vp a full end of the law belonging to that Priesthode. Whereupon I maruell y^t your learned men doe say, that Christen folkes are bound to this small ceremonie of the paiment of tithes, and care nothing at all for other as wel the great as the small ceremonies of the lawe.

It is plaine, that the tithes were geuen to the sonnes of Leui, for their seruing in the tabernacle & in the temple of the Lord, as the first fruites were geuen to the priestes, and also part of the sacrifices, & so were the vowes for their ministry, as it appeareth in the booke of Numbers the 22. chapter. But forasmuch as the labor of those sacrifices did cease at the comming of Christ: howe should those thyngs be demaunded, which were ordained for that labour? * And seeing that the first fruits were not demaunded of Christians, which first fruits were then rather and soner demanded then the tithes: why must the tithes be demanded, except it be therefore paraduenture because that the tythes be more worth in value then be the first fruites?

Secondly, why are the lay people boūd to the paiment of tithes, more then the Leuites and the priests were to the not hauing of possessions of realties & Lordships amongst their brethren, seeing y^t the selfe same lawe in the selfe same place (where he sayeth that the tithes ought to be geuen to Leuites) sayth also to the Leuites, you shall be contented with the offering of the tithes, and haue none other thyng amongst your brethren. Wherefore seeing that the Priestes be bounde, to the not hauing of temporall Lordshippes: how are the lay people boūd, by that law (of God he meaneth, and not of man) to the paiment of tithes?

Thirdly, * as touching circumcision, which is one of the greater ceremonies of the lawe, and was geuen before the law, & was an vniuersall ceremonie, concerning the couenant betwene God & hys people, and was so much regarded in the law, that thereof it was sayde: The soule, whose flesh shall not be circumcised in the foreskin, shall pearysh from amongst his people: yet did thys ceremonie vtterly cease at the comming of Christe, although that certayne of the Iewes did say in the primatiue Church, that the Christians must needes kepe the commandement of circumcision with the faith: whom Paule reprooueth wryting thus to the Galathians the 4. chapter, where he speaketh of the children of the bondwoman & of the free woman, which do signify the two Testaments. But we (O brethren) are the children of the promise after Isaac, but like as at that time he that was borne after the flesh, did persecute hym, which was after the spirit: euen so it is now also. But what saith the scripture? Throw out the bondwoman and her sonne. The sonne of the bondwoman, shall not be heire wyth the sonne of the free woman. Wherefore brethrē, we are not the sonnes of the bondwoman, but of the free. S•ad ye stedfast in the liberty,* wherwith Christ hath deliuered you, and be not ye holden againe vnder the yoke of slavery. Behold I Paule say vnto you, if you be circumcised, Christ shall nothing profite you. For I testifie againe to euery man that circumciseth hymselfe, that hee is bounde to keepe all the whole law. Ye are vtterly voide of Christ: whosoever will be iustified in the law, are fallen from grace.

In like maner, we may reason, if we be bounde to tything, we are debtors,* & bound to keepe al the whole law. For to say that men are bound to one ceremony of the law, & not to the others, is no reasonable saying. Either therefore we are bound to them all, or to none. Also, that by the same * olde lawe, men are not bound to pay tithes, it may be shewed by many reasons, which we nede not any more to multiply & encrease, because the things that be sayd, are sufficient. Whereupon some do say, that by the Gospell we are bound to pay tithes, because Christ saide to the Pharisies, Page 485 Math. 23. chapter: Woe be you Scribes and Pharisies, whych pay your tithe of Mint, of Anets seede, and of commin: and leaue iudgement, mercy, and trueth vndone, being the weightier things of the lawe, both shuld ye haue done these things, and also not haue left the other vndone. O ye blinde guides,* that straine out a gnat, and swallowe vp a camell. Thys worde soundeth not as a commaundement or manner of bidding, wherby Christ did command tithes to be geuen: but it is a worde of disallowing the hypocrisie of the Pharisies, who of couetousnesse dyd rather weigh and esteeme tithes, because of their owne singulare commoditie, rather then other great and weighty commaundements of the lawe. And me seemeth that our men are in the same predicament of the Pharisies, which doe leaue of al y^e ceremonies of y^e old law,* keping onely the cōmandement of tything. It is manifest and plaine inoughe by the premisses, and by other places of the scripture, that Christ was a priest after the order of Melchisedech, of the tribe of Iuda, not of the tribe of Leuie: who gaue no newe commaundement of tything of any thing to him and to hys priests whome he would place after him: but whē hys Apostles sayd to him: Behold, we leaue all things & haue followed thee, what then shall we haue, hee did not aunswere them thus:* Tithes shall be paide you, neither dyd he promise them a temporall, but an euerlasting rewarde in heauen. For hee, both for foode, and also apparell taught his disciples not to be carefull. Be ye not carefull for your life, what ye shall eate, or for your body what ye shall put on. Is not the life of man more worth then the meate? and the body more worth then apparell? Beholde ye the birds of heauen,* whych do not sow, nor reape, neither yet lay vp in barnes, and yet your heauēly father feedeth them. And as for apparell, why should you be carefull? Consider the lillies of the field, how they grow, they labour not, neither do they spinne. &c. In conclusion he sayth, be not yee carefull, saying, what shall we eate, or what shall we drinke, or wherewithall shall we be couered? For all these things doe the Gentiles seeke after. For your father knoweth, yⁱ you haue neede of all these things. First therefore seeke yee for the kingdome of God and the righteousnes therof, and all these things shall be cast vnto you. And Paule ryght well remembring this doctrine, instructeth Timothe and sayth thus.* But we hauing foode and wherewithall to be couered, let vs therewyth be contented. And as the Acts of the Apostles doe declare: In the first conuersion of the Iewes at Ierusalem, they had all thinges common, and to euery one was diuision made, as nede required. Neither did the priestes make the tithes theyr owne proper goodes.* For like as it was not meete that the lay people being conuerted, should haue proprietie of goods: euen so neither that priests should haue proprietie of tithes. So that if y^e priests started backe from feruent charitie in chalenging to themselues the proprietie of tithes: it is no meruaile of departing backward (as do the priests, frō the perfection of charitie) also of the laitie to be willing to appropriate to them selues the ix. partes remayning after tithes. Wherefore, seeing that neither Christ, nor any of the Apostles, commanded to pay tithes: it is manifest and plaine, neither by the lawe of Moses, nor by Christes lawe, Christen people are bounde to pay the tithes: but by the tradition of men, they are bounde.

By the premisses nowe it is plaine, that Christ did not vndo the law,* but by grace did fulfill it. Notwithstanding, in the lawe many thynges were lawfull, which in the time of grace are forbydden, and many thynges were then vnlawfull, which now are lawfull inough. For nothing that is contrary to charitie, is lawfull to a Christian.

Let vs now heare what maner of commaundements Christ hath geuen vs in the Gospel, without the obseruation of which commaundements, charitie shal not perfectly be kept. By which cōmandements, Christ did not vndo the olde lawe, but did fulfill it. By the obseruation also of which commaundements, he teacheth vs to passe and got beyond the righteousnes of the Scribes & Pharises, who most perfectly thought themselues to keepe the law. This absolute and perfect righteousnes, which we are bound to haue beyonde the rightuousnesse of the Pharises and the Scribes, he teacheth in Math. 5.6. and 7. chap. Whych being heard, and compared to the traditiōs made and commaunded by the Romane prelates: it shall plainly appere, whether they be contrary or no. Christ therefore sayeth, you haue heard,* that it was sayd to them of the olde time. Thou shalt not kill. For hee that killeth shall be guiltie of iudgemēt. But I say vnto you, that euery one that is angry with hys brother, shall be in danger of iudgement. In thys he doeth teach, that we ought not to be angrie wyth our brethren: not that he would vndoe this did comman (thou shalt not kil) but that the same should be the more perfectly obserued. Againe he sayth. You haue heard that it was sayd, thou shalt loue thy frend, and hate thyne enemy: But I say vnto you, Loue your enemies, doe well to them that hate you, pray for them that persecute & slander you, that you may be the children of your father which is in heauen: Which maketh his sunne to arise vppon the good and the euill people, and raineth vppon the iust and vniust. For if you loue them which loue you, what reward shall you haue? Doe not the Publicanes thus? And if you shall salute your brethren onely, what great thing doe ye? Do not the heathen thus also? Be you therefore perfect, as also your heauenly father is perfect.

Againe Christ sayeth,* you haue heard that it is said: an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth: but I say vnto you, see that you resist not euill. But if any man shall strike you vppon the right cheeke, geue hym the other to. And to hym that will striue with thee for thy coate in iudgement, let hym haue thy cloke also. And whosoeuer shall constraîne thee one mile, goe with him also two other. He y^e asketh of thee geue him: and hee that will borrowe of thee, turne not thy selfe from him.

By these thinges it may plainely appeare, howe that Christ the king of peace, the Sauour of mankynde, who came to saue and not to destroy, who gaue a law of charity to be obserued of his faithfull people: hath taught vs not to be angry, not to hate our enemies, not to render euil for euill, nor to resist euill. For all these thinges doe softer and nourish peace & charitie, and do procede and come forth of charity, & when they be not kept, charity is loosed, & peace is broken. But the bishop of Rome approueth and alloweth warres, and slaughters of mē in warre, aswell against our enemies, that is, the infidels, as also against the Christians for temporall goodes. Nowe, these things are quite contrary to Christes doctrine, and to charity, and to peace.

In the decrees 23. q. 1. cap. Paratus,* it is taught, that the precepts of pacience must alwayes be retained in purpose of the heart, so that pacience w^t beneuolence must be kept in the minde secrete. But apparantly and manifestly, that thing should be done, which seemeth to doe good to those, whom we ought to wish well vnto. Wherein they geue to vnderstande, that a Christian may freely defend hymselfe. And for confirmation of thys saying, they doe say: That Christ whē he was stroken in the face of the hygh bishops seruaunt, did not fulfill (if we looke vpon the wordes) hys owne commaundement: because he gaue not to the smiter the other part,* but rather did forbid him, that he should not do it, to double his iniurie. For he sayd, if I haue spoken euill, beare witnes of euill, but if wel, why doest thou strike me? I do meruail of this saying: for first if those commandements of pacience must be kept in secrete in the minde: and seing the body doth worke at the motion of the mind, and is and ought to be mooued and ruled by the same: It must then nedes be, that if pacience be in the mind, it must appeare also outwardly in the body.

Secondly I meruail that it is said, that Christ did not fulfill his owne precept of pacience.* For it is manifest, that albeit he teaching alwayes as a good scholemaster, those things which were fit for the saluation of soules, speaking the wholesom word of instruction to the high bishops seruant, smiting him vniustly: did neither by word forbid an other stroke to be geuen on the other cheke, neither did he defend himselfe bodely from striking on the same cheeke: But speaking to him, it is likely y^e hee gaue him the other cheek, he meaneth, y^t he turned not the other cheek away. For a man tourneth not away from him whome he speaketh to, or whom he informeth, but layeth open before him al his face: Euen so do I beleue y^t Christ did, that he might fulfill in very deede that, which before hee had taught in word. Neither yet did Christ by his word or by his deede, shew any thing of defence, or of bodely resistance.

Thirdly,* I meruail why wise men leauing the plaine & manifest doctrine of Christ, wherby he teacheth pacience: do seeke corners of their imagining, to the intent they may approoue fightings and warres. Why marke they not after what manner, Christ spake to Peter striking the hygh Byshoppes seruaunt, saying: Put vp thy sworde into the sheath, for euery one that shall take the sword, shall perish with the sworde. But in an other case we must make resistance: which case may be so righteous, as it is for a mans Lorde & maister being a most rightuous man,* and yet suffering iniurie of mischieuous persons.

Fourthly,* I maruel seing that we are bound of charity & by the law of Christ to geue our liues for our brethren, how they can allow such maner of dissentions & resisting. For when thy brother shall maliciously strike thee, thou maist be sure, that he is manifestly fallen from charity, into Page 486 the snare of the deuill. If thou shalt keepe pacience, he shal be ashamed of his doing, and thou maist bow & bend hym to repentaunce, and take him out from the snare of the deuil, and cal him backe againe to charity. If thou resist, and perchaunce by resisting doest strike againe, his fury shalbe the more kindled,* & hee being stirred vp to greater wrath, peradventure shal either slay thee, or thou him. Touching thy self, thou art vncertaine, if thou go about to make resistance, whether thou shalt fall from charity, and then shalt thou goe backwarde from the perfection of Christes commaundement: Neither doest thou knowe but that it may happen thee so greatly to be moued, as that by the heate & violence of wrath,* thou shalt slay him. Whereas if thou wouldest dispose thy selfe to pacience (as Christ teacheth) thou shouldest easily auoide all these mischieues, aswel on the behalfe of thy brother, as also of thyne owne parte. Wherefore, the obseruing of charitie as the precept of pacience is to be obserued.

Fifthly, I do maruel why that for the allowing of thys corporall resistaunce, he doth say in the same Chapter: that Paule did not fulfill the precept of the pacience of Christ, when as he being stroken in the place of iudgement by the cōmandement of the high Priest, did say, God strike thee, O thou painted wal: Doest thou sit to iudge me according to the law, and doest thou cōmand me to be stricken against the lawe? It is manifest that Paule made resistance in nothing, though he spake a word of instruction to the Priest, who against the law commanded him to be stricken. And if Paul had ouerpassed the bounds of pacience, through the grief of the stroke: what of that? Must the deede of Pauls impacience for this cause be iustified, and the commandement of paciēce taught by Christ, be left vndone for Pauls deede, and corporal resistance be allowed? God forbid. For both Paule and Peter might erre. But in the doctrine of Christ there may be found no error. Wherefore, we must geue more credence & beliefe to Christes sayings, then to any liuing mans doings. Wherefore, although Paule had resisted, which I do not perceiue in that Scripture: it followeth not therof, that corporall resistance must be approued, which is of Christ expresly forbidden. I much maruel that alwayes they seeke corners and shadowes to iustifie their deedes. Why doe they not marke what great thyngs Paule reciteth hymselfe to haue suffered for Christ? And where I pray you haue they found, that hee after his conuersion, stroke any man that did hurt him? Or where doe they finde that he in expresse word doth teach such a kinde of corporal resistance? But as touching pacience, he sayth in plaine words to the Romanes: Be not wise in your owne conceits.*Render ill for ill to no body: prouiding good things not onely before God, but also before all men, if it be possible: Be at peace with all folkes as much as in you lieth: not defending your selues, my most dearely beloued, but geue you place vnto anger. For it is wrytten, vengeance is mine, & I will recompence them, sayth the Lorde. But if thine enemye shalbe an hungred, geue hym meate. If he be a thirst, geue him drinke For thus doing, thou shalt heape coales of fire vpon his head. Be not ouercomen of euill, but overcome thou euill with good.

To the Corinthians the 5. as touching iudgement and contention,* whych are matters of lesse weyght then are fightings, thus he wryteth: Nowe verely there is great faulte in you, that you be at lawe amongst yourselues. Why rather take yee not wrong? why rather suffer yee not deceit? And generally in all his Epistles he teacheth, that pacience shuld be kept,* and not corporall resistance by fighting, because charitie is pacient, it is curteous, it suffereth all things. I maruaile howe they iustifie and make good the warres by Christians, sauing onely the warres against the deuill and sinne. For seeing that it is plaine, that those things whych were in the olde Testament, were figures of things to be done in the new Testament: Therefore we must needes say, that the corporall warres being then done, were figures of the Christian warres against sinne and the deuill, for the heauenly countrey, whych is our inheritance. It is plain that it was wrytten thus of Christ. The mighty Lord, and of great power in battaile, hath girded himselfe in force and manlynnesse to the warre: and he came not to sende peace into the earth, but warre. In thys warre ought Christian people to be souldiours according to that manner whych Paule teacheth to the Ephesians the last.*Put vpon you the armour of God, that you may be able to stande against the deceites of the deuill. For wee haue not to wrastle against flesh and bloude, but against princes & potestates, against the rulers of these darknes of the world, against spirituall wickednesse in heauenly things, whyche are the high places. Wherefore take yee the armour of God, that yee may be able to resist in the euil day, and to stand perfectly in al things. Stande you therefore girded about in truth vpon your loynes, hauing put vpon you the brest plate of rightuousnesse, and your feete shoed in a readinesse to the Gospel of peace, in all things taking the shield of faith, wherwith you may quēch all the firy darts of that wicked one. And take vnto you the helmet of saluation, and the sworde of the spirite, which is the worde of God.

By these thyngs it is plaine, what are the warres of Christians,* and what are the weapons of theyr warfare. And because it is manifest, that this Testament is of greater perfectiō then the former: we must now fight more perfectly then at that time. For nowe spiritually, then corporally: nowe for an heauenly euerlasting inheritance: then for an earthly and temporall: now by pacience, then by resistance. For Christ sayeth, blessed are they that suffer persecution for righteousnesse,*for theirs is the kingdome of heauen. He saith not, blessed are they that fight for righteousnes. How can a man say, that they may lawfully make warre, & kill theyr brethren for the temporall goodes, whych peraduenture they vniustly occupy, or vniustly intende to occupy? For he that killeth an other, to gette these goods whych an other body vniustly occupieth: doeth loue more the very goodes, then hys owne brother. And then hee falling from charitie, doth kill hymselfe spiritually. If he goe forward without * charitie to make warre: then doeth he euill, and to hys owne damnation. Wherefore he doth not lawfully nor iustly in proceeding to the damnation of his own selfe & his brother, whome though he seeme vniustly to occupy his goods, yet he doth intend to kil. And what if such kinde of warres were lawfull to the Iewes:* thys argueth not, that now they are lawfull to Christians, because that theyr deedes were in a shadow of imperfection, but the dedes of Christians in the light of perfection. It was not said vnto them, All people that shal take the sword, shal perish with the sworde. What if Iohn the Baptist, disallowed corporal fightings, and corporall warfare, at such time as the souldiours asked him saying. And what shall we do? Who sayth to them, See that you strike no man, neither picke ye quarels against any, and be yee contented with your wages. Thys saying of Iohn alloweth not corporal warfare amongst Christians. For Iohn was of the Priests of the olde Testament,* and vnder the law, neyther to hym it appertayneth to follow the lawe, but to warne the people to the perfect obseruation of the lawe. For he being like wyse demaunded of the publicanes what they should doe, sayde vnto them, Doe no other thyng then is appoynted vnto you. But Christ the author of the newe Testament and of greater perfection, then wa• the perfection of the old law, which gaue newe things, as it plainly appeareth by the Gospel. So that, Christians ought to receiue information of Christ, not of Iohn. For of Iohn also doth Christ speak: Uerely I say vnto you, there hath not risen amongst the children of women, a greater then Iohn Baptist: but hee that is lesse in the kingdome of heauen, is greater then he. In which saying Christ sheweth that those that be least in the kingdome of heauen in the tyme of grace,* are placed in greater perfection thē was Iohn, which was one of them that were the elders, & he liued also in y^t time of the law in greater perfection. And whē as certain of Iohns disciples sayd vnto him, maister, he that was beyōd Iordan, to whō thou gauest witnesse, beholde hee baptiseth, and all people come vnto him. Iohn answered and sayde: A man cannot take any thing vpon him, vnlesse it shall bee geuen him from aboue. You your selues doe beare me recorde, that I sayde I am not Christ, but that I was sent before hym. He that hath the bride, is the bridegrome, as for the bridegromes freunde, who standeth and heareth him: reioyceth wyth greate ioy to heare the voyce of the bridegrome. Thys therefore my ioy is fulfilled: he must increase, and I must bee diminished. Hee that commeth from an hie is aboue all. Hee that is of the earthe is earthy, and speaketh of the earthe: Hee that commeth from heauen, is aboue all folkes: that which hee hath seene and heard, the same doth he witnesse, and yet his witnessing doth no body receiue. But he that receiueh his witnessing, hath put to his Seale, that God is true. For he whome God hath sent, speaketh the wordes of God.

By whych things it plainely appeareth, that credence is to be geuen neither to Iohn, nor yet to angell, if he teach any thing that is not agreeable to Christes doctrine. For Christ is aboue the Aungels, because that God infinitely passeth them in wisdom. Nowe if Moses the seruaunt of God a minister of the old testament was so much to be beleued, y^t nothing could be added, nor yet any thing diminished from the commandements that were geuen by hym, (for so Moses had sayd, the thyng that I commaund thee, that do thou onely to the Lorde, neither adde thou any thing, nor diminish.) How much more ought we not to adde nor to take away from the commandements geuen by God himselfe, and also the sonne of God? In the primitiue Church because the Christians had seruent loue and charity, they obserued these precepts as they were geuē: but their feruent Page 487 charitie afterward waxing luke warme, they inuented gloses by drawing the commaundementes of God backe to their own deedes, which they purposed to iustifie and mayntayn,* that is to say, warres against the infidels. But that they by warres should be conuerted to the fayth, is a fact faithlesse inough: because, that by violence or vnwillingly, no body can beleue in Christ nor be made a christian, neither did he come to destroy them by battaile, that beleued not in him: for he said to his disciples, you knowe not what spirite you are of. The sonne of man came not to destroy mens liues, but to saue them. Then to graunt pardons and forgeuenes of sinnes, to those that kill the infidels, is to much an infidels fact, seducing many people For what greater seducing can there be, then to promise to a man forgeuenes of sinnes, and afterwarde the ioye of heauen, for setting himselfe against Christes commaundementes in the killing of the Infidels, that would not be conuerted to the fayth: where as Christ doth say, not euery one that sayth to me Lord, Lord, shal enter into y^e gidgdome of heauen: but he y^t doth the will of my father which is in heauen, this person shall enter into the kingdome of heauen. Now the will of the father is, that we should beleue in his onely sonne Iesus Christ, and that we would obey him by obseruing of those thinges which he himselfe hath commaunded. Wherefore Christes preceptes of pacience must be fulfilled. Warres, fightinges, and contentions must be left, because they are contrary to charitie.

*But peraduenture some man wil thus reason against Christ: The saintes by whome God hath wrought myracles, do allow warres as well against the faithfull people, as also against the infidels. And the holy kings were warriours, for whose sakes also myracles haue bene shewed, as well in theyr death as also in their life, yea in the very time wherin they were a warfare. Wherefore it semeth that their factes were good and lawfull. For otherwise, God would not haue done myracles for them.

*To •is agayne I say, that we for no myracles must do contrary to the doctrine of Christ. For in it can there be no errour, but in myracles there oftentimes chaunceth error as it is plaine as well by the old as by the new testament: God forbid then, that a Christian should for deceiuable myracles, depart from the infallible doctrine of Christ. In Exodus the 7. chapter it is manifest, howe that the wicked wise men of the Egiptians, through the inchauntments of Egipt, and certayne secret workinges, threw theyr wands vpon the earth, which were turned into Dragons, euē as Aaron before time in y^e prefēce of Pharaο threw his wand vpon the earth: which by the power of God was turned into a serpent. In the third of the kinges the 22. chap. Micheas did see the Lord sitting vpon his throne, and all the hoste of heauen standing about him on the right hand, and on the left. And the Lord sayd, who shall deceaue Achab y^e king of Israel, that he may go vp and be slayn in Ramoth Gilaad. And one sayd this way, and an other otherwise: now, there went forth a spirit, and stood before the Lord & said, I will deceiue him. To whō the Lord spake: by what meanes? And he sayd, I will go forth, and be a lying spirit in the mouth of all his prophetes. And the Lord sayd thou shalt deceiue him and preuaile, go thy wayes forth, and do euen so. Thus also is it written in Deuteronomium. If there shall arise a Prophet amongst you, or one that shall say hee hath seene a dreame, and shall foretell a signe and a wonder: & if that shall come to passe that he hath spoken, and he shall say vnto thee: Let vs go and follow straunge Goddes (whom thou knowest not) and let vs serue them: thou shalt not harken vnto the wordes of that Prophet or dreamer, for the Lord your God tempteth you, to make it known whether ye loue him or no, with all your hart, and with all your soule.

In Ieremy the 12. chap. Are not my wordes euen lyke fire sayth the Lord? and like an hammer, that breaketh the stone? Therefore behold, I wil come against the Prophets whiche haue dreamed a lye (sayth the Lorde) whiche haue shewed those things, and haue seduced the people through theyr lies and their miracles, when as I sent thē not neyther commanded them, which haue brought no profit vnto this people (sayth the Lord.) In Marke the 13. chapter sayth Christ: For there shall arise false Christes and false Prophetes, and shall shewe great signes and wonders to deceiue if it were possible euen the very elect. Paule in hys second Epistle to the Corinthians the xi. chap.* Suche false Apostles are deceitfull workers, transforming themselues into the Apostles of Christ, and no maruayle: For euen Sathan transformeth himselfe into an angell of light therefore it is no great thing, though his ministers transforme themselues, a• though they were the ministers of righteousnes, whose end shal be according to their works.

In the Apocalips the 13. chap.* Iohn saw a beast ascending vp out of the earth and it had two hornes like a lamb but he spake like the Dragon, and he did all that the first beast could do before him: and he caused the earth and the inhabitantes therof to worship the first beast, whose deadly wound was healed, and did great wonders so that he made fire come downe from heauen on the earth, in y^e sight of men, and deceiued thē that dwell on y^e earth, by meanes of the signes which were permitted to him to do in y^e sight of the beast.

By these thinges it is most manifest and playne,* that in miracles this manifold errour oftentimes happeneth thorough the working of the deuill, to deceiue the people w^tal. Wherefore, we ought not for the working of miracles, to depart from the commaundements of God: I woulde to God y^t they which put confidence in miracles would geue heed vnto the word of Christ,* in the 7. chap. of Math. thus speaking:* Many shall say vnto me in that day, Lord, Lord haue we not in thy name prophecied? and in thy name cast out deuils? and in thy name done many great workes? &c. I wil professe vnto them, I neuer knew you, depart from me all ye which worke iniquitie.

By this saying it is most manifest, that the seruantes of Christ are not discerned by the working of miracles, but by the working of vertues, departing from iniquitie, and obeying the cōmaundements of God. Wherefore it is wōderful, that any in this life dare presume to preuent the day of the iudgement of God, to iudge by meanes of miracles, that some are Saints whom men ought to worship, whō peradventure God will in the last iudgement condemne, saying: depart from me all ye which worke iniquitie. If any man could here on earth iudge sinners to be condemned, then if this iudgement were certayne, Christ shoulde not iudge the 2. tyme,* and what soeuer such iudges bynde in earth: the same ought to be bound in heauen. But if such a iudgement be vncertayne, then it is perillous and full of deceit, when as by it men on earth may in steede of saintes worship suche as are damned with the fellowship of the deuils, and in prayer require their ayde, who euen like as the deuils their companions are more ready and more of might to euill then to good, more to hurt then to profite. I wonder they marke not what Christ sayd, when his kinswoman came vnto him, desiring and requiring something of him, and saying: Commaund that these my two sonnes may sit, one vpon thy right hand and the other vpon thy left hand, in thy kingdome. But Iesus aunswering, sayd: Ye know not what ye aske, can ye drinke of the cup whiche I shall drink of? they sayd vnto him, we cna. He sayd vnto them. Of my cupp in deede ye shall drinke, but to sit at my right hand or at my left, it is not mine to geue, but vnto whom it is prepared for, of my father. Christ, being equall vnto the father according to his God head, exceeding all maner of men, according to his manhode, namely in goodnes and wisdom, sayde, to sit my right hande, or at my left, is not mine to geue but vnto whome it is prepared of my father. If it were none of his to geue to sit at the right hand, or at the left &c. How then is it in the power of anye sinnefull man to geue vnto any man, a seate eyther on the right hand, or on the left in the kingdome of God? whiche sinnefull man knoweth not whether suche haue anye seate prepared for thē of the father in his kingdome.* They much extoll themselues which exercise this iudicial power in geuing iudgement: that there are some sayntes, which ought to be honoured of men, by reason of y^e euidency of dreames or of deceitfull miracles, of which men they are ignoraunt whether God in hys iudgement will condemne them or not together with the deuils for euer to be tormented. Let them beware, for the vnfallible truth sayth, that euery one that exalteth himselfe shall be brought low.

By these thinges is gathered, that the warres of Christians are not lawfull, for that by the doctrine and life of Christ they are prohibited, by reason of the euidency of the deceitfull miracles of those, whiche haue made warres amongst the Christians, as well agaynst the Christians, as also agaynst the infidels. Because Christ could not erre in his doctrine for as much as he was God: And forasmuch as heauen and earth shall passe awaye, but the wordes of Christ shall not passe away. He therefore: whiche establisheth his lawes, allowing warres and the slaughter of mē in the warre, as well of Christians, as of Infidels: doth he not ins••ie those thinges which are contrary vnto the gossell & law of Christ? Therefore in this he is against christ? and therefore Antichrist: seducing the people, making men beleue that to be lawfull & meritorious <◇> them, which is expressedly prohibited by Christ.

And thus much concerning the first parte touching peace and warre, wherein he declareth Christ and the pope Page 488 to be contrary, that is, the one to be geuen al to peace, the other all to warre, and so to proue in conclusion the Pope to be Antichrist. Where in the meane time thou must vnderstand (gentle reader) his meaning rightly: not that hee so thinketh, no kind of warres among y^e Christiās in any case to be lawful, for he himself before hath opely protested the contrary. But that his purpose is to proue, y^e Pope in all his doings & teachings, more to be addicted to warre, thē to peace, yea in such cases, wher is no necessity of war. And therein proueth he y^e Pope to be contrary to Christ, y^e is to be Antichrist. Now he proceedeth further to y^e second part which is of mercy.

In the which part he sheweth how Christ teacheth vs to be merciful, because mercye (as he sayth) proceedeth frō charity, and nourisheth it. In which doctrine of mercye, he breaketh not y^e law of righteousnes, for he himself by mercy hath clensed vs from our sinnes, from which we coude not by the righteousnes of the law, be clensed. But whom he hath made cleane by mercye, vndoubtedly it behoueth those same to be also merciful. For in y^e v. chapter of Mathew, he sayth: Blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtaine mercy.* And againe in y^e 6. of Mathew: If ye forgeue vnto men their sinnes, your father will forgeue vnto you your sinnes. And againe in the vij. chapter of Mathewe: Iudge not,* & ye shal not be iudged, condemne not, and ye shal not be condemned, & with what measure ye measure, with the same shal it be measured vnto you againe.* In the xvij. chap. of Mathew, Peter asked the lord, saying: Lord how often shal my brother sinne agaynst me,* and I shall forgeue him, seuen times? Iesus sayd vnto him: I say not vnto thee seuen times, but seuentie times seuen tymes. Therefore is the kingdome of heauen likened vnto a certaine king, which would take accōpt of his seruants. And when he had begun to reckē, one was brought vnto hym which ought him tenne thousand talents: And because he had nothing where withal to pay, his maister commaūded him to be solde, and his wife and his children, and all that he had, and the debt to be payd. The seruaunt therefore fell downe and besought him, saying: haue pacience with me, and I wil pay thee all. And the Lord had pity on that seruant, and loosed him, and forgaue him the debt. But when the seruant was departed, he found one of his fellow seruants, which ought him an hundred pence, and he layed handes on him, and tooke him by the throte, saying: pay me that thou owest, and his fellowe fell downe, and besought him, saying: Haue pacience with me, and I will pay thee all. But he would not, but went and cast hym into prison, till he shoulde pay the debt. And when his other fellowes saw the things that were done, they were very sorye, and came & declared vnto their maister all y^t was done: Then his maister called him, and said vnto him: O thou vngratious seruant, I forgaue thee al y^t debt when thou desiredst mee: Oughtest thou nor then also to haue such pity on thy felow, euē as I had pity on thee? And his lord was wroth, and deliuered him vnto the laylers, till he should pay all that was due vnto him. So likewise shall my heauēly father do vnto you, except ye forgeue from your hartes eche one to his brother their trespasses.

By this doctrine it is most plaine and manifest that euery Christiā ought to be mercifull vnto his brother, how often soeuer he offendeth against him.* Because we so often as we offend, do aske mercy of God. Wherefore, for asmuch as our offence agaynst God is farre more grievous then any offence of our brother agaynst vs: it is playne, that it behoueth vs to be merciful vnto our brethren, if we wil haue mercy at Gods hand. But contrary to this doctrine of mercy.* The Romish bishop maketh & confirmeth many lawes, which punishe offenders, euen vnto the death. As it is plaine by y^e processe of y^e decrees. Distin 23. quest. 5. It is declared and determined, that to kill men ex officio, that is, hauing authority and power so to do, is not sinne. And againe: the souldiour which is obediēt vnto y^e higher power, and so killeth a man, is not guilty of murther. And againe, he is the minister of the Lord, which smiteth y^e euil in that they are euill and killeth thē. And many other such like thinges are throughout the whole processe of y^e question determined.* That for certayne kinds of sinnes men ought by the rigour of the law, to be punished euen vnto death: But the foundation of their saying, they tooke out of the olde law, in which for diuers transgressions were appointed diuers punishments. It is very much wōderful vnto me, why that wyse men being the authors & makers of lawes, do alwayes for the foundation of their sayings, looke vpon the shadow of the lawe, and not the light of the gospel of Iesus Christ, for they geue not heede vnto y^e fygure of perfection, nor yet vnto the perfection figured. Is it not written in y^t 3. of Iohn▪ God sent not his sōne into the world to iudge the world, but to saue y^e world by him.* In Iohn the 8. chap. The scribes and phariseis bring in a woman taken in adultery, and let her in the midst, and sayd vnto Christ: Maister euen nowe this woman was taken in adultery. But in the lawe. Moises hath cōmaunded vs to stone such. What sayest thou therfore? This they sayd to tempt him, that they might accuse him. But Iesus stouped downe, and with his finger wrote on the ground. And while they continued asking him: he lift himselfe vp, and sayd vnto them, let him that is among you without sinne, cast the first stone at her. And agayne he stouped and wrote on the ground. And when they heard it, the went out one by one, beginning at the eldest: so Iesus was lefte alone, and the woman standing in the midst. When Iesus had lift vp himselfe agayne he said vnto her: where be they which accused thee, hath no man condemned thee? She sayd, no man Lord. And Iesus sayd vnto her: Neyther do I condemne thee? Goe thy way and sinne now no more.

It is manifest by y^e scriptures, y^e Christ was promised he should be king of the Iews, & vnto y^e kings pertained the iudgements of y^e law: but because he came not to iudge sinners according to the rigor of the law, but came according to grace, to saue that which was lost, in calling y^e sinner to repentaunce: it is most playne, that in the comming of the law of grace,* he would haue the iudgement of the lawe of righteousnes to cease: for otherwise he had dealt vniustly with y^e foresayd woman, forasmuch as the witnesses of her adultery, bare witnes against her. Wherefore seeing y^e same king Christ was a iudge, if it had bene his will that the righteousnes of the law shoulde be obserued, he ought to haue adiudged the woman to death, according as the law commaunded, whiche thing forasmuch as he did not, it is most euident that the iudgementes of the righteousnes of the law are finished in the cōming of the king, being kyng of the lawe of grace: euen as the sacrifices of the priesthooe of Aaron, are finished in the comming of the priest, according to the order of Melchisedech, who hath offred himselfe vp for our sinnes. Because as it is before sayd, neyther the righteousnes of the law, nor sacrifices for sinne, brought any man to perfection. Wherefore it was necessary that the same (by reason of their imperfection. And seeing amongst all the lawes of the world, the law of Moses was most iustest, forasmuch as the author thereof was God, who is the most iust iudge: and by that law alwaies looke, what maner of iniury one had done vnto an other, contrary to the cōmandement of the law, the like iniury he should receaue for his transgression, according to y^e vpright iudgemēt of the law. As death for death, a blow for a blow, burning for burning, wound for wound, eye for eye, tooth for tooth, and most iust punishmentes were ordayned according to the quantitie of the sinnes. But if this lawe of righteousnes be cleane taken away in the comming of the lawe of grace, how then shall the lawe of the Gentiles remayne among Christians, which was neuer so iust? Is not this true, that in them, whiche are conuerted vnto the sayth, there is no distinction betweene the Iewe and the Grecian? For both are vnder sinne, & are iustified by grace in the sayth of Christ, being called vnto sayth and vnto the perfection of the Gospell.

If therefore y^e gētiles cōuerted, are not boūd to play the Iewes, to follow the lawe of the Iewes: why should the Iewes conuerted, follow the lawes of the Gētiles which are not so good? * Wherefore it is to bee wondred, at, why theues are among christians, for theft put to death where after y^e lawe of Moyses they were not put to death. Chrystiās suffer adulterers to liue, Sodomits, and they which curse father and mother, & many other horrible sinners: And they which accordinge to the most iust lawe of God were condemned to death, are not put to death: So wee neyther keepe the law of righteousnes geuen of God, nor the law of mercy taught by Christ.

Wherefore the lawe makers and Iudges, do not geue heede vnto the aforesayd sentēce of Christ vnto y^e Scribes and Phariscis, who sayd: * He which amōgst you is with out sinne, let him cast the first stone at her. What is he that dareth be so bolde as to say he is without sinne? Yea and without a grieuous sinne, when as the transgression of y^e commaundement of God is a greeuous sinne? And who can say that hee neuer transgressed this commaundement of God. Thou shalt loue thy neighbor as thy selfe: Or the other cōmaūdement which is of greater force: Thou shalt loue the Lord thy God with al thy hart. &c. Wherefore thou whatsoeuer thou art that iudgeth thy brother vnto death, thinkest thou that thou shalt escape the iudgemēt of God, which peradūture hast offended more greuously thē hath he whom thou iudgeth? How •ee• thou a mote in thy brothers eye, & seest not a beame in thine owne eye? Knowest Page 489 than not that with what measure thou measurest, y^e same shall be measured to you agayne? Doth not the scripture say: Unto me belongeth vengeance, and I will render agayne sayth y^r Lord? How can any man say that these men can with charitie keepe these iudgementes of death? Who is it that offendeth God, and desireth of God iust iudgement for his offence? He desireth nor iudgement, but mercy. If he desire mercy for him selfe, why desireth he vengeance for his brother offending? Howe therefore loueth he his brother as himselfe? Or how doest thou shewe mercy vnto thy brother (as thou art bound by the commaundement of Christ) which seekest the greatest vengeance vpon him that thou canst inferr vnto him? For death is the most terrible thing of all, and a more grieuous vengeance then death, can no man inferre. Wherefore, they which wil keep charitie, ought to obserue the commaundements of Christ touching mercy: and they * which liue in the law of charitie ought to leaue the lawe of vengeance and iudgementes. Ought we to beleue, that Christ in his comming, by grace abrogated the most iust law whiche he himselfe gaue vnto the Children of Israell by Moses his seruaunt, and established the lawes of the Gentiles being not so iust to be ob'serued of his faythfull? * Doth not Daniell expounding the dreame of Nabuchodonozer the king cōcerning the image whose head was of gold, the brest and armes of siluer, the belly & thies of brasse, the legges of iron, one part of y^e feete was of iron, and the other part of clay. Nabuchodonozer saw that a stone was cut out of a mountaine w^tout hands, and strake y^e Image in his feete of iron and of clay, & brake them to peeces. Then was the iron, the clay, the brasse, the siluer and gold broken altogether, and became like y^e chaffe of the sommer flower, which is caryed away by the winde and there was no place found for them: and the stone that smote the image became a great mountayne, and filled the whole earth. * He applieth therfore 4. kingdomes vnto the 4. partes of the Image, namely: the kingdome of the Babilonians vnto the head of the gold: The kingdome of the Medes and Persians vnto the brest and armes of siluer: The kingdom of the Grecians vnto the belly and thighes or brasse: But the fourth kingdome whiche is of the Romaynes, he applyeth vnto the feet and legges of iron. And Daniell addeth: In the dayes of their kingdomes, shall God rayse vp a kingdome which shall neuer be destroyed: And hys kingdome shall not be deliuered vnto an other, but it shal breake and destroy those kingdomes: and it shal stand for euer, according as thou sawest, that the stone was cut out of the mountayne without handes, and brake in peeces the clay and iron, * brasse siluer and golde. Seeing therfore it is certain that this stone signifieth Christ whose kingdome is for euer: it is also a thing most assured, that he ought to raygne euery where, and to breake in peeces the other kingdoms of y^e world. Wherefore it terrestriall kinges and the terrestriall kingdom of the Iewes, and their laws and iudgementes haue ceased by Christ the king, calling the Iewes vnto the perfection of his gospel, namely, vnto Fayth and Charitie: It is not to be doubted, but that the kingdome of the Gentiles which is more imperfect & their lawes, ought to cease among the Gentiles, departing frō their Gentillitie vnto the perfection of the Gospell of Iesus Christ. For there is no distinction betwene the Iewes and Gentiles being conuerted vnto the faith of Christ, but all of them abiding in that eternall kingdome ought to be vnder one lawe of Charitie and of vertue. Therefore they ought to haue mercy, and to leaue the iudgments of death, and the desire of vengeance. Wherefore they which do make lawes marke not the parable of Christ, saying: The kingdome of heauen is like vnto a man whiche sowed good seede in hys field: but when men were on sleepe, the enemy came and sowed Tares in the midst of the wheate, & went his way. But when the herbe was growne and brought forth fruite, then appeareth the Tares. And the seruauntes came vnto the good man of the house and sayd vnto him, Lorde didst not thou sowe good seede in thy field? From whence then come these Tares? And he sayd vnto them: The enemy hath done this. And the seruauntes sayd vnto him: wilt thou that we goe and gather them vp? And he sayd no: least peraduenture gathering vp the Tares ye plucke vp the wheate by the rootes: Suffer them both to grow vntill the haruest, and in the time of the haruest, I will saye vnto the haruest men, gather first the Tares and binde them in the bundels that they may be burnt, but gather the wheate into my barne. Christ himselfe onely expoundeth this parable in the selfe same chapter, saying: He whiche soweth the good seede is the sonne of man, but the field is the world, and the good seede, those are the children of the kingdome. But the Tares are the naughty children. And the enemy which soweth them is the Deuill, And the haruest is the end of the world and the haruest men are the Aungels. Euen as therfore the Tares are gathered and burnt with fire, so shall it be in the end of the world. The sonne of man shall send hys Aungels, and they shal gather out of his kingdome al offendoures, and those which commit iniquitie, and shall put them into a furnace of fire, there shall be weeping and gnashing of teethe.

By whiche playne doctrine it is manifest,* that Christ will haue mercy shewed vnto sinners, euen vnto the ende of the world, and will haue them to remayn mingled with the good: Least peraduenture when a man thinketh that he doth right well, to take away the tares, he taketh away y^e wheat. For how great a sinner soeuer a mā be, we know not whether his end shalbe good, and whether in the end he shall obtayne mercy of God: Neither are we certayn of the time, wherein God will by grace iudge him whom we abhorre as a sinner. And peraduenture suche a one shall more profit after his conuersion in y^e Church, then he who we think to be iust, as it came to passe in Paul. And if god iustifieth a man by grace (although at his ende) why darest thou be so bold to be his iudge, and to condemne him? Yea, rather although a man seeme to be obstinate and hardened in his euill, so that he is not corrected by a secret correction (correct him before one alone) if he doe not receaue open correction being done before two or three witnesses, neyther passeth vpon a manifest correction when his sinne is made known vnto the Church: Christ doth not teach to punish such a one with the punishment of death. Yea rather he sayth, if he harken not vnto the church: let him be vnto thee as an Ethnicke and Publicane. And Paule following this doctrin in the 1. Corin. 5. chapter saith:* There goeth a common saying that there is fornication among you & such fornication as is not once named among y^e gen^tiles that one shold haue hys fathers wife. And ye are puffed vp, and haue not rather sorrowed, that he whiche hath done this deed, might be put from among you. For I verily as absent in body, but present in spirite, haue already determined, as though I were present: that he whiche hath done this thing, whē ye are gathered together and my spirit, in the name of our Lord Iesus Christ that such one by the power of our Lorde Iesus Christ, be deliuered vnto Satan for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirite may be sauēd in the day of the Lord Iesus. Paule teacheth not to kill this man (as some gather by this text) but to separate him from the other faithfull, and so frō Christ, which is the head of the Church of the faithfull, and so is he deliuered vnto Sathan, which is separated from Christ: that the flesh may be killed, that is, that that carnall concupyscence, whereby he luxuriously lusted after y^e wife of his father, may be destroyed in him, by such a separation, that y^e spirite may be sauēd, & not that his body should be killed. as some say, as it is most manifest in the selfe same chapiter, where he sayth: I wrote vnto you in an Epile, that ye shoulde not keepe company with fornicatours, and I ment not of all the fornicators of this world, eyther of the couetous, or extorcioners or Idolaters, for then must yee nedes haue gone out of the world. But now I haue written vnto you, that ye keepe not company together, if anye that is called a brother be a fonicatour, or couetous persō, or a worshipper of Images, eyther a cursed speaker, or dronkard, or an extorcioner: with him that is such, see that ye care not.

By whych it is manyfest, that Paule woulde haue the foresayd fornicatour separated from the fellowship of the faithful: that his carnall concupyscence might be mortified, for the health of the spirit, and not that the body should be killed. Wherefore, they do ill vnderstand Paule, which by this saying,* do cōfirme y^e killing of mē. And forasmuch as heresie is one of y^e most greuous sinnes (for an heretike leadeth men in errorrs, wherby they are made to stray frō fayth, without which they cannot bee sauēd) it doth most great hurt in the Church.

Further as concerning such a wicked man. Paul thus speaketh, flye from the man y^t is an heretike after the first and second correction, knowing that such a one is subuerted and sinneth, forasmuch as he is by his owne iudgemēt condemned. Behold Paule teacheth not to kill thys man, but with Christ to separate him frō the fellowship of the faythfull. But some say, that Peter in y^e primitiue Church slewe Ananias and Saphyra for their sinnes, wherefore they say it is lawful for them, to condemne wicked men to death. We wil declare in shewing the whole processe how falsly they speake in alleaging of Peter, for to iustify their errorr.

In the 4. chap. of the Actes it is written, that as many as were possessours of landes or houses, they solde them & offred the prices of that whych they solde and layed it before Page 490 the feete of the Apostles:* & it was deuēdēd vnto euery one as he had neede thereof. But a certaine man Ananias with Saphira his wife solde a piece of land, and kept back a part of the price of the field, his wife being priuy vnto it, and bringing a certaine part therof, he laid it at the feete of the Apostles. But Peter saide vnto Ananias: Ananias, why hath Satan tempted thy hart that thou shouldest lye vnto the holy ghost, to keepe backe a part of y^e price of the land? Did it not whilest it remayned, remayne vnto thee: and being sold, was it not in thine own power? why hast thou conceiued this thing in thine hart? Thou hast not lyed vnto mē, but vnto God. And whē Ananias heard these wordes, he fell downe and gaue vp the ghost, & great feare came on all them that heard these things. And the young mē rose vp and tooke him vp, and caried him out and buried him. And it came to passe about the space of iij. houres after, that his wyfe came in being ignorant of that whych was done. And Peter sayd vnto her, Tel me womā, sold ye the land for so much? And she sayd, yea for so much. But Peter saye vnto her, why haue ye agreed together to tēpt the spirit of the Lord? Behold, the feete of them which buried thy husbāde are at the doore, and shall cary thee out, And straight way she fel downe before his feete, and gaue vp the ghost,* and the yong men entring in, found her dead and they caried her out, and buried her by her husbād. And great feare came on all the church, & all those which heard these thinges. It is meruaile y^t any man that is wise, wyll say that by this processe Peter slue Ananias or hys wife. For it was not his act but y^e act of God, who made a wedding to his sonne, & sent his seruant to cal them, that were bidden vnto the wedding, and they would not come. The king then sent forth his seruantes, to the outcorners of the hie wayes, to gather all that they could find, both good and euill. And so they did. And the maryage was full furnished with gestes. Then came in also the king to view and see them sitting. Among whom he perceaued there one sitting hauing not a wedding garment, and sayth vnto him, frend how camest thou hither? And he being dumme, had not a worde to speake. Then said the king to the seruitures, take and binde him hand and foote, and cast him into the outward darcknes, there shall be weeping and gnashinge of teeth. Many there be called, but few chosen. &c.

It is manifest, that this wedding garment is charitie, without which, because Ananias entred into the maryage of Christ, he was geuen to death, that by one many might be informed to learne & vnderstand: that they which haue fayth & not charitie, although they appeare to men to haue yet it can not be priuy to the spirite of God, that they doe fayne. Such there is no doubt, but they shalbe excluded frō the mariage of christ, as we see this here exemplified in the death of Ananias & his wife by the hand of God, & not by the hand of Peter. And how should Peter thē haue iudged Ananias (albeit he had iudged him) worthy of death by the rigour of the old law? For why, by the law he had not bene guilty of death, for that part, which they fraudulently & dissemblingly did reserue to themselues. Yea and if they had stolne as much from an other man, which was greater nei^ther ye• for hys lie committed, he had not therfore by y^e law of iustice bene found gilty of death. Wherefore if he did not condēne hym by y^e law of iustice, it appeared that he codēned him by the law of grace and mercy, whiche he learned of Christ. And so consequently it followeth much more apparent, that Peter could not put him to death: * Furthermore to say that Peter put him to death by the meere motion of his own will, and not by authoritie of the old law, nor by the new, it were derogatory and slaunderous to the good fame and name of Peter. But if Peter did kill hym, why then doth the Byshop of Rome which pretendeth to be successor of Peter, excuse himselfe and his priestes from the iudgement of death agaynst heretiques and other offēders, although, they themselues be consēting to such iudge^ments done by lay men? For that which was done of Peter without offence, may reasonably excuse him and his felow Priestes from the spot of crime. Actes. 5. It is manyfest that there was another which did more greeuously offend thē Ananias, and that Peter rebuked him with more sharpe words: but yet he commanded him not so to he put to death. For Simon Magus also remayning at Samaria, after that he beleued and was baptised, he ioyned himselfe with Phillip: And when he sawe that the holye spirite was geuen by y^e Apostles (laying theyr handes vpon mē) he offred thē mony, saying geue vnto me this power, that vpon whome soeuer I shall lay my hand, he shall receaue the holy Ghost. * To whom Peter answered: Destroyed be thou and thy money together: And for that thou supposest the gifte of GOD to be bought with money, thou shalt haue neyther part nor fellowshippe in this doctrine. Thy hart is not pure before god, therefore repēt thee of thy wi^kednesse, and pray vnto God that this wicked thought of thy hart may be forgeuen thee: for I perceiue thou art euē in the bitter gall of wickednes and bande of iniquitie. Beholde here the greuous offence of Symon Peters hard & sharp rebuking of him, and yet therupon he was not put to death. Whereby it appeareth that the death of Anamas aforesaid, proceeded of God and not of Peter. Of all these things it is to be gathered seing the iudgements of death are not grounded vpon the expresse and playn scriptures, but onely vnder the shadow of the olde law: that they are not to be obserued of Christians because they are cōtrarye to charity. Ergo y^e bishop of Rome approuing such iudgements, alloweth those that are contrary to the law & doctrine of Christ, as before is sayd of warres, where hee approueth & iustifieth that which is cōtrary to charity. The order of Priesthood, albeit it doth iustifie the iudgemēts to death of the laity, whereby offenders are condēned to die, yet are they themselues forbidden to put in execution the same iudgementes. The priestes of the old law being vnperfect, whē Pylate said vnto thē concerning Christ (whō they had accused worthy death) take him vnto you and according to your law iudge him, answered: that it was not lawful for them to put to death any man.

Wherby it appeareth that our priests being much more perfect,* may not lawfully geue iudgemēt of death against any offenders: yet notwithstanding, they claime vnto thē the power iudicial vpon offēders: Because say they, it belongeth vnto them to know the offences by the auricular confession of the offenders, and to iudge vpō the same being knowne, aud to ioynē diuers penances vnto y^e parties offending, according to the quantitie of their offences cōmitted, to that y^e sinner may make satisfactiō say they vnto God for the offences which he neuer committed. And to cōfirme vnto thē this iudicial power, they alleage y^e scriptures in many places, wrasting it to serue their purpose.

First they saye that the Bishop of Rome (who is the chief priest and iudge among them) hath full power & authority to remit sinnes. Wherupon they say, that he is able fully & wholly to absolue a man a poena & culpa, so that if a man at the time of his death had this remission:* he should straightwaies flie vnto heauen without any paine of Purgatory. The other Bishops (as they say) haue not so great authoritie. The priests constituted vnder euery Byshop, haue power, say they, to absolue the sinnes of thē that are confessed, but not al kind of sinnes: because there are some grieuous sinnes reserued to the absolutions of the Byshops, and some againe to the absolution onely of y^e chiefe and high Byshop. They say also that it behoueth the offēders, for the necessitie of their soule health, to call to remēbrance their offences, and to manifest the same with al the circumstances therof, vnto the priest in auricular cōfessiō, supplying the place of God, after the maner of a Iudge: & afterwarde humbly to fulfill the penaunce enioyned vnto him by the priest for his sinnes, except the sayde penaunce so enioyned, or any part thereof be released by the superior power. All these things (say they) are manifestly determined, as wel in y^e decrees, as decretals. And although these things haue not expressly their foundation in the playne and manifest doctrine of Christ, nor any of y^e Apostles: yet the authors of the decrees and decretals concerning thys matter, haue groūded the same vpon diuers places of the scriptures, as in y^e proces of Christ in y^e Gospell of Saynt Mathew y^e xvj. chapter.* Wherupon they ground y^t popes power iudicial, to surmount the powers of other priests, as where Christ sayd vnto his disciples: whō do men saye that I am? And they aunswered:* some saye that thou art Iohn Baptist, some Elias, & some Ieremy, or one of the Prophets. To whom he sayde: but who saye you that I am? Symon Peter makeinge aunswere, sayde: Thou art Christ, the sonne of the liuing God. And Iesus answered and said vnto him: Blessed art thou Symon the sonne of Ionas, for flesh & bloud hath not opened this vnto thee: but my father which is in heauen. And I say vnto thee: y^t thou art Peter, & vpon this rocke wil I buyld my church: and hel gates shal not preuaile against it. And I wil geue thee the keyes of the kingdome of heauen. And whatsoever thou shalt binde vpon earth, shal also be bound in heauen: and whatsoever thou shalt lose vpon earth, shall bee loosed also in heauen.

Out of this text of Christ, diuers expositiōs haue drawen diuers errors. For when Christ sayd: And I say vnto thee, that thou art Peter, and vpon this rocke wil I build my Church: Some therupon affirme, that Christe meant he would builde his Church vpon Peter by authority of that text,* as it is writtē in y^e first part of y^e decrees, Dist. 19. cap. Ita dominus noster. The exposition hereof, is ascribed Page 491 to Pope Leo, the error wherof is manifestly known. For the Church of Christ is not builded vpon Peter, but vpon the rocke of Peters confession, for that he sayd: Thou art Christ the sonne of the liuing God, and for that Christ sayd singularly vnto Peter: I will geue vnto thee the keyes of the kingdome of heauen: and whatsoever thou shalt binde. &c. By this saying they affirme, that Christ gaue vnto Peter specially, as chiefe of the rest of the Apostles a larger power to binde and to lose, then he did vnto the rest of the apostles,* or disciples. And because Peter answered for him self & al the Apostles, not only confessing the faith which he had chiefly aboue the rest, but also y^e faith whiche the rest of the Apostles had euen as himselfe, by the reuelation of the heauēly father: It appeareth that as the fayth of al the Apostles was declared by the answeere of one: so by this that Christ sayd vnto Peter: whatsoever thou shalt binde. &c. is geuen vnto the rest of the Apostles the same power & equallitie to binde & to lose,* as vnto Peter. Whiche Christ declareth in the Gospell of S. Mathew the 18. chapter, in these words: Verely I say vnto you what thinges so euer you shall binde vpon earth, shalbe bound in heauē & whatsoever you shal lose vpon earth, shalbe also losed in heauē, And further he addeth: And agayne I say vnto you: that if two of you shall consent vpon earth, and request whatsoever it be: it shall be graunted vnto you of my father which is in heauen. For when two or three be gathered together in my name,* I am there in the midst of them. And in Iohn the xx. chapter, he sayth generally vnto them: Receaue ye my spirit. Whose sins ye shall remit, shalbe remitted vnto them: and whose sinnes you shall retayne, shall be retained.

By this it appeareth, that the power to bynde and to loose is not specially graunted to Peter as chiefe and head of the rest: and that by him the rest had their power to bind and to loose, for that the head of the body of the Church is one, which is Christ, and the head of Christ is God. Peter and the rest of the Apostles, are the good members of the body of Christ, receiuing power & vertue of Christ: wherby they do confirme and glew together the other mēbers (as well the strong & noble as the weake and vnable) to a perfect composition and seemelines of the body of Christ: that all honour from all partes and members may be geuē vnto Christ as head and chiefe, by whome as head, all the members are gouerned. And therefore Paule. 1. Corinthians chap. 3. When any man sayth, I hold of Paule, and an other sayth I hold of Apollo, are ye not carnall men? For what is Apollo? what is Paule? The minister of him in whom ye haue beleued, and he as God geueth vnto euery man. I haue planted, Apollo hath watered, but God hath geuen the increase. Therefore neither he that plāteth is any thing neither he y^t watereth,* but God that geueth the increase. And Paul to the Gal. chap. 2. God hath no respecte of persons. Those that seemed to be great and to do much, auayled or profited me nothing at all: But contrariwise, when they saw that the Gospell of the vncircumcision was committed vnto me, as the circumcision vnto Peter (for he that wrought with Peter in the Apostleship of the circumcision, wrought with me also amōg the Gentiles) and when they knew the grace which was geuen me Peter, Iames, and Iohn straightwayes ioyned themselues with me and Barnabas: wee among the Gentiles, and they in circumcision onely, might be mindefull of the poore, the which to do I was very carefull. Hereby it appeareth, that Paule had not his authoritie of Peter to conuert the Gentiles,* to baptise them, and to remit their sinnes, but of him which said vnto him Saule, Saule, why persecutest thou mee. It is hard for thee to kicke agaynst the pricke. Heare is Paule the head of the Church and not Peter: By which head they say, that al the members are sustayned and made liuely.

*The thyrd error (which the authors of the canons cōceiue in the sayd text of Christ) which was sayd to Peter Unto thee will I geue the keyes &c. is this. They say that in this sentence which was sayd to Peter of the authoritie to binde and loose was ment: that as Christ gaue vnto Peter aboue all the rest of the Apostles a speciall, and as it I were an excellent power aboue all the Apostles: euen so say they, he gaue vnto the Bishops of Rome (whome they call Peters chiefe successors) the same speciall power and authoritie, exceeding the power of all other Byshoppes of the world.

The first part of this similitude and comparison, doth appeare manifestly by y^e premisses to be erroneous: wherein is playnly shewed, that the other Apostles, had equall power with Peter to binde and lose. *Wherefore cōsequently it followeth, the 2. part of the similitude, grounded vpon the same text, to be also erroneous. But and if the first part of the sayd similitude were truth as it is not, yet the second part must needes be an error, wherein is sayd that y^e Bishops of Rome are Peters chiefe successors. For although there be but one Catholicke christian Church, of al y^e faithful sort conuerted: yet the first part therof and first conuerted was of the Iewes, the second of the Greeks, & the third part was of the Romaines or Latines. Whereof, the first part was most perfectly conuerted vnto the fayth, for that they faithfully obserued the perfectiō of charitie, *as appeareth in the Actes of the Apostles by the multitude of the be|leuers. The were of one hart, and one soule neyther called they any thing that they possessed theyr owne, but all was common amongst them. *

Hereupon Paule to the Romaines: Salutation to euery beleuer, *first to y^e Iew, & to the Greeks after y^e Iewes The Greekes were the second, and after the Iewes, best conuerted, and after them the Romaines, taking their information of the Greekes as appeareth by the Chronicles although in deed some Romaines were conuerted vnto y^e fayth, by Peter and Paule. And as Christ sayd thrise vnto Peter, feed my sheepe, so Peter ruled these three Churches as witnesseth the Chronicles. But first he reformed the Church of the Iewes in Ierusalem and Iudea, *as appeareth by the testimony of the Actes of y^e Apostles: For Acts 1. It is manifest how Peter standing vp amongst his brethren spake vnto them concerning the election of an Apostle in the place of Iudas the traytor, alledging places vnto thē out of the scripture, that an other should take vpon him his Apostleship. *And so by lot was Mathias constitu|ted in the 12. place of Iudas, acts. 2. After y^t the holy Ghost was come vpon the Apostles, and that they spake with the tongues of al men, the heares were astonied at the miracle And some mocked them saying, these men are full of newe wine: But Peter stood vp & spake vnto thē, saying, that it was fulfilled in thē that was prophecied by Ioell the prophet, and he preached Christ vnto the people, whome they of ignoraunce had put to death. To them was Sauoure promised by the testimony of the Prophets. And whē they heard the wordes of Peter, they were pricked at the heart, saying vnto him and the rest of the Apostles: What shal we then do? And Peter sayd vnto them, repent: and let euerye one of you be baptised in the name of Iesus Christ for the remission of your sinnes, and ye shall receaue y^e holy ghost. And there were ioined vnto them the same day about three M. soules. *And Actes 3.4.5. it appeareth, that Peter aboue the rest did those thinges which belonged to the ministry of the Apostleship, *as well in preaching as in answering. Whereupon some Chronicles say, that Peter gouerned the church of the Iewes at Ierusalem 4. yeares, before he gouerned Antioche. And by the testimony of Paule to y^e Gal. as before is sayd: The Gospell of the vncircumcision is cōmitted to Paule euen as the circumcision to Peter. And he that wrought with Peter in the Apostleship of circumcisiō wrought with Paule amongst the Gentils. Wherby it apareth that the Church of the Iewes was committed to the gouernment of Peter And in the proces of the Actes of the Apostles it appeareth, that Peter beleued that the fayth of Christ was not to be preached vnto those Gentiles, which alwayes liued in vncleannes of Idolatry. But whē Peter was at Ioppe, Cornelius a Gētile sent vnto him, that he wold come & shew him the way of life: But Peter (a little before of the comming of the messengers of Cornelius) being in his chāber, after he had prayed, fel in a trance and saw heauen open, and a certayne vessel descending euen as a great sheete, letten downe by foure corners from heauen to earth. In the which were all maner of foure footed beastes, serpentes of the earth, and foules of the ayre. And a voyce spake vnto hym saying, arise Peter, kill and eate, and Peter sayd, not so Lorde, because I haue neuer eaten any common or vncleane thing: This was done thrise. And Peter descended (not knowing what the vision did signifie) and found the messengers of Cornelius.

As concerning the authoritie iudicial of the clergie, many things are written thereof in the Canons of decrees,* greatly to be marueiled at, and farre from the truth of the Scripture. The authors of the Canons say, that Chryst gaue vnto the priests, power iudicial ouer sinners y^t confessed their sinnes vnto them. And this they ground vpon the text of Christ:* I will geue vnto thee the keyes of the kingdome of heauen, and what soeuer thou loosest &c. And these keyes of the kingdome of heauen they cal the knowledge to discern, and the power to iudge, which they say onely belongeth to the priestes,* except in case of necessitie, then they say a lay man may absolue a man frō sinne. And as touching absolution they say, there are three thinges to be required on the sinners part: first harty cōtritiō, wherby the sinners ought to bewaile their offēding of god thorough sinnes: the second is, auricular confession, whereby the sinner ought to shew vnto the Priest his sinnes, & the circumstances of them: The third is satisfaction, thorough penance enioyned vnto hym by the Priest for his sinnes Page 492 cōmitted.* And of his part that geueth absolution, there are two thinges (say they) to be required that is to say: knowledge to discern one sinne from an other, wherby he ought to make a difference of sinnes, & appoynt a conuenient penance, according to the quantitie of the sinnes: The secōd is authoritie to iudge, wherby he ought to ioyne penance to the offender. And further they say, that he y^t is confessed, ought with al humilitie to submit himself to this authoritie, and wholly and voluntarily to doe those penances which are commaunded him by the priest, except the sayde penance be released by a superiour power: for all priestes (as they say) haue not equall authoritie to absolue sinnes. The chiefe priest whome they call Peters successour hath power fully and wholly to absolue. But the inferior priests haue power, some more some lesse. The more as they are neare him in dignitie: The lesse as they are farther from the degree of his dignitie.* All this is declared by proces in the decrees, butnot by the expresse doctrine of Christ or any of his Apostles. For although Christ absolved men from their sinnes, I do not find that he did it after the maner of a iudge, but of a sauior. For Christ sayth, God sent not his sonne into the world to iudge sinners, but that the worlde should be sauied by him. Iohn chap. 3. Wherupon he spake vnto him whom he healed of the palsie: Beholde thou art made whole,* go thy wayes and sinne no more. And to the woman taken in adultery Christ sayd, woman where be thy accusers, hath no man condemned thee? who sayd: No man Lord. To whom then Iesus thus said: No more wil I condemne thee, go, and now sinne no more.

By which words and deedes of Christ and many other places of the scripture, it appereth he was not as a Iudge at his first cōming to punish sinners according to the quātitie of their offences: but y^t day shal come hereafter, where in he shall iudge all men according to their workes, as in Mat. 25. where he sayth: When the sonne of man shal come in his maiesty, and all his aungels with him: then shall he sit vpon the seat of his maiesty, and all nations shal be gathered together before him, and he shall separte them one from an other, as a shepheard separateth the sheepe from y^e Goates. &c. Neither shall he iudge alone, but his Saintes also with him. For he sayth, you that haue followed me in this generation,* when the sonne of man shall sit in the seat of his maiestie, shal sit also vpon 12. seats, and iudge the 12. tribes of Israell. If then sith Christ came not as a Iudge, why doe the Priestes say that they supplye the roome of Christ on earth, to iudge sinners according to the quantitie of theyr offences? And yet not onely this, but it is more to be maruailed at, how the Byshop of Rome dareth to take vpon him to be a Iudge before the day of iudgement, and to preuent the time, iudging some to be saintes in heauen, & to be honoured of men, and some agayn to be tormented in hel eternally w^t the deuils. Would God these men wold wey the saying of S. Paule. Corin. 4. Iudge ye not before the time,* vntill the comming of the Lorde, who shall make light the darcke and secret places, and disclose the secretes of hartes, and then euery one shall haue his prayse. Let the Byshop of Rome take heede, lest that in Ezechiell be spoken by him: because thy hart is eleuate, and laydst vnto thy selfe I am God, I haue sitten in the seat of God, in the hart of the sea, when thou art but man and not God. It is manifest, that the remission of sinnes principallie belongeth to God, who through grace washeth away our sinnes. For it is sayd, the lamb of God taketh away the sinnes of the world.* And vnto Christians it belongeth as the Ministers of God. For in the 20. of Iohn Christ sayth: Receaue vnto you y^e holy Ghost, whose sinnes you shall remit, they are remitted vnto them: and whose sinnes you shal retain they are retained. Seing therfore, that all Christians that are baptised in the name of the Father, and of the sonne, & of the holy Ghost, receaue the holy ghost: it appeareth, that they haue power geuē vnto them of Christ, to remit sinnes ministerially. Hath not euery Christian authoritie to baptise• and in the baptisme all the sinnes of the baptised are remitted? Ergo, they that doe baptise, do remit sinnes. And thus ministerially all suche haue power to remitte sinnes.* Therefore, to say that one man hath more authoritie to remit sinnes then al other Christians haue, is to much to extol him & to place him euen in Gods seat. I pray you how are the sinnes remitted him that is baptised of the Prieste (yea although he were of the pope himselfe baptised) more then if he were baptised of an other Christian? Surely I thinke no more. For seing that before Baptisme he remayneth a sinner and of the kingdome of the deuill by sinne, after baptisme he entreth into y^e kingdome of heauen: It appeareth, that he y^t doeth baptise,* openeth the gate of y^e kingdome of heauen to him that is baptised: the whiche he cannot do, w^tout the keyes of the kingdome of heauen. Therefore euery one that both baptise: hath the keyes of the kingdome of heauen, as well the in•eriour Priest as the Pope But these keyes are not the knowledge to discerne, & power to iudge, because these doe nothing anayle in baptisme Ergo, there are other keyes of the kingdome of heauen thē these:* Wherefore it seemeth, that the authors of the Canons erred in mistaking the keyes, wherupon they ground the authoritie iudiciall of the Clergy.

Now a little errour in the beginning graunted, grow|eth to great incōuenience in y^e end. Wherefore in my iudgement it seemeth, that the keyes of the kingdome of heauen are sayth and hope. For by fayth in Iesus Christ, and hope in him for the remission of sinnes,* we enter y^e kingdome of heauē. This faith is a spiritual water, springing from Iesus Christ the fountayne of wisdom, wherein the soule of the sinner is washed from sinne. With this water were the faithfull

Patriarches baptised before the lawe, and the faythfull people of the Hebrewes, and the faythful Christians after the law. Wherefore I greatly maruell of that saying in the decrees, which is ascribed vnto Augustine: that litle children that are not baptised, shal be tormented with eternall fire, although they were born of faithfull parents that wished them with all their hartes to haue bene baptised: as though the sacrament of Baptisme in water were simply necessary to saluation, when neuerthelesse many Christians are saued without this kinde of Baptisme, as Martirs. If that kinde of Sacrament be not necessary, to one of elder yeres, how thē is it necessary to an infant born of the faythfull? Are not all baptised with the holy Ghost and with fire? But yet not with materiall fire, no more is the lotion of water corporally necessary to washe awaye sinnes, but onely spirituall water, that is to say, the water of fayth. Are not the quicke baptised for them that are dead, as witnsseth Paule. 2. Corin. 15.* If the dead arise not at all why are the liuing then baptised for them? If the liuing be baptised for the dead? Why then is not the infant saued by the baptisme of his parentes: seeing the infant it selfe is impotent at the time of death, and not able to require baptisme? Christ sayth, he that beleueth and is baptised, shalbe saued.* He sayth not, he that is not baptised: but he that beleueth not shall be damned. Wherefore in the 12. chap. of Iohn, Christ sayth, I am the resurrection and lyfe, he that beleueeth in me, yea although he were dead, shall lyne. The faith therfore is necessary which the infāt hath in his faithfull parents, although he be not washed with corporall water. How then is the infant damned and tormēted with eternall fire? Were not they that were before the comming of Christ, and dead before his death by a thousande yeres saued also by his death and passion? All y^t beleued in him, were baptised in his bloud, and so were saued and redemed from sinne and the bondage of the deuill, and made partakers of the kingdome of heauen. How then in y^e time of grace, shall the infāt be damned that is borne of faythfull parents, that do not despise, but rather desire to haue theyr children baptised? I dare not consent to so hard a sentēce of the decrees: but rather beleue, that he is saued by vertue of the passion of Christ in fayth of his faythfull parentes, and the hope which they haue in Christ. Which fayth and hope are the keies of the heauenly kingdome. God were not iust and mercifull, if he would condemne a man that beleueth not in him, except he shewed vnto him the fayth which hee ought to beleue. And therefore Christ sayth: If I had not come and spokē vnto them, sinne could not haue bene layd vnto theyr charge, but nowe they haue no excuse of sinne. Therefore seing the fayth of Christ is not manifest vnto the infāt departing before baptisme,* neither hath he denyed it: how thē shal he be damned for the same? But if God speaketh inwardly by way of illumination of the intelligēce of the infant, as he speaketh vnto Aungels: who then knoweth (saue God alone) whether the infant receiueth or not re'ceiueth the fayth of Christ?

What is he therfore that so rashly dare take vpō him to iudge the infants begottē of faythfull parents, dying with out baptisme, to be tormēted with eternal fire? Now let vs cōsider the 3. thinges which y^e canons of decrees affirme to be requisite for the remission of y^e sinnes of those that sinne after baptisme: that is to say, contrition of hart, auricular confession, and satisfaction of the deed through penance enioyned by the priest for the sinnes cōmitted. I cannot finde in any place in the Gospel, where Christ commaūded that this kind of confession should be done vnto y^t priest:* nor I cannot find that Christ assigned any penance vnto sinners for theyr sinnes, but that he willed thē to sinne no more. If a sinner confesse that he hath offended God through sinne, & soroweth hartely for his offēces, minding no more hereafter to sinne: then is he truely repentaunt for his sinne, & then is he conuerted vnto the Lord. If he shall then hūbly Page 493 and with good hope crane mercy at God & remission of his sinnes: what is he that can let God to absolue that sinner from his sinne? And as God absolueth a sinner from hys sinne, so hath Christ absolued many, although they confessed not theyr sinnes vnto the priests, and although they receiued not due penance for their sinnes. And if Christ could after y^t maner once absolue sinners: how is he become now not able to absolue? Except some man wil say, that he is aboue Christ, and that his power is minished by y^e ordinances of his own lawes? How were sinners absolued of god in the time of the Apostles, and alwayes heretofore, vnto y^e time that these Canons were made? I speake not these thinges as though confession to priestes were wicked, but that it is not of necessity requisite vnto saluation. I beleue verily that the confession of sinnes vnto good priestes, and likewise to other faythful Christiāns, is good, as witnesseth S. James the Apostle: * Cōfesse ye your selues one to another, & pray ye one for another, that ye may be saued: for the continuall prayer of the iust auayleth much. Helias was a man that suffered many things like vnto you, and he praid that it should not rayne vpon the earth, & it rayned not in 3. yeares & 6. monethes. And agayne he prayed, and it rayned from heauen, and the earth yelded forth her fruit. This kinde of confession is good, profitable and expedient: for if God peradventure heareth not a mans own prayer, he is helped with the intercession of others: Yet neuerthelesse y^e prayers of the priests seemeth to much to be extolled in the decrees, where it treateth of penitēce, and that saying is ascribed vnto Pope Leo. Cap. multiplex misericordia Dei. &c. And it followeth: * So is it ordeyned by the prouidence of Gods diuine wil, that y^e mercy of God cannot be obtained but by the praier of y^e priests. &c. The praier of a good priest doth much auayle a sinner confessing his faults vnto him. The counsel of a discreet priest is very profitable for a sinner, to geue the sinner counsell to beware hereafter to sinne, and to instruct him how he shal punish his body by fasting by watching, and such like actes of repentance, that hereafter he may be better preserued from sinne.

After this maner I esteeme confessiō to priests very expedient and profitable to a sinner. But to cōfesse sinnes vnto the priest as vnto a iudge, & to receiue of him corporall penāce for a satisfaction vnto God for his sinnes committed, I see not how this can be founded vpō the truth of the scripture. For before the comming of Christ, no man was sufficient or able to make satisfactiō vnto God for his sins, although he suffred neuer so much penance for his sinnes. And therefore it was needefull, that he that was without sinne should be punished for sinnes, * as witnesseth Isayas. chap. 53. where he sayth: he took our griefes vpon him, and our sorrowes he bare. And again: He was wōded for our iniquities, and vexed for our wickednes. And agayn: The Lord put vpon him our iniquity. And agayne: for the wickednes of my people haue I strikē him. It therefore, Christ through his passion hath made satisfaction for our sinnes, whereas we our selues were vnable to do it, then through him haue we grace & remission of sinnes. How can we say now, that we are sufficient to make satisfaction vnto God by any penance enioyned vnto vs by mans authority? seing that our sinnes are more greuouse after Baptisme: thē they were before the comming of Christ. Therefore, as in Baptisme the payne of Christ in his passion was a full satisfaction for our sinnes: euen so after Baptisme if we confesse that we haue offended, & be hartly sorry for our sinnes, and minde not to sinne agayne offerwardes.

*Hereupon Iohn writeth in his first epistle. ca. 1. If we say we haue no sinne, we deceiue our selues, & the truth is not in vs. If we confesse our sinnes, God is faythfull and iust, he will remit them, and clense vs from all our iniquities. If we say we haue not sinned, we make him a liar, and his word is not vs. My welbeloued children, this I write vnto you that ye sinne not: but if any man sinne, we haue an aduocate with the father Iesus Christ the righteous, and he is the propitiation for our sinnes, and not for our sinnes onely, but for y^e sinnes of y^e whole world.

Therefore,* we ought to confesse our selues chiefly vnto God euen frō the hart, for that he chieflye doth remit sinnes, without whose absolution litle auaieth the absolutiō of man. This kinde of confession is profitable and good. The authors of the Canons say, that although auricular confession made vnto the Priest, be not expresly taught by Christ, yet, say they,* it is taught in that saying, which Christ said vnto them diseased of the leprosy, whom he cōmaūded: Go your wayes, & shewe yourselues vnto the Priestes, because as they say, the law of clensing lepers, which was geuen by Moyses, signified the confession of sinnes vnto the Priest. And wheras Christ commaūded the lepers to shew themselues vnto the Priestes, they say that Christ ment, that those y^t were vncleane with the leper of sinne, should shew theyr sinnes vnto the Priestes by auricular confession.* I maruell much at the authors of the Canons, for euen from the beginning of their decrees vnto the end, they grounde theyr sayings vpō the old law, which was the law of sinne and death, and not (as witnesseth Paule) vpon the words of Christ, which are spirite & life. Christ sayth, the word•s which I speake vnto you, are y^e spirit and life. They groū• theyr sayings in the shadow of the law, and not in the light of Christ. For euery euill doer hateth the light, & comm•th not into it, that his deeds be not reprobud: but he that doth the truth, commeth into the light, that his workes may be openly sene,* because they are done in God. Joh. 3.

Now let vs passe to the words that Christ spake to the leper. Lord if thou wilt, thou canst make me cleane. And Iesus stretching forth his hand, touched him, saying: I will, be thou cleane: and straight wayes he was cleansed of hys leper. And Iesus sayd vnto him: See thou tell no man, but go and shew thy selfe to the Priest, and offer the gyft that Moyses cōmaūded for a witnesse of these thinges.* This Gospell witnesseth playnely that y^e diseased of lepers were clensed onely by Christ, and not by the Priests, neither did Christ commaund the leper to shew himselfe vnto the priestes,* for any helpe of cleansing that he should receiue of the Priestes: but to fulfill the law of Moyses, in offering a sacrifice for his clensing, & for a testimony vnto the Priestes, who alwayes of enuy accused Christ as a transgressour of the law. For if Christ after he had clensed the leper, had licensed him to communicate with others that were cleane, before he had shewed himselfe clensed vnto the Priests, thē might the Priestes haue accused Christ, as a transgressour of the law: Because it was a precept of the law, that the leper after he was cleansed, shoulde shewe himselfe vnto the Priestes. And they had signes in the booke of law, whereby they might iudge whether he were truely clēsed or no. And if he were clensed, then would the Priestes offer a gift for his clensing.* And if he were not cleansed, then would they segregate him, frō the company of others that were cleane. Seing euery figure, ought to be assimuled vnto the thyng that is figured: I pray you then, what agreement is there betwene the clensing of lepers by the law, & the confession of sinnes? By that law the Priest knew better whether he were leprouse then he himselfe that had the leper. In cōfession the priest knew not the sinnes of him that was confessed, but by his owne confession. In that law the Priest did not clēse the leprouse: How now therfore ought the priests to clense sinners from their sinne, & that without thē they cannot be clensed? In this law y^e Priest had certein signes, by the which he could certaynly know, whether a mā were clensed frō his leper or not. In confession, the Priest is not certaine of the clensing of sinnes, because he is ignoraunt of his contrition: He knoweth not also whether he will not sinne any more, without the which contrition and graunting to sinne no more, God hath not absolued any sinner. And if God hath not absolued a man, without doubt then is he not made cleane. And how then is confession figured vnder that law? Doubtlesse so it seemeth to me (vnder the correction of them that can iudge better in the matter) that this law beareth rather a figure of excommunication, & reconciliation of him, that hath bene obstinate in his sinne, & is reconciled agayne. For so it appeareth by the processe of the Gospell, that when as the sinner doth not amend for the priuate correction of his brother, nor for the correction of two or three, neither yet for the publick correction of the whole Church: Then is he to be counted as an Ethnike, & a Publicane & as a certayn Leper to be auoyded out of the company of all men. Which sinner notwithstanding, if hee shall yet repent, is then to be reconciled, because he is then clensed from his obstinacy.

But he which pretendeth himselfe to be the chiefe vicar of Christ,* and the high Priest, sayth: that he hath power to absolue A poena & culpa: Which I doe not finde how it is founded in the scripture, but that of his owne authority, he enioyneth to sinners, penance for their sinnes. And graūt y^t frō their sinnes he may well absolue them, yet frō the payn (which they call a poena) he doth not simply absolue,* as in his indulgences he promiseth. But if he were in charitye, and had such power, as he pretēdeth, he would suffer none to lie in Purgatory for sinne, forsomuch as that payn doth farre exceed all other payne which here we suffer. What mā is there being in charity, but if he see his brother to be tormēted in this world, if he may, he will helpe him, and deliuer him? Much more ought the Pope thē, to deliuer out of paynes of Purgatorye, indifferently as well rich as poore. And if he sel to the rich his indulgēces, double wife, yea triple wise he seduceth them. First in promising to deliuer thē out of the payne from whēce he doth not, neither is able to Page 494 deliuer thē:. And so maketh thē falsly to beleue that, which they ought not to beleue. Secōdly, he deceiueth thē of their mony, which he taketh for his indulgence. Thirdly, he seduceth them in this, that he promising to deliuer them frō payne, doth induce thē into greuous punishment in deed, for y^e heresy of simony, which both of thē do cōmit, & therefore are worthy both of great payne to fall vpon thē: for so we read, that Iesus cast out buiers and sellers out of hys temple. Also Peter sayd vnto Symon y^e first author of this heresy. Thy mony, sayd he, with thee be destroyed, for that thou hast thought, the gift of God to be possessed for mony. Moreouer, whereas Christ sayth, frely you haue receiued, frely geue, and whereas contrary the Pope doth sell that thing, which he hath taken: what doubt is there, but that he doth greuously deserue to be punished, both he that selleth, & he that buyeth, for the crime of simonye, which they commit. Ouer and besides, by many reasons and authorities of the Scripture it may be proued, that he doth not absolue a man, contrite for his sinne, although he doe absolue him from the guilt.

But this marueileth me, that he in his indulgēces promiseth to absolue men from all maner of deadly sinnes:*. & yet cannot absolue a man from debt: forasmuch as the debt which we owe to god, is of much more greater importāce, then is the debt of our brother. Wherefore, if he be able to re'mitte the debt due to God, much more it should seme, that he is able to forgeue the debt of our brother.

An other thing there is, that I maruell at: for that the pope sheweth himselfe more strait in absolving a priest for not saying, or negligently saying his mattens: thē for trāsgressing the commaundemēt of God: considering that the transgression of the cōmaundement of God, is much more greuous then the breach of mans commaundement.

For these and many other errours concurring, and in this matter of the Popes absolutiōs, blessed be God, & honor be vnto him for the remission of our sinnes And let vs firmly beleue and know, that he doth and wil absolue vs from our sinnes, if we be sory frō the bottome of our harts that we haue offended him hauing a good purpose and will to offend him no more. And let vs be bolde to resorte vnto good and discreet Priests, who with wholesome discretion and sound counsell can instruct vs, how to auoad the corruption of sinne hereafter. And which, because they are better then we, may pray to God for vs: whereby we may both obtayne more sooner the remission of our sinnes past,* and also may learne better how to auoyd the daunger of sinne to come. Ex Registro Latino Episc. Hereford.

* And thus much concerning the iudgement and doctrine of this Walter, for Christian patience, charity and mercy, which as they be true and infallible notes and markes of true Christianity, so the sayde Walter Brute making comparison herein betweene Christ and the Pope, goeth about purposely to declare and manifest, whereby all men may see, what contrariety there is betweene the rule of Christes teaching, and the proceedinges of the Pope: betweene the examples and life of the one, and the examples of the other. Of which two as one is altogether geuen to peace: so is the other on the contrary side as much disposed to wars, murder, and bloudshed, as is easy to be sene, who so looking not vpon the outward shewes and pretensed wordes of these Romishe Popes, but aduising and considering the inward practises, and secret works of them, shall easily espye, vnder their visour of peace what discord and debate they work. Who bearing outwardly the meek hornes of the Lambe mentioned in the Apocalippes, within doe beare the bowels of a Wolfe, full of crueltye, murder, and bloudshed which if any doe thinke to be spoken of me contumeliously, would God that man could proue as well the same to be spoken of me not truely. But trueth it is, I speake it sincerely, without affection of blinde partiality, according to the trueth of historyes both olde and new. Thus vnder in Dei nomine. Amen, how vnmercifully doeth the Pope condemne his brother: And while he pretendeth not to be lawfull for him to kill any man, what thousandes hath he killed of men? And likewise in this sentence, pretēding, in visceribus Iesu Christi, as though he woulde be a mediatour to the magistrate for the party: yet in deed will he be sure to excommunicate the Magistrate, if he execute not the sentence geuen. Who be true heretiques, the Lord when he commeth shall iudge: but geue them •o be heretiques, whom he condemneth for heretiques. Yet what bowels of mercy is here, where is nothing, but burning, faggoting, drowning prisoning, chayning, famishing racking, hanging, tormenting, threatning, reuiling, cursing and oppressing, and no instructing, nor yet indifferent hearing of thē, what they can say.* The like cruelty also may in theyr warres appeare, if we consider how Pope Vrbane 5. beside the racking and murdering of 7. or 8. Cardinals, set vp Henry Spencer Bishoppe of Norwich to fight agaynst the French Pope. Innocentius 4. was in warre himselfe agaynst the Apulians. Likewise Alexander. 4. his sucessour stirred vp the sonne of king Henry 3. to fight agaynst the sonne of Fredericke. 2. Emperour, for Apulia. Boniface 8. moued Albertus (which stood to be Emperour) to driue Philip the frēch King out of his Realm Gregorius. 9 excited Ludouike the French king 3. sundry times, to mortall warre agaynst the Earle Raimundus and City of Tholouse, and Auinion, where Lewes the sayd Frence king dyed. Honorius 3. by strength of warre many wayes resisted Fredericke 2. and sent out 35. Gallies agaynst the coastes of the Emperours dominions. The same Pope also besieged Ferraria, to passe ouer the warre at Ticinum, with many other battayles and conflictes of Popes, agaynst the Romanes, Venetians, and diuers other nations. Innocentius 3. set vp Philip the French king to warre agaynst king Iohn. What stirre Pope Gregorye the 7. otherwise named Hildebrand, kept agaynst the Emperour Henricus 4. it is not vnknowne. And who is able to recite all the warres, battayles, and fieldes fought by the stirring vp of the Pope? These with many other like examples considered, did cause this Walter Brute to write in this matter so as he did, making yet thereof no vniuersall proposition: but that Christian Magistrates, in case of necessity, might make resistance, in defence of publique right. Now he proceedeth further to other matter of the Sacrament.

Touching the matter (sayth he) of the Sacrament of the body and bloud of our Lord Iesus Christ,* diuers men haue diuers opinions, as the learned do know As concerning my iudgemēt vpon the same, I firmly beleue whatsoeuer the lord Christ Iesus taught implicitly or expresly to his Disciples and faythfull people to be beleued: for he is (as I beleue and know) the true bread of God, whiche descended from heauen, and geueth life to the world. Of which bread whosoever eateth, shall liue for euer, as it is in the 6. of S. Iohn declared. Before the comming of christ in the flesh, although men did liue in body, yet in spirit they did not liue, because all men were then vnder sinne, whose soules therby were dead: from the which death, no man by law, nor with the law was iustified: for by the workes of the law shall no flesh be iustified. Galat. 2. And agayne in the same epistle cap. 3. that by the lawe no man is iustified before God it is manifest:* for the iust man shall liue by his fayth, the law is not of fayth: but whosoever hath y^e workes therof, shall liue in them. And agayn in y^e same chap. If the law had bene geuen, which might haue iustified, then our righteousness had come by the law. But the scripture hath concluded all vnder sinne, that the promise might be sure by the fayth of Iesu Christ to all beleuers. Moreouer, before that fayth came, they were kept and concluded all vnder the law, vntill the comming of that fayth whiche was to be reuealed. For the law was our schoolemaister in Christ Iesu, that we should be iustified by fayth. Also the sayd Paul Rom. 5. sayth:* that the law entred in the meane time, whereby that sinne might more abound. Where then sinne hath more abounded there hath also grace superabounded, that like as sinne hath rained vnto death: so that grace might raigne also by righteousness vnto eternal life, through Iesus Christ our Lord. Whereby it is manifest, that by the fayth which we haue in Christ, beleuing him to be the true sonne of God, which came downe from heauen to redeme vs from sinne: we are iustified from sinne, and so do liue by him, which is the true breade and meat of the soule. And the bread which Christ gaue, is his flesh geuen for the life of the world.* Iohn. 6. For he being God, came downe from heauen, and being true carnall man, did suffer in the flesh for our sinnes, which in his diuinity he could not suffer.* Wherefore like as we beleue by our fayth that he is true God: so must we also beleue, that he is a true man. And then do we eate the bread of heauen, and the fleshe of Christ. And if we beleue that he did voluntarily shed hys bloud for our redemption, then do we drinke his bloud.

And thus, except we eate the flesh of the sonne of man, and shall drinke his bloud: we haue not eternall life in vs. Because the flesh of Christ verily is meate,* and hys bloud is drinke in deed: and whosoever eateth the flesh of Christ and drinketh his bloud, abideth in Christ & Christ in him. Ioh. ca. 6. And as in this world y^t soules of y^e faythfull liue, and are refreshed spiritually with this heauenly bread, and with the flesh and bloud of christ: So in the world to come, the same shall liue eternally in heauen, refreshed with the deity of Iesus Christ, as touching the most principall part therof, that is to wit, intellectū: For as much as this bread of heauē, in that it is God, hath in it selfe all delectable pleasātnes. And as touching the intelligible powers of y^e same (as well exteriour as interior) they are refreshed with the flesh (that is to say) with the humanitye of Iesus Christ: which is, as a queene standing on the right hand of God, decked w^t a golden robe of diuers coulours: for this queen of heauen alone by the word of God, is exalted aboue the Page 495 company of all the angels: that by her, all our corporal power intellectuē, may fully be refreshed as is our spirituall intelligence, with the beholding of y^e deity of Iesus Christ, and euen as the Aungels, shall we be fully satisfied. And in the memory of this double refectiō, present in this world and in the world to come: hath Christ geuen vnto vs (for eternal blessednes) the Sacrament of his body and bloud, in the substaunce of breade and wine, as it appeareth in Mathew.* chapter. 26. As the disciples sat at supper, Iesus tooke bread and blessed it, brake it, & gaue it vnto his disciples, and sayd: Take, eate, this is my bodye. And he tooke the cup, and thanked, and gaue it them, saying: Drinke ye all of this, this is my bloud of the new Testament, which shall be shed for many,* for y^e remission of sinnes. And Luke in his Gospell chap. 22. or this matter thus writeth. And after he had taken the bread, he gaue thanks, he brake it, and gaue it vnto them, saying: Thys is my body whyche shall be geuen for you: doe you this in my remembraunce. In like maner he tooke the cup after supper, saying: Thys is the cup of the new testament in my bloud, which shall be shed for you. That Christ said, this is my body, in shewing to them the bread, I firmly beleue & know that it is true: That Christ (for so much as he is God) is the very trueth it selfe:, and by consequence, all that he sayth is true. And I beleue that the very same was his body, in such wise as he willed it to be his body: for in y^t he is almighty, he hath done what so euer pleased him. And as in Cane of Galile, he chaunged the water into wine, really, so that after the transubstantiation it was wine and not water: so when he sayd, This is my body: If he would haue had the breade really to be transubstātiated into his very body, so that after this chaunging it should haue bene his naturall body, & not bread as it was before: I know, that it must needes haue bene so. But I finde not in the Scripture, that hys will was to haue any such reall transubstantiation or mutation.

And as the Lord God omnipotent in his perfectiō essential being the sonne of God, doth exceed the most purest creature, and yet when it pleased him, he took vpō him our nature, remaining really God as he was before, & was really made man: so y^t after this assumpting of our substaūce he was really very God & very man: Euē so if he would, when he sayd: This is my body: He could make this to be his body really, the bread still really remayning as it was before. For lesse is y^e difference of the essence, betwene bread and the body of a man, then betwene the deity & humanity: because that of the bread, is naturally made the body of a man. Of the bread is made bloud: of the bloud, naturall seede: and of naturall seede, the naturall substaunce of man is ingendred. But in that that God became man: This is an action supernatural. Wherefore he that could make one man to be very God and very mā: could if he would make one thing to be really very bread, & his very body. But I do not finde it expresly in the Scripture, that he would any such Identitie or coniunction to be made. And as Christ sayd,* I am very bread, not chaunging his essence or being, into the essence or substaunce of bread: but was the sayde Christ, which he was before really, and yet bread by a similitude or figuratiue speech: So if he would, it might be, y^t when he sayd: This is my body: That this should really haue bene the bread as it was before,* and Sacramentally or memorially to be his body. And this seemeth vnto me, most nearest to agree to the meaning of Christ, forasmuch as he said: do this in the remembraunce of me. Then for as much as in the supper it is manifest, that Christ gaue vnto his Disciples the bread of his body which he brake, to that intent to eat with theyr mouthes: in which bread, he gaue himselfe also vnto them as one in whō they should beleue (as to be the food of the soule) and by that fayth they should beleue him to be theyr sauior which tooke his body, wherein also he would it to be manifest, that he woulde redeeme them from death: So was the bread eaten with the Disciples mouthes, that he being the true breade of the soule, might be in spirite receiued and eaten spiritually, by theyr fayth, which beleued in him.

The bread which in the disciples mouthes was chewed, from the mouth passed to the stomacke: For as Christ saith: * whatsoever cometh to the mouth, goeth into the belly, & from thence into the priuy. Mathew. chap. 15. But that true and very bread of the soule, was eaten of the spirite of the Disciples, and by fayth entred theyr minds, and abode in their intralles through loue. And so the bread broken, semeth vnto me to be really y^e meat of the body, & the bread which it was before: but Sacramentally to be the body of Christ, as Paule. 1. Cor. 10. The breade which we breake, is it not the participation of the body of the Lord? So, the bread which we breake, is the participation of the Lordes body. * And it is manifest, that the heauēly bread is not broken neither yet is subiect to such breaking: Therefore, Paul calleth the materiall bread, which is broken, the body of Christ which the faythfull are partakers of. The breade therefore chaungeth not his essence, * but is bread really, and is the body of Christ sacramentally. Euen as Christ is the very vine, abiding really and figuratiuely the vine: So, the temple of Ierusalem was really the materiall temple: & figuratiuely it was the body of Christ: Because he sayde, destroy you this temple, and in three dayes I will repayre the same agayne. And this spake he of the temple of his body, whereas others vnderstood it to be the materiall temple, as appeared by theyr answer: For sayd they 47. yeres hath this temple bene in building, and wilt thou build it vp in three dayes?

Euen so, may the consecrated bread be really bread as it was before, and yet figuratiuely the body of Christ. And if therefore, Christ would this bread to be only sacramentally his body and would not haue the same bread really to be transubstantiated into his body, & so ordeined his Priestes to make this Sacrament as a memoriall of his passion: * Thē do the Priestes greuously offend, which besech Christ in their holy Masse, that the bread which lyeth vpon the aultar may be made really the body of Christ, if he woulde not haue the same to be but a Sacrament of his body. And then both be they greatly deceiued themselues, and also do greatly deceiue others. But whether the bread be really transubstantiated into the body of Christ, or is onely y^e body of Christ sacramentally: No doubt, but that the people are maruellously deceiued. * For the people beleue that they see the body of Christ, nay rather Christ himselfe betwene the handes of the Priestes (for so is the common othe they sweare.) By him whō I saw this day betwene the priestes hands. And the people beleue that they eat not the body of Christ but at Easter, or els when they lie vpon theyr death bed, and receiue with their bodely mouth the Sacrament of the body of Christ. But the body of Christ (admitte the bread be transubstantiated really into the body) is in the Sacrament, indiuisibiliter, that is, not able to be deuided, and so immensurabiliter, that is, not able to be measured: Ergo, inuisibiliter, that is, not able to be sene. To beleue therefore that he may be sene corporally in the Sacrament, is erroneous. And forasmuch as the body of Christ, is the soules food and not the food of the body in this world, for that who'soeuer beleueth, doth eat spiritually, and really, at any time when he so beleueth: It is manifest, that they doe greatly erre which beleue that they eat not the body of Christ, but when they eat with theyr teeth the Sacrament of the body of Christ.

And although it should be to the great honor of priests that the bread really were chaūged into the body of christ, * by the vertue of the Sacramentall words pronounced: yet if Christ would not haue it to be so, then they desiring to do this contrary to the will of Christ, and informing the people, that is to be done, so contrary to the will of Christ: are in great peril, most daūgerously seducing both themselues and the people. And then, although that hereby they get a litle worldly and transitory honour for a short time: It is to be feared, least perpetual shame finally shall follow and insue vpon the same. * For Christ sayth, euery one that exalteth himselfe, shall be brought low. Let them therefore take heed, least they extolling themselves for this Sacrament, about the company of Angels which neuer sinned, for the error which they be in, for euermore be placed with the sinnefull angels vnder the earth.

Let euery man therefore think lowly of himself in what state or degree soeuer he be, neither let him presume to doe that which he is not able to do: Neither desire to haue that thing done, which God would not haue done.

I greatlye maruell at those which were the makers of the Canons,* how variably & contrary one to another they write of this Sacrament of the body of Christ. In the last part of the decrees where this matter is touched: not only in the text, but also in the proces of the matter, diuers do diuersly write, and one contrary to another. For in the chapter that thus beginneth Prima inquit haeresis, it is thus written: You shall not eate this bodye which you see, nor shall drinke this bloud which they shall shed, which shall crucify me: I will commend vnto you a certayne Sacrament spiritually vnderstood y^t quickneth you, for the flesh profiteth you nothing at all. And in the end of the same chapter, it is thus written: Till the world shall haue an end, the Lords place is in heauen: yet notwithstanding, the verity of the Lord is here abiding with vs.* For the body wherewith he rose, ought to be in one place, but his verity is in euerye place diffused & spread abroad. And in y^e chapter folowing which thus beginneth, Omnia quaecun{que} voluit. &c. it is Page 496 written:* Although the figure of the bread & wine seeme to be nothing: yet notwithstanding they must after y^r wordes of consecration be beleued, to be none other thing then the very flesh of Christ and his bloud. Whereupon, the veritye himself said vnto his Disciples:* This is sayth he, my flesh, which is geuen for the life of the world: and to speake yet more maruellously, this is none other flesh, thē that which was borne of the virgin Mary, & suffered vpon the crosse, and rose out of the sepulchre.

See how far this chapter differeth from the first. And in the chapter which beginneth Ego Berengarius.&c.* This is the confession which Berengarius, himselfe cōfessed touching this Sacrament, and his confession is of the church allowed. I confesse (sayth Berengarius) that the bread and wine which is layd vpon the aultar after the consecration, is not onely a Sacrament: but also that it is the very body & bloud of our Lord Iesus Christ: And the same not onely sensually to be a Sacrament, but also verely to be handled with the Priestes hands and to be broken, and chewed with the teeth of faythfull men. This confession doubtlesse is hereticall:* for why if the body of Christ be in the Sacrament, as of the Church it is so determined: it is there then Multiplicatiuè, and so indiuisibiliter, wherfore not sensualiter. And if it be there indiuisibiliter, that is, in such sort as it cannot be deuided or separated, then can it not be touched, felt, broken nor with the teeth of men chewed.

The writers of this time and age do affirme: that if by the negligence of the Priest, the Sacrament be so negligētly left, that a Mouse or any other beast or vermine eate the same: then they say, that the Sacrament returneth agayne into the nature and substaūce of bread. Wherby, they must nedes confesse, that a miracle is as wel wrought by y^e negligence of the Priest, as first there was made by the consecration of the Priest in making the Sacrament. For either by the eating of the Mouse, the body of Christ is transubstantiated into the nature of bread, which is a transubstantiatiō supernaturall: Or els of nothing by creation is this bread produced. And therefore, either of these operations is miraculous & to be maruelled at. Now cōsidering the disagreing opinions of the Doctors, and for the absurdities which follow, I beleue with Paule, that the bread which we break, is the participation of the body of Christ: and as Christ sayth, that the bread is made the body of Christ for a memorial and remembraunce of him. And in such sort as Christ willed the same to be his body, in the same maner & sort do I beleue it to be his body.

But whether women may make the body of Christ, & minister vnto the people: * or whether that Priests be deuied frō the lay people, for their knowledge, preeminence, & sanctity of life, or els by externall signes onely: Also whether the signe of consure and other externall signes of holines in Priestes, be signes of Antichrist and his charecters, or els introduced & taught by our Lord Iesus Christ: consequently it remayneth next to speake of vnto the faythfull sort (according to the proces of the holy Scripture) first of the three kindes of the Priestes. I remember that I haue read, the first of them to be Aaronicall, legall, & temporall: The second to be eternall and regall according to the order of Melchisedech: * The third to be a Christian. The first of these ceased at the comming of Christ: for that as S. Paule to the Hebrues sayth. The Priesthood of Aaron was trāslated to the Priesthood of the order of Melchisedech. The legall sort of Priestes of Aaron, were separate from the rest of the people, by kinred, office, and inheritance. By kinred, for that the children of Aaron onely were Priestes. * By office, for that it onely pertayned to them to offer sacrifice, for the sinnes of the people, and to instruct the people in y^e precepts and ceremonies of the law. By inheritaunce, because the Lord was their portiō of inheritaūce: neither had they any other inheritaunce amongst theyr brethren, but those thinges which were offered vnto the Lord, as the first fruits, parts of the sacrifices, and vowes, except places for their mansion houses for them and theirs, as appeareth by the processe of Moyses law. The Priesthood of Christ, did much differre from this Priesthood, as Paule doth witnes to the Hebrues chapter. 1.8.9.10.

*First, in kinred, because that our Lord & Sauour Iesus Christ, came of the stocke and tribe of Iuda: of whiche tribe none had to do with the aultar and in which tribe nothing at all was spoken of the Priestes of Moses.

The second, for that other were made Priestes without their othe taken but he by an othe, by him which sayd: The Lord swore, and it shall not repent him: Thou art a Priest for euer according to the order of Melchisedech.

Thirdly, by durability, for that many of thē were made Priestes but during the terme of their liues: but he for that he remaineth for euer, hath an eternall Priesthood. Wherefore he is able to saue vs for euer hauing by himself accesse vnto God, which euer liueth to make intercession for vs.

The law made also such men Priestes as had infirmities, but Sermo (that is, the word which according to the law is the eternall sonne and perfect) by an othe.

The Priesthood of Christ also did differ frō the Priesthood of Aaron and the law, * in the matter of the sacrifice: & in the place of sacrificing. In the matter of the sacrifice: because they did vse in theyr sacrifices straunge bodyes of the matter of their sacrifices, and did shed straūge blood for the expiation of sinnes: But he, offering himself vnto God his father for vs, shed his owne blood, for the remission of our sinnes. * In the place of sacrificing: because that they did offer theyr sacrifice in the tabernacle or temple: But Christ suffering death without the gates of the City, offered himselfe vpon the aultar of the crosse to God his father, & there shed his precious blood.

In his supping chamber also hee blessed the bread and cōsecrated the same for his body, & the wine which was in y^e cup, he also cōsecrated for his bloud: deliuering the same to his Apostles to be done, for a commemoration and remembraunce of his incarnation & passion. Neither did Iesus enter into the sāctuary made with mans hands, which be examples & figures of true things: but entred into heauē it selfe, that he might appeare before the maiesty of God for vs. Neither doth he offer himself oftētimes, as the chief priest in the sanctuary did euery yeare with straunge bloud (for then should he often times haue suffered from the beginning) but now once for all, in y^e latter end of the world, to destroy sinne by his peace offering, hath he entred. And euen as it is decreed, that mā once shal dye and then commeth the iudgement: so Christ hath bene once offered to take away the sinnes of many. The second time he shall appeare without sinne to them that looke for him, to their saluation. For the lawe hauing a shadowe of good thinges to come, can neuer by the Image it selfe of thinges (which euery yeare without ceasing they offer by such sacrifices) make those perfect that come therunto, for otherwise that offering should haue ceased:*. Because that such worshippers being once cleansed from theyr sinnes, should haue no more conscience of sinne. But in these, commemoratiō is made euery yere of sinne: for it is impossible that by the bloud of Goates and Calues, sinnes should be purged and taken away. Therefore comming into y^e world he sayd: Sacrifice and oblation thou wouldst not haue, but a body hast thou geuen me, peace offeringes for sinne haue not pleased thee: Then sayd I, behold I come. In the volume of the booke it is written of me, that I should doe thy will O God: Saying as aboue, because thou wouldest haue no sacrifices, nor burnt offeringes for sinne, neyther doest thou take pleasure in those things that are offered according to y^e law. Then sayd I, behold I come, that I may doe thy will O God. He taketh away the first, to stablishe that which followeth. In which will, we are sanctified by the oblation of the body of Iesus Christ, once for all. And euery priest is ready dayly ministring, and oftentimes afferring like sacrifices, which can neuer take away sinnes. But this Iesus offering one sacrifice for sinne, sitteth for euermore on the right hand of God, expecting the time tyll his enemies be made his footstoole. For by his owne onely oblation, hath he consummated for euermore those that are sanctified.

All these places haue I recited which Paule writeth, for the better vnderstanding and declaration of those thinges I meane to speak.* By all which it appeareth manifestly, how the Priesthood of Christ, differeth from the legall priesthood of Aaron: and by the same also appeareth, how the same differeth from all other priesthood Christian, that immitateth Christ. For the properties of the priesthood of Christ aboue recited, are founde in no other Priest, but in Christ alone. Of the third priesthood, that is, the Christian priesthood: Christ by expresse wordes speaketh but litle, to make any difference betwene the priests and the rest of the people, neither yet doth vse this name of Sacerdos or praesbiter in y^e Gospell. But some he calleth disciples, some apostels, whom he sent to baptise & to preach, & in his name to do miracles. He calleth them y^e salt of the earth, in which y^e name of wisdom is ment: and he calleth them the light of the world, by which, good liuing is signified. For he sayth, So let your light so shine before mē, that they may see your good workes, and glorify your father which is in heauen. And Paule speaking of the Priestes to Timothe,* and Titus, seemeth not to mee to make any diuersity betwixt the Priestes and the other people, but in that he woulde haue them to surmount other in knowledge and perfection of life. But the fourth priesthood, is the Romaine priesthood, brought in by the Church of Rome: which Church maketh a distinction betwene the clergy and the lay people: & Page 497 after that the clergy is deuided into sundry degrees, as appeareth in the decretals.

This distinction of the clergy from the laitye, with the consure of clerkes, began in the time of * Anacletus, as it doth appeare in the Chronicles. The degrees of the clergy were afterward inuaded & distincted by their offices, and there was no ascentiō to the degree of the priesthood, but by inferior orders and degrees. But in the primitiue church it was not so: for immediately after tht conuersion of some of thē to the fayth & baptisme receiued: they were priests & bishops made, as appeareth by Ananias, whom Marcus made of a taylor or shomaker, to be a bishop. And of many others it was in like case done, according to the traditions of the church of Rome. Priests are ordeined to offer sacrifices, to make supplication and prayers, and to blesse & sanctify. The oblation of the priesthood,* onely to Priestes (as they say) is congruent: whose duties are, vpon the aultar to offer for the sinnes of the people the Lords body, which is cōsecrated of bread. Of which saying I haue great maruell, considering S. Paule his wordes to the Hebrues before recited. If Christ offering for our sinnes one oblation for euermore, sitteth on the right hand of God, and wyth that one oblation hath cōsūmated for euermore, those that are sanctified? * If Christ euermore sitteth on the right hand of God, to make intercession for vs, what neede he to leaue here any sacrifice for our sinnes, of the Priestes to be dayly offered? I do not finde in the scriptures of God nor of his Apostles, that the body of Christ ought to be made a sacrifice for sinne: but onely as a Sacrament and commemoration of the sacrifice passed, whiche Christ offered vpon the aultar of the crosse for our sinnes. For it is an absurditye to say, that Christ is now euery day really offered as a sacrifice vpon the aultar by the Priestes: for then the Priestes should really crucify him vpō the aultar, which is a thing of no Christian to be beleueed. But euen as in his supper, his body & his bloud he deliuered to his Disciples, in memorial of his body that should be crucified on the morrow for our sinnes: So after his ascētion, did his Apostles vse the same (when they brake bread in euery house) for a Sacramēt, and not for a sacrifice, of the body and bloud of our Lord Iesus Christ. And by this meanes were they put in remembraunce of the great loue of Christ, who so entirelye loued vs, that willinglye he suffered the death for vs, & for the remission of our sinnes. And thus did they offer thēselues to God by loue, being ready to suffer death for the confession of his name, and for the sauing health of theyr brethren fulfilling the new commaundement of Christ, which sayd vnto them: A new cōmaūdement do I geue vnto you that you loue one another, as I haue loued you. But whē loue began to waxe cold or rather to be frosen for cold, thorow the anguish & anxiety of persecution for the name of Christ: * then Priests did vse the flesh and bloud of Christ, in ••tad of a sacrifice. And because many of them feared death, some of them fled into solitarye places, not daring to geue themselues a sacrifice by death vnto God through the confession of his name, & sauing health of theyr brethrē: Some other worshipped Idols fearing death, as did also y^e chiefe Bishop of Rome, and many other mo in diuers places of the world. And thus it came to passe, as that which was ordeined and instituted for a memoriall of the one & onely sacrifice, was altered (for want of loue) into the realtye of the sacrifice it selfe.

After these thinges thus discussed, he inferreth consequently vpon the same, an other briefe tractation of women and laye men, whether in defect of the other, they may exercise the action of prairer, and administration of Sacraments belonging to Priestes: wherein he declareth the vse receiued in the Popes Church, for women to Raptise, which, sayth he, cannot be without remission of sinnes, wherefore seeing that women haue power by the Pope to remit sinne, and to baptise, why may they not aswell be admitted to minister the Lordes Supper, in like case of necessity? Wherin also he maketh relation of Pope Iohn. 8. a woman Pope, mouing certayne

Questions of her. All whiche for breuitye I pretermitte, proceeding to the ministration of prayer, and blessing or sanctification, appropriate to the office of Priestes as followeth.

Furthermore, as touching the fūction & office of praying and blessing, whereunto Priestes seme to be ordeined (to omitte here the question whether women may pray in Churches, in lacke of other meete persons) it remayneth now also to prosecute. Christ being desired of his Disciples to teach them to pray, gaue them the common prayer both to men and women, to the which prayer in my estimation, no other is to be compared. For in that first, the whole honor due vnto the deity is comprehended. Secondly, whatsoeuer is necessary for vs, both for the time present, or past, or for time to come, is there desired & praid for. He informeth vs besides to pray secretly, and also briefly: secretly to enter into our close chāber, and there in secrecy he willeth vs to pray vnto his father. And sayth moreouer, when ye pray,* vse not much babling, or many words as doth y^e heathen. For they thinke in their long and prolix praying to be heard. Therefore be you not like to thē. By the which doctrine he calleth vs away frō the errors of the healthē Gentils: frō whom proceed these superstitious maner of actes (or rather of ignoraunces) as Necromancy, the art of diuinatiō, & other spises of coniuratiō, not vnknown to them, that be learned: for these Necromancers beleue, one place to be of greater vertue then an other, there to be heard sooner, then in an other. Like as Balaam being hyred to curse y^e people of God, by his arte of southsaying, or cherming, when he could not accomplish his purpose in one place, he remoued to an other, but he in y^e end, was deceiued of hys desire. For he intending first to curse them, was not able to accurse thē whom the Lord blessed, so that his curse coulde not hurt any of all y^t people. After like sort the Nicromancers turne theyr face to the East, as to a place more apt for theyr prayers. Also y^e Necromāsers beleue, that the vertue of y^e words of the prayer, & the curiosity therof, causeth thē to bring to y^e effect, which they seek after, which is also an^other poynt of infidelity, vsed much of Charmers, Sorcerers, Inchaūters,* Southsayers & such like. Out of y^e same arte (I feare) proceedeth the practise of exorcising, wherby deuils & spirits be coniured to do that, wherunto they are inforced by the Exorcist. Also wherby other creatures likewise are exorcised or coniured, so that by the vertue of their exorcisme, they may haue theyr power and strength exceeding all naturall operation.

In the Church of Rome,* many such exorcismes & coniurations be practised, & are called of them benedictions, or halowings. But here I aske of these Exorcisers, whether they beleue the thinges and creatures so exorcised and halowed, haue that operation and efficacy geuē them, which they pretēd? * If they so beleue, euery childe may see that they are farre beguiled. For holy water being of them exorcised or cōiured: hath no such power in it, neither cā haue which they in theyr exorcisme do cōmaund. For there they iniōyn and commaund, that whersoever that water is sprinckled, all vexatiō or infestatiō of the vnclean spirit, should auoid, and that no pestilēt spirit there should abide. &c. But most playn it is, that no water, be it neuer so holy, can haue any such power so to do, as it is commaunded, to wit, to be an vniuersall remedy to expell all diseases.

This I woulde aske of these Exorcistes:* whether in theyr commaunding, they do coniure or adiure the thinges coniured, to be of an higher vertue and operation, thē their own nature doth geue: Or els whether they in their prayers desire of God,* that he wil infude into them that vertue, which they require? If they in theyr commaunding doe so beleue, thē do they beleue that they haue that power in thē to the which the inferior power of the thing exorcised must obey, in receiuing that which is commaunded. And so doing, are much more deceiued, forasmuch as they see themselves, that they which are so authorised to the office of exorcising, say to the deuill being coniured: Go, & he goeth not: And to an other come, and he cometh not, & many thinges els they commaūd the inferior spirite their subiect, to do, & he doth not. So in like case, when they pray to God to make the water to be of such vertue, that it may be to them health of mind and body, and that it may be able to expulse euery vncleane spirit,* & to chase away all maner of distemperature and pestilence of the ayre (being an vnreasonable petition asked, & sore displeasing to God) it is to be feared least theyr benediction, their halowing & blessing is chaūged into cursing, according to that saying that followeth. And now O you priests, I haue a message to say vnto you: If you will not heare and beare well away in your mindes, to geue the glory vnto my name sayth the Lord God of hostes, I will send scarcety amongst you, and I wyll curse your blessings. What things and how many are blessed, or halowed in the Church, that in halowing thereof displease God, and are accursed? And therefore according to the saying of S. James,* they aske & are not heard, because they aske not as they should, that they in theyr owne dsires may perish, Let a man beholde the blessing or halowing of their fire, water, incense, waxe, bread, wine, the church, the aultar the Churchyard, ashes, belies, copes, pallmes, oile, candles, salt, the hallowing of the ring, the bed, the staffe, & of many such like things:* & I beleue that a man shall find out many errors of the hethē Magicians, Witches, southsayers and charmers. And notwithstanding the auncient and old Magicians in their bookes, commaund those that Page 498 be coniurers that they in any wise liue deuoutly (for otherwise as they say the spirites will not obey their cōmaūdements, and coniuratiōs) yet the Romane cōiurers do impute it to the vertue of the holy wordes, because they be they, which worke, and not the holynes of the coniurers. How commeth it to passe that they say, the thinges consecrated of a cursed and vicious Iauell, should haue so great vertue in pronouncing (as they say) the holy and misticall words: as if they were pronouced of a Priest neuer so holy. But I maruell that they say so,* reading this saying in the Actes of the Apostles: because the charmers pronouncing the name of Iesus (that is about all names) would haue healed those that were possessed with deuils, and sayd. In the name of Iesus whom Paul preacheth, go ye out of the men. And the possessed with deuils answered, Iesus we know, and Paule we know, but what are ye: and they all to be beat the coniurers.

And now considering this and many such like things, I maruell wherfore the vicious Priests, do sell theyr praier and blessings dearer (as also theyr Masses & Trentals of Masses) then those that be deuout lay mē, and holy women: which with all theyr hart desire do flee from vices, & take hold of vertue. For as much as God in diuers places of the Scripture doth promise, that he will not heare sinners & wicked persons: Neither should he seme to be iust, if he should sooner heare the praier of his enemies, then of his faythfull frend. How I pray you shall a sinneful priest deliuer an other man from sinne by his prayers, or els frō the punishment of sinne: whē he is not able to deliuer him selfe by his prayer frō sinne? What then doth God so much accept in the Masse of a vicious Priest:* that for his masse, his prayer or oblatiō, he might deliuer any man either frō sinne, or from the payne due for sinne? No, but for that that Christ hath once offered himselfe for our sinnes, & now sitteth on the right hand of God the father, alwayes shewing vnto him what and how great things he hath suffered for vs. And euery priest alwayes maketh mētion in his masse of this oblation: Neither do we this, that we might bring the same oblation into the remembraunce of God: because that he alwayes in his presence seeth the same.* But that we should haue in remēbraunce this so great loue of God, that he would geue his own sonne to death for our sinnes, that he might clense & purify vs frō all our sinnes. What doth it please God, that the remembraunce of so great loue is made by a prest, which more loueth sinne then God? Or how can any prayer of such a priest please God, in what ho^lly place soeuer he be, or what holy vestimēts soeuer he put on, or what holy prayers soeuer he maketh? And where as Christ and his Apostles do cōmaund the preaching of the word of God: * the Priests be now more bound to celebrate the Masse, and more straitly bound to say the Canonickall houres: whereat I cannot but greatly maruell. For why, to obey the precepts of men, more then the cōmaūdements of God, is in effect to honor mā as God, and to bestow the sacrifice vpon man, which is due vnto God, and this is also spirituall fornication. How therefore are Priests bound at the commaundement of man to leaue the preaching of y^e word of God, at whose cōmaundemēt they are not bound to leaue the celebration of the Masse, or singing of Matines? Therefore as it seemeth, Priestes ought not at the commaundement of any man to leaue the preaching of the word of God, vnto the which they are boūd both by diuine and Apostolicall preceptes. With whom agreeth the writing of Hierome vpon the Decretals, * saying in this wise: Let none of the Bishops swell with the enuy of deuilish temptation, let none be angry, if the Priestes do sometime exhort the people, if they preach in theyr Church. &c. for to him that forbiddeth me these thinges I will say, that he is vnwilling that Priestes should do those thinges, which be commaunded of God. What thing is there about Christ? or what may be preferred before his body and his bloud &c.

*Do Priestes therfore sinne or not, which bargayne for mony to pray for the soule of any dead man? It is well knowne that Iesus did whip those that were buyers and sellers out of the tēple, saying: My house shalbe called the house of prayer, but you haue made the same adenne of theenes. Truely he cast not out such Marchaunts frō out of the Church, but because of theyr sinnes. Wherupon Hierome vpon this text sayth. Let the Priests be diligent and take good heede in this Churche, * that they turne not the house of God into a den of theeues. He doubtles is a thief which seeketh gayne by Religion, & by a shew of holynes studieth to finde occasion of marchaundise. Hereupon, the holy Canons do make accursed, Symoniacal heresy, & doe commaund that those should be depriued of the priesthood, which for the passing or maruelous spiritual grace, do seek gayne or monye. Peter the Apostle sayde to Symon Magus, Let thy mony and thou go both to the deuill, whiche thinkest that the giftes of God may be bought for money. Therefore, the spirituall gyftes of God ought not to bee solde.

Uerely prayer is the spirituall gift of God, as is also y^e preaching of y^e word of God, * or the saying on of handes, or the administration of other Sacramentes. Christ sending forth his Disciples to preach, sayd vnto them: Heale ye the sicke, cast out deuils, rayse the dead, freely haue ye receiued freely geue ye agayne. If the Priestes haue power by theyr prayers to deliuer soules being in Purgatory, from greeuous paynes: without doubt, he hath receiued that power freely from God. How therefore can he sell his act, vnlesse he resist the commaundementes of God, of whom he hath receiued that authoritye? This truly cannot be done without sinne, which is agaynst the commaundement of God.

How playnly spake Christ to the Pharisies, & Priests saying, wo be vnto you Scribes & Pharisies hypocrites, because ye haue eaten the whole houses, of such as be wydowes, by making long praiers, and therefore haue you receiued greater dānation. Wherin I pray you do our Pharisies and Priestes differ from them? * Do not our Priestes deuour widowes houses and possessions, that by their lōg prayers they might deliuer the soules of their husbāds frō the greuious paynes of purgatory? How many Lordships I pray you, haue bene bestowed vpon the religious mē & womē to pray for the dead, that they by their prayer might deliuer those dead men from the payne (as they sayd) that they suffer in purgatory, greuously tormented and vexed? If theyr prayers and speaking of holy words, shall not be able to deliuer themselues frō payn,* vnlesse they haue good works: How shall other men be deliuered from payne, by their praier, which whilst they liued here, they gaue ouer themselues to sinne? Yea peraduenture those Lordships or landes which they gaue vnto the priestes to pray for them, they themselues haue gotten by might from other faythful men, vniust, and violently. And the Canons doe say, that sinne is not forgeuē, till y^e thing taken away wrōgfully, be restored. How thē shal they be able (which do vniustly possesse such Lordshippes or landes) to deliuer them by theyr prayers from payne, which haue geuen to them these lordships or landes, seing God from the beginning hath hated all extortion in his burnt sacrifices? Not euerye one that sayth vnto me Lord, Lord, shal enter into the kingdome of heauen: but he which doth the will of my father which is in heauē.* And agayne, not the hearers of the law, but the doers of the law shall be iustified.

If therefore the words of him that prayth, do not deliuer himselfe from sinne, nor frō the payne of sinne: how do they deliuer other men from sinne or frō the payne of sinne when no man prayth more earnestly for an other man thē for himselfe? Therefore many are deceiued in buying or selling of prayers, as in y^e buying of pardons that they might be deliuered from payne: whē as commonly they pay dearer for the prayers of the proud & vicious prelates, thēfor the prayers of deuout women and deuout men of the laye people. But out of doubt, God doth not regard the person of him that prayth, neither the place in which he praith, nor his apparell, nor the curiousnes of his prayer, but y^e humility and godlye affection of him that prayeth.* Did not the Pharysy and the Publican goe vp into the temple to pray? The Publicans prayer for his humility and godly affection is heard. But the Pharisies prayer for his pride & arrogancy is contempned. Cōsider that neither the person, nor the place, nor y^e state, nor the curiousnes of his prayer doth helpe the Pharysy: Because the Publicane not thinking himselfe worthy to lift vp his eyes vnto heauen, for y^e multitude of his sinnes, saying (O God be mercifull vnto me a sinner) is iustified by his humility, and his praier is heard. But the Pharysy boasting in his righteousnes is despised, because God thrusteth downe the proud, and exalteth the humble and those that be meek. The rich glutton also, that was clothed with purple and silke, & fared euery day daintely, prayd vnto Abraham, and is not heard, but is buryed in paynes and torments of hell fire. But Lazarus whiche lay begging at his gate (being full of sores) is placed in the bosome of Abraham. Behold y^t neither the riches of his apparell, nor the deliciousnesse of his banquets, or the gorgiousnes of his estate, neither the aboundance of his riches, doth helpe any thing to prefer the prayers or petitiōs of the rich glutton, nor yet diminishe his tormentes, because that mighty men in their mightines shal suffer tormentes mightely. How dare any man by cōposition demaund or receiue any thing of an other man for his prayers? * If he beleue y^t he can by his praier deliuer his brother frō greuous paine, he is boūd by charity to relieue his brother with his prayers although he be not hired thereunto, but and if he will Page 499 not pray vnles he be hyred, thē hath he no loue at al. What therefore helpeth his prayer, which abideth not in charitie? Therefore let him first take compassion of himselfe by praier, that he may come into charitie, and then he shalbee the better able to helpe others. If he beleue not, or y^t he standeth in doubt to be able to deliuer his brother by his praier: wherfore doth he make with him an assured bargayn, & taketh his mony, and yet knoweth not whether he shall relieue him euer a whit the more or not, from his paine? I feare least the words of the Prophet are fulfilled, saying: From the least to the most al mē applye themselues to couetousnes, and from the Prophet to the Priest all woorke deceitfully. For the poore priests excuse themselues, of such bargaining and selling of their praier, saying: The yong cock learneth to crow of the olde cocke. For sayeth he, thou maist see that the Pope himselfe in stalling of Bishops & Abbots,* taketh the first frutes: In y^e placing or bestowing of benefices, he alwaies taketh somewhat, & specially if the benefices be great. Also he selleth pardōs or bulles, and to speake more plaine, he taketh mony for them. Bishops in geuing orders, in hallowing churches & churchyards, do take mony: In ecclesiastical correction they take mony for the mitigation of penance: In the greuous offences of cōuict persons, mony is required, & caused to be payed, Abbots, Monkes, & other religious men that haue possessiō, wil receiue no mā into their fraternitie, or make thē partakers of their spiritual suffrages, vnles he bestow somewhat vpon them, or promise them somewhat. Curates & vicars hauing sufficient liuings, by the tithes of their paryshioners, yet in dirges and yeares myndes, in hearing confessions, in weddinges & buryings, do require & haue money. The Fryers also of the fower orders of beggers, which think thēselues to be the most perfitest men of the Church, do take mony for their praiers, confessions, & buryings of the dead: and when they preach, they beleue that they shal haue eyther money or some other thyng worthy money. Wherefore then be the poore priests blamed? ought not they to bee held excused, although they take money for their praiers by cōpositiō? Truly (me thinketh) that this excuse by other mens sins, doth not excuse thē: forasmuch, as to heap one mischief vpon anothers head, is no sufficiēt discharge. I would to God that al the buyers & sellers of spiritual suffrages,* would with the eyes of their harte beholde the ruine of the great Citie, and the fall of Babylon, and that which they shall saye after that fall. Doth not the Prophet say: And the merchaunts of the earth shall weepe and mourne for her, because no man shall buy anye more their marchandise, that is, their marchandise of gold and siluer, and of precious stone and of pearle, and of silke and purple: And again he sayth. And the marchaunts which were made riche by her, shall stand alouse for feare of her tormentes, weeping, mourning, and saying, Alas, Alas, that Citie Babylon; that great Citie whych was woont to weare purple, whitesilke, crim sin, gold, pearle, and precious stone, because that in one hour al those ryches are come to nought: And agayne: And they cast dust vpon their heads and cryed out weping and mourning and saying, Alas, Alas, that great and mightie Citie Babilon, by whom al such as had shippes vpon the sea were made riche by her rewards: Because that in one houre she is become desolate.

This Babilon, this great Citie, is the Citie of Rome, as it appeareth by the processe of the Apostle.* Because the aungel which shewed vnto Saint Iohn the destructiō of the mightie harlot sitting vpon many waters, with whō the kinges of the earth haue committed fornication, and al they which dwell vpon the earth are made dronke with y^e wyne of her whoredome, sayd vnto him: And the woman which thou sawest, is the great citie which hath dominion aboue kings &c. And in dede in y^e daies of Saint Iohn the whole world was subiect to the temporall Empire of the Citie of Rome, and afterwarde it was subiect to the spiritual Empire or dominion of the same. But touching the temporal gouernment of the City of Rome,* it is fallen alreadye: and so that the other also, for the multitude of her spiritual fornicatiōs shal fall. The Emperours of this city gaue themselues to Idolatry, and would haue that mē should honour them as Gods,* & put al those to death that refused such idolatry, & by the cruelty of their tormentes, al infidels gate the vpper hand.

Hereupon, by the image of Nabuchodonosor, y^e empire of the Romaines is likened to yron, which beateth together, and hath the mastery of all mortals. And in the visiō of Daniel, wherein he saw the foure windes of heauen to fight in the mayne sea, and fower great beastes comming out of the sea: * The kingdom of the Romaines is lykened to the fourth terrible and maruelous beast, the which had great yron teeth: eating & destroying, and treading the rest vnder his feete: & this beast had ten hornes, & as Danyell sayth, he shall speake words agaynst the most highest, and shall teare with his teeth the Saynts of the most highest: and he shall thinke, that he may be able to chaunge times and lawes, and they shall be delyuered into hys power, vntill a tyme, tymes, and halfe a time. In the Apocalips, Saine Iohn sawe a beast comming out of the sea, hauyng 7. heads and 10. hornes, and power was geuen to hym to make monthes 42.* So long time endured the Empire of the Romaines, that is to say, from the beginning of Iulius Cesar, which was the first Emperour of y^e Romaines, vnto the ende of Fridericus, whych was the last Emperour of the Romaines. Under this empire Christ suffred, & other Martirs also suffred for his name sake. And here is fallen Rome as Babylon (which is all one) accordyng to the maner of speakyng in the Apocalips as touchyng the temporal and corporal power of gouerning. And thus shall she fall, also touchyng the spirituall power of gouerning, for the multitude of the iniquities and spirituall fornication and merchaundise that are committed by her in the Church.

The feete of y^e image which Nabuchodonezor saw,* dyd betoken the Empire of Rome, & part of them were of yron, and part of clay & earth. The part that was of yron fell, and y^e power therof vanished away, because y^e power therof was at an end after certayne monthes. That part of clay and earth yet endureth, but it shal vanish away by the testimony of the Prophets: whereupon saint Iohn in the Apocalips: After that, he sawe the part made of yron rising out of the sea, to which eche people, tribe, and tong submitted themselues. And he saw an other beast cōmyng out of the earth, which had two hornes, like to the hornes of a Lambe, and he spake like a Dragon, and he vanquyshed the first beast in his sight.

This beast as seemeth me, doth betoken the claye and earthē part of the feete of y^e image,* because hee came out of y^e earth. For y^e by terrene helpe he is made the high & chief priest of the Romaines, in the church of Christ, & so from alow he ascended on hygh. But Christ from heauen descended, because that he which was God & author of euery creature became man: and he that was Lord of Lords, was made in the shape of a seruant. And although that in the heauens the company of angels minister vnto him, he himselfe ministred or serued in earth, that he might teache vs humilitie, by which a man ascendeth into heauen, euen as by pride a man goeth downe into the bottomlesse pyt. This beast hath two hornes most like a Lambe, because y^t he chalengeth to himselfe both y^e priestlye & kingly power, aboue al other here in earth. The Lambe that is Chryst which is a king for euer vpō y^e kingly seat of Dauid, & he is a Priest for euer after y^e order of Melchisedech: but hys kingdome is not of this world, but the kingdome of thys beast is of this world, because those y^t be vnder him, fyght for him. And as Iesus is Christ two maner of waies, because that Christus is as much to say as Vnctus.* He verelye was annoynted king, & annoynted priest: so this beast saieth that he is chiefe king & priest. Wherefore doth he call himselfe Christ? because that Chryst knowing that afore, sayd: Many shal come in my name, saying, I am Chryst, and shall decyue many. And thus because that he is both king & priest, he chalengeth to himselfe the double sworde, that is the corporall sword and the spirituall sworde. The corporal sword is in his right hand, and y^e spiritual sword is in his right eye, by the testimony of Zachary. But hee speaketh subtilly like a Dragon,* because that by the testimony of Christ he shal deceiue many, as the Apoc. witnesseth. He did great wonders, that also he might make more fire to come from heauen into the earth in the sight of mē, that he might deceiue those that dwel vpon the earth, because of the wonders that are permitted hym to do in the sight of the beast, & hee ouercame the first beast which ascended out of the sea. For that beast challenged vnto himselfe authoritie of gouernment of y^t whole worlde. He hath put to death & tormented those that resist his commaundements, and would be honored as a God vpon the earth. The byshop of Rome sayth, that y^t whole world ought to be in subiectiō vnto him, those that be disobediēt vnto his commaundements, he putteth in prison, and to death if he can: If he cannot, he excommunicateth them, and commaundeth them to be cast into the deuils dūgeon. But hee that hath no power ouer y^r body, much lesse hath he power ouer y^e soule. And truely his excommunicatiō, nor the excommunication of any priest vnder him, shall at that time little hurt him that is excommunicat, so that the person of him that is excommunicate, be not first excommunicat of God through sinne.

And thus it seemeth a trouth vnto me, that God thus turneth their blessinges into cursinges, because they geue Page 500 not due glory vnto his name. So when y^t they vniustly excommunicate & curse, he turneth their cursings into blessings. Also the bishop of Rome doth make me to worship him as God, because that y^e special sacrifice that God doth require of vs, is to be obedient vnto him in keping of hys commaundements.* But now y^e Popes commaudemēts be commaunded to be kept, and be kept in very deede, but the commaundements of Christ are contemned and reiected. Thus sitteth the Byshop of Rome in the Temple of God, shewing himselfe as God, and extollethe himselfe aboue al that which is called God, or worshipped as God. But in his fall he shalbe reuealed, because that euery kingdome deuided in it self, shalbe made desolate. He teaching a truthe, is the head of the Churche, but the Prophet teaching a lye, is the tayle of the Dragon. Hee seducyng the worlde, shalbe acknowledged to be the veritie of the doctrine of Christ, but after he is knowne, he shalbee reiected and naught esteemed. He geueth to small and great, riche and poore, free and bonde, markes in their right hands, & in their foreheades: that no man shoulde buy or sell, but those that shall haue the markes of the name of the beast, or that looketh to haue of him some recompence, small, mean, or great, or els the number of his name, which number is 300. The Pope sayth that in y^e administration of euery sacrament, he doth imprint a certaine charecter or mark into the soul of him that receiueth. In baptisme he saith that he doth imprint into the soule of hym that is baptised, a marke that cannot be wiped out, and so likewise in other sacraments.* And I knowe that in a Sacrament are two things, that is, the sacramental signe, & spiritual grace represented by the same signe: the sacramental signe is geuē to man of man, but the spirituall grace is geuen of Christ.

Wherefore, although a vicious or naughty Priest doth baptise any man, if he that is baptised or his parents (if he be a childe) do aske with faithful meaning baptisme, & do meane faithfully hereafter to obserue the wordes of baptisme: is as well baptised, as if hee were baptised of neuer so vertuous a priest. So also the sinner which with al hys hart is sory for his sinnes, and doth aske faithfully mercye of God, is as wel absolued of a vicious priest, as of a vertuous. Because the Lambe of god whych taketh away the sinnes of the word, wipeth away inwardly our sinnes by his grace, because that he is y^e bishop & pastor of our souls. All other priestes do outwardly worke absolution, which knowe not for a certaintye whether they haue absolued or not. So also is it in y^e other, because y^t the grace of y^e sacrament is geuen of God, and the sacramental signe, of man. In geuing of orders, the chiefe bishop doth imprint y^e corporall markes, but of the spiritual markes, I know none: vnlesse a man will say, that by receiuing the order he hath some beliefe that he may worke some thinges pertayning to that order, the which before the receiuing of the order he could not. But this one thing is, that none in the churche ought to sell spiritual marchandise (of which thinges wee haue spoken before) vnles he haue the marke of the beast.

My counsell is, let the buyer beware of those markes: because that after the fall of Babylon,* if any man hath worshipped the beast and her image, & hath reciuēd the marke vpon his forehead, & vpon his hand, he shall drinke of the wine of gods wrath, which is mixed with the wyne in the cup of his anger, and he shalbe tormented in fire & brymstone in the sight of the holy angels, and in the sight of the Lambe: and the smoke of their tormentes shall euer more ascend, although he looke for a recompence, small, mean, or great,* of the beast, or els the nūber of his name. The beast doubtles doth recompence his friends, with his small rewarde, that is, with great gifts and benefices corporall: with a meane reward, that is, with great spirituall gifts, in authority of blessing, losing, binding, praying, & exercising other spiritual workes: & with his greatest rewarde, which after that they be dead, maketh them to be honored in earth amōg the saints.* The number of his name according to y^e opinion of some men, is Dux Cleri, the captayne of the clergie, because by that name he is named, & maketh his name knowne,* and that name is 666.

This is my opinion of the beast ascending out of the earth, and shall vntill suche time as I shalbee of the same beast better instructed. And although that this beast doth signifie the Romaine bishops: yet the other cruel beast ascending out of the sea, doth signifye the Romaine Emperours. And although that the Dragon being a cruel beast, and the false Prophet geuing the marke, must be throwen into the lake of fire and brimstone to be tormēted for euer: I woulde haue no man to iudge, but I leaue such things altogether to the finall iudgement of Chryst to bee detemined. But Martine the Popes confessour which maketh the Chronicle of the Emperours and Popes, recyteth many errours of the Popes,* more horrible and abhominable then of the Emperours. For he speaketh of the idolatrous Popes, hereticall, simoniacal, and Popes y^e were murderers,* that vsed nigromancie, and wytychcraft, that were fornicatours, and defyled with al kinde of vice. But I haue partly declared how that the Popes lawe is contrary to Christes lawe, and howe that he sayeth, that he is the chiefe vicar of Christ in earth: and in his deedes is cōtrary to Christ, and doth forsake both hys doctrine & lyfe. I can not see who els may be so well Antichrist, and a seducer of the people. For there is not a greater pestilence, then a familiar enemy.

As concernyng idols,* and the worshipping of them, I think of them as Moses, Salomon, Isayas, Ieremy, and the rest of the Prophetes, which all spake agaynst the making of Images, as also y^e worshipping of Images. And faithful Dauid full of the spirit of God, sayth: Let all those be confounded y^t worship Images,* and that reioyce in Idols: And againe he sayth: Let thē be made like vnto them y^t make them, & al such as put their trust in them. Wherefore I pray god that this euil come not vpon me, which is the curse of God pronounced by Dauid the prophet. Nor I will be by Gods grace, neither a maker, nor els a worshippinger of Images.

As cōcernyng othes,* I beleue and obey the doctrine of the almighty God, & my maister Iesus Christ, which teacheth: that Christian men in affirmation of a truth, should passe the righteousnes of the Scribes and Pharises of the olde Testament, or els he excludeth thē from the kingdom of heauen. For he saith: Unles your righteousnes exceede the righteousnes of the Scribes and Pharises, ye cannot enter into y^e kingdome of heauē. And as concerning othes he sayth. It hath bene sayd to them of old time, thou shalt not forswear thy selfe, but shalt performe vnto the Lorde those thinges which y^u vowest. But I saye vnto you thou shalt not sweare at all, neyther by the heauē nor yet by the earth. &c. But let your cōmunication be yea, yea, nay, nay, for whatsoever shalbe more then this, proceedeth of euill. Therefore, as the perfection of the auncient men of the old Testament was, not to forswear themselves: so the perfection of Christian men is not to sweare at all, because they are so cōmaunded of Christ, whose commaundement must in no case be broke: although that y^e Citie of Rome is contrarye to thys d^octryne of Chryst euen as in manye things she is found contray to her selfe.

As touching the taking away of temporal goods from those that are ecclesiastical persons offendyng habitualiter: by such as are temporall Lordes, I will not affirme anye thing to be lawfull in this matter (as in other matters before) that is not agreable to charitie: And that for because it is a hard matter for a man to take another mans goods from him without breaking of charity, because peradventure he that taketh away, is the more mooued to suche maner of taking away be reason of the desire he hath to those goods, which he indeuoureth to take away: or els, because of some displeasure or hatred to the person, from whom he goeth about to take away those goods, then that hee from whom those goodes be taken, should be amended. Therefore, vnlesse he that taketh away, be onely mooued of charity to the taking away of such goodes, I dare not affirme that such taking is lawfull. And if such takyng away procede of charitie, I dare not iudge it vnlawfull: because that the Byshop of Rome which receyued hys temporall dominion of the Emperour, when the Emperour rebelled and was not obedient vnto hym, he depriued him frō hys temporall iurisdictions: Howe much more then may temporal Lordes do the same which haue bestowed vpon them many temporall dominions and lordships, onely to the intent that they might the better intende to serue God and keepe his commaundementes. Howe if they perceiue that they be against the lawes of God, and that they be ouer busily occupied about worldly matters: I cannot see but y^t they may wel inough take frō them those temporall goodes, which to a good purpose they gaue them. But if in time to come after this, those that be temporal lordes shall take from ecclesiastical persons such temporalities: let him that desireth to vnderstand this, read the prophet Ezechiel in the chapiter of the shepeherds of Israel, which fedde themselves in stead of their flocke: and also let hym reade the Apocalyps of the fall of Babylon. Let hym also reade the Popes decretalles agaynst heretikes, and in those hee shall fynde, that the takynge awaye of the temporaltyes from the Cleargy, shall come to passe for the multitude of their sinnes.

Thus reuerend father, haue I made mine aunswere of the matter wherof I am accused: beseching you, that as I haue bene obedient to your desire, and that euen as a sōne Page 501 declaring vnto you the secrets of my hart in plain words (although rudely) so I desire to know your opinion, and craue your fatherly beneuolēce: that now your labor may be for my instruction and amendment, & not to accusation and condemnation. For like as in the beginninge I haue promised you, y^t if any man of what state, sect, or condition soeuer he be, can shew me any error manye of my wrytings by the authoritie of holy scripture, or by any probable reason grounded in the scriptures: I will receiue hys information willingly and humbly.

After that all the foresaid thinges were exhibited & geuen by the foresayd Walter Brute, vnto the foresayd B. of Herford: he further appointed to the same Walter, y^t third day of the month of October, at Herforde, with y^e cōtinuance of the dayes followyng to heare hys opinion. Which third day now at hande, beinge Friday in the yeare of our Lord God 1393. the sayde Walter Brute, appeared before hym, sitting in Commission in the Cathedrall Church of Hereford, at sixe a clocke or thereabout: hauing for his assistentes in the same place, diuers Prelates and Abbotes, and xx. Bachelers of Diuinitie, wherof xii. were Monks, and two Doctors of the law. Amongst these was Nicholas Hereford, accōpanied with many other Prelates and worshypfull men & wyse Graduates in sundry faculties. Now was the foresayde Walter apposed of his wrytings aforesaid, & the cōtents therin. Earnest were they in pycking out of those writings, his heresies, & in shewing his schismes, sundry errorrs, and diuers other things. Now, after that they had cōtinued al that day and the two dayes following (that is Fryday, Saterday, & Sunday) in their informations & examinations agaynst the same Walter Brute. The same Walter Brute submitted him selfe to the determination of the church,* & to the correction of the sayd Iohn Bishop, as it appeareth word for word in a scroule written in the English tong: The tenour of which scroul, is as followeth.

I Walter Brute submit my selfe principally to the Euangely of Iesus Christ,* and to the determination of holy kirke, and to the general Counsels of holye kirke. And to the sentence and determination of the foure Doctours of holye write, that is Austen, Ambrose, Ierome, and Gregory. And I meekely submie mee to your correction, as a subiect ought to his Byshop.

Which scroule as afore is recited in y^e English tong, the foresayd Walter Brute read, with a lowde and intellible voice, at the Crosse in the churchyard on Monday, that is to say, the 6. day of the sayd month of October, before the sermon made vnto the people in presence of y^e sayd byshop of Herford & other aboute written,* as also other Barons, knights and noble men & cleargy, and also a great multytude of people. After which reading of the scroule, the foresaid Tho. Crawlay bachelor of diuinitie, made y^e Sermon vnto the people, & toke for hys theame the wordes of y^e Apostle to the Rom. the xi. chap. that is as foloweth. Be not ouer wise in your owne conceites but stand in feare &c.

☞ Out of these declarations and wrytinges of Walter Brute, the Bishop with the Monkes and doctours aboute rehersed, did gather and draw out certaine articles, to the number of 37. which they sent to the Uniuersitie of Cambridge to be cōfuted, vnto two learned men. M. Colwill, & M. Newton, Bachelors of diuinitie. Which M. Colwil, & Newton did both labor in the matter, to the vttermost of their cunning, in replying and aunswering to the said 37. articles.

* Besides them also W. Woodforde a Frier (who wrote likewise against the articles of Wickliff) labouring in the same cause, made a solemne & a long tractation, compiling the articles of the said Brute, to the nūber of 29. All which treatises, as I wish to come to the readers hande, that the slendernes of them myght be knowen: so it maye happen perease, y^t the same being in my handes may hereafter bee further published, with other like tractations moe, as cōuenient time for the prolixitie therof may hereafter, better serue then now.

What after this became to this Walter Brute, orwhat end he had, I find it not registred: but like it is, that he for this time escaped. Certain other writings I finde moreouer, which albeit they beare no name of this Walter, nor of any certaine author: yet because they are in y^e same register adioined to y^e history of him, I thoght therefore most fit here to be inserted. Of y^e which y^e one was a letter sēt to Nicholas Hereford a little aboute specified: who beinge at y^e first a great follower of Iohn Wicklif, as appereth before pag. 438. was now in the number of thē which sate vpon thys Walter, as is in y^e next page aboute recorded. The copy of this letter, bering no name of any special author, but only as sēt by a certain Lollard (as y^e register doth terme him) is written in maner and forine as followeth.

Here followeth the Copy of a letter sent to maister Nicholas Hereford, by a Lollard, as in the Register it is sayd.

FOR as much as no man that putteth hys hande to the plough and looketh backe,* is meete for the kyngdome of God, as our Sauour Christ sayth: What maruel is it, although maister Nicholas Herford, which at the first (by the visitatiō of the spirit of god peradventure) put his hand, that is, gaue his diligence, vnto the plough, that is, to the sowing of the word of God and holy scripture, as well in preaching as in doyng good workes: is now so blynde and vnskilfull to expound the scripture, that he knoweth not what is vnderstoode by the kyngdome of heauen. Truly it is no maruayle, O thou that arte maister of the Nicholitanes, which like Nicholas the moste false deacon, hast left or forsaken the infallible knowledge of the holy scripture. For the true knowlledge of the Theologicall veritie is shutte vp as well from thee as from all the other Nicholitanes following thy conditions,* for as much as thou goest not in by the dore to expound the same Euāgelical veritie. Therefore whē thou didst recite this other day, first, the pharisaycal and hypocritical woe (nothing at all to any purpose) thou shouldest haue sayd iustly in this sort, both of thy self, and other thy followers and religious Antichristes: Wo be vnto vs Scribes and Pharises, which shut vp the kyngdome of heauen, that is to say, the true knowledge of the holy Scripture, before men by our false glofes and crooked similitudes: and neyther we our selues enter into the same kyngdome or knowledge, nor suffer other to enter into it. Wherefore, it seemeth vnto the faythfull sort, that wrongfully, falsy, & without any reuerence, yee haue expounded that text of Gregorye. 1. q. 1. that is to saye. Quicumque studet. &c. For this is the true vnderstandinge of the same.* Knowing first that there be some priests after the thing, and name onely; and doth shew that this is true: that whosoever studieth to receiue the holy order by geuing of money: He is not a priest, secundum rem, & nomē: But to say the truth, he desireth to be called a priest, that is to be a priest Secundum nomen tantum. And such a priest which is a priest in name onely, is no priest. No more then S. Mary paynted is S. Mary: Nor a false doctour a doctour, but no doctour: And a man painted is not a man, but no mā. And thus such a priest in name onely, is not a priest. Because that all faythfull men do firmly beleue with S. Gregory that no man buying the holy orders, may then be called a priest as he sayth. 1. q. 1. They that buy or sell holy orders can be no priestes. Whereupon is written, Anathema dandi, & Anathema accipiendi. That is Simoniacall heresie. And it followeth, how therefore, if they be accursed and not blessed, can they make others blessed▪ And whē that they be not in the body of Christ, howe can they eyther receiue or deliuer the body of Christ? He that is accursed, how can he blesse? as though he would say. It is vnpossible. As Pope Vrbanus saith. 1. q. 1. Si qui a Simoniacis. &c. Where he saith thus. They that willingly know & suffer thēselues to be cōsecrated,* nay rather execrated of those that are infected with Simony: wee iudge that their consecration is altogether voyde. Also Pope Leo in 2. q.* 1. sayth in this wise. Grace, if it be not freely geuen or receyued, is not grace Spiritual vsurers do not receiue freely: Therefore, they receiue not the spirituall grace, whych specially worketh in the ecclesiastical orders. If they receyue it not, they haue it not: if they haue it not freely, they cannot geue it freely. And by this it is more clearer then the light that they which know so much and receyue orders by spirituall vsury or simonye, are neither priests nor deacōs, neither after the maner nor charecter. For if such carecter or marke were otherwise geuen in geuing orders, it were requisite alwayes that there shoulde bee a certayne grace imprinted in the man, but there is no suche grace geuen or imprinted as afore is manifest: Therefore there is no such Character to be sayned. Therefore, such Character or marke abydeh not in him, for as much as he neuer had nor hath the same. And yet furthermore in the same place. What then do the simonycall prelates geue? And he maketh aunswer truely euen that which they haue, as the spirit of lying. How proue we this? Because that if it be the spirite of veritie, as the same veritie doth testifie from whō it commeth, it is freely receaued. And it followeth for the whole purpose no doubt: It is conuicted to be the spirite of lying, which is not freely receyued.

By this it appeareth manifestly to the faythfull sort, that those which weetingly and simonically are made priestes, for as much as they receyue not the Character of the Lorde but only the spirite of lying and the marke of Symon Magus, and of Iudas the traytor, that they be not priestes neyther according to the marke nor manners. Nor such do no more make the sacramentes of the Church, then other lay men may in the time of necessitie, nor yet so truely,* during their hereticall naughtynesse. And yet in deede (brother myne,) vniuocè natura, but yet aequiuocè in moribus. I doe not wryte thus sharpely vnto you, through anger, or anye Page 502 vnperfect hate: but through the perfect hate of your horrible heresie, and denying the fayth of Christ, that I may say with Dauid in the Psalme. Perfecto odio oderam &c. And I am very sorye for you, that you which in times past haue excellētly well, and fruitfully preached the Gospell in the pulpit, do nowe as wel fayle in the congruitie of the Latine tounge, as in the other science naturall. For as it was heard thrise in one lecture you sayde appetitis, that is to saye, pronouncyng the myddle syllable longe, whych thyng not onely the maisters, but also the yong scholars vnderstoode. And many other faultes there in your Grammer, which for shame I dare not recite. I send vnto you these fiue cōclusions.

The first conclusion. It is an infallible veritie that the wordes of the foure chiefe doctours, expounding the holy scripture according to the veritie which the words do pretend, are to be holden and kept.*

The second: He which importeth any equiuocatiō out of any of the Doctours expounding, for the coulouring of his text, his equiuocation is alwayes to be left.

The thirde: No peruersion of any reprobate is able to turne the congregation of the elect from the faith, because al things y^t shal come to passe, are eternally in God deuysed & ordayned for the best, vnto the elect Christians.

The fourth: Like as the mystical body of Christ is the congregation of al the Electiso Antichrist mystically is the church of the wicked & of al the reprobates.

The fift: The conclusions of Swinderby, be agreable to the fayth in euery part.

This letter was thus subscribed. By the spirite of God, sometime visityng you.

☞ Besides this epistle aboue prefixed, there is also fōūd annexed with the same, a deuise of an other certayne letter coūterfeited vnder the name of Lucifer prince of darknes: writing to the Pope and al popishe Prelates, persecuting the true and right Church (with all might and mayne) to maintayn their pride and domination in this earth, vnder a coulourable pretence & visor of the catholique church, & succession Apostolical. Which letter although it seemeth in some authors to be ascribed to Dekam, aboue mentioned: yet because I find it in the same Register of the church of Herford cōteyned, & inserted amōg y^r tractations of Walter Brute, and deuised (as y^r Register said) by y^r Lollards: I thought no meeter place, then here to annexe the same, the tenour wherof thus proceedeth in words as follow.

The deuise or counterfayt of a certayne letter fayned vnder the name of Lucifer Prince of darknesse, wryting to the persecuting prelates of the popish clergy.

I Lucifer prince of darknes and profound heauinesse, Emperour of the high mysteries of the Kyng of Acharont,* Captaine of the dungeon, Erebus kyng of hell, and comptroller of the infernall fire: To all our children of pryde, and companions of our kyngdome, and especially to our Prynces of the Church of this latter age and tyme (of which our aduersary Iesus Christ, accordyng to the Prophet, saieth: I hate the church or congregation of the wicked) send greeting, & wish prosperitie to all that obey our commaundementes, as also to those that be obedient to the lawes of Sathan already enacted, & that are diligent obseruers of our behestes, and the precepts of our decree. Know ye that in times past certayne vicars or vicegerents of Christ,* following hys steppes in miracles and vertues, liuing and continuynge in a beggerly lyfe, conuerted (in a maner) the whole world from the yoke of our tiranny vnto their doctrine & maner of lyfe: To the great derision and contempte of our prison house and kyngdome: and also to the no little preiudice and hurt of our iurisdiction and authoritye, nor fearing to hurt our fortified power ond to offend the maiestie of our estate. For then receiued we no tribute of the world, neyther dyd the myserable sort of common people, rushe at the gates of our deepe dungeon as they were wont to do with continuall pealyng and rappyng,* but then the easie, pleasant, & broad way, which leadeth to death, lay still without great noyce of trāpelyng trauaylers, neyther yet was trode with the feete of myserable men. And when all our courtes were without sutets, Hell then began to houle: And thus continuynge in great heauines & anguish, was robbed and spoyled. Which thing considered, the impacient rage of our stomacke coulede no longer suffer, neyther the ougle retchelous neglygence of our great Captayne generall could any longer indure it. But we, seeking remedy for the time that should come after, haue prouyded vs of a verye trimme shift: For in stead of these Apostles and other their adherentes whyche draw by the same lyne of theirs, as wel in maners as doctrine, & are odious enemis vnto vs: We haue caused you to be their successors, & put you in their place, which be Prelates of the church in these latter times, by our great might and subtiltie, as Chryst hath sayd of you they haue raigned but not by me. Once we promised vnto him al the kingdom of the world if he would fal down and worships vs,* but he would not, saying: my kingdom is not of this world, and went his way, when the multitude would haue made him a temporall kinge. But to you truely which are fallen from the state of grace, and that serue vs in the earth: is that my promise fulfilled, and all terrene thyngs be our meanes which we haue bestowed vpon you, are vnder gouernment. For he hath said of vs as ye know: The prince of the world cōmeth &c. and hath made vs to raigne ouer al children of vnbeliefe Therefore our aduersaryes before recited, dyd pacientlye submit themselues vnto the Princes of the worlde, and did teache that men shoulde do so, saying. Be ye subiect to euery creature for Gods cause, whether it be to the Kyng as moste chieftest. And agayne: Obey ye them that are made rulers ouer you &c. For so their maister commaūded them saying: The kinges of the heathen haue dominion ouer them &c. But I think it long til we haue powred our poyson vpō the earth, and therefore fill your selues full. And now bee yee not onely vnlyke those fathers, but also contrary vnto them in your lyfe and conditions, and extoll your selues aboue all other men. Neyther do ye geue to God that which belongeth to him,* nor yet to Caesar that which is his: But exercise you the power of both the swordes, according to our decrees, makinge your selues doers in worldlye matters,* fighting in our quarell, intangled with secular labours and busines. And clyme ye by litle & little from the myserable state of pouerty, vnto the highest seates of all honours, & the most princely places of dignitie by your deuised practices, & false and deceitfull wyles and subtlety: that is, by hypocrisy, flattery, lying, periurie, treasons, deceits, simonye, and other greater wickednes then which our infernal furies may deuise. For after that ye haue by vs bene aduaunced thither where ye would be: yet that doth not suffice you, but as greedy staruelings more hūgry then ye were before, ye suppress the poore, scratch and rack together all that comes to hand, peruertering and turninge euerie thing topsie toruey: so swollen, that redy ye are to burst for pride liuing like Lechers in all corporal delicatenes, and by fraude dyrecting all your doinges. You challenge to your selues names of honour in the earth, callyng your selues Lordes, holye, yea and most holy persons.

Thus, eyther by violence ye rauē, or els by ambition, subtilly ye pilfer away, and wrongfully wraft, and by false title possesse those goodes whych for the sustentation of the poore members of Christ (whom frō our first fall we haue hated) were bestowed and geuen: consuming them as ye your selues lyst, & therewith ye cherish and maintaine an innumerable sort of whoores, strumpets,* and bawdes, with whom ye ride pompously like mightie Prynces, farre otherwise goinge, then those poore beggerly priestes of the primatiue Church. For I would ye shoulde buylde your selues ryche and gorgeous palacies, yee fare lyke Prynces, eating and drinking the most daintiest meates, and pleasauntest wi•es that may be gotten: ye hoord and heepe together an infynite deale of treasure, not like to him that sayd, golde and siluer I haue none, ye serue and fight for vs according to your wages O most acceptable societie or fellowship, promised vnto vs by the Prophet, and of those fathers long ago reprooued: Whilest that Christ called thee the Sinagogue of Sathan, and lykened thee to the mighty whoore which committed fornicatiō with the kings of the earth,* the adulterous spouse of Christ, and of a chaste person made a strompet. Thou hast left thy first loue and hast cleaued vnto vs, O our beloued Babilon, O our citizens, which from the transmigration of Ierusalem, come hether: we loue you for your desertes, we reioyce ouer you, which contemne the lawes of Simon Peter,* and imbrace the lawes of Symon Magus our friend, and haue them at your fingers endes, and exercise the same publiquely, buying and selling spirituall thynges in the Church of God, and against the commaundement of God. Ye geue benefices and honors by petition, or els for money, for fauor, or els for filthy seruice. And refusing to admit those that bee worthy to ecclesiastical dignities, & perfering those that are vnworthye, you call vnto the inheritance of gods sanctuarie, baudes, lyers, flatterers, your nephues, and your owne children, & to a childish boy, ye geue many prebends: the least whereof ye deny to bestow vpō a poore good man: ye esteeme the person of a man and receyue giftes, ye regarde money and haue no regarde of soules. Ye haue made the house of God a denne of theeues. Al abuse, all extortiō, is more exercised, a hundreth fold in your iudgement seats, then with any secular tyrant. Ye make laws & kepe not the same, & ye dispence with your dispensations as it pleaseth you,* you iustifye the wicked for rewardes, and ye take away the iust mās desart frō him. And briefly ye perpetrate or cōmit all kind of mischief, euen as it is our wil ye should. And ye take much paine for lucre sake in our seruice,* and especially to destroy the Christian fayth. For now the lay people are almost in doubt what they may beleue, because if ye preach any thing to them at sometimes (although it be but seldome seene,* & that negligently inough, euen as we would haue it) yet notwithstanding they beleue you not, because they se manifestly that ye do cleane contrary, to that ye say. Whereupon, Page 503 the common people, doing as ye do, which haue the gouernemēt of them,* & should be an example to them of wel doing: •ow many of them leaning to your rules, do rūne hedlong into a whole sea of vices:* And so continually a very great multitude flocketh at the strong and wel fenced gates of our dungeon. And doubtles, ye send vs so many day by day of euery sort and kinde of people, that we should not be able to entertaine them, but that oure insatiable Chaos with her thouſande rauening lawes is sufficient to deuoure an infinite number of soules. And thus the souerayntie of our Empire,* by you hath bene reformed, and our intollerable losse restored. Wherefore, most specially we cōmend you, & geue you most hartie thanks: Exhorting al you, that in any wyse ye perseuere and continue, as hetherto ye haue done: neither that you slack hēceforth your enterprize. For why, by your helps we purpose to bring the whole world again vnder our power & dominion. Ouer and besides this, we cōmit vnto you no small authoritie, to supply oure places in the betraying of your brethren, and we mak and ordaine you our vicares, & the ministers of Antichrist our sonne,* now hard at hand, for whō ye haue made a very trimme way and passage. Furthermore, we counsell you which occupy the highest roomes of all other, that you worke subtilly, and that ye (faynedly) procure peace betwene the princes of the world, and that ye cherish and procure secret causes of discorde. And like as craftely ye haue destroyed and subuerted the Romain Empire:* so suffer ye no kingdome to be ouermuch enlarged or enriched by tranquillitie and peace. Least perhaps in so great trāquilitie (all desire of peace set aside) they dyspose themselues to vew and consider your most wicked workes, suppressing on euery side your estate: and from your treasures take away such substance, as we haue caused to be reserued and kept in your hands, vntil the cōming of our welbeloued sonne Antichrist. We would ye shuld do our cōmēdations to our entierly beloued daughters, pride, deceit, wrath, auarice, bellichere, and lechery, & to al other my daughters: and especially to Lady Symony, which hath made you men, and enryched you, and hath geuen you sucke wyth her own brests, & weaned you, and therefore in no wise see that you cal her sin. And be ye lofty and proud, because that the most high dignitie of your estate doth require such magnificence. And also be ye couetous,* for whatsoever ye get and gather into your fardell, it is for Saint Peter, for the peace of the church, and for the defence of your patrimony and the Crucifixe, and therefore yee may lawfully do it. Ye may promote your Cardinals to the highest seat of dignities without any let in all the world, in stopping the mouth of our aduersarye Iesus Christ, and alledging againe: that he preferred his kinsfolkes (beinge but of poore and base degree) vnto the Apostleship, but do not you so, but rather call, as ye do, those that liue in arrogancy, in hawtines of mynde, and filthy lechery, vnto the state of welthy riches and pride, and those rewardes & promotions,* which the followers of Christ forsooke, do ye distribute vnto your frinds. Therefore as ye shall haue better vnderstanding, prepare yee vyces cloked vnder the similitude of vertues. Alleadge for your selues the gloses of the holy scripture, and wrest them,* directly to serue for your purpose. And if any man preach or teache otherwise then ye wil, oppresse ye them violently with the sentence of excommunication, & by your cēsures heaped one vpon another, by the consent of your brethren. Let him bee condemned,* as an hereticke, and let him be kept in most straight prison, and there tormented till he die, for a terryble example to all such as confesse Christ. And setting all fauour apart, cast him out of your temple: least peraduenture the ingrafted word may saue your soules, which word I abhorre, as I do the soules of other faithful mē. And do your indeuor, that ye may deserue to haue the place which we haue prepared for you, vnder the most wicked foundatiō of our dwelling place. Fare ye well, with such felicitie as wee desire and intende finally to reward and recompence you with.

Geuen at the centure of the earth, in that our darke place, where all the rablement of Deuils were present, specially for this purpose called vnto our most dolorous Consistory, vnder the Charecter of our terrible seale, for the confirmation of the premisses. Ex Registro Herfōrdensi ad verbum.*

Who was the true author of this poesie or epistle aboue writtē it is not euidētly knowē: neither yet doth it greatly skill. The matter beyng well considered of their part, which here be noted: may minister vnto them sufficiēt occasion of holesome admonition, either to remember themselues what is amisse, or to be thinke with thēselues what is to be amended. Diuers other writings of like argumēt both before & since, haue bene deuised: as one bearinge the title Luciferi ad malos principes Ecclesiasticos, imprinted first at Paris in Latin. And vnder the writing therof, bearing this date. Anno a palatij nostri fractione, consortium{que} nostrorum subtractione. 1351. Which if ye count from the Passion of the Lord: reacheth wel to y^r time of Wickliffe 1385. which was aboue vj. yeres before y^r examination of this Walter Brute.

There is also an other epistle of Lucifer,*prince of darknes, ad praelatos, mentioned in the Epistle of the schoole of Prage, to the vniuersitie of Oxford, set forth by Huldericus Huttenus, about the yeare of our Lorde (as is there dated) 1370. which seemeth to be written before this epistle.

Also Vincētius in Speculo histo.* lib. 25. cap. 89. inferreth like mention of a letter of the fiendes infernal, vnto the clergy men as in a vision represēted before 400. yeres. In which the deuils geue thanks to the spirituall men, for that by their silence and not preaching the Gospel, they send infynite soules to hell. &c.

Diuers other letters also of like deuise, haue ben written, & also recorded in authors. Whereunto may be added, that one Iacobus Cartusienensis,*wrytinge to the Byshop of Wormace, alleageth out of the prophecie of Hildegardis in these wordes: Ideo et diabolus in semetipso de vobis sacerdotibus ait: Escas epulantium, conuiuia et omnes voluptates in istis inuenio, sed et oculi, et aures, et venter meus, et venae meae, de spumis illorum plenae sunt, et vbera mea plena sunt diuicijs illorum &c. 1. Therefore saith he, y^r deuil may say of you priests in himselfe: The meates of banketting dishes, and feastes of al kind of pleasure, I find in these men: Yea also, mine eyes, mine eares, my belly, & all my vaines be full of their froathing, and my brests be full stuffed with their ryches. &c. Furthermore, saith he, they labour euery day to rise vp higher with Lucifer, but euery daye they fall wth him more deeply.

Hereunto also appertayneth a story written, & cōmonly found in many olde written bookes. In the yeare of our Lord. 1228. at Paris in a Synode of the clergie, there was one appointed to make a Sermō.*Who being much carefull in hys minde, & solicitous what to say, the deuil came to him, and asking why he was so careful for his matter, what he should preach to y^r clergy, say thus, quod he: The princes of hell salute you (Oh you princes of the Church) & gladly geue you thanks, because through your default and negligence, it cōmeth to passe, that al soules go downe to hel. Adding moreouer, that he was also enforced by the commaundement of God to declare the same, yea and that a certayne token moreouer was geuen to the sayde clerke for a signe, wherby the sinode might euidently see, that he did not lye. Ex catall. Illyr. Fol. 546.

BOnifacius Bishop, seruauant of the seuants of God: To the reuerend brother Iohn Bishop of Hereford, sendeth greeting & Apostolicall benediction. We meane to write vnto our welbeloued sonne in Christ (Richard the renowned king of England) in forme enclosed within these presents. Therefore we will and commaund your brotherhood, that as much as ye maye, ye study and endeouour your selfe to exhort and induce the same king, to doe those thinges which we haue wrytten vnto him, as it is sayde before. And notwithstanding, that now many a day you ought to haue done it of your self, & not to loke that wee should perswade you to that effect by vs wrytten: you may proceed as well by our authoritie, as by your owne, for as much as it was geuen you before: that here after we may know effectually by your diligence, what zeale your deuotion beareth vnto the Catholike fayth, and to the conseruing of the ecclesiasticall honour, and also to the execution of your pastorall office.

Geuen at Rome, at S. Peters the xv. Kalendes of October, the 6. yeare of our bishoplike dignitie.

The tenour of the Bull, to the renowned prince Richard by the grace of God king of England & of Fraunce: whereof mention is made aboue, as followeth, and is thus much in effect.

TO our welbeloued sonne in Christ,* Rycharde the noble king of Englande, wee send greetinge &c. It greeueth vs from the bottome of our hartes, and our holy mother the Church in all places through Christendome lamenteth. Wee vnderstande that there bee certayne heresies sprong, and do without any condign restraynt raunge at their owne libertie, to the seducynge of the faithful people, and do euery day with ouermuch liberty enlarge their vndiscreete boundes.* But howe much the more carefullie we labour for the preseruacion both of you & your famous kingdome, and also the sinceritie of the faith: and doe with muche more ardent desire couet, that the prosperous state of the same should be preserued and elarged the sting of greater sorow doth so much the more penetrate and molest vs, for as muche as wee see (alas the while) in our tyme, and vnder the regall presidence Page 504 of your moste Christyan gouernment: a certayne craftye and hairebraine sect of false Christians, in the same your kingdom, to grow and increase: which call themselues the poore men of the treasury of Christ and his disciples, and whom the common people by a more sounder name call Lollardes (as a man would saye withered darnell) according as their sins require: and perceyue, that they waxe strong, & as it were preuayle agaynst the diocesās of some places, and other gouernors as they meete together not courageously addressing themselues agaynst them as they ought to do (whereof chiefly and not vnderseuerdly I geue them admonition) for that they take thereby the more bolder presumption and stomacke among the vnlearned people. And for as muche as those whom we cannot call men, but the damnable shadowes or ghosts of men, do rise vp against the sound fayth, & holy vnyuersall church of Rome: and that very many of them beinge indifferently learned,* which (to the confusion & eternall damnation of some of them) they got sitting vppon their mothers lap the sayde Church of Rome, doe rise vp or inueye agaynst the determination of the holy fathers, with too much presumptuous boldnes, to the subuersion of the whole ecclesiasticall order and estate:

Haue not bene afrayd, nor are not yet afrayd, publicly to preach, very many erroneous detestable, and hereticall articles, for that they are not put to silence, reprobued, driuen out, rooted out or otherwise punished, by any that hath authoritie and the feare and loue of God.* And also they are not afrayd, openlye to write the same articles, and so being written to deliuer thē to your kinglye parliament, and obstinately to affirme the same. The venemous and disdainfull recitall of which articles, vpon good aduisement at this present we passe ouer: lest the sufferance of such sensualitie, might fortune to renue the woūd that reason may heale. Yet notwithstanding, least so great and contagious an euil should escape vnpunished, and that without deserued vexation, and also that it might not get more hart and waxe stronger: we therefore (according to that our office and duetie is, where such neglygence and sluggishnes of our prelates being present, where this thing is) do commit and geue in commaundemēt to our reuerend brethren, Canterbury,* and Yorke, Archbishops by other oure letters: that they stand vp in the power of God agaynst this pestilent and cōtagious sect, and that they liuely persecute the same in forme of lawe: roote out and destroy those, that aduisedly and obstinately refuse to withdraw their foote frō the same stumbling block, any restraint to the contrary notwithstanding. But because the assistance, counsaile,* fauour, and ayde of your kingly estate & highnes are requisite to the execution of the premisses: we require, exhort, and beseech the same your princely highnes, by the bowels of the mercy of Iesus Christ, by his holy fayth, by your owne saluation, by the benefit that to all men is common, and by the prosperitie assured to euery man and woman, that not onelye your kingly seueritie may readily shewe and cause to bee shewed vnto our Archbishops and their Commissaries (in this behalfe requyring the foresayd due execution) conuenient ayd and fauour, as otherwise also to cause them to be assisted: But that also you wil enioyne your Magistrates and Iustices of assise, and peace more straightly, that of their owne good wils, they execute the authoritie committed vnto thē, with al seueritie against such damned men, according as they are boūd by the office which they are put in trust with: Against those I mene, which haue determyned obstinately to defile thēselues in their malice and sinnes, those to expell, banish, and imprison, and there so long to keepe them, til cōdigne sentence shall pronounce them worthy to suffer punyshment. For your kingly wisdom seeth, that such as they be, do not only deceiue poore simple souls (or at the least do what they can to deceiue thē) but also bring their bodies to destructiō, and further prepare confusion and ruinous fall vnto their temporall Lordes. Go to therefore my sweete sonne, and indeuour your self to worke so in this matter,* as vndoubtedly we trust you will: that as this firebrand (burning and flaming ouer sore) beganne vnder your president or gouernment: so vnder your seuerer iudgement and vertuous diligence, might, fauour, and ayde: not one sparke remaine hid vnder the ashes, but that it be vtterlye extinguyshed and spedely put out.

The Kynges Commission.

RIchard by the grace of God, kyng of Englande, & Fraunce, and Lorde of Irelande. To all those vnto whom these present letters shall come, greeting. Know ye, that where as lately at the instance of the reuerend father, William Archbishop of Caunterbury, Metropolitane of all England, and Legate of the Apostolycal seate: we for the redresse and amendement of all those whych would obstinately preach or maintaine, publicly, or priuely, any conclusions of the holy scripture, repugnant to the determynatiō of our holy mother the church, & notoriously redounding to the subuersion of the Catholique faith, or cōtaining any heresie or errour, within the prouince or bishopricke of Cāterburie: Haue by our special letters patents, in the zeale of the fayth, geuē authoritie and licence vnto the foresayd Archbishop & to all and singular his suffraganes, to arest all and euerye of them that will preach or maintaine any such cōclusions, wheresoeuer they may be found, and to cōmit them either to their owne prisons or any others at their owne pleasure: and to kepe thē in the same, vntill they repēt them of the errours & prauities of those heresies: or til that, of such maner of arests, by vs or by our counsayle it shoulde be otherwise determined,* that is to say, to euery one of them and their ministers throughout their cities and dioces. And nowe the reuerēd father in god Iohn B. of Herford, hath for a certaintie informed vs: that although the same B. hath accordinge to iustyce cōuincēd a certain fellow named W. Swinderby, pretending himself to be a chaplaine,* & one Stephē Bell a learned man, and hath pronounced thē heretikes and excōmunicate, & false informers among the cōmon people, and hath declared the same by the definitiue sentence of the aforesaid bishop for that they haue presumed to affirme and preach openly in diuers places within the dioces of Herford, many conclusions or naughty opinions notoriously redounding to the subuersion of the Catholike sound faith, and tranquillitie of our kingdome. The same Bishop notwithstandinge, neyther by the ecclesiasticall censures, neyther yet by the force and strength of our cōmission was able to reuoke the foresaid William and Stephen, nor yet to bridle the malice and indurate contumacie of them: For that they, after that they were vpon such heretical prauitie conuict by the same bishop (to the intent they might delude his iudgement and iustice) conueyed thēselues by and by, vnto the borders of Wales, with suche as were their factours and accomplices, in keping themselues close, vnto whō the force of our said letters doth in no wise extende. Whereupon, the sayde Bishop hath, made supplication vnto vs, that wee will vouchsafe to prouide a sufficient remedye in that behalfe. Wee therfore which alwayes (by the helpe of almightie God) are defēdours of the fayth, willing to withstand suche presumptuous and peruerse enterprises by the most safest way and meanes we maye geue and cōmit full power and authoritie to the foresayd bishop and to his ministers, by the tenour of these presents, to arrest or take,* or cause to be arrested or taken, the foresayde William and Sthephen, in any place within the citie & dioces of Hereford and our dominiō of Wales, with al the speede that may be, and to cōmit thē either to our prison or els to the prison of the same bishop or any other prison at their pleasure, if such neede bee, and there to keepe thē safe. And afterwards, vnles they will obey the commaundements of the Church, with dilygence to bring them before vs and our coūsel, or els cause them to be brought. That we may determine for their further punishment, as we shall thinke it requisite conuenient to be done by the aduise of our coūsell,* for the defence and preseruatiō of the Catholike faith. And that the foresayde William and Stephen, beinge succoured by the aide of their factours or fauourers, should not bee able to flye or escape to their accustomed starting holes: and that the sharpnes of their paines so aggrauated, may geue them sufficient cause to returne to the lap againe of their holy mother the church: we strayghtlye charge and commaunde all and singular our Shrifes, Bailifes, Barones, and al other our officers, in the Citie and Dioces of Hereford, & in any other place being within our dominion of Wales, by the tenour of these presentes: that from time to time (where they thinke it most meete) they cause it openly to be proclaimed in our name, that none, of what state, degree, preeminence, kind, or other cōdition he shalbe of, do cherish opēly or secretlye, the foresayd William and Steuen, vntil the time that they repent thē of their heresies and errours, and shalbe recōciled vnto the holy Church of God: Neither that any person or persons: be beleuers, fauorers, or receiuers, defendours, or in any case wittinglye instructours, of the said William or Stephen, or any other of the residue of the heretikes that are to be cōuincēd: vpon the forfeiture of all that euer they haue. And that also they geuing their attendance, be obedient & aunswerable to the foresayd bishop and his deputies in this behalfe, for the execution of the premisses: and that they certify vs and our counsel distinctly, and plainly, from time to time, of the names of all and singular persons, which shall fortune to be found culpable in this behalfe, vnder their seales. In witnes whereof, we haue caused these out letters patentes to be made.

Farington

An other letter of the sayd kyng agaynst Walter Brute.

Richard by the grace of God kyng of England and of Fraunce and Lorde of Irelande: ^{*}To hys beloued and faythfull Iohn Chaūdos knight, Iohn Eynfore knight, Renold de la Bere knight Walter Deueros knight, Thomas de la Bare knight, William Lucie knight, Leonard Hakelute knight, and to the Maior of the Page 505 Citie of Hereford, to Thomas Oldcastle, Rich, Nash, Roger Wygmore, Thomas Waylwayne, Iohn Skydmore, Iohn VpHarry, Henry Motton, and to the Shiriffe of Hereford, sendeth salutations.

^{}For asmuche as it is aduertised vs, that one Walter Brute, and other such children of iniquitie, haue damnably holden, affirmed, and preached, certaine articles and conclusions being notoriously repugnaunt against the holy Scripture (of the which, some of them as heresies, and the rest as errours, are finally by the Church condemned) and that in diuers places within the dioces of Hereford and partes neare adioyning, both priuely, openly, and obitimately : which thing wee perceiue not onely to redounde to the subuersion (in a maner) of the Catholicke faith, which as well we, as other catholicke Princes ought of duety to maintaine, but also to forewarne vs of the subuersion of our faithfull Diocesans. And that the sayd Bishop, vpon the good deliberation and aduisement of a great number of Doctours in Diuinitie, and other learned & skilfull men in the Scriptures, of speciall deuotion, according to his bounden duetie, purposed to begin and make diuers and sundry processes by law to be sent vnto the foresayd Walter and hys accomplices, to appere personally before him and other the Doctours aforesaid, in the cathedrall church of Hereford, the morow after the translation of S. Thomas of Hereforde next ensuing, and to procede in the same place against the same Walter, in the foresaide articles and conclusions, for the amendement of his soule. Now a fresh (because that the sayd Walter and others of their retinue, cleaning and confederating with him, might not suffer condigne paines according to their demerites) indeuour themselues to make voide and frustrate the sayde godly purpose of the same Bishop, ^{}in such correction & execution as should haue bene done: and with force doe resist and let the same with all the power they may, to the great contempt of vs and of our crowne, and to the breaking and hurting of our peace, and pernicious example of others: Doe appoynt you and euery of you, immediatly as soone as this our commission shall be deliuered vnto you, in our behalfe and name, to make open proclamation in the diocesie and partes aforesayde, where ye shall thinke it most meete and conuenient: That no man be so hardy hencefoorth, of what state or condition soeuer he shall be, within the Dioces and partes aforesayde, vpon paine of forfeiture of all that euer hee hath, to make or leaue any conuenticles, assemblies, or confederacies, by any colour: or that they presume to attempt or procure any other thing, wherby our peace may be hurt or broken, or that the same Bishops and Doctors aforesaid, may be by any meanes molested or let in the execution of suche correction as is to be done, according to the Canonical sanctions, and to arest all those which ye shal finde or take offending in this behalfe, or that keepe themselves in any suche conuenticles. And that they being committed to prison, be there kept, till you shall haue other commaundement from vs and our counsel for their deliuerance: And that ye distinctly and plainly certifie vs and our sayd counsell, of all your doing in thys behalfe vnder your seales, or else the seales of some of you. And therefore we straightly charge and commaunde you, and euery of you: that ye diligently attende vpon the premisses, and that in your deedes yee execute the same with all diligence and carefull indeuour, in the forme and maner aforesaide. And further, wee geue straight charge and commaundement to all and singular Shriffes, Maiors, Bailiftes, Constables, and other our faithfull subiectes, by the tenour of these presents: that they be attending vpon you, counselling and aiding you and euery of you, as is meete and conuenient in the doing and execution of the premisses. In witnesse whereof, we haue caused these our letters patents to be made.

Witnesse my selfe at Westminster, the 22. day of September, in the 17. yeare of our raigne:

By the same King and Counsell.

Thus king Richard by the setting on of W. Courtney Archb. of Canterb. and his fellowes,* taking part wyth the Pope, and Romith Prelates: waxed something strait and harde to the poore Christians of the contrary side of wyckleffe, as by these letters aboue prefixed may appeare. Allbeit, during all the life of the saide king, I finde of none expresly by name that suffered burning. Notwythstanding, some there were which by the foresaide Archbish. William Courtney, and other Bishops, had bene condemned and diuers also abiured, and did penance as well in other places, as chiefly about the towne of Leycester as followeth here to be declared,* out of the Archbyshoppes register and recordes:

At what time the saide Archbishop W. Courtney was in his visitation at the towne of Leycester, certaine there were accused and detected to him, by the monks and other Priestes in the sayd towne. The names of which persons there detected, were one Roger Dexter, Nicholas Taylor Richard Wagstaffe, Michael Scriuener, William Smith, Iohn Henry, Wil. Parchmeanar, and Roger Goldsmith, inhabitances of the same towne of Leycester: These wyth othermoe, were denounced to the Archbyshop for holding the opinion of the Sacrament of the aultare, of auriculare confession, and other Sacraments, contrary to that which the Church of Rome doth preach and obserue. All whych parties aboue named, & many other mo whose names are not knownen, did hold these heresies and errors here vnder wrytten, and are of the Romish church condemned.

- 1. That in the Sacrament of the aultar, after the words of consecration, there remaineth the body of Christ wyth the materiall bread.
- 2. That images ought not to be worshipped in any case, nor that no man ought to set any candles before them.
- 3. That no crosse ought to be worshipped.

- 4. That Masses, and Mattens, ought not wyth an high and loud voice to be sayd in the Church.
- 5. Item, that no Curate or Priest taken in any crime can consecrate, heare confessions, nor minister any of the Sacraments of the church.
- 6. That the Pope and all prelates of the Churche, can not binde any man in the sentence of excommunication, vnles they know him to be first excommunicated of God.
- 7. That no Prelate of the church, can graūt any pardons.
- 8. That euery lay man may in euery place, preach & teach the Gospell.
- 9. That it is sinne to geue any almes or charitie, to the friers preachers, Minorites, Augustines, or Carmelites.
- 10. That no oblation ought to be vsed at the funeralies of the dead.
- 11. That it is not necessary to make confessyon of oure sinnes to the Priest.
- 12. That euery good man although hee be vnlearned, is a Priest.

These Articles they taught,* preached, & affirmed manifestly in the towne of Leceiter & other places adioyning: Whereupon, the saide Archb. monished the saide Roger, and Nicholas w^t the rest, on the next day to make answer vnto him in the sayd monastery to the foresayd articles. But the foresaide Roger and Nicholas with the rest, hid theselues out of the way, and appeared not. Whereupon, the Archb. vpon All hallow day, being the 1. day of Nouember, celebrating the high masse at the high aulter in the sayd monasterie, being attired in hys Pontificalibus: denounced the saide parties with all their adherents, fautors, fauourers, and counsellors, excommunicate and accursed, whych cyther helde, taught, or maintained the foresaide conclusions heretical & erroneous, and that in solemn wise, by ringing the bells, lighting the candels, and putting out the same againe, and throwing them downe to the grounde w^t other circumstances thereunto belonging. Upon the morow after (being all Soule day) he sent for al the curates & other lay men of the towne of Leicester, to inquire more diligētly of the verity of such matter as they knewe, & were able to say against any persons whatsoever, concerning y^e foresayd articles, as also against the parties before named and specified vpon their others: denouncing euery one of them, seuerally by their names to be excōmunicated and accursed, & caused them also in diuers parish churches in Leicester, also to be excommunicate.* And further the said Archb. interdicted the whole Towne of Leycester, & all the churches in the same, so long as any of the foresayde excommunicate persons should remaine or be wythin the same, and till that all the lollardes of the towne, should returne and amend from such heresies & errors, obtaining at the sayde Archb. hys handes the benefite of absolution.

At length it was declared & shewed to the sayd Archb.* that there was a certain anchoresse whose name was Matilde, inclosed wythin the Churchyard of S. Peters church of the sayd towne of Leycester, to be infected (as they sayd) with the pestiferous contagion of the foresaid heretikes & lollardes: wherupon, after that the sayd Archb. had examined the foresayd Matilde, touching the foresayde conclusions, heresies, and errours, and founde her not to answerd plainly and directly to the same, but sophistically and subtelly: gaue and assigned vnto her a day peremptorie, personally to appeare before hym in the Monasterie of C. Iames at Northampton, more fully to aunswer to the sayde articles, heresies, and errours, which was the 6. day of the sayd moneth of Nouember: commanding the abbot of the monasterie of Pratis aforesayd, that the doore of the recluse in which the sayd Matild was, should be opened, and that til his returne he shuld cause her to be put in safe custody. That done, he sent forth his mandate, against the lolardes vnder this forme.

William by the permission of God.* &c. To his welbeloued sonnes, the Maior & bailiffes, of the towne of Leicester Dioces, greeting. Wee haue lately receiued, the kings letters graciously graūted vs for y^e defence of the catholike Page 506 faith, in these wordes folowing. Richarde by the grace of God, king of England and of Fraunce. &c. Wee on the behalfe of our holy mother the Church, by the kings authoritie aforesaid, do require you: that you cause the same Richard, William, Roger, and the rest, to be arested, and sent vnto vs, that they wyth their pernicious doctrine doe not infect the people of God. &c. Geuen vnder our seale. &c.

*By an other instrument also in the same Register, is mention made of one Margaret Caily Nonne, whych forsaking her order, was by the sayde Archb. constrayned against her wil, againe to enter the same, as by thys instrument here vnder insuing may appeare.

William by the grace of God, &c. To our reuerend brother in God, Iohn by the grace of God, Byshop of Ely greting. &c. In the visitation of our dioces of Lincolne according to our office, amōgst other enormities worthy reformation, we found, one shepe out of our fold strayed and amongst the briers tangled, to witte, Margarete Caily, Nunne professed, of the monasterie of S. Radegonde wⁱn your Diocesse: who casting the habite of her Relygion, was founde in secular attire, many yeares being an Apostata, & leading a dissolute life. And least her bloud shoulde be required at our hands, we haue caused her to be taken, and brought vnto you being her pastor: and straitly inioyning you by these presents do commaund, that you admit the same Margarete againe into her foresayd Monasterie (although returned against her wil) or els into some other place, where for her soules health you shall thinke moste conuenient: and that from henceforth she be safely kept, as in the straight examination of the same you wil yeld an accompt. Geuen vnder our seale. &c.

*By sundry other instrumentes also in the same register recorded I finde, that the foresaide Matilde the anchoresse, vpon the straight examination and handeling of the foresaid Archbishop, before whome peremptorily she was enioyned to appeare, and till that day of apparance taken out of the recluse and committed to safe custodie as you heard: resracted and recanted her foresayd articles and opinions. For the which she being enioyned 40. dayes penance, was againe admitted into her foresaid recluse in Leycester. The Byshops letter to the Magistrates of the towne thus beginneth. Willielmus permissione diuina. &c. dilectis filijs. &c.

*Also, by an other letter of the foresayde Archbish. to the Deane of the Cathedrall church of our Ladye of Leycester being registred, I finde: that of the number of those 8. persons before recite•, whom the Archbishop himselfe at high Masse, did in hys Pontificalibus so solemnely curse wyth booke, bell, and candle: After certeine proces being sent out against them, or els in the meane time being apprehended & taken: two of them recanted their opinions, to wit, William Smith, and Roger Dexter. But in the meane tyme Alyce the wife of the sayde Roger Dexter, takyng holde of the foresaid articles with her husband also, together wyth the said William Smith, abiured the same. For these be the wordes of the instrument. Subsequenter verò, praefati Wilielmus, Rogerus, & Alicia reatus suos respicientes, se nostro conspectul praesentarunt. &c. Notwythstanding, whether they presented thēselues willingly, or els were brought against their wils (as most like it was) hard penance was enioyned them before they were absolved. These be the wordes of the instrument.

Sancta mater ecclesia. &c. i. Seeing our holy mother the church, denieth not her lap to any penitēt childe returning to the vntie of her, but rather profereth to them the same: we therefore do receiue againe the sayd William, Roger, & Alice to grace. And further haue caused them to abiure all and singular the aforesaide articles & opinions before they receiued of vs the benefit of absolution, & were loosed from the sentence of excōmunication wherein they were snarled: inioyning vnto them penance, according to the quantitie of the crime,* in forme as foloweth, that is to say. That euery one of them y^e sonday next after their returning to theyr proper goodes: they the sayd William, Roger, & Alice, holding euery one an image of y^e crucifix in their right hands, and in their left handes euery one of them a taper of waxe, waying half a pound waight, in their shirts (hauing none other apparel vppon them) doe goe before the Crosse three times, during the procession of the Cathedrall Church of our Lady of Leicester: that is to say, in the beginning of the procession, in the middle of the procession, and in the latter end of the procession: to the honor of hym that was crucified in the memoriall of his passion, and to the honor of the virgin his mother: who also deuoutly bowing their knees and kneeling, shall kisse the same crucifixe so helde in theyr handes. And so with the same procession, they entring againe into the church: shall stand during all the time or the holy Masse, before the image of the Crosse with their Lapers and crosses in their handes. And when the Masse is ended, the sayde William, Roger, & Alice, shall offer to him that celebrated that day the Masse.* Then vpon the Saterday next insuing: the sayd William, Roger, and Alice, shal in the full and publique market, within the towne of Leicester, stande in like manner in their shirtes, without any more clothes vpon their bodies, holding the foresayd crosses in their right hāds, which crosses, three tunes they shal (during the market) deuoutly kisse reuerently kneelyng vppon their knees:* that is, in the beginning of the market, in the middle of the market, and in the ende of the market. And the sayde William (for that hee some what vnderstandeth the Latine tounge) shall say this Antheame wyth the collect Sancta Katharina:* and the foresayde Roger and Alice, being vnlearned, shall say deuoutly a Pater noster, and an Aue Maria. And thirdly, the Sonday next immediatly after the same, the sayde William, Roger, and Alice, in theyr parish Church of the sayd towne of Leicester, shall stand and do as vppon the Sonday before, they stoode and dyd in the cathedrall Church of our Ladie aforesayde, in all thynges. Which done, the foresayd William, Roger, and Alice, after Masse, shall offer to the Priest or chaplaine that celebrated the same, with all humiliti and reuerence the waxe tapers, which they shall carie in their handes. And because of the colde weather y^t now is, least the foresaid penitents myght peraduenture take some bodely hurt standing so long naked (being mindful to moderate partly the sayd our rigor) we geue leaue:* That after their entrance into the churches aboue sayde, whylest they shall be in hearing the foresayde masses : that they may put on necessary garments to keepe them from cold, so that their heads and feete notwithstanding, be bare and vncouered. Wee therefore will and commaund you together and a part, that you denounce the said William, Roger, and Alice, to be absolved and restored againe to the vntie of our holy mother the church, and that you call them forth to do their penance in maner and forme aforesayde. Giuen at Dorchester, the 17. day of Nouember in the yeare of our Lorde God 1389. and the 9. yeare of our translation.

Unto the narration of these aboue sayd, we will adioyne the story of one Peter Pateshul au Austen Frier,* who obtaining by the Popes priuiledge (through the meanes of Walter Dis, confessour to the Duke of Lancaster) libertie to chaunge his coat and religion, and hearing the doctrine of Iohn Wicklesse & other of the same fort: began at length to preach opely and to detect the vices of his order, in such forte as all men wondered to heare the horrible recyting thereof. This being brought to the cares of hys order, they to the number of 12. (cōming out of their house to the place where he was preaching) thought to haue withstode hym perforce. Among whome one especially for the zeale of hys religion, stode vp openly in his preaching, and contraried y^t which he said, who then was preaching in the Church of S. Christopher in London.* This when the faithfull Londoners did see, taking grieffe hereat, were mooued w^t great ire against the said Frier, thrusting him with hys other brethren out of the church, whome they not onely had beaten and fore woūded, but also followed them home to their house, mineding to haue destroyed their mansion w^t fire also, and so would haue done, had not one of the sheriffes of London, wyth two of the Friers of the sayde house well knowen & reported amongst the Londiners, wyth gentle wordes mitigated their rage and violence.* After thys, Peter Pateshull thus disturbed as is aforesayd, was desired by the Londiners (for so much as he could not well preach amongst them) to put in writing that, which he had sayde before, and other things more that he knew by the Friers: Who then at their request wryting the same, accused the friers of murther, cōmitted against diuers of their brethren. And to make the matter more apparant & credible, he declared the names of them that were murthered,* wyth the names also of their tormentours. And named moreouer, time and place where and when they were murthered, and where they were buried. Hee affirmed further, that they were Sodomites and traitours both to the kyng and the realme with many other crimes, which mine authour for tediousnes, leaueth of to recite. And for the more confutation of the said friers, the Londiners caused the sayd Bill, to be openly set vp at S. Paules Church doore in London,* Which was there red and copied out of very many. Thys was doue in the yere of our Lord 1387. and in the 10. yere of King Richarde seconde. Ex Chron. Monachi Albanensis. Page 507 Cuius est exordium. Anno gratiae millesimo. &c.

Thus it may appeare by this and other aboue recited, how the Gospel of Christ preached by Iohn Wickleffe and others, began to spread & fructifie abroad in London, and other places of the realme: and more would haue done no dont, had not William Courtney, the Archbishop & other Prelates with the king, set them so forceably with myght & maine, to gainstand the course therof. Albeit as is sayde before, I finde none which yet were put to death therefore, during the raigne of this king Richard the second.* Wherby it is to be thought of this king, that although he cānot be vtterly excused for molesting the godly & innocent preachers of that time, (as by his brieues & letters afore mentioned may appeare) yet neither was hee so cruell against them, as other that came after him: And that which he dyd seemed to procede by the instigation of the Pope and other Byshops, rather then either by the consent of his Parliament, or aduise of his coūsail about him, or els by his own nature. For as the decrees of y^t parliament in all his time, were constant in stopping out the Popes prouisions,* & in bridling his authority as we shall see (Christ willing) anone: so y^e nature of the king was not altogether so fiersly set, if that he following the guiding thereof, had not stand so much in feare of the Bishop of Rome and his Prelates, by whose importune letters & calling on, he was cōtinually urged, to do contrary to that, which both right required, & wil perhaps in him desired. But howsoeuer the doings of this king are to be excused,* or not, vndouted it is y^t Queene Anne hys wife most rightly deserueth singulare commendation: who at the same time liuing with y^e kyng had the gospels of Christ in English, w^t 4. doctours vpon the same. This Anne was a Bohemian borne, and sister to Wincelaus K. of Boheme before: who was maryed to king Richarde about the 5. (some say, the 6.) yeare of hys reigne, and continued w^t hym the space of 11. yeres. By the occasion whereof it may seeme not vnprobable, y^t the Bohemians comming in wyth her, or resorting into thys realme after her, perused and receiued heere the bookes of Iohn Wickleffe, which afterward they conueied into Bohemia, wherof partly mention is made before, pag. 464.

The said, vertuous Queene Anne, after shee had liued with king Richarde about 11. yeares, in the 17. yeare of hys reigne changed this mortall life, and was buried at Westminster. At whose funeral, Thomas Arundel then Archb. of Yorke, and Lorde Chauncelour, made the Sermon. In which Sermon (as remaineth in the library of Worceter recorded) he entreating of the commendation of her, sayde these wordes: that it was more ioy of her, then of any woman that euer hee knewe. For notwithstanding that shee was an alien borne, she had in English all the 4. gospels, w^t the Doctours vpon them: affirming moreouer and testifying, y^e she had sent the same vnto him to examine. And he sayde they were good and true. And further wyth many wordes of praise did greatly commend her, in that she being so great a Lady, & also an alien, would study so lowly so vertuous bookes. And he blamed in that sermon sharply the negligence of the Prelates, & other men. In so much that some sayd, he would on the morow, leaue vp the office of Chauncelour, and forsake the world, & geue him to fulfil his pastoral office, for that he had seene and read in those bookes. And then it had bene the best Sermon that euer they heard. Haec ex libro Wygo. In the whiche Sermon of Thomas Arundell, three poynts are to be considered, first the laudable vse of those olde times receaued to haue the Scripture and Doctours in our vulgare English tounge. Secondly, the vertuous exercise and also example of thys godly Lady, who had these bookes not for a shew hanging at her girdle: but also seemeth by this Sermon to be a studious occupier of the same. The third thing to be noted is, what fruit the sayde Thomas Archbyshoppe declared also himselfe to receiue at the hearing and reading of the same bookes of hers in the English tounge.* Notwythstanding, the same Thomas Arundel, after this Sermon and promise made, became the most cruell enemy that might be against English bookes, and the authors therof as foloweth after in his story to be seene.

For shortly after the death of Queene Anne, the same yere (the king being then in Irelād) this Thomas Arundel Archb. of Yorke, and Byshop of London, Rob. Braybrocke (whether sent by the Archb. of Cant. and the clergy, or whether going of their owne accorde) crossed the seas to Ireland, to desire the king in all speddy wise to returne and help the faith and church of Christ, against such as holding of Wickleffes teaching, went about (as they sayde) to subiect at their proceedings, and to destroy the canonical sanctions of their holy mother church. At whose complaint the king hearing the one part speake, and not aduising the other, was in such forte incensed: that incontinent leauing all his affaires incomplete, he spedde his returne toward England, Where he kept his Christians at Dublin, in the which meane time, in the beginning of the next yere following, which was Anno. 1395. A Parliament was called at Westminster, by the commaundement of the Kyng. In which parliament, certaine Articles or Conclusions were put vp by them of the Gospell side,* to the number of 12. Which Conclusions moreouer were fastened vp vpon the church doore of S. Paule in London, and also at Westminster: The copie of which Conclusions with the words and contents thereof, here vnder ensueth.

The booke of Conclusions, or Reformations, exhibited to the Parliament holden at London, and set vp at Paules doore and other places, in the 18. yeare of the raigne of king Richard the 2. & in the yere of our Lord. 1395.

The first conclusion,* when as the Church of Englande began first to dote in tēporalities after her stepmother the great church of Rome, & the churches were authorised by appropriations: faith, hope, and charitie began in diuers places to vanish and flie away from our Church, for so much as pride with her most lamentable and dolerous genealogie of mortall and deadly sinnes, did challenge that place by title of heritage, and this conclusion is generall and approued by experiēce, custome and maner, as ye shall after heare.

The second conclusion,* y^t our vsuall Priesthode which tooke his originall at Rome, & fained to be a power higher then aungels, is not that Priestthode which Christ or•cyned vnto his disciples. This cōclusion is thus proued, forso much as the Romish priesthod is done with signes and pontificall rites and ceremonies, and benedictions, of no force & effect, neither hauing any ground in scripture, for so much as the Bishops ordinall and the new Testament do nothing at all agree, neither do we see that the holy Ghost both geue any good gift through any such signs or ceremonies: because that he together with all noble & good giftes, cannot cōsist and be in any person wyth deadly sinne. The corolary or effect of this conclusion is, that it is a lamentable and dolorous mockerye vnto wise men, to see the Byshops mocke & play with the holy Ghost in the geuing of their orders: because they geue crowns for their characters and markes, in stede of white hartes, & this carактер is the marke of Antichrist, brought into the holy Church to cloke and colour their idlenesse.

The third conclusion,* that the law of chastity enioyned vnto priesthode, the which was first ordeined to the preiudice of women, induceth Sodomy into the church: but we doe excuse vs by the Bible, because the suspect decree doeth say, that we should not name it. Both reason & experience proueth this cōclusion.* Reason thus, forsomuch as the delicate feeding and fare of the Clergy, will haue either a naturall purgation, or some worse. Experience thus, for somuch as the secrete triall and prooffe or suche men is, y^t they do delite in women. And whensoever thou doest prooue or see such a man, marke him well, for he is one of y^e number. The corolarie of this conclusion is, that these priuate religions with the beginners therof,* ought most chiefly to be disanulled as the original of y^e sinne and offence: But God of hys might, doth of priuie sinnes send open vengeance.

The fourth conclusion,* that most harmeth the innocent people is this: that the fained miracle of the Sacrament of bread, induceth al men, except it be a very few, vnto idolatry: For somuch as they thinke that the body whych shall neuer bee oute of heauen, is by the vertue of the Priestes wordes essentially included in the little breade, the which they doe shewe vnto the people. But woulde to God they would beleue that which the Euangelicall Doctour teacheth vs in his Trialoge, Quòd panis altaris est accidentaliter Corpus Christi.i. that the breade of the aulter is the body of Christ accidentally: for so muche as wee suppose that by that meanes, euery faithful man and woman in the law of God, may make the Sacrament of that bread without any such miracle. The corolarie of this conclusion is, that albeit the body of Christ, be endowed w^t the eternal ioy, the seruice of Corpus Christi made by Frier Thomas, is not true, but painted ful of false miracles, neither is it any maruell: for so much as frier Thomas at that time taking part with the Pope, would haue made a myracle of a hens egge, and we knowe it very well that euery lie openly preached and taught, both turne to the rebuke & opprobry of him whych is alwayes true without any lacke.

The 5. conclusion is this, that the exorcisme & halowings, consecrations, and blessings ouer the Wine, Bread, Page 508*Waxe, Water, Dyle, Salte, Incence, the Aulter stone, and about the Church walles, ouer the Westiment, Chalice, Miter, Crosse, and Pilgrimstaues, are the very practises of Nigromancy, rather then of sacred diuinity. This conclusion is thus prooued, because y^t by suche exorcismes, the creatures are honored to be of more force & power then by their own proper nature, for we do not see any alteration, or chaunge in any creature so exorcised, except it be by false faith which is the principall poynt of deuilish art. The cocolarie of this is, that if the booke of exorcisation or coniuring of holy water which is sprinkled in the Church, were altogether faithfull and true: we thinke certainly that holy water vsed in the Church, were the best medicine for all kinde of sicknesse and sores, Cuius contrarium experimur. i. the contrary wherof daily experience doth teach vs.

The sixt conclusion which mainteineth much pride, is, that a king and Bishop both in one person,* a Prelate and iustice in temporall causes, a Curate an Officer in worldly office, doth make euery kingdome out of good order. This conclusion is manifest, because the temporalty and the spirituality, are two parts of the holy vniuersal Church, and therefore he which addicteth himself to the one part, let hym not intermeddle wyth the other, Quia nemo potest duobus Dominis seruire, wherfore to be called Amphroditae, whyche are men of both kindes or Ambidextri, which is such as can play with both handes, were good names for suche men of double estates. The Corolary of thys conclusion is, that therupon we the procuratours of God in this case, doe sue vnto the Parliament: that it may be enacted, that all suche as be of the clergie (as well of the highest degree as of the lowest) shuld be fully excused, and occupy themselues with their owne cure and charge, and not wyth others.

*The seuenth conclusion that wee mightely affirme is, that spirituall prayers made in the church for the soules of the deade (preferring any one man by name, more then an other) is a false foundation of almes, whereuppon all the houses of almes in England are falsly founded. This conclusion is prooued by two reasons: The one is, that a meritorious praier (of any force or effect) ought to be a worke proceeding from meere charity: and perfect charity accepteth no person, because thou shalt loue thy neighbor as thy self, Wherby it appeareth, that the benefit of any temporall gift bestowed & geuen vnto priestes and houses of almes, is the principall cause of any speciall prayers, the which is not farre different from sunonie. The other reason is, that euery speciall prayer made for men condemned to eternall punishment, is very displeasent before God. And albeit it be doubtful, yet is it very likely vnto the faithfull Christian people, that the founders of euery suche house of almes for their wicked endowing of the same, are for y^e most part passed by the broad way. The corolary is, that euery praier offorce and effect proceeding of perfect charitie, woulde comprehend generally all such, whom God wold haue saued, and to liue. The marchaundise of speciall praiers now vsed for the dead, maketh mendicant possessioners & other hierling priestes, which otherwise were strong enough to worke & to serue the whole realme:

And maintaineth the same in idlenesse, to the great charge of the realme, because it was prooued in a certaine booke which y^e king hath, that a hundreth houses of almes,* are sufficient for the whole realme. And thereby might peradventure greater increase and profite come vnto the temporalitie.

The 8. conclusion needefull to tel the people beguiled, is, that pilgrimages, praiers, and oblations made vnto blinde crosses or roodes,* or to deafe images made eyther of woode or stone: are very neare of kinde vnto Idolatry, and farre different frō almes. And albeit that these thyngs which are forbidden and imagined,* are the booke of errour vnto the common people: notwithstanding, the vsual and common image of the Trinity is most especially abhominable. This conclusion God himselfe doeth openly manyfest, commaunding almes to be geuen to the poore & needy man, for he is the image of God in more perfite similitude and likenesse then any blocke or stone. For God did not say, let vs make a blocke or stone vnto our likenes and image, but let vs make man, for so muche as the supreme & highest honor which y^e clergy calleth Latria, pertaineth only to the Godhead,* & the inferior honour which clergy call Dulia, pertaineth vnto men and angels, and to none other inferior creature. The corolarie is, y^e the seruice of y^e crosse celebrate twice euery yere in our church, is ful of idolatry: For if roode, tree, nailes, and speare, ought so profoundly to be honoured and worshipped,* then were Iudas lippes (if any man could get them) a marueilous goodly relique. But thou Pilgrime, we pray thee tell vs, when thou doest offer to the bones of the Saintes and holy men whych are layd vp in any place: whether dost thou relieue therby the holy man which is already in ioy, or that almes house that is so well endowed,* whereas they are canonised (the Lord knoweth howe) and to speake more plaine, euery faithfull Christian may well iudge and suppose, that the strokes of that same man, whom they calls. Thomas, were no came of Martyrdome, nor yet be.

The 9. conclusion that keepeth the people low, is, that auricular confession which is said to be so necessary for saluation, & the fained power of absolution: exalteth and setteth vp the pride of priests, and geueth them oportunity of other secrete talkes, which we will not at thys tune talke of, for so much as both Lordes and Ladies doe witnes that for feare of their confessors, they dare not speake the truth: and in time of confession is good oportunitie ministred, of wooing, or to play the baudes, or to make other secret conuentions to deadly sinne. They affirme and say, that they are commissaries sent of God to iudge & discern of al maner sinne, to pardone and clense what so euer please them. They say also,* that they haue the keyes of heauen and hell, & that they can excommunicate, curse and blesse, binde and loose, at theyr owne will and pleasure: in so muche, that for a small rewarde, or for 12. d. they will sell the blessing of heauen by charter and clause of warrantes sealed by theyr commō seale. This conclusion is so common in vse, that it nedeth not any probation.* The corolarie hereof is, that the Pope of Rome whych fained himselfe to be the profounde treasurer of the whole Church, hauing that same woorthy iewell which is the treasure of the passion of Christ in hys owne keping and custody, together with the merites of all the saintes in heauen, wherby he geueth fained indulgences and pardons a poena & culpa: Hee is a treasurer almost banished out of chariti, wherby he may deliuer al captiues being in purgatory at hys pleasure, and make them not to come there. But heere euery faithfull Christian may easily perceiue that there is much falshode hid in our church.*

The 10. that manslaughter (either by warre or by any pretended law of iustice, for any temporall cause, or spirituall reuelation) is expresly contrary vnto the newe Testamēt, which is the law of grace, full of mercy. This conclusion is euidently proued by the examples of the preachyng of Christ heere in earth, who chiefly teacheth euery man to loue his enemies, and haue compassiō vpon them, and not to kill and murther them. The reason is this, that for the most part when as men do fight, after the first stroke, charity is broken: and whosoeuer dieth without charity, goth the right way to hell. And beside that, we doe well vnderstand & know that none of the clergy, neither by any other lawfull reason, can deliuer any man from the punishment of death, for one deadly sinne, and not for an other: but the law of mercy which is the new Testament, forbiddeth all maner of murther. For in the Gospell it is spoken vnto our forefathers, thou shalt not kil. The corolary is: It is a very robbing of the people, when Lordes purchase indulgences and pardons a poena & culpa, vnto such as do helpe their armies to kil and murther the christian people in soreine countreys for temporal gaine, as we do see certaine souldiors which do runne amongst the Heathen people to get themselues fame & renowme by the murther & slaughter of men. Much more doe they deserue euil thanks at the hands of the king of peace, for so much as by humility and peace, our faith is multiplied & increased: for murtherers and manquellers, Christ doeth hate and manaseth: he that striketh with the sword, shall perish with the sword.

The 11. conclusion is, whyche is shame to tell: that the vow of chastity made in our church by women whych are fraile and vnperfite in nature, is the cause of brynging in many great and horrible offences and vices, incident vnto the nature of man. For albeit, the murther of their children borne before their time,* and before they are christened, and y^e destruction of their nature by medicine, are filthy & foule sinnes: yet they accompanying amongst themselues, or with vnreasonable beastes, or with any creature not hauing life, doe passe to such an vnseemelinesse, that they are punished by infernal torments. The corolarie is, that widowes & such as take the mantell and the ring delitiously fed, we would that they were married, because that we can not excuse them from priuate offence of sinne.

The 12. that the multitude of artes not necessary (vsed in this our Church) causeth much sinne & offence in waste, curiosity, and disguising in curious apparell: experience & reason partly doth shewe the same, for so much as nature with a few actes, is sufficient for mans vse and necessity.

This is the whole tenor of our ambassade which Christ hath commanded vs to prosecute at this time, most fit and conuenient for many causes. And albeit that these matters be heere briefly noted and touched: yet notwithstanding, they are more at large declared in another boke with many Page 509 other more in our owne proper tounge, which we would should be common to all Christian people. Wherefore, we earnestly desire and beseeche God for his great goodnesse sake, that he will wholly reforme our Church (now altogether out of frame) vnto the perfection of his first beginning and original. Ex Archiuis Regijs.

These verses following, were annexed vnto the conclusions.

Plangunt Anglorum gentes crimen Sodomorum,
Paulus fert horum sunt idola causa malorum,
Surgunt ingrati Gyerzite Simone nati,
Nomine praelati hoc defensare parati,
Qui Reges estis populis quicunque praeestis,
Qualiter his gestis, gladios prohibere potestis▪

The which verses are thus Englished.

The English nation doth lament, of Sodomites their sinne.
Which Paule doth plainely signifie, by Idoles to begin.
But Giersitis full ingrate, from sinfull Symon sprong.
This to defende (though Priests is name) make bulwarkes greed and strong.
Ye Princes therefore which to rule, the people God hath placed,
With iustice sword why see ye not, this euill great defaced.

After these conclusions were thus proposed in the Parliament, the king not long after returned home from Dublin into England, toward the latter ende of the Parliament. Who at his return, called certaine of his nobles vnto him, Richard Stury, Lewes Clifford, Thomas Latimer, Iohn Mountacute,* &c. whom he did sharply rebuke, and did terribly threaten for that hee heard them to be fauourers of y^t side: charging them straightly, neuer to hold, maintaine, nor fauour any more those opinyons and conclusions. And namely of Richarde Stury, he tooke an othe that he should neuer from that day, fauoure or defende any such opinions: which othe being taken, the king then answered. And I sweare (sayth he) againe to thee, that if thou doest euer breake thine oth, thou shalt die for it a shameful death. &c. Ex Chron. D. Albani.

All this while W. Courtney Archbyshop of Caunterbury was yet aliue, who was a great stirrer in these matters. But yet Pope Urbane the great maister of the Catholicke secte was deade and buried 6. yeare before.* After whom succeeded in the schismatical sea of Rome pope Boniface 9. who nothing inferiour to hys predecessour in all kinde of cruelties, left no diligence vnattempted to set forward that which Urbane had begon, in suppressing them that were the setters forth of the light of the Gospell: and had wrytten sundry times to king Richard as well for the repealing of the Actes of Parliament against his prouisions, Quare impedit, and premunire facias: as also that hee should assist the Prelates of Englande in the cause of God (as he pretended) against such,* whom he falsly suggested to be Lollardes and traytors to the Church, to the king, and the Realme. &c. Thus the curteous pope, whom he coulde not reach with his sword, at least with cruel slander of hys malitious tounge, would worke his poyson agaynst them, which letter he wrote to the king in the yeare of our Lord. 1396.* Which was the yeare before the death of W. Courtney Archbishop of Caunterbury. After whom succeded in that see, Thomas Arundel brother to the Earle of Arundel, being first Byshop of Ely, afterwarde Archbyshop of Yorke, and Lord Chancellor of England, and at last made Archbyshop of Caunterbury about the yeare of our Lorde 1397. The next yeare following, which was the yeare of our Lord 1398. and the 9. yeare of the Pope, I finde in certaine recordes of the Bishop of Duresme, a certaine letter of K. Richard 2. written to the said pope Boniface: Which because I iudged not vnworthy to be sene, I thought here to annexe the same, proceeding in forme as foloweth.

To the moste holy father in Christ and Lorde, Lorde Boniface the 9. by the grace of God high Pope of the most holy Romish and vniuersall Church, hys humble and deuout sonne Richard by the grace of God king of England, and Fraunce, Lord of Irelande, greeting, and desiring to help the miseries of the afflicted Church, and kissing of that his blessed feete.

Who wil giue my head water, & mine eyes streaming teares, that I may bewaile the decay and manifold troubles of our mother,* which haue chaunced to her by her owne children in the distresse of this present schisme and diuision. For the sheepe haue forgotten the proper voyce of their shepherds, and hirelings haue thrust in themselues to feede the Lordes flocke, who are clothed with the apparell of the true shepheard, chalenging the name of honour & dignity, resembling so the true shepheard, that the pore sheepe can scarce know whome they ought to folow, or what pastour as a straunger they ought to flee, and whom they shuld shun as an hireling: Wherefore we are afraid, least the holy standard of the Lord beforsaken of his host, and so that Citye being full of riches become solitary and desolate, and the land or people whych was so•t to say (flourishing in her prosperities) I sate as a Quene, and am not a widowe, least it be destitute of the presence of her husband, and as it were so bewitched that shee shall not be able to discern his face, and so wrapped in mases, that she shal hot know where to turne her, that she might more easily finde him, and that she shall with weeping speake that saying of the spouse: I sought him whom my soule loueth, I sought him and found him not: For now we are compelled so to wander, that if any man say, beholde here is Christ, or there, we may not beleue him so saying: and so many shepheards haue destroyed the Lordes vineyarde, and made his amiable portion a waste wilderness.

This multitude of shepherdes is become very burdenous to the Lords flocke. For when two striue to be chief, the state of both their dignities standes in doubt, and in so doing they geue occasion to all the faithfull of Christ, of a schisme and diuision of the Church. And although both parties goe about to subdue vnto their power the whole Church militant, yet cōtrary to both their purpose, by working this way, there beginneth to rise nowe a diuision in the body of the Church. Like as when the diuision of the quicke innocent body was asked, when the two harlots did striue afore Salomon: * like as the ten tribes of Israel folowed •eroboham the intruder, and were withdrawne from the kingdome for Salomons sinnes euen so of olde time the desire of ruling hath drawne the great power of the world from the vnitie of the Church. Let your selues remember, we beseeche you, how that all Greece did fall from the obedience of the Romish Church in the time of the faction of the primarche of Constantinople, * and howe Mahome' with his felowes by occasion of the supremacie in Ecclesiasticall dignitie, deceiued a great part of Christians, and withdrewe them from the Empire and ruling of Christ. And nowe in these dayes, where as the same supremacie hath wythdrawen it selfe from the obedience of it, in so much that nowe in very fewe realmes the candle that burnes afore the Lord remaineth, and that for Dauids sake his seruaunt: And although nowe remaine fewe countreys professing the obedience of Christs true vicare: yet peraduenture if euery man were left to his owne libertie, he would doubt of the preferring of your dignity, or that is worse, woulde vtterly refuse it by such doubtfull euidence alleaged on both sides: and thys is the subtil craft of the croked Serpent, that is to say, vnder the pretense of vnitie, to procure schismes: as the spider of a wholesome flower gathers poyson: and Iudas lerned of peace to make warre. Wherefore, it is liuely beleueed of wise men, that except this pestilent schisme be withstand by and by, the keyes of the Church will be despised, and they shall binde the consciences but of a few? and when either none dare be bolde to correct this fault or to reforme things contrary to Gods lawe, * so by this meanes at length temporall Lordes will take away the liberties of the Church, and peraduenture the Romanes will come and take away their place, people and landes: they wil spoile their possessions and bring the men of the Church into bondage, and they shall be contemned, reuiled and despised: because the obedience of the people and deuotions towards them will almoste bee taken away, when the greater part of the Church left to their owne libertye shall waxe prouder than they be wont, leauing a wicked example to them that doe see it. For when they see the Prelates studie more for couetousnesse than they were wont, to pursse vp money, to oppresse the subiectes, in their punishings to seeke for gaine, to confounde lawes, to stirre vp strife, to suppress truth, to vexee poore subiects with wrong corrections, in meat and drinke intemperate, in feastings past shame: what maruell is it if the people despise them as the foulest forsakers of Gods lawe? but all these things doe folowe if the Church shoulde be left long in this doubtfulnessse of a schisme, and than shoulde that olde saying be verified: in those dayes there was no king in Israel, but euery one did that that seemed right and straighte to himselfe. Micheas did see the people of the Lord scattered in the mountaines as they had bene shepe without a shepheard: for when the shepheard is smitten, the sheepe of the flocke shalbe scattered, the great stroke of the shepheard is the minishing of his iurisdiction, by which the subiects are drawn from his obedience. When Iason had the office of the highest Priest, hee chāged the ordinance of God, and brought in the customes of the heathen, the priests leauing the seruice of the holy altar & applying themselues to wrasting other exercises of the Grecians, & despising those things that belōged to the priests, did labor with all their might to learne suche thinges of the Grecians, and by that meanes the place, people, and holy oynting of Priestes whych in time past were hadde in greate reuerence of kynages, were troden vnder foote of all men, and robbed by the kinges power, and was Page 510 prophaned by thrusting in for money. Therefore, let the hyghest vicare of Christe looke vnto this with a diligent eye, and let hym be the follower of him by whom he hath gotten authoritie aboue others.* If you mark well most holy father, you shal find that Christ rebuked sharply two brethren, coueting the fease of honour: hee taught them not to play the Lordes ouer the people, but the more grace they were preuēted with, to be so much more humble then other, and more lowly to serue their brethren. To hym that asked hys coate, to geue the cloake: to him that smote him on the one cheeke, to tourne the other to him. For the sheepe that are geuen to hys keeping, hee must forsake all earthly thyngs, and to shedde his owne blood,* yea and if neede required to die. These things I say be those that adorne the highest Byshop if they be in him, not purple, not hys white horse, nor his Imperiall crowne, because hee among all men is most bounde to all the sheepe of Christ. For the feare of GOD therefore, and for the loue of the flocke which yee guide, consider these things diligently, and doe them wisely, and suffer vs no longer to wauer betwixte two: although not for your owne cause, to whom peraduenture the fulnes of your owne power is knowen: yet in pitying our weakenes, if thou be he, tell vs openly, and shew thy self to the world, that al we may follow one. Be not to vs a bloody bishop, least by your occasion mans blood be shed, least hel swallow such a number of soules, & least the name of Christ be euill spoken of by Infidels, thorough suche a worthy personage. But peraduenture yee will say, for our righteousnes it is manifest inough,* and we will not put it to other mens disputations. If this bald aunswer should be admitted, the schisme should continue still, seeing neither part is willing to agree to the other: and where the world is as it were equally deuided betwixt them, neither part can be compelled to geue place to the other without much bloudshed. The incarnation of Christ and his resurrection was well inough knowen to himselfe and his disciples, yet hee asked of his father to be made knowen to the world. Hee made also the Gospel to be wrytten, and the doctrine of the Apostles, & sent his Apostles into all the world, to do the office of preaching, that the same thing might be knowen to all men. The foresayde reason is the subtelty of Mahomet, the which knowing himselfe guilty of his sect, vtterly forbad disputations. If ye haue so ful trust of your righteousnesse, put it to the examination of worthy persones in a generall counsell, to the which it belōgeth by right to define such doubts, or els commit it vnto able persons, and geue them full power to determine all things concerning that matter, or at the lest by forsaking the office on both parties, leaue the Church of God free, speedily to prouide for a new shepheard.

We finde, kings haue forsaken their temporal kingdomes, vpon onely respect of deuotion,* and haue taken the apparel of Monkes profession. Therefore let Christes Vicar (being a professour of most high holinesse) be ashamed to continue in his seat of honor, to the offence of all people, and the preiudice and hurt of the Romish church, and the deuotion of it, and cutting away kingdomes from it. But if you say, it is not requisite that the cause of Goddes church should be called in controuersie, and therefore we cannot so easily goe from it,* seeing our conscience gainesayeth it. To the which we answer, if it be the cause of God and the church, let the general council iudge of it: but if it be a personal cause (as almost all the world probably thinketh) if ye were the follower of Christ, ye would rather chose a temporall death, then to suffer such a wauering, I say not, to the hurt of so many, but the endles destruction of soules,* to the offence of the whole world, and to an euerlasting shame of the Apostolical dignitie. Did not Clemente named (or that I may more truely speake) ordeined of S. Peter to the Apostolike dignitie and to be bishop, resigne his right, that his dede might be taken of his successours for an example? Also Pope Siricius gaue ouer his Popedome to be a comfort of the 11000. Virgins. Therefore much more ought you (if neede require) geue ouer your Popedome, that you might gather together the children of God which be scattered abroad. For as it is thought a glorious thing to defend the common right, euen to bludshed: so is it somtimes necessary for a man to wincke at his owne cause, and to forsake it for a greater profite, and by that meanes better to procure peace. Shoulde not he be thought a deuill and Christes enemy of all men, that woulde agree to an election made of him for the Apostolicall dignitie and Popedome, if it should be to the destruction of Christians, diuision of the church, the offence and losse of al faithfull people? If such mischiefs should be known to al the world by Goddes reuelation, to come to passe by such receiuing of the Popedome and Apostolicall dignitie: then by the like reason, why shall he not be iudged of all men an Apostata and forsaker of hys faith,* which chuseth dignitie, or rather worldly honour, then the vnitie of the Church? Christ died that he might gather together the children of God which are scattered abroad: but such an enemy of God and the Church, wisheth his subiectes bodily to die in battaile, and the more part of the worlde to pearish in soule, rather then forsaking to be Pope to liue in a lower state, although it were honourable. If the feare of God the desire of the heauenly kingdō, & the earnest loue of the vnitie of the church do moue your hart, shew in dede that your workes may beare recorde to the truth.

Clement and Siricius most holy Popes, not only are not reprooued, but rather are reuerenced of all men,* because they gaue ouer their right for profitable causes, & for the same cause all the church of holy men shewe forth their praise Likewise your name should liue for euer and euer if ye would do the like for a necessary cause, that is to say, for the vnitie of Gods Church. Geue no heede to vnmeasurable cryings of them that say, that the ryghte chusing of Popes is lost, except ye defend your part manfully: but be afraid, least such stirrers vp of mischiefe looke for theyr owne commoditie or honour,* that is to say, that vnder your wing they might be promoted to riches and honour. After this sort Achithophel was ioyned and Absolon in persecuting his owne father, and false vsurping of hys kingdome.

Furthermore, there shoulde be no ieopardie to that election, because both parties sticke stifly to the old fashion of election, and either of them couer the preheminance of the Romish Church,* counsailing all Christians to obey them. And although throughe their geuing ouer the fashion of chusing the Pope should be chāged for a time: it were to be borne, rather then to suffer any longer this diuision in Gods church. For that fashion in chusing is not so necessary required to the state of a Pope, but the successour of the Apostle as necessary cause required, might come in at the doore by an other fashion of chusing, and that Canonically enough. And this we are taught manifestly by examples of the fathers: for Peter the Apostle appointed after him Clement, and that not by false usurping of power, as we suppose. And it was thought, that that fashion of appointing of Popes, was lawfull unto the time of Pope Hillary. Which decreed that no Pope should appoint his successor.

Afterward,* the election of the Pope went by the clergy and people of Rome, and the Emperors counsel agreeing thereto, as it appeareth in the election of the blessed Gregory. But Martinus Pope with the consent of the holy Synode granted Charles the power to choose the Pope. But of late Nicholas the 2 was the first whome Martine makes mention of in his counsels, to be chosen by the Cardinals. But all the Bishops of Lombardie (for the most part) withstood this election, and chose Cadulus to be Pope, saying that the Pope ought not to be chosen, but of the precinct of Italie. Wherefore, we thinke it not a safe way so earnestly to stick to the traditions of men, in the fashion of choosing the Pope, & so oft to change, least we be thought to breake Goddes traditions concerning the unity of the church. Yea rather it were better yet to ordaine a newe fashion of his election, and meet for hym as it hath bene afore.* But all things concerning the same election myght be kept safe, if Gods honour were looked for afore youre owne, and the peace of the Church were uprightly sought: for such a dishonouring shoulde be most honour unto you, and that geuing place shall be the getting of a greater dignitie, & the willing deposing of your honour,* shoulde obtaine you the entrie of everlasting honour, and shoulde procure the loue of the whole worlde toward you, and you shoulde deserue to be exalted continually, as Dauid was in humbling himselfe. O howe monstrous a sight and how foule a monster is a mannes body disfigured with two heades? So if it were possible, the spouse of Christ shoulde be made so monstrous, if shee were ruled with two such heades: but that is not possible, she is euer altogether faire, in whome no spot is found, therefore we must cast away that rotten member, & thruster in of his second head.* We cannot suffer any longer so great a wickednesse in Gods house, that we shoulde suffer Gods cote that wantes a feame, by any meanes to be torne by the handes of two, that violently draw it in sonder. For if these two should be suffered to raigne together,* they woulde so betwixte them teare in pieces that litle coate of the Lord, that scarce one piece woulde hang to another. They passe the wickednesse of the souldiours that cursed Christ. For they willing to haue the coate remaine whole, said: Let vs not cut it, but let vs cast lots for it, whose it shalbe. But these 2. Popes suffering their right and title to be tried by no lot nor way (although not in wordes yet in deedes) they pronounce this sentence: It shall neither be thine nor mine, but let it be deuided, for they chose rather as it appeareth to be Lords (though it be but in a litle part, and that to the confusion of unity of the Church) then in leuing that lording to seeke for the peace of the church. We do not affirme this, but we shew almost the whole iudgement of the world of them being moued so thinke by likely coniectures. We looked for amendment of this intollerable confusion, by the space that these two inuentours of this mischancelled. But wee looked for peace and beholde trouble: for neither in their lyues nor in their deaths, they procured any comfort, but rather dying as it were in a doubt betwixt two wayes, left to their successours matters of contention continually. But nowe for the space of 7. yeres of their successors, that which we desired and looked for afore (that is, they shoulde beare good grapes and they bring forth wild grapes) in this matter we fall into a deepe despaire. But in as much that we heare the comfort of the Lorde, which promised that miserably he wold destroy those wicked men, & let his vineyard to other husbandmen which will bring him fruit at their times appointed, he hath promised faithfully that he wil help his spouse in her nede, to thend of the world: & we leaning on the sure hope of this promise Page 511 and in hope contrary to hope beleuing, by Gods grace will put our helping handes to easing of this misery, when a conuenient time shall serue, as much as our kingly power is able, although our wit doth not perceauē how these thinges afore rehearsed may be amended: yet we being encouraged to this by the hope of gods promise, will do our endeouour: lik as Abraham beleued his sonne being slaine by sacrifice, that the multitude of his seede should encrease to the number of the starres,* according to Gods promise. Now therfore the time drawes near to make an end of this schism least a third election of a schismaticke agaynst the Apostles successour make a custome of the doying, and so the Pope of Auinion shalbe double Romishe pope, and he shall say with hys partakers, as the Patriarch of Constantinople sayd vnto Christes vicar when he forsooke hym: The Lorde be with thee, for the Lorde is with vs. And is much to be feared of all Christen men. For that Pharisie begins now to be called the pope of Auinion among the people. But peradventure it would be thought of some men, that it belongeth not to secular princes to bridle outragies of the Pope:* to whome we aunswere, that naturally the members put them selues in ieopardy for to saue the head, and the partes labour to saue the whole. Christ so decked his spouse, that her sides shold cleaue together, and should vphold themselues, by course of time and occasion of thinges, they should correcte one an other and cleaue together tunably. Did not Moses put down Aaron, because he was vnfaythfull? Salomon put downe Abiathar, who came by lineall dissent from Anathoth, and remoued hys priesthoode from his kindred to the stock of Eliazar in the person of Sadock which had his beginning from Ely the priest• 3.2 O•ho Emperour, deposed Pope Iohn the 12. because he was lecherous. Henry the Emperour put downe Gratianus, because he vsed Simony in buying & selling spirituall liuings. And Otho deposed Pope Benner the first,* because he thrust in himselfe. Therefore by like reason, why may not kings and Princes bridle the Romishe Pope in default of the Church: if the quallitie of his fault require it, or the necessitie of the Church by this compell to helpe the Church oppressed by tyranny. In old time schismes which rose about making the Pope, were determined by the power of secular Princes: as the schisme betwixt Symachus and Laurence was ended in a Counsaile afore Theodoricus king of Italy. Henry the Emperour when two dyd striue to be Pope, he deposed them both, and receaued the thyrd being chosen at Rome to be Pope, that is to say, Clement the second, which crowned him with the Imperiall crowne. And the Romaines promised him that from thenceforth, they would promote none to be Pope without his consent. Alexander also ouercame 4. Popes schismatickes, all which Fredericke the Emperour corrected.

Thus looke on the register of Popes and theyr deedes, and ye shall finde that schismes most commonly haue bene decised by the powers of secular princes, the schismatickes cast out, and sometimes new popes made, and sometime the olde ones cast out of their dignities, and restored to theyr old dignities again. If it were not lawfull for secular princes to bridle the outragies of such a Pope lawfully made, and afterward becōming a tyraunt: In such a case he might oppresse ouermuch the Church, he might chaunge Christendome into Heathens, and make the labour of Christ crucified to be in vayne,* or els truely God should not haue prouided for his spouse in earth by all meanes as much as is possible by seruice of men to withstand daungers. Therefore we counsell you with such a louing affection as becomes Children, that ye consider in your hart well, least in working by this meanes ye prepare away of Antichrist, through your desire to beare rule, and so by this meanes as we feare the one of these two shall chaunce: Either ye shall cause all the princes of the worlde to rise agaynst you to bring in a true follower of Christ to haue the state of the Apostolicall dignitie, or that is worse, the whole world despising the ruling of one shepherd shall leaue the Romish Church desolate. But God keepe this from the worlde,* that the desire of honour of two men should bring such a desolation into the Church of God: for then that departing away which the Apostle prophecied, shoulde come afore the comming of Antichrist, were at hand: which shold be the last disposition of the worlde, peaceably to receaue Antichrist with honour. Consider therefore the state of your most excellent holines, how ye receaued the power from God to the buil'ding of the Church and not to the destruction, that Christ hath geuen you wine and oyle to heale the wounded, and hath appoynted you his vicar in these thinges as pertayne to gentlenes, and hath geuen vs these thinges whiche serue to rigour. For we beare not the sword without a cause to the punishment of euill doers, the which power ordayned of God we haue receaued, our selues being witnes: beseeching you to receaue our counsel effectually, that in doing thus, the waters may returne to the places from whence they came, and so the waters may begin to be made sweete with salt: least the axe swimme on the water and the wood fineke, and least the fruitfull Oliue degender into a wilde Oliue, and the l•prosie of Naaman that Noble man, cleaue continually to the house of Giezy, and least the pope and the Phariseis crucify Christ agayne, Christ the spouse of the Churche whiche was wont to bring the chiefe Byshop into the holiest place,* encrease your holines, or rather to restore it being lost.

Written, &c. Ex Fragmento libri cuiusdam Dunelm.

This Epistle of king Richard 2. written to Pope Boniface the 9. in the time of the schisme, about the yeare as appeareth 1397. As it contayned muche good matter of wholsome counsel to be followed: so how litle he wrought with the Pope, the sequell after warde declared. For the schisme notwithstanding continued long after, in whiche neyther of the popes would geue ouer theyr holde, or yelde any thing to good counsaile geuen them, for any respect of publike wealth. Such a stroke heareth ambition in thys Apostolicall see, whiche we are wont so greatly to magnifie. But of this inough, whiche I leaue and referre to the consideration of the Lorde, seeing men will not looke vpon it.

Drawing now toward the latter end of king Richards raigne, it remaineth, that as we did before in the time of K. Edward the third,* so here also we shewe forth a summary recapitulation of such parliamentall notes & proceedinges as then were practised by publike parliament in this kings time, against the iurisdiction of the Bysh. of Rome: to the intent, that such (if any such be) that thinke, or haue thought the receauing of the popes double authoritie to be such an auncient thing within this realme, may diminishe theyr opinion: As euidently may appeare by diuers arguments heretofore touched, concerning the election and inuesting of byshops by the king. As where king Oswin cōmaunded Tedde to be ordayned Archbish. of Yorke. Also where king Egfride caused Cuchbert, was brought to K. Canuce and at his commaundement was instituted Byshop of the same see.*Ex lib. Malmesb. de gestis pontif. Anglorum. And likewise Math. Parisiensis testifieth, that king Henry the 3. gaue the Archbishopricke of Caunterbury, to Radulphus then Bishop of London, and inuested him wyth staffe and ring. And the s•re king gaue the Bishopricke of wint. to W. Gifford: and moreouer, following the steppes both of his father and brother before him, endued him with the possessions pertaining to the sayd Bishoprick (the contrary statute of pope Urbane, forbidding that Clerkes should receaue any Ecclesiasticall dignitie at the hand of Princes, or of any lay person to the contrary notwithstanding &c.) Innumerable examples of like sort are to be seen in auncient historyes of this our realme. As also out of the parliament tolles in the time of king Edward hath sufficiently bene touched a little before. Whereunto also may be added the notes of such parliamentes, as haue bene holdē in the raygne of this present king Richard the second, the collation whereof in part here followeth.

 Notes of certayne Parliamentes holden in the the raigne of king Richard 2. making agaynst the Pope.

IN the first yeare of King Richard 2. in the parliament holden at Westminster,* it was requested and graunted: that the popes collector be willed no longer to gather the first frutes of benefices within this realme, being a verye noueltie, and that no person doe any longer pay them.

Item,* that no man doe procure any benefice by prouision from Rome, on payne to be out of the kinges protection.

Item,* that no Englishman do take to ferme of any Alien, anye Ecclesiasticall benefice or Prebende, on the lyke payne. In which byll was rehearsed, that the French men had 6. thousand poundes yearely of such liuinges in England.

Item,* that remedy might be had against the popes reseruations to dignities electiue, y^e same being done against the treaty of the pope, taken with king Edward 3.

In the second yeare of the sayd king Richard the secōd,* it was by petitiō requested: that some order might be takē touchyng Aliens, hauyng the greatest part of the Church dignities in their handes. Whereunto the kyng aūswered, that by aduise of the Lordes, he will provide therfore.

Item,* it was enacted, that all the benefices of Cardinals and others rebels, to pope Urbane that now is, shal be seased into the kynges handes.

An Acte that Pope Urbane was true & lawfull Pope,* and that the liuynges of all Cardinals and other rebels to the sayd Pope, should be seased into the kinges handes, and the kyng bee aunswered of the profites thereof: And that whosoever within this Realme, shall procure or obtayne any prouision or other instrument from any other Pope then the same Urbane, shall be out of the kynges protection.

Page 512Moreouer, in the thyrd yeare of kyng Richard the second, the Prelates and Clergie made their protestation in this Parliament, expressly agaynst a certaine new graūt, to wit, their extortions: That the same neuer should passe with their assent and good will, to the blemishyng of the liberties of the Churche, if by that worde extortion, they ment any thyng largely to proceede against Ordinaries & others of the Church. But if they ment none otherwise to deale hereafter therin, thē before that y^e time had bene done then would they consent. Wherunto it was replied for the king,* that neither for the same their sayd protestation, or other wordes in that behalfe, the king woulde not stay to graunt to his Iustices in that case and all other cases, as was vsed to be done in times past, and was bound to doe by vertue of his othe done at his coronation.

Furthermore, in the fourth yeare of the sayd king Richard 2. it was requested,* that prouision might be had agaynst the popes collectors, for leuying of the first fruits of ecclesiasticall dignities within the realme.

*Item, that all Priors Aliens might be remoued out of their houses, and licensed to depart, & neuer to reuert. And that English men may be placed in their liuinges, answering the king as they did.

*And in the 9. yeare of the foresayd king, touching matter of the Staple: the speaker of the Parliament pronounced, that he thought best the same were planted within the realme, considering that Calis, Bruges, and other towns beyond the seas, grew very rich therby, and good townes here very much decayed, and so much for the common profite. Touching the king, he affirmed that the subsidie & custome of wool more yelded to the king whē the staple was kept in England by one thousand markes yearly, then it did now being holden beyond the seas.

*Item: that inquisition and redresse might be had against such religious persons, as vnder the licence to purchase 10. li. yearly, do purchase 80. li. or 100. li.

*Item, that all Clarkes aduaunced to any ecclesiasticall dignitie or liuing by the king, will graunt to the king the first frutes of their liuinges, none otherwise then they would haue done to the Pope being aduaunced by him.

*In the 11. yeare of K. Richard. 2. it was put vp by the petitions of the commons, that suche impositions as are gathered by the popes bulles of Volumus and imponimus of the translations of B.B. and such like might be employed on the kinges warres agaynst the schismatickes of Scotland. And that such as bring into the realme the like bulles and nouelries may be reputed for traytors.

*In the 13. yeare of his raigne, followed an other parliamēt, in which although the archbish. of Canterbury and Yorke, for them and the whole Clergie of their prouinces, made their solemne protestations in opē Parliament, that they in no wise ment or would assent to any statute or law made in restraynt of the popes authoritie, but vtterly withstood the same, willing this protestation of theirs to be enrolled: yet the sayd protestation of theirs at that time took no great effect.

*Item, in the same Parliament was put vp by publike petion, that the popes collector should be commaunded to auoyd the Realme within 40. dayes, or els to be taken as the kinges enemy, and that euery such collector from henceforth, may be an Englishman and sworn to execute the statutes made in this Parliament.

Moreouer in the sayd Parliament, the yere abouesayd of the king: the 26. of Ianuary, M. Iohn Mandour Clark was charged openly in the parliament, that he should not passe, ne send ouer to Rome, ne attempt or doe any thinge there touching the Archdeaconry of Durham in preiudice of the king or of hys lawes, or of the party presented thereto by the king, on perill that might ensue.

*The next yeare following whiche was the 14. of thys kinges raigne, it was enacted first touching the staplers, that after the feast of the Epiphany next ensuing, that y^e staple should be remoued from Calice into England, in suche places as are contayned in the statute made in 27. Edw. 3. the which statute should be fully executed: and further, that euery Alien that bringeth merchaundise into the Realme, should finde sufficient surety to buy and cary away commodities of the Realme, to halfe the value of his sayd merchaundise.

*Item, in the same parliament petition was made, that agaynst the horrible vice of vsury then termed shifts, practised as well by the clergie as laitie, y^e order made by Iohn Notte, late Mayor of Londō, might be executed throughout the Realme.

*Moreouer in the 15. yeare of the raigne of the foresayde king it was accorded: for y^t syr W. Brian knight, had purchased from Rome a Bull directed from the Archbshop of Cant, and Yorke, to excommunicate suche as had broken vp his house, and had taken away diuers letters, priuilegies, and charters. The same Bull being red in the parliament house, was adiudged preiudicial to the kings crown and in derogation of the lawes, for the whiche hee was by the king and assent of the Lordes committed to the Tower, there to remayne at the kinges will and pleasure.

In the sayd Parliament also, * W. Archb. of Canterbury maketh his protestation in the open parliament, saying, that the pope ought not to excommunicate any bishop, or to entermeddle, for, or touching anye presentment to anye ecclesiasticall dignitie recorded in any the kinges courtes. He further protested, that the pope ought to make no tran'slation, to any Byshopricke, within the realme against the kinges will: for that the same was to the destruction of the realme and crowne of England whiche hath alway bene so free, as the same hath had none earthly soueraigne, but onely subiecte to God in all thinges touching regalties, and to none other. The which protestation he prayd might be entred.

In the 17. yeare of the raygne of the king aforesayd, it was desired that remedy might be had, * agaynst suche religious persons as caused their villains or vnderlinges to mary free women inheritable, wherby the lands came to those religious mens handes by collusion.

Item, that sufficient persons might be presented to [unspec 43] benefices who may dwell on the same so as theyr stocke for want therof do not perish.

Item, that remedy might be had agaynst the Abbotes [unspec 46] of Colchester and Abinton, who in the townes of Colchester and Colnham clayme to haue sanctuary.

To come to the parliament holden in the 20. yeare of this kinges raigne, * we finde moreouer in the sayd rolles: how that the Archb. of Cant. and York, for themselues and the clergy of their prouinces, declared to the king in open parliamēt, * y^t forasmuch as they were sworn to y^e pope and see of Rome, if any thing were in the parliament attempted in restraynt of the same, they woulde in no wise assent therto, but verily withstand the same, the which theyr protestation they require to be enrolled.

Upon the petition of the begging Friers there at large it was enacted: * that none of that order shoulde passe ouer the seas, without licence of his soueraigne, nor that he shoulde take vppon him no order of M. of Diuinitie, vnlesse he were first apposed in his Chapter prouinciall, on payne to be put out of the kinges protection.

Item,* that the kings officers for making arests or attachementes in Churchyardes, are therefore excommunicated, wherof remedy was required.

In the yeare of the same kinges raygne. 21. the Parliement being holden at Westminster,* we find how the commons in full Parliament, accused Thomas Arundell archbishop of Caunterbury, for that he as Chauncellor procured, and as chiefe doer executed the same commission, made trayterously in the tenth yeare of the king. And also that he the sayd Archbishop procured the Duke of Gloucester and the Earles of Arundell and Warwicke, to encroth to themselues royall power, and to iudge to death Simon de Burley, and sir Iohn Berners without the kings assent. Wheron, the Commons required that the same archbish. might rest vnder safe keeping: wherunto, for that the same impeachementes touched so great a person, they would be aduised.

Item,* the 25. day of September, the Commons prayed the king to geue iudgement agaynst the sayd Archbishop, according to his desertes. The king aunswered, that priuately the sayd Archbishop had confessed to him, howe he mistooke himselfe in the sayd Commission, and therefore submitted himselfe to the kings mercy.* Wherfore, the king Lordes and sir Thomas Percy, proctor for the clergie: adiudged the facte of the sayd Archbishop to be treason, and hymselfe a traytour, and therefore it was ordered: that the sayd Archbishoppe shoulde be banished, his temporalties seased, his landes and goodes forfeited, as well in vse as in possession.

The king further prescribed,* that the sayd Archbishop shoulde take hys passing on Friday within 6. weekes of Michaelmas, at Douer, towards the parts of Fraunce.

Thus hauing hitherto sufficiently touched and comprehended such thinges as haue happened in the raygne of this king, necessary for the Church to knowe, by course of story: we come now to the 22. yeare of King Richardes raygne, which is the yeare of our Lord, 1399. In the which yeare happened the strange and also lamentable deposing of this king Richard the second aforesayd, from hys kingly scepter. Straunge, for that the like example hathe not Page 513 often bene seene in seates royall. Lamentable, for that it cannot be but grievous to any good mans hart,* to see him eyther so to deserue, if he were iustly deposed: or if he were vuiustly depriued, to see the kingly title there not able to hold his right, wher by force, it is compelled to geue place to might.

As concerning the order and processe of whose deposing for that it neither is greatly pertinent to my argument, and is sufficiently contayned in Robert Fabian and in the kinges recordes, in the Chronicle of S. Albons, and in other histories at large, it were here tedious and superfluous to entermedle with repeting therof.* What were the conditions and properties of this king, partly before hath bene touched. In whome as some good vertues may be noted: so also some vices may seeme to be mixed withall. But especially this, that he starting out of the steps of hys progenitors, ceased to take part with them, whiche tooke part with the gospell. Wherupon, it so fell, not by the blind wheele of fortune, but by the secret hand of him, which directeth all estates:* that as he first began to forsake y^t mayntayning of the Gospell of God, so the Lord began to forsake him. And where the protection of God beginneth to fayle there can lack no causes to be charged withall, whom God once giueth ouer to mans punishmēt. So that to me considering the whole life and trade of this prince, among all other causes alledged in storyes agaynst him: none seemeth so much to be wayed of vs, or more hurtfull to hym, then this forsaking of the Lord and his word, Although to such as list more to be certified in other causes concurring withall, many and sondry defectes in that king may appeare in storyes to the number of 33. articles alledged or forced rather agaynst him.*

In whiche as I cannot deny, but that he was worthy of much blame: so to be displaced therefore from his regall seate, and rightfull state of the crowne, it may be thought perhaps the causes not to be so rare so material in a prince which either could or els would haue serued: had not he geuen ouer before to serue the Lord and hys word, chusing rather to serue the humour of the Pope and bloody Prelates, thē to further the Lords proceedings in preaching of hys word. And thē as I sayd, how can enemies lack wher God standeth not to friend? or what cause can be so little whiche is not able inough to cast downe, where the Lords arme is shortned to sustayne? Wherefore, it is a poynt of principall wisdom in a Prince not to forget, that as he standeth alwayes in neede of God hys helping hand: so alwayes he haue the discipline and feare of him before hys eyes,* according to the counsaile of the godly King Dauid Psal. 2.

And thus much touching the time and race of this K. Richard, with the tragical story of his deposing. The order and maner whereof purposely I pretermit, onely contented briefly to lay together, a few speciall thinges done before his fall, suche as may be sufficient in a briefe somme, both to satisfie the Reader inquisitiue of suche storyes, and also to forwarne other Princes to beware the lyke daungers. In suche as wryte the life and Actes of this Prince, thus I read of him reported,* that he was much inclined to the fauouring and aduancing of certayne persons about him, & ruled all by theyr counsell, whiche were thē greatly abhorred and hated in the realme: The names of whome were Rob. Ueer Erle of Oxford, whō the king had made Duke of Ireland. Alexander Neuile Archbishop of York, Michiel Delapoole Earle of Suffolke, Robert Trisilian Lord chiefe Iustice, Nicholas Brembre with other.

These men, being hated and disdayned of diuers of the nobles,* and of the commons, the king also by fauouring them, was lesse fauoured hymselfe. In so much, that the Duke of Gloucester, named Thomas Woodstock y^e kings Uncle, with the Erle of Warwicke, and Earle of Darby: stooode vp in armes against those counsailors and abusers (as they named them) of the king. In so much that y^e king for feare was constrayned agaynst hys minde to remoue out of his court, Alexander Neuile Archb. of Yorke, Iohn Foorde Byshop of Duresme, Fryer Thomas Rushoke Bishop of Chichester the kinges confessor, with the Lord Haringworth, Lord Burnell, and Bemond, Lord Ueer. and diuers other.

And furthermore, in the Parliament the same yeare following, Robert Trisilian the Iustice was hanged and drawne. Also Nicholas Brembre Knight, Iames Salisbury also, and Iames Barnese both Knights, Ioh. Bewchampe the kinges Steward and Iohn Blake Esquire in like maner. All these by the counsaile of the Lordes beyng cast in the parliament agaynst the kyngs mind, did suffer, which was in y^e 11, of his raig, he being yet vnder gouernours: but consequently after the same, the king clayming his own liberty, being come to the age of 20. began to take more vpon him. And this was one thinge that stirred vp the kinges stomacke agaynst the Nobles.*Ex Chron. Alban.

2. An other thing that styred hym vp as much against the Londiners was this: for that he would haue borrowed of them a M. pound, and they denied him to their double & triple disauantage, as after ensued vpon it. Ibidem. An other occasion besides this, betwene the king and the Londoners happened thus, by reason of one of the Byshop of Salisburies seruauntes, named Roman, and a Bakers man: who then caryng a basket of horsebread in Fletstreet the foresayd Roman tooke a horselose out of y^e basket. The Baker asking why he did so, the Byshops lusty yeomcu turned backe agayne and brake his head: whereupon the neighbors came out, and would haue arested this Roman but he escaped away vnto the Byshops house. Then the Constable would haue had him out, but the Bishops men shut fast the gates, that they shoulde not approche. Thus, much people gathered together, threatening to brust open y^e gates and fire the house, vnlesse they had the foresayd party to them brought out. Wherby much adoe there was, till at length the Mayor and Sheriffes came and quieted y^e rage of the commons, & sent euery man home to his house, charging thē to keepe peace. Here as yet was no great harme done, but if the bishoppe for his part had beene quyet, and had not styrrd the coles of debate, which were well slaked already all had bene ended without further perturbation.* But th^e stomacke of the Byshop not yet digested (although hys m[•]n had done the wrong) hauing no great cause so to do, whose name was Iohn Waltam being then Treasurer of England,* went to Thomas Arundell archbish. the same time of Yorke, and Lord Chauncellour of England to complayne of the Londoners. Where is to be noted, or rather reueled by the way a priuy mistery, which although be not in this story touched of the writers: yet it touched the hartes of the bishops not a little.* For the Londoners at that time were notoriously knowne to be fauourers of wickliffes side, as partly before this is to be seene, and in the story of S. Albones more playnly doth appeare: where the author of the sayd history writing vpon the 15. yeare of King Richardes raygne, reporteth in these wordes of the Londoners,* that they were Male creduli in deum & traditiones auitas, Lollardorum sustentatores, religiosorū detractores, de cimarū detētores, & cōmunis vulgi depauperatores &c. y^t is not right beleuers in God, nor in the traditions of their forefathers: susteyters of the Lollardes: deprauers of religious men withholders of tythes: and impouerishers of the common people, &c.

Thus the Londoners being noted and suspected of the byshops,* were the more maliced (no doubt therefore) of the sayd byshops, whiche were the more ready to finde & take all occasions to worke agaynst them, as by theyr doynge herein may wel appeare. For the bishop of Salisbury, and archb. of Yorke,* hauing no greater matter agaynst them, then was declared: with a grievous complaynt went to the king, complayning of the Mayor and Sheriffes of Lōdon. What trespasse the Mayor and Sheriffes had done, as ye haue heard before, so may you iudge. Now what followed after let vs heare. The king incensed not a little w^e the complaynt of the Bishops, conceined estsoones against the Mayor and Sheriffes, and agaynst the whole Cittie of London, a great stomache. In so muche that the Mayor & both the Sheriffes were sent for, and remoued from theyr office. Syr Edward Darlyngton then was made warden & Gouvernor of the citie, who also for hys gentlenes shewed to the Cittizens, was also deposed, and an other named syr Baldwyn Radington,* placed in that roome. Moreouer, so much grew the kinges displeasure agaynst the City that he also remoued from London the courtes, & termes to be kept at Yorke, that is to say, the Chauncery, the Eschequer, the kinges benche the hamper, and the common place: where the same con••ued from Midsommer, tyll Christenmas, to the great decay of the Cittie of London: which was an. 1393.*

Thivdly, an other great cause whiche purchased the K. much euill will among hys subiectes, was the secret murdering of his owne Uncle named T. Woodstocke, Duke of Gloucester, of whom mention was made before, where was declared how the said Duke, with the Earle of Arundell, the Erle of Warwicke and the Earle of Darby, with other,* were vp in armour agaynst certayne wicked Counsaylours about the king. Whereupon, the king watching afterward hys time, came into Chelsford, & so to the place neare by, where the Duke lay: wherwith hys own hands he arested the sayd Duke his Uncle, and sent him downe by water immediatly to Calice. And there through the Page 514 kinges commaundement,* by secret meanes was put to death, being strangled vnder a fetherbed, the Earle Marshall being then the keeper of Calis. Wherby great indignation rose in many mens hartes agaynst the king.

With the same Duke of Gloucester, also about y^e same time, was arested and imprisoned the Erle of Warwicke, and the Earle of Arundel: who being condemned by parliament, were then executed, whereby great grudge and great indignation rose in the heartes of many agaynst the king. an. 1397.

Fourthly to omit here the blanke chartes sent ouer all the land by the king: and how the king was sayd to let out his realme to ferme: Ouer and beside all these aboue premised, fell an other matter, whiche was the principall occasion of this mischief: The banishment I meane of Hēry Erle of Darby, and made Duke of Herford a little before, being sonne of Iohn of Gaunt the Duke of Lācaster (who dyed shortly after the banishment of hys sonne, and lieth buried in the Church of S. Paule in London) and the Duke of Northfolke: who was before Erle of Notingham, and after by this king, made Duke of Northfolke the yere before. At which time the king made 5. Dukes, a Marques and foure Earles, to wit: Duke of Herforde, whiche was before Earle of Darby: Duke of Awmerle, which was before Earle of Rutland: Duke of Southrey, who was before Earle of Kent: Duke of Exester, whiche was before Erle of Huntington, and this Duke of North folke,* being before Earle of Notinghame, as is aforesayd &c. The occasion of banishing these foresayd Dukes was this.

About this present time, the Duke of Herforde did appeach the Duke of Northfolke vppon certayne wordes to be spoken against y^e king. Wherupon, casting theyr gloues one agaynst the other,* they appoynted to fight out y^r quarrell, a day being for the same appoynted at Couentry. But the king tooke vp the matter in hys owne handes, banishing the Duke of Northfolke for euer, whiche after dyed at Uenice: and y^e other Duke which was the Duke of Herford, for 10. yeres. Beside these, also was exiled in France Thomas Arunder archbishop of Caunterbury,* by Acte of Parliament, in the same yere, for poynts of treason, as ye haue heard before expressed, page. 512. col. 2. All which turned to y^e great inconueniēce of this king, as in the euent following may appeare.

These causes and preparatiues thus premised, it followed the yere after,* which was an. 1399. and last yere of this king, that the king vpon certayne affayres to be done, tooke hys viage into Ireland. In which meane time: Hēry of Bollingbroke, Earle of Darby, and Duke of Herford and with him the foresayd archbishop Thomas Arundel, (which before were both exiled) returning out of Fraunce to Calice, came into England challenging the Dukedome of Lancaster, after the death of hys father. With •hem also came the sonne and heyre of the Earle of Arundell, beyng yet but yong. These together setting out of Calice, arriued at Rauenspur in the North. At the knowledge whereof, much people gathered vnto them.

In this meane time, as the Duke was houering on y^e sea to enter the land: L. Edmund Duke of York the kings Uncle to whome the king committed the custodye of thys realm (hauing intelligence thereof) called to him the Byshop of Chichester named Edmund Stafford Chauncellor of the Realme, and W. Scroupe Earle of Wiltshyre Lorde Treasurer, also I. Busshey W. Bagot, Henry Grene, and Iohn Ruschell, with diuers other, consulting with them what was best in that case to be done. Who then gaue their aduise (whether wilful or vnskilfull, it is not knowne, but very vnfruitfull) that he shold leaue london, and go to S. Albons, there to wayt for more strength able to encounter with the Duke. But as the people out of diuers quarters resorted thether, many of them protested that they would do nothing to the harme and preiudice of the Duke of Lācaster, who they sayd was uniuistly expulsed. The rest then of the counsaile. I. Busshey, W. Bagot, Henry Grene, W. Stroupe Treasurer, hearing and vnderstanding how the commons were minded to ioyne with the Duke of Hereford, left the Duke of York, and the lord Chauncellor, and fled to the Castell of Bristow. Where is to be vnderstand that these foure were they to whome the common fame ran that the king had let out hys realme to farme: and were so hated of the people, that it is to be thought, that for the hatred of them more then for the king,* this commotion was among the people.

As this broyle was in England; the noyse therof soun'ding to the kinges eares, being then in Ireland, for hastye speed of returning into England, left in Ireland both his busines, and most of hys ordinance also behinde hym. And so passing the seas, landed at Milforde hauen, not daryng as it seemed to come to London.

On the contrary side, vnto Henry Duke of Herforde, being landed as is sayde, in the North, came the Earle of Northumberland: Lord Henry Percy, and Henry his son the Earle of Westmerland, Lord Radulph Neuile, and other Lordes moe to a great number, so that the multitude rose to 60000. able souldiours. Who first making towarde the Castle of Bristow, tooke the foresayd Busshey, Grene Scroupe, and Bagot: of whom three incontinent were beheaded, Bagot escaped away and fled away to Ireland.

The king in this meane while,* lying about Wales, destitute and desolate without comfort or counsaile, who nei'ther durst come to London, neyther would any man come to him, and perceauing moreouer, the commons that were vp in such a great power agaynst hym, would rather dye, then geue ouer that they had begunne, for feare of themselues: Seing therforeno other remedy,* called to him L.T. Percy Earle of Worcester, and stewarde of hys household, willing him with other of hys family, to prouide for themselues in tyme. Who then openly in the hall brake his white rod before them all, commaunding euerye man to shift for himselfe. Although Fabian and some other say, that he did this of hys owne accord, contrary to his allegiance. The king compassed on euery side with miseryes, shifted from place to place, the Duke still following him, tyll at length being at the Castle of Conewey,* the king desired to talk with Tho. Arundell archb. and the Earle of Northūberland: To whom he declared, that he would resigne vp hys crowne, in condition that an honourable liuing might be for hym prouided, and life promised to 8. persons, such as he would name. Which being graunted and ratified, but not performed, he came to the Castle of Flint, where (after talke had with y^e Duke of Lācaster) he was brought the same night by the Duke and his armye to Chester: And from thence was conueyed secretly into the Tower, there to be kept till the next parliament. By the way as he came neare to London, diuers euil disposed men of the city being warned thereof, gathered themselues, thinking to haue slayne hym,* for the great cruelty he had vsed before toward the Citty. But by the pollicies of the Mayor and rulers of the Cittie, the madnes of the people was stayd. Not long after followed the Duke, and also began y^e parliament. In which Parliament, the Earle of Northumberland with many other Earles and Lords were sent to the king in the Tower, to take of him a full resignation according to hys former promise, and so they did. This done diuers accusations and articles were layd and engrossed agaynst the sayd King, to the number of 33. some say 38. which for the matter not greatly materiall in them containyd, I ouerpasse. And y^t next yeare after was had to Pomferr Castle, and there famished to death.

King Henry the fourth.

AND thus King Richard by common assent be'ing deposed from his rightfull crowne: The Duke of Lancaster was led by Thomas Arundell the Archbishop, to the feat royall:* who there standing vp, and crossed himselfe on the forehead and the brest, spake in wordes as followeth.

In the name of God, Amen. I Henry of Lancaster, clayme the Realme of England and the crowne, with all the appurtenaunces as I that am descended by right lyne of the bloud comming from that good Lord King Henry the 3. And thorough the right that God of his grace hath sent to me with the helpe of my kinne and of my frendes to recouer the same, which was in poynt to be vndone for default of good gouernance and due iustice. &c.

After which wordes,* the Archbishop asking the assent of the people, being ioyfull of theyr new king: took the Duke by the hād, & placed him in the kingly throne, which was an. 1399,* and shortly after by the foresayd Archbishop he was crowned also for king of England. Ex Chron. De Alban.

The next yeare after, followed a Parliament holden at Westminster, in which Parliament, one will. Sautre, a good man and a faythfull priest,* inflamed with zeeale of true Religion, required he might be heard for the commoditie of the whole realme. But the matter being smelt before by the Byshops, they obtayned that the matter should be referred to the conuocation:* Where the sayd William Sautre being brought before the Byshops and Notaries thereunto appointed, the conuocation was differred to the Saterdag next ensuing.

Page 515When Saterdag was come, that is to say, the 12. day of February, Thomas Arundell Archbishop of Caunterbury, in the presence of his Counsaile prouinciall being assembled in the sayd Chapter house, agaynst one fyr William Sautre, otherwise called Chatris, Chaplayne personally then and there appearing by the commaundement of the foresayd archbishop of Caunterbury, objected: that the sayd sir William before the Byshop of Norwiche, had once renounced and abiured diuers and sondry conclusions heretical and erroneous: and that after such abiuration made, he publicquely and priuily, helde taught & preached, the same conclusions or els such like, disagreeing to y^e catholique fayth, and to the great perill and pernicious example of others. And after this, he caused such like conclusions holden and preached as is sayd, by the sayd Syr William without renunciation, then and there to be read vnto the sayd Archbishop, by maister Robert Haull, Chācellor vnto the sayd byshop in a certayne scrole written, in tenour of wordes as followeth.

Syr William Chatris otherwise called Sautre, parish Priest of the Church S. Scithe the Uirgine in London, publiquely and priuily doth holde these conclusions vnder written.

- * In Primis, he sayth, that he will not worship the crosse on which Christ suffered, but onely Christ that suffred vpon the Crosse.
- 2. Item, that he would sooner worship a temporal king, then the foresayd wodden crosse.
- 3. Item, that he would rather worship the bodyes of the Saintes, then the very crosse of Christ, on which he hong, if it were before him.
- 4. Item, that he woulde rather worship a man truely contrite, then the crosse of Christ.
- 5. Item, that he is bound rather to worship a man that is predestinate, then an aungell of God.
- 6. Item, that if any man would visite the monumentes of Peter and Paule, or go on Pilgrimage to the Toumbe of S. Thomas, or els any whether els, for the obtayning of any temporall benefite: he is not bounde to keepe hys vowe, but that he may distribute the expences of his vowe vpon the almes of the poore.
- 7. Item, that euery priest and Deacon is more bound to preach the word of God, then to say the canonical houres.
- 8. Item, that after the pronouncing of the Sacramental wordes of the body of Christ, the bread remayneth of the same nature that it was before, neyther doth it cease to be bread.

To which conclusions or articles being thus read, the Archbish. of Caunterb. required the same Syr William to aunswere. And then the sayd William asked a copy of such articles or conclusions, and a competent space to answere vnto the same. Whereupon the sayd Archb. commaunded a copy of such articles or conclusions to be deliuered then and thereunto the sayd syr William, assigning the Thursday then next ensiting to him to deliberate and make aunswere in. When Thursday the sayd day of apparance was come, Maister Nicholas Rishton, auditour of the causes and busines belonging to the sayd archbishop (then beyng in the Parliament house at Westminster otherwise let) cōtinued the sayd conuocation with all matters rising, depending and appartinent thereunto, by commaundement of the sayd Byshop, vntill the next morrow at eight of the clocke. When the morow came, being Friday. The foresaid sir William Sautre, in the chapter house before the sayd bishop and hys counsaile prouinciall then and there assembled, making his personall appearaunce, exhibited a certayne scrole contayning the aunsweres vnto certayne articles or conclusions geuen vnto him as is aforesaid by the said Bishop: * and sayd, that vnto the foresayd Archbyshop, he deliuered the same as his answere in that behalfe, vnder the tenour of such wordes as follow.

I William Sautre priest vnworthy, say and aunswere that I will not, nor intend not to worship the crosse wheron Christ was crucified, * but onely Christ that suffered vpon the crosse: so vnderstanding me that I will not worship the materiall crosse, for the grosse corporall matter: yet notwithstanding I will worship the same as a signe, token, and memoriall of the passion of Christ Adoratione vicaria. And that I will rather worship a temporall Kyng, then the foresayd wooden crosse, as the materiall substance of the same. And that I will rather worship the bodyes of Saintes, then the very crosse of Christ whereon he hong: with this addition, that if the very same Crosse were afore me, as touching the materiall substaunce. And also that I will rather worship a man truly confessed and penitent, then the crosse on which Christ hong, as touching the materiall substaunce.

And that also I am bound,* and will rather worship him whom I know to be predestinate, truly confessed and contrite, then an angell of God: for that the one is a man of the same nature with the humanitie of Christ, and so is not a blessed aungell. Notwithstanding I will worship both of them, according as the will of God is I should.

Also, that if any man hath made a vow to visite the shrines of the Apostles Peter and Paule, or to goe on pilgrimage vnto S. Thomas tombe, or anye whither els to obtayne any temporall benefite or commoditie: he is not bound simply to keepe his vow, vpon the necessitie of saluation. But that he may geue the expences of his vowe in almes amongst the poore, by the prudent counsayle of his superiour as I suppose.

And also I say, that euery Deacon and Priest is more bound to preach the word of God, then to say the canonicall houres, according to the primitiue order of the church.*

Also touching the interrogation of the sacrament of the aulter: I say that after the pronouncing of the sacramentall wordes of the body of Christ, there reaseth to be very bread simply, but remaineth bread, holy true, and the bread of life: ynd I beleue the sayd sacrament to be the very body of Christ, after the pronouncing of the sacramentall wordes.

When all these aunsweres were throughly by Maister Robert Hall, directly and publikely there read: the foresaid Archb. of Cant. inquired of the sayd sir William, whither he had abiured the foresayd herefies and errors obiected agaynst him, as before is sayd, before the Byshop of Norwich or not, or els had reuoked and renounced the sayd or such like conclusions or articles, or not? To which he aunswered and affirmed, that he had not. And then consequētly (all other articles, conclusions and aunsweres aboue writen, immediately omitted) the sayd Archbishop examined the same sir W. Sautre, especially vpon the sacrament of the aulter.

First, whether in the sacrament of the aulter after the pronouncing of the sacramentall wordes, remayneth very materiall bread or not. Unto which interrogation y^e same sir W. somewhat waueringly, sayd, and answered, that he knew not that. Notwithstanding he sayd, that there was very bread, because it was the bread of life whiche came downe from heauen.

After that the sayd Archbishop demaunded of hym, whither in the sacrament after the sacramentall woordes, rightly pronounced of the Priest, the same bread remayneth, which did before the wordes pronounced or not? And to this question the foresayde William aunswered in like maner as before, saying that there was bread holy, true, and the bread of life. &c.

After that, the foresayd Archb. asked him, whether the same naturall bread before consecration, by the sacramentall woordes of the priest rightly pronounced, be transubstantiated from the nature of bread, into the very bodye of Christ, or not? Whereunto sir William sayd, that he knewe not what that matter ment.

And then the sayde Archbish. assigned vnto the said sir William,* tyme to deliberate, and more fully to make hys aunswere till the next day: and continued this conuocation then and there till the morow. Which morrow to wit, the 19. day of February being come:* the foresayd Archbish. of Cant. in the sayd chapter house of S. Paule in London, before hys counsaile prouincial, then and there assembled, specially asked and examined the same sir William Sautre there personally present, vpon the sacramēt of the aulter, as before. And the same Sir William agayne in like maner as before, aunswered.

After this, amongst other thinges the sayd Byshop demaunded of the same William if the same materiall bread beyng vpon the aulter after the sacramentall wordes being of the priest rightly pronounced, is transubstantiated into the very body of Christ, or not? And the sayd sir William sayd he vnderstoode not what he ment.

Then the sayd archbishop demaunded, whether that materiall bread being round and white, prepared and disposed for the sacrament of the body of Christ vpon the aulter, wanting nothing that is meete and requisite thereunto, by the vertue of the sacramentall wordes being of the priest rightly pronounced, be altered and chaunged into the very body of Christ, and ceaseth any more to be materiall and very bread or not? Then the sayd syr William deredingly aunswering, sayd he could not tell.

Then consequently the sayd Archbishop demaunded, whether he would stand to the determination of the holye Church or not, which affirmeth: that in the Sacrament of Page 516 the aulter, after the wordes of consecration, being rightly pronounced of the Priest, the same bread whiche before in nature was bread, ceaseth any more to be bread. To this interrogation,* the sayd sir William sayd: that he woulde stand to the determination of the church, where such determination was not contrary to the will of God.

This done: he demaunded of him agayne, what hys iudgement was concerning the Sacrament of the aulter: who sayd and affirmed, that after the wordes of consecration by the priest duely pronounced, remayned very bread and the same bread which was before the wordes spoken. And this examination about the sacrament, lasted from 8. of the clocke of the same day, vntill a 11. of the clock or there aboutes: in so much, that during all this time, the foresaid W. would no otherwise aunswere: neyther yet touching the same sacrament, receaue catholicke information, according to the institution of the popes Church and his Christen fayth Wherefore, the sayd Cant. by the counsaile and assent of his whole couent then and there present: did promulgate and geue sentence by the mouth of Robert Hall, agaynst the same Syr William Sautre (being personally present, and refusing to reuoke hys heresies, that is to say his true doctrine, but constantly defending the same) vnder the renour of wordes as followeth.

*IN the name of God amen. We Thomas by the grace of GOD Archbishop of Caunterbury, primate of England and Legate of the sea Apostolicall, by the authoritie of God almighty and blessed saint Peter and Paule, and of holy Church, and by our owne authoritie sitting for tribunal or chiefe iudge, hauing God alone before your eyes: by the counsel and consent of the whole clergy our fellow brethren, and suffraganes assistantes vnto vs in this pre|sent counsell prouincial, by this our sentence diffinitiuē, do pronounce, decree and declare by these presents, thee William Sautre otherwise called Chawtrey parish Priest pretended, personally appearing before vs, in and vpon the cryme of heresie iudicially and lawfully conuicte as an hereticke, and as an hereticke to be punished.

Which sentence diffinitue being thus read: the foresaid Archb. of Cant. continued in the same prouinciall cōsaile till Wednesday next, and immediately ensuing, to wit the 24. day of the same month of February: whiche being expired, the bishop of Norwich, according to the cōmaundement of the said archb. of Cant. presented vnto the foresaid William Sawtre by a certayne friend of hys, beyng present at the same councell, a certayn processe inclosed and sealed with his seal, geuing y^e names of credible witnesses sealed with their seales: The tenour whereof followeth in this wise.

*Memorandum, that vpon the last day of Aprill, in the yeare of our Lord. 1399. in the 7. indiction and 10. yeare of the papacie of Pope Boniface the 2. In a certayne chamber within the maner house of the sayd Bish. of Norwich, at South Helingham (where the register of the sayd Bishop is kept) before the houre of 9. in a certayne chappell within the sayd manour situate, and the 1. day of May, then next and immediately ensuing in the foresayd chamber, syr Wil. Chawtris, parish priest of the church of S. Margaret in the town of Linne, appeared before the Bishop of Norwich, in the presence of Iohn de Derlington, Archdeacon of Norwich, doctor of the decrees, Frier Walter Disse, and Iohn Rikinghall professors in diuinitie, William Carlton, doctor of both lawes, and W. Friseby, w^t huge Bhridham, publike Notaryes: and there publicly affirmed and held, the conclusions, as before is specified.

All and singuler the premisses the foresayde William affirmed vpon mature deliberation. And afterwarde to wit the 19. day of May in the yeare, Iudiction, and Papacy aforesayd, in the chappell within the mannour house of the said Henry Bishop of Norwich, situate at South Helingham: The foresayd sir William, reuoked and renounced all and singuler the foresayd hys conclusions: abiuring and correcting all such heresies and errours, taking hys oath vpon a booke before the foresayd Henry the Byshop of Norwiche, that from that time forward he would neuer preach, affirme, nor holde, priuily nor apertly the foresayd conclusions. And that he would pronounce according to the appointment of the sayd Bishop, the foresayd conclusions to be erroneous and heresies, in the parish Churches of Linne and Tilney and in other places & at the assignement of the sayd Byshop, and farther sware, that he would stand to the ordinaunce of the sayd Byshop, touching the premisses, in the presence of the discrete and worshipfull men afore recited with diuers others moe.

As concerning the first conclusion that he sayd he wold not worship the Crosse &c. he confessed himselfe to haue erred and that the article was erroneous and submitted him'selfe. Also as touching the second article, that he sayde he would rather worship a king &c. he confessed himselfe to haue erred and the article to be erroneous and submitted himselfe, and so forth of all the rest.

Then next after this, vppon the 25. day of May in the yeare of our Lord aforesayd, in the Churchyard of the chap'pell of S. Iames within the towne of Linne The foresayd William, in presence of the foresayd Byshop and clergy and the people of the sayd Towne of Linne standing round about: publicly declared in English tongue, the foresayd conclusiōs to be erroneous and heresies, as was contayned in a certayne scrole. And after this, the 26. day of May in the yeare abouesayd, in the Church of the Hospitall of S. Iohns in the towne of Linne: The sayd Syr William, before the sayd Byshop sitting as iudge, sware & tooke his othe vpon the holy Euangelistes that he would neuer after that time preach openly & publiquely the foresayd conclusions, nor would heare the confessions of anye of the subiectes of his Dioces of Norwiche, without the speciall licence of the sayd Bishop. &c, In y^e presence of Frier Iohn Smermen, M. Iohn Rikinghaie, Doctor of Diuinitie, W. Carlton Doctor of both lawes, and Thomas Bulton officer of the libertie of Linne aforesayd with dyuers others.

The tenour of the scrole and recantation.

IN primis, touching the first and second, where I sayd, [unspec 1] that I woulde adore rather a temporall Prince, and the liuely bodyes of the sayntes then the wooden cro•e, wher'upon [unspec 2] the Lord did hang, I do reuoke and recant the same as being therein deceaued.

To this I say, that the article is false and erroneous, [unspec 3] and by false information, I held it, the whiche I renounce and aske forgeuenes thereof, and say that it is a precious relique, and that I shall holde it while I liue, and that I sweare here.

I know wel that I erred wrōgfully, by false information: [unspec 4] for I wot well, that a deacon or a priest is more boūd to say his Martins and Houres, then to preach, for thereto he is bounden by right, wherfore I submit me &c.

Touching that article, I know right well that I erred [unspec 5] by false information. Wherfore I aske forgeuenes.

As concerning vowes, I say, that opinion is false and [unspec 6] erroneous, and by false information I held it, for a man is holden to hold his vowe &c.

To the 7. article I say, that I did it, by authoritie of [unspec 7] Priesthoode, where through I knowledge well that I haue gilt and trespassed, wherfore I submit me to god and to holy Church, and to you father, swearing that I shall neuer hold it more.

The 8. I say, that I held it by false and wronge information. [unspec 8] But now I know well that it is heresie, and that bread anone as the word of the sacrament is sayde, is no longer bread materiall, but that it is turned into verye Christes body and that I sweare here.

I say that this is false and erroneous. &c. [unspec 9]

I say as I sayd. &c. [unspec 10]

This being done,* the 22. day of February aforesayd in the yeare of our Lord 1400. in the chapter house of Sainct Paule in London aforesayd: The foresayd Archbishop of Caunterbury, in the conuocation of hys prelates & Clergy and such lyke men there beeing present, caused the fore recited proces of the bishop of Norwich to be read openly & publicly to Syr Wil. Sautre otherwise called Chatris. And afterward, he asked the sayd syr William, whether he playnely vnderstood and knew such proces & the contents within the same, and he sayd yea. And further he demaunded of him, if he would or could say or obiekt any thing agaynst the proces, and he sayd no. And after that incontinent, the foresayd archbishop of Canterbury demaunded and obiekted against the said syr William as diuers others more did: That after he had before the Bysh. of Norwiche reuoked and abiured Iudicially diuers errors & heresies, that among other erroures, and heresies by him taught, holden, and preached he affirmed: That in the same sacrament of the aulter after the consecration made by y^e Priest as he taught, there remainyd materiall bread: which heresie amongst others as erroures also he abiured before the foresayd Bishop of Norwich.* Hereunto the foresayd William aunswered smiling or in mocking wise, saying, and denying that he knew of the premisses. Notwithstanding he publikey affirmed that he held and taught the foresayd thinges after the date of the sayd processe made by the sayd Bishop of Norwich, and that in the same councell also he Page 517 held the same. Then finally, it was demaunded of the said sir William, why he ought not to be pronounced as a man fallen into heresie, and further to proceede vnto his degradation, according to the canonicall sanctions: whereunto he answered nothing, neither could he alledge any cause to the contrary.

Wheruepon, the foresayd Archb. of Cant. by the counsaile and consent of the whole council, and especially by the counsaile and assent of the reuerēd fathers and Bishops, as also, Priours, Deanes, Archdeacons, and other worshipfull Doctours and Clerkes then and there present in the council: Fully determined to proceede to the degradation, and actuall deposing of the sayde William Sautre, as refallen into heresy, and as incorrigible, according to the sentence definitiue put in wryting, the tenoure whereof is in wordes as foloweth.

*In the name of God Amen: Wee Thomas by the grace of God Archb. of Cant. Legate of the sea Apostolicall and Metropolitane of all England: doe finde and declare, that thou William Sawtrie, otherwise called Chatris Priest, by vs with the counsaile & assent of all and singular our felowe brethren and whole Clergy, by this our sentence diffinitive declared in wryting, hast bene for heresie conuict and condemned, and art (being againe fallen into heresy) to be deposed and degraded, by these presents.

And from that day being Wedensday, there was in the sayde councell prouinciall nothing further prosecuted, but was continued with all dependentes, till the Friday next insuing. Whych Friday approaching, M. Nicholas Rishton, by the commandement of the sayd Archb. of Canterb. being then busied as he said in the Parliament house: continued this council and conuocation with al incidents, dependents, and occasions, growing and annexed therunto, to the next day, to wit saterday next and immediatly after insuing. Upon Saterday being the 26. of the sayd moneth of February, the foresayde Archbishop of Canterbury fate in the Byshops seate of the foresayde Church of S. Paule in London, and solemnly apparelled in his Pontificall attire, sitting w^t hym as his assistents these reuerend fathers and Bishops, of London, Lyncolne, Harford, Exeter, Meneuensis & Roffensis Episcopi, aboue mentioned: commaunded and caused the sayd sir W. Sautry apparelled in priestly vestiments, to be brought & appeare before hym. That done, he declared and expounded in English to al the clergy and people there, in a great multitude assembled: that al processe was finished and ended against the said syr William Sautry. Whych thing finished, before the pronouncing of the sayd sentence of the Relapse against the sayd sir William as is premised, he often then and there recited & read. And for that he sawe the sayde William in that behalfe, nothyng abashed: He proceded to his degradation and actuall deposition in forme as foloweth.

IN nomine patris & filij & spiritus sancti. Amen. We Thomas by Gods permission Archb. of Cant. Primate of al England, and Legate of the Apostolique sea: doe denounce thee William Sawtre otherwise called Chautris, Chapleine fained, in the habite and apparell of a Priest, as an heretick and one refallen into heresy by thys our sentēce definitiue, by counsaile, assent, and authoritye, to be condemned: And by conclusion of all our fellowe brethren, fellow byshops, Prelates, councell prouinciall, and of the whole clergy: do degrade and depriue thee of thy priestly order. And in signe of degradation and actuall depositiō from thy priestly dignity, for thine incorrigibility and want of amendment: we take from thee the patent and chalice, and doe depriue thee of all power & authority of celebrating masse: and also wee pull from thy backe, the Casule, and take from thee the vestiment, and depriue thee of all maner of Priestly honour.

Also, wee Thomas the aforesayde Archb. by authority, counsell, and assent, which vpon the foresayd William wee haue, being Deacon pretensed, in the habite and apparel of a Deacon, hauing the new Testament in thy hands, being an heretique and twise fallen, condemned by sentence as is aforesayde: doe degrade and put thee from the order of a Deacon.* And in token of this thy degradation and actuall deposition we take frō thee the boke of the new testament, & the stole, and doe depriue thee of all authority in reading the gospel, and of all and all maner of dignity of a Deacon.

Item, we Thomas Archbish. aforesayd, by authoritie, counsell, and assent, which ouer thee the foresayde William wee haue, being a subdeacon pretensed: in the habite & vestiment of a subdeacon, an hereticke, and twise fallen, condemned by sentence as is aforesayd: do degrade & put thee from the order of a subdeacon.* And in token of this thy degradation & actuall deposition, we take from thee the albe and maniple, and doe depriue thee of all and all manner of subdiaconall dignitie.

Also, wee Thomas, Archb. aforesayd, by counsaile, assent and authority whych wee haue ouer thee the foresayde William, an Accolite pretensed, wearing the habite of an Accolite, and heretike, twise fallen, by our sentence as is aforesaid condemned: do degrade and put from thee al order of an Accolite: And in signe and tokē of thys thy degradation, and actuall deposition,* we take from thee the candlesticke and taper, and also Vrceolum, and doe depriue thee of all and all maner dignity of an Accolite.

Also, we Thomas, Archb. aforesayd by assent, counsel, and authority whych vppon thee the foresayd William we haue,* an Exorcist pretensed, in the habite of an Exorcist or holy water clarke, being an hereticke, twise fallen, and by our sentence as is aforesayd condemned, we doe degrade & depose thee from the order of an Exorcist: and in token of thys thy degradation and actuall deposition, we take from the booke of coniurations, and doe depriue thee of all and singular dignity of an Exorcist.

Also, we Thomas Archbish. aforesayd, by assent, counsaile, and authority, as is aboue sayd, doe degrade & depose thee the foresayde William, reader pretensed, clothed in the habit of a reader, an hereticke, twise fallen, and by our sentence as is aforesayd, condēned: from the order of a reader. And in token of this thy degradation and actuall deposition, we take from thee the booke of the deuine sections (that* is the booke of the Church legende) and doe depriue thee of all and singular maner of dignity of such a reader.

Item, we Thomas Archbishop of Canterbury aforesayd, by authority, counsaile, and assent, the which we haue as is aforesaid,* do degrade and put thee foresayd William Sawtre, sexten pretended, in the habite of a sexten, and wearing a surplice, being an hereticke, twice fallen, by our sentence difinitive condemned, as aforesaid: from the order of a Sexten. And in token of thys thy degradation and actuall deposition,* for the causes aforesayd, we take from thee the keyes of the Church doore, and thy surplice, and doe depriue thee of all and singular maner of commodities of a doore keeper.

And also, by the authority of omnipotent God the father, the sonne, and holy ghost, and by our authority, counsaile, & assent of our whole councel prouinciall aboue written, we do degrade thee and depose thee being heere personally present before vs,* from orders, benefices, priuilegies and habite in the church, and for thy pertinacie incorrigible we doe disgrace thee, before the secular Court of the hygh Constable and marshal of England, here being personally present, and do depose thee from all and singular clerkely honours and dignities whatsoever, by these wrytings. Also in token of thy degradation and deposition,* here actually wee haue caused thy crowne and ecclesiastical tonsure in our presence to be rased away, & vtterly to be abolished, lyke vnto the forme of a seculare lay man: and here doe put vpon the head, of thee the foresayd William, the cap of a lay secular person: beseeching the court aforesaid, that they wil receaue fauourably the sayde William vnto them thus recommitted.

Thus William Sawtre the seruaunt of Christ, being vtterly thrust out of the Popes kingdome, and metamorphosed from a clerke to a secular lay man, was committed (as ye haue heard) vnto the secular power. Which so done, the Byshops yet not heerewith contented, cease not to call vpō the king, to cause him to be brought forth to speddy execution. Whereupon the king, ready inough and to much to gratify the cleargy, and to retaine their fauours, directeth out a terrible decree against the said William Sawtre, and sent it to the Maior and Sheriffes of London to be put in execution, the tenour wherof here vnder emueth.

The decree of the king against William Sawtre.

THE decree of our soueraigne Lord the king & his counsel in the Parliament,* against a certaine new sprong vp hereticke. To the Maior & Sheriffs of London. &c. Where as the reuerend father Thomas Archbishop of Canterbury, primate of all England, and Legate of the Apostolicke sea, by the assent, consent, & counsell of other byshops, and his brethren Suffraganes, and also of all the whole Clergy within his prouince or dioces, gathered together in his prouincial counsel, the due order of the law being obserued in al poynts in this behalfe: hath pronounced and declared by his definitiue sentence, W. Sautre sometime chaplain, to be fallen again into his most dānable heresy, the which before time the sayde W. had abiured, thereupon to be a most manifest heretike, and therefore hath decreed, that he should Page 518 be disgraded, & hath for the same cause really disgraded him frō al prerogatiue & priuilege of y^e clergie, decreing to leaue him vnto the secular power: and hath really so left him, according to y^e lawes & canonicall sanctions set forth in this behalfe,* and also that our holy mother the Church hath no further to do in the premisses. We therefore being zelous in religion, and reuerent louers of y^e catholike fayth, willing and minding to mainteine & defend the holy church, & the lawes & liberties of the same, to roote al such errours & heresies out of our kingdome of Englād, & with cōdigne punishmēt to correct & punish all heretiques or such as be cōuict: Prouided alwaies, that both according to the lawe of God & mā, and y^e canonical institutions in this behalfe, accustomed, that such hereticks conuict & condēd in forme aforesaid, ought to be burned with fire. We command you as straightly as we may or can, firmly enioyning you, that you do cause the said Williā being in your custody, in some publike or opē place within y^e liberties of your citie aforesaid (the cause aforesaid being published vnto the people) to be put into the fire, and there in the same fire really to be burned, to the great horroure of his offence, and the manifest example of other Christians. Faile not in the execution hereof, vpon the perill that will fall thereupon, Teste rege, apud Westmonast. 26. Februar. an. regni sui.

The burning of William Sawtre.

*Thus it may appeare how kinges and princes haue bin blinded and abused by the false Prelates of the Church, in so much that they haue bene their slaues and butchers, to slay Christes poore innocent members. See therefore what danger it is for Princes, not to haue knowledge and vnderstanding themselues but to be led by other mens eies, & specially trusting to such guides, who through hipocrisie both deceiue them, & through crueltie deuour the people.

*As king Henry the fourth who was the deposer of king Richard, was the first of all English kings that began the vnmercifull burning of Christes saints, for standing against the Pope: so was this William Sawtre the true and faithfull martyr of Christ, the first of all them in Wickliffes time, which I find to be burned in y^e raigne of the foresaid king, which was in the yeare of our Lord. 1400.

After the martyrdome of this godly man, the rest of the same company began to keepe themselues more closely, for feare of the king, who was altogether bent to hold with the Popes prelacy. Such was the raigne of this Prince, that to the godly he was euer terrible, in his actions immesurable, to few men hartely beloued, but Princes neuer lacke flatterers about them. Neither was the time of his raigne very quiet, but full of trouble, of bloud, and misery. Such was their desire of K. Richard againe, in the raigne of this king, that many yeares after he was rumored to be aliue (of them which desired belike that to be true, which they knew to be false) for the which,* diuers were executed. For the space of sixe or vij. yeares together, almost no yeare passed without some conspiracy against the king. Long it were here to recite the bloud of all such Nobles and other, which was spilt in the raigne of this king, as the Earle of * Kent, Earle of Salisbury, Earle of Huntington, named Iohn Holland. &c. as writeth the story of S. Albans. But the English writers differ something in their names, and make mention of 4. Earles of Surrey, of Excester, of Salisbury, and Lord Spenser Earle of Gloucester.*Ex Lib. cui tit. Calendarium Bruti.

And the next yeare following, Syr Ihon Clarendon knight, with two of his seruauntes, the Priour of Laund, with 8. friers, were hanged and quartered. And after these Henry Percy the younger, the Earle of Worcester, named Thomas Percy his vncle, Lord of Kinderton, and L. Richard de Uernoua. The Earle of Northumberland scarce escaped with his pardon.* an. 1403. In the which yeare, the prison in Cornhill called the tonne, was turned into the conduit, there now standing.

To let passe other moe hanged and quartered the same time, as Blount knight, & Benet Kely knight, and Thomas Winterset Esquier. Also the same yere was taken and executed sir Bernard Brokes knight, sir Iohn Shilley knight, Syr Iohn Mandelyn, and William Frierby. After all these L. Henry Earle of Northumberland, and L. Bardolfe conspiring the kings death, were taken in the North and beheaded, which was in the 8. yere of this king Henry.

This ciuil rebellion of so many nobles & other against the king,* declared what grudging heartes the people then bare towarde this king Henry. Among whome I cannot pretermit heere also the Archb. of Yorke named Richarde Scrope, who with the L. Moubrey Marshal of England, gathered a great company in the North countrey,* against the foresaid king, to whom also was adioyned the helpe of L. Bardolfe, & Henry Percy Earle of Northumberland. Ex Chron. D. Albani. And to stirre vp the people more willingly to take their partes, they collected certaine Articles against the said king, to the number of 10. and fastned them vpon the doores of Churches and Monasteries, to be read of all men in English. Which articles if any be disposed to vnderstand, & for somuch as the same also containe a great part of the doings betweene king Henry & king Richard aforesayde,* I thought for the better opening of the matter heere vnder to inserte the same, in such forme as I founde them in the historie of Scala mundi expressed.

Articles set vp on Church doores against king Henry the fourth.

IN the name of God. Amen.* Before the Lorde Iesus Christ, iudge of the quicke and dead. &c. We A.B.C.D. &c. not long sithens became bounde by othe vppon the sacred Euangelicall booke, vnto our soueraigne Lorde Richarde late king of England and France, in the presente of many prelates, potentates, and nobilitie of the realme: that wee so long as we liued, should beare true allegiance and fidelity towards hym and his heires succeding hym in the kingdom by iust title, right, and line, accordyng to the statutes and custome of this realme of England: By vertue wherof, we are bound to foresee y^t no vices or hainous offences arise in the common weale, do take effect or wysshed ende, but that we ought to geue our selues and our goodes to w^tstand the same, without feare of sword or death whatsoever, vpon paine of periurie, which paine is euerlasting damnation. Wherefore, we seing & perceiuing diuers horrible crimes, and great enormities daily without ceassing to be committed, by the children of the deuill and sathans soldiours against the supremacie of the Church of Rome, the libertie of the church of England, and the lawes of the realme, against y^e person of king Rich. and his heires against the prelates, noble men, religion, and comminaltie, and finally against the whole weale publike of y^e realme of England, to the great offence of the maiesty of almighty God, and to the prouocation of his iust wrath and vègeance towards the realme and people of the same. And fearing also the destruction both of the Church of Rome and England, & the ruine of our couñtry to be at hand, hauing before our eyes the iustice & the kingdom of God, calling alwaies on the name of Iesus, hauing an assured confidence in his clemency, mercy and power: haue here taken vnto vs certain articles subscribed in forme folowing, to be proponed, tried, and heard before the iust iudge Iesus Christ, and the whole world, to his honour, the deliuey of the church, the cleargy and comminalty, and to the utility & profite of the weale publick. But if (which God forbid) by force, feare of violence of wicked persons we shalbe cast in prison, or by violent death preuented, so as in this worlde we shall not be able to proue the saide articles as we would wish, then do we apeale to the high celestiall iudge, that he may iudge & discerne the same, in the day of his supreme iudgement.

Page 519*1. First, we depose, say, except, and entend to proue against the Lord Henry Derby, sonne of the Lord Iohn of Gaunt late Duke of Lancaster, and commonly called king of England (himselfe pretending the same, although without all right and title thereunto) and against his adherents, fautours, and complices: that euer they haue bene, are, and will be, traytors, inuaders, and destroyers of Gods Church in Rome, England, Wales, and Ireland, and of our soueraigne Lord Richard late King of England, his heires, his kingdom, and common wealth, as shall hereafter mani•estly appeare.

2. Secondarely we depose &c. against the said Lord Hēry, for that he had conceaued, deuted, & conspired certaine hainous crimes and traiterous offences against his sayd soueraigne Lord Richard his state and dignitie, as manifestly did appeare in the contention betwene the said Lord Henry, and y^r Lord Thomas Duke of Northfolke begon at Couentry, but not finished throughly. Afterwards he was sent in exile, by sentence of the said king Richard, by the agreement of his father the Lord Iohn Duke of Lancaster, by the voice of diuers of the Lords temporall, & nobilitie of the realme, and also by his owne consent: there to remaine for a certaine time appointed vnto him by y^e said Lords, and withall he was bound by othe not to returne into Englād before he had obtained fauour & grace of the kyng. Not long after, when the king was departed into Ireland, for reformation of that countrey appertaining to the crowne of England, but as then rebelling agaynst the same: the sayd Lord Henry in the meane time contrary to his oth and fidelitie, and long before the time limited vnto him was expired: with all his fautours and inuaders, secretly entred into the Realme, swearing and protesting before the face of the people, that his comming into the Realme in the absence of the king, was for none other cause, but that he might in humble sort with the loue and fauour of the king, and all the Lords spirituall and temporall, haue and enioy his lawfull inheritance descending vnto him of right after the death of his father: which thing as it pleased all men, so cried they: Blessed is he that commeth in the name of the Lord: But how this blessing afterwards turned into cursing, shall appeare in that which followeth: and also ye shall vnderstand his horrible and wicked conspiracie against his soueraigne Lord king Richard,* and diuers other Lords as well spirituall as temporall, besides y^t his manifest periurie shal wel be known, and that he remaineth not only foresworne and periured, but also excommunicate, for that he conspired against his soueraigne Lord our king. Wherefore we pronounce him by these presents, as well periured as excommunicate.

3. Thirdly we depose &c. against the said Lord Henry, that he the said Lord Hēry, immediatly after his entry into England, by crasty and subtile policie, caused to be proclaimed openly throughout the Realme, that no tenths of the Clergy,* fiftenes of the people, sealing vp of cloth, diminution of wooll, impost of wine, nor other extortiōs or exactions whatsoever, should hereafter be required or exacted: hoping by this meanes to purchase vnto him y^e voice and fauour of the prelates spiritual, the Lords temporall, the Marchants, & comminaltie of the whole Realme. After this, he tooke by force the kings Castels and fortresses, spoiled and deuoured his goodes wheresoeuer he found it, crieng hauocke, hauocke. The kings maiestie subiects as well spirituall as temporal he spoiled and robbed, some he tooke captiue and imprisoned them, and some he slew & put to miserable death, wherof many were Bishops, prelates, Priests, and religious men. Whereby it is manifest, that the said Lord Henry is not only periured, in promising & swearing that there should be hereafter no more exactiōs, paiments, or extortions within the realme, but also excommunicate for the violence and iniurie done to Prelats and Priests. Wherefore by these presents we pronounce him as afore, as well periured as excommunicate.

4. Fourthly we depose &c. against the said Lord Henry, that he hearing of the Kings returne from Ireland into Wales, * rose vp against his soueraigne Lord the king with many thousands of armed men, marching forward with al his power towards the Castle of Flint in Wales, where he tooke the king & held him prisoner, and so led him captiue as a traitor vnto Leicester: from whence he tooke his iourney towards London, misusing the king by the way both he and his, with many iniuries and opprobrious cōtumelies and scoffes. And in the end committed him to the Tower of London, and held a Parliament, the king being absent & in prison, wherein for feare of death he compelled the king to yeeld and resigne vnto him all his right & title of the kingdome and crowne of England. After which resignation being made, the said Lord Henry standing vp in the Parliament house, stoutly and proudly before them al; said & a...med: that the kingdome of Englād and crowne of the same with al therunto belonging, did pertaine vnto him at that present as of very right, and to none other: for that the said king Richard by his owne deede was depriued for euer of all the right, title, & interest that euer he had, hath, or may haue in the same. And thus at length by right and wrong, he exalted himselfe vnto y^r throne of the kingdome: since which time, our commō weale neuer florished nor prospered, but altogether hath bene void of vertue, for that the spiritualtie was so oppressed, exercise and warlike practises hath not bin mainteined, charitie is waxed cold, & couetousnes and miserie hath takē place, & finally mercy is taken away & vengeance supplieth the rcome. Whereby it doth appeare (as before is said) that y^r said Lord Hēry is not only periured & false by vsurping the kingdome and dominion belonging to another, but also excommunicate for the apprehending, vniust imprisoning, and depriuing his soueraigne Lord the king of his roiall crowne and dignitie. Wherefore, as in the articles before, we pronounce the said Lord Henry to be excommunicate.

5. Fiftly we depose, &c. against the said Lord Henry, that he the same Lord Henry with the rest of his faouurers & complices, heaping mischief vpon mischief, haue cōmitted and brought to passe a most wicked and mischieuous fact, yea, such as hath not bene heard of at any time before. For after that they had taken and imprisoned the king, and deposed him by open iniurie against all humane nature, yet not cōtēt with this: they brought him to Poinfret Castle, and there imprisoned him, where xv. daies & nights they vexed him with continuall hunger, thirst, and cold, and finally berest him of life, with such a kind of death as neuer before that time was knownen in England, but by Gods prouidence it is come to light. * Who euer heard of such a deed, or who euer saw the like of him▪ Wherefore O England arise, stand vp, auenge the cause, the death, and iniurie of thy king and prince: which if thou do not, take this for certaintie, that the righteous God will destroy thee by strange inuasions and foreigne power, and auenge himselfe on thee for this so horrible an act. Whereby doth appeare, not only his periurie, but also his excommunication most execrable: so that as before we pronounce, the said Henry not only periured, but also excommunicate.

6. Sixtly we depose, &c. against the sayd Lord Henry, that after he had attained to the crowne and scepter of the kingdome, he caused forthwith to be apprehended diuers Lords spirituall, * Bishops, Abbots, Priors, and religious men of all orders, whom he arested, imprisoned, & bound, and against all order brought them before the secular iudges to be examined: not sparing the Bishops whose bodies were annointed with sacred oyle, nor priests, nor religious men, but commanded them to be cōdemned, hanged, and beheaded by the temporall law and iudgement, notwithstanding the priuiledge of the Church, and holie orders, which he ought to haue reuerenced and worshipped if he had bin a true and lawfull king: for the first and chiefest othe in the coronation of a lawfull king is, to defend and keepe inuiolate the liberties and rights of the Church, and not to deliuer anie Priest or religious man into the hands of the secular power, except for heresie onely, and that after his degradation according to the order of the Church. Contrary vnto all this hath he done, so that it is manifest by this article as afore in the rest, that he is both periured and excommunicate.

7. Seuenthly we depose, &c. against the said Lord Henry that not onely he caused to be put to death the Lords spirituall and other Religious men, but also diuers of the Lords temporall and nobilitie of the Realme, and cheifly those that studied for the preseruatiō of the commonweale, not casing as yet, to cōtinue his mischeuous enterprise, if by Gods prouidēce it be not preuented & that with speed. Amongst all other of the Nobilitie, these first he put to death: the Earle of Salisbury, the Earle of Huntington, the Earle of Gloucester,* the Lord Roger Clarendon the kyngs brother, with diuers other knights and Esquiers: and afterwards, the Lord Thomas Percy Earle of Worcester, and the Lord Henry Percy sonne and heyre to the Earle of Northumberland, the which Lord Henry he not onely slew, but to the vttermost of his power againe and againe he caused hym to be slayne. For after that he was once put to death, and deliuered to the Lord of Furniuaile to be buried (who committed his body to holy sepulture, with as much honour as might be, commending his soule to almighty God, with the suffrages of the blessed masse & other praiers) the said Lord Henry most like a cruel beast still thirsting hys bloud, caused his body to be exhumate & brought forth againe, and to be reposed betwene two milstones Page 520 in the towne of Shreusbury, there to be 〈◇〉 wyth armed men: And afterwards to be beheaded an• quartered, commanding his head and quarters to be caried vnto diuers cities of the kingdome. Wherefore for so detestable a fact neuer heard of in any age before, we pronounce him as in the former articles excommunicate.

8. Eightly, we depose, &c. agaynst y^c said Lord Henry, for that after his attaining to the crowne, he willingly ratified, allowed, and approued a most wicked statute set forth & renued in y^r parliament holden at Winchester.* The which statute is directly against y^r Church of Rome, the power, & principalitie therof giuen by our Lord Iesus Christ and vnto blessed S. Peter & his successors Bishops of Rome: vnto whom belongeth by full authoritie the free disposing of all spirituall promotions as wel superior as inferiour: which wicked statute, is the cause of many mischiefes vid. of simonie, periurie, adultery, incest, misorder, & disobedience, for that many Bishops, Abbots, priors, and prelats (we will not say by vertue, but rather by error of this statute) haue bestowed y^r benefices vacant vpō yong men, rude and vnworthy persons, which haue compacted with them for the same, so that scarce no one prelate is found that hath not couenanted with the partie promoted for the halfe yearely, or at the least the third part of the said benefice so bestowed. And by this meanes, the said statute is the destruction of the right of S. Peter, the Church of Rome, and England, the Cleargie and vniuersities, the mainteuance of wars, and the whole common wealth, &c.

9. Ninthly, we say and depose, &c. against the said Lord Henry, that after he had tyrannously taken vpon him the gouernement of the Realme: England neuer florished since, nor prospered, by reason of his continuall exactions of money and oppressions, yearely of the cleargie and cōminaltie: neither is it knowen how this money so extorted is bestowed, when as neither his souldiours, nor his gentlemen are payed as yet their wages and fees for their charges and wonderfull toile and labour, neither yet the poore countrey people are satisfied for the victuall taken of them:*. And neuertheles, the miserable clergie, and more miserable comminalltie, are forced still to pay, by menaces and sharp threatnings. Notwithstanding he sware when he first vsurped the crowne, that hereafter there should be no such exactions nor vexations, neither of the clergie nor l••tie. Wherefore, as afore, we pronounce him periured, &c.

10. In the tenth and last article, we depose, say, and openly protest by these presents, for our selues & all our assistents in the cause of the Church of Rome and England, and in the cause of king Richard his heires, the clergie, and comminalltie of the whole Realme: that neither our entention is, was, nor shall be, in word nor deed to offend any state, either of the prelates spirituall, Lords temporall, nor commons of the realme: but rather foreseeing the perdition and destruction of this Realme to approach, we haue here brought before you certeine articles concerning the destruction of the same, to be circumspectlie considered of the whole assembly, as well of the Lords spirituall as temporall, and the faithfull commons of England: beseeching you all in y^t bowels of Iesus Christ, the righteous iudge, and for the merits of our blessed Lady the mother of God, and of S. George our defender, vnder whose displayed banner we wish to liue and die, and vnder paine of damnation, that ye will be fauourable to vs and our causes which are three in number.* Wherof the first is, that we exalt vnto the kingdome the true & lawfull heire, and him to crowne in kinglie throne with the diademe of England. And secondly, that we renoke the weshmen, the Irishmen, and all other our enimies vnto perpetuall peace and amitie. Thirdly and finally, that we deliuer and make free our natieue countrey from al exactions, extortiōs, & vniust paiments: Beseeching our Lord Iesus Christ to graunt his blessing, the remission of their sinnes, & life euerlasting to all that assist vs to their power in this godly and meritorious worke: and vnto all those that are against vs, we threaten the curse of almighty God by the authority committed vnto vs by Christ and his holy Church, and by these presents we pronounce them excommunicate.

These Articles being seene and read, much concourse of people daily resorted more and more to y^t archbishop. The Earle of Westmerland being then not far off,, with Iohn the kings sonne (hearing of this) mustered his souldiours with all the power he was able to make, & bent toward the Archbishop: but seeing his part too weake to encounter with him, vseth practise of policie, where strength would not serue. And first comming to him vnder colour of frendship dissembled, laboureth to seeke out the causes of that great stirre: To whome the Archbyshop againe answering, no hurt to be entended thereby, but profit rather to the kyng and common wealth, and maintenance of publicke peace: but for so much as he stood in great scare, and danger of the king, he was therefore compelled so to doo:. And withall shewed vnto him the contents of the Articles aforesaid, which when the Earle had read, setting a faire face vpon it, seemed highly to commend the purpose and doyngs of the Bishop: promising moreouer that he would helpe also forward in that quarell, to the vttermost of his power. And required vpon the same, a day to be set, when they with equall number of men, might meere together, in some place appointed to haue farther talke of the matter. The Archbishop easilie perswaded, was content, although much against the counsaile of the Earle Marshall, and came. Where the Articles being openly published and read, the Earle of Westmerland with his companie, pretended well to like vpon the same, and to ioyne their assents together. Which done, he exhorted the Archbishop, that for so much as his garrison had bene now long in armour, and from home, he would therefore discharge the needeles multitude of his souldiers, and dismisse them home to their worke and busines,* and they would together drinke and ioyne hands in the sight of the whole company. Thus they shaking hands together, the Archbishop sendeth away his souldyers in peace, not knowing himselfe to be circumvented, before he was immediately arested by the handes of the foresayde Earle of Westmerland,* and shortly after the king comming with his power to Yorke, was there beheaded the monday in Whi•sonweeke, and with him also Lord Thomas Moubray Marshall, with diuers other moreouer of y^e citie of Yorke, which had taken their parts. After whose slaughter, the King proceedeth farther to persecute the Earle of Northumberland, & Lord Thomas Bardolph. Who then did flie to Barwicke. From thence they reincoued to Wales. At length within two yeares after, fighting against the kyngs part, were slayne in the field. an. 1408. In the which yeare, diuers other also in the Northparts, for fauouring the foresaid Lords, were likewise condemned by the kyng and put to death. Among whome, the Abbot of Hales, for the like treason was hanged.

The kyng after the sheddyng of so much bloud, seeyng himselfe so hardly beloued of his subiects, thought to kepe in yet with the Clergy, & with the Bishop of Rome, seeking alwaies his chieffest stay at their hands. And therefore was compelled in all things, to serue their humour, as did appeare as well in condemning William Sawtre before, as also in other, which cōsequētly we haue now to intreat of. In the number of whom commeth now by y^e course of time to write of one Iohn Badby a Tailor and a lay man, who by the crueltie of Thomas Arundel Archbishop, and other Prelates, was brought to his condemnation in this kings reigne,* an. 1409. according as by their owne registers appeareth, & followeth by this narration to be seene.

Iohn Badby Artificer.

IN the yeare of our Lord.* 1409. on Sonday beyng the first day of March, in the afternoone: The excommunication following of one Iohn Badby Taylour, beyng a lay man, was made in a certaine house or haull within the precinct of the preaching friers in Londō, in an vtter cloister: vpon the crime of heresie & other articles, repugnant to the determinatiō of the erroneous church of Rome, before Thomas Arundel Archbishop of Canterbury and other his assistants, as y^e Archbishop of Yorke, of London, of Winchester, of Oxford, of Norwich, of Salisbury, of Bath, of Bangor, Et meneuensis Episcopi, and also Edmond Duke of Yorke, Thomas Bewford, the Chauncelour of England, Lord de Roos, the clerke of the rolles, & a great number of other Lords, both spirituall and temporall being then at the selfesame time present: Maister Morgan read the articles of his opinions to the hearers, according as it is contemed in the instrument read by the foresayd M. Morgan, the tenour whereof followeth and in effect is such.

In the name of God, Amen: Be it manifest to all men by this present publike instrument,* that in the yeare after the incarnation of our Lord, according to y^e course and cōputation of the Church of England, otherwise in the yere 1409. in the second indictiō, in the third yeare of the Popedome of the most holy father in Christ & Lord, Lord Gregory xi. by y^e diuine permission Pope, the secōd day of Ianuary, in the Chappell Caruarie of S. Thomas Martyr, high vnto the Cathedrall Church of Worcester, being situate in the said Dioces, in the presence of me the publicke Notary, and of the witnesses vnder written: the foresayd Page 521 Iohn Badby a lay man, of the sayd Dioces of Worcester, appearing personally, before the reuerend father in Christ and Lord, Lord Thomas, by the grace of God Byshop of Worcester, sitting in y^e said Chappell for chiefe Iudge, was detected of and vpon the crime of heresie, being heretically taught, & openly maintayned by the foresayd Iohn Badby. That is,* that the Sacrament of the body of Christ, consecrated by the Priest vpon the aulter, is not the true body of Christ, by the vertue of the wordes of the Sacrament. But that after the Sacramentall words spoken by the Priest to make the body of Christ: the materiall bread doth remaine vpon the aulter as in the beginning, neither is it turned into the very body of Christ after the Sacramental words spoken of the Priest. Which Iohn Badby, being examined and diligently demanded by the foresaid reuerēd father cōcerning the premisses, in the end did answere: that it was impossible that any Priest should make the body of Christ, & that he beleued firmly that no Priest could make the body of Chrst by such words Sacramentally spoken in such sort. And also he said expressly, that he would neuer while he liued beleue, that any Priest could make the body of Christ sacramentally, vnlesse that first he saw manifestlie the like body of Christ to be handled in the hands of the priest vpon the aulter, in his corporall forme. And furthermore he sayd, that Iohn Rakier of Bristoll had so much power & authoritie to make the like body of Christ, as any priest had. Moreouer he said, that whē Christ sat at supper with his disciples: he had not his body in his hand, to the intent to distribute it to his disciples: and he said expresly, that he did not this thing. And also he spake many other words teaching & fortifieng the heresie in the same place, both greeuous, and also out of order, and horrible to the eares of the hearers, sounding against the Catholike faith.

Upon which occasion, the same reuerend father admonished and requested the said Iohn Badby oftentimes, and very instantlie to charity: for so much as he would willinglie that he should haue forsaken such heresie and opinion, holden, taught, and mainteined by him, in such sort against the Sacrament, to renounce and vtterly abiure them, and to beleue other things which the holy mother the Church doth beleue. And he informed the said Iohn on that behalfe both gentlie, and also laudably. Yet the said Iohn Badby, although he were admonished and requested both often and instantlie by the said reuerend father: said and answered expresselie, that he would neuer beleue otherwise then before he had said, taught, and answered. Wherevpon, the foresaid reuerend father Bishop of Worcester, seeing, vnderstanding, and perceiuing the foresaid Iohn Badby to maintaine and fortifie the said beresie, being stubborne,* and proceeding in the same stubbornnes: pronounced the said Iohn to be before this time conuicted of such an heresie, and that he hath bin, and is an hereticke, and in the end declared it in these words.

In the name of God, Amen. We Thomas Bishop of Worcester, do accuse thee Iohn Badby being a lay man of our Dioces,* of and vpon the crime of heresie before vs, sitting for cheese iudge, being oftentimes confessed and conuicted of and vpon that, that thou hast taught and openly affirmed, as hetherto thou doest teach, boldly affirme, and defend: that the Sacrament of the body of Christ, consecrated vpon the aulter by the Priest, is not the true body of Christ: But after the Sacramental words to make the body of Christ by vertue of the said Sacramentall words pronounced, to haue bin in the crime of heresie: and we do pronounce thee, both to haue bene, and to be an heretike, and do declare it finallie by these writings.

These things were done accordingly as is aboue written and are recited in the yeare, indiction, popedome, moneth, day and place aforesaid, being present the same time, Iohn Malune Prior of the Cathedrall Church of Worcester, Iohn Dudle Mōke,* and Iohn Haule the supprior of the said

Church, Thomas Penings of the order of the Carmelites, Thomas Fekenham of the order of the preaching Friars, William Pomfret of the order of the Minorites, being professors and maisters in diuinitie, William Hailes, Gualter of London, Iohn Swippedew beeing publique Notaries,* and William Beuchampe and Thomas Gerbris being Knights, Richard wish of Tredington, Thomas Wilbe of Dentbury, Iohn Weston of Yewley, being parsons of Churches, and Thomas Baleinges, the maister of Saint Wolstone in Worcester, and also Henry Haggely, Iohn Penerell, Thomas Trogmorton and William Wasseborne Esquiers of the Dioces of Worcester and Norwich,* and many other worshipfull and honest men being witnesses and called specialllye to the things aforesaid.

And I Iohn Chew Clerke, of the Dioces of Bath and Welles, and by the authoritie apostolicall, publique Notarie of the said Bishop: haue in testimonie of the premisses, put my hand & seale to the examination, interrogatiō, monition, and aunswere of the same Iohn Badby, and to his obstinacie: & also to the proceedings of al and singular other doings as is aforesaid, which against him before the sayd bishop were handled & done, in the yeare, indiction, popedome, moneth, day, and place aforesaid, which with the forenamed witnesses was personally present: and y^e same, euen as I heard them and saw them to be done (being occupied with other matters) caused them to be written and published, and into this publique forme haue compiled the same. I the foresayd Notary am also priuie, vnto the words and examinations interlined betweene seauen or eight lines of y^e beginning of this instrument, which lines I also the foresaide Notary doe approoue and make good.

And I Walter London Clerke, of the Dioces of Worcester, and by the authoritie Apostolicall, publique Notarie: to all and singular the foresaid things as afore by the foresaid Notary is recited, & in the yeare, indiction, popedome, moneth, day, and place aforesaid were handled and done, being with other the fore recited witnesses personally present: and to all & euery of the same (as I saw & heard them to be done, being thereunto faithfully desired and required.) In testimony of the premisses, haue signed & subscribed according to y^e accustomed maner. Haec ex Reg. Cant.

And when the articles, in the foresaid instrument contained, were by the Archbishop of Canterbury publicquely and vulgarly read and approued:* he publicquely cōfessed & affirmed, that he had both said and mainteined the same. And then the Archbishop to conuince the cōstant purpose of the said Iohn Badby, commanded the same articles againe to be read, often instructing him both by words and examples, informing and exhorting him that thereby he might be brought the sooner to the Religion that he was of. And furthermore, the said Archbyshop sayd and affirmed there openly to the same Iohn: that he would (if he would liue according to the doctrine of Christ) gage his soule for him at the iudgement day. And after that againe he caused those articles in the said instrument expressed, to be read by the foresaid Phillip Morgan, & the said Archbyshop himselfe expounded the same in English as before: wherunto Iohn Badby aunswered. As touching the first article concerning the body of Christ, he expresly sayd, that after y^e consecration at the aulter, there remaineth materiall bread, & the same bread which was before: notwithstāding (said he) it is a signe or sacrament of the liuing God.

Also; wen the second article was expounded vnto him, that it is impossible for anie Priest &c. To this article he answered and said, that it could not sinke into his minde that the words are to be taken as they litterallie lie, vnles he should denie the incarnation of Christ.

Also, being examined of the third Article concerning Iacke Raker, he said: That if Iacke Raker were a man of good liuing, and did loue and feare God, that he hath as much power so to do, as hath the Priest: and said further, that he hath heard it spoken of some doctors of diuinitie, that if he should receiue any such consecrated bread, he were worthy to be damned, & were damned in so doing.

Furthermore he sayd that he would beleue the omnipotent God in trusitie,* and said moreouer that if euery hoste being consecrated at the aulter were the Lords body, that then there be 20000. gods in England. But he beleueed (he said) in one God omnipotent, which thing the foresaid Archb. of Cant. denied not.

And when the other conclusion was expounded. That Christ sitting with his Disciples at supper, &c. To this he answered and said that he would greatly maruell: that if anie man had a loafe of bread, and should breake the same and giue to euery man a mouthfull, that the same loafe should afterwards be whole.

When all these things were thus finished, and that all the said conclusions were often red in the vulgar tong: the foresaid Archb. demaunded of him, whether he would renounce and forsake his opiniōs and such like conclusions or not, and adhere to the doctrine of Christ and Catholike faith? He answered, that according to that he had sayd before, he would adhere and stand to those words, which before he had made answeere vnto. Then the Archb. oftentimes required the said Iohn in the bowels of Iesu Christ that he would forsake those opinions and conclusions,* and that hencefoorth he would cleane to the christian faith: which thing to do in the audience of all the lords and others that were present, he expresly denied and refused.

After all this, when the foresayd Archbishop of Cant. & the Bishop of London had consulted together, to what safe keping the said Iohn Badby (vntill the wednesdaie next) might be committed: It was cōcluded, that he shold

Page 522 be put in a certaine chamber or safe house within the Mansion of the Frier preachers,* and so he was: and then the Archbishop of Caunterbury sayd, that he himselfe would kepe the key therof, in the meane time. And when the foresayd wednesday was expired, being the 15. day of March, and that the foresayd Archbishop of Canterbury, with hys fellow brethren and Suffraganes were assembled in the Church of S. Paule in London:,* The Archbish. of Canterbury taking the Episcopall seate, called vnto him the Archbishop of Yorke, Richard London, Henry Winchester, Robert Chichester, Alexander Norwich, & the noble prince Edmond the Duke of Yorke, Rafe Earle of Westmerland, Thomas Beaufort Knight Lord Chancellour of England, and the Lord Beamond with other noble men as well spirituall as temporall, that stood and sate by, whome to name it would be long: Before whome the said Iohn Badby was called personallie to answeere vnto the Articles premised in the foresaid instrument. Who when he came personallie before them, the articles were read by the Officiall of the court of Cant. and by the Archb. (in the vulgare tong) expounded, publikely and expresly: and the same Articles, as he before had spoken and deposed, he still held and defended, and said, that whilst he liued, he would neuer retract the same. And furthermore he said specially to to be noted, that the Lord duke of Yorke personallie there present as is aforesaid, and euery man els for the time beeing: is of more estimation and reputation, then the Sacrament of the aulter, by the priest in due forme consecrated. And whilst they were thus in his examination, the Archbishop considering and waying that he would in no wise be altered, and seing moreouer his countenance stout and hart confirmed, so that he began to persuade other as it appeared in the same: These things considered, the Archprelate whē he saw that by his allurements it was not in his power, neither by exhortations, reasons, nor arguments, to bring the said Iohn Badbye from his constant truth to his Catholique faith (executing and doing the office of his great maister) proceeded to confirme and ratifie the former sentence giuen before by the Bishop of Worcester against the said Iohn Badby, pronouncing him for an open and publique hereticke. And thus shifting their hands of him, they deliuered him to the secular power: and desired the sayd temporall Lords, then and there present verie instantlie, that they would not put the same Iohn Badby to death for that his offence,* nor deliuer him to be punished or put to death, in y^r presence of all the Lordsabone recited.

These things thus done and concluded by the Bishops in the forenoone: on the afternoone, the Kings writte was not far behind. By the force wherof, I. Badby still perseuering in his constancie vnto the death, was brought into Smithfield, and there being put in an emptie barrell, was bound with iron chaines fastened to a stake, hauing drie wood put about him.

And as he was thus standing in the pipe or tonne (for as yet Cherillus Bull was not in vre among the bishops) it happened that the Prince the kings eldest sonne, was there present. Who shewing some part of the good Samaritane, began to endeouour and assay how to saue the life of him, whome the hypocriticall Leuites and Phariseis sought to put to death. He admonished and counsailed him, that hauing respect vnto himselfe, he should spedelie withdraw himselfe out of these dangerous Laberinth of opinions,* adding oftentimes threatnings, the which might haue daunted anie mans stomacke. Also Courtney at that time Chancellor of Oxford, preached vnto him, and enformed him of the faith of holie Church.

In this meane season, the Prior of S. Bartlemewes in Smithfield, brought with all solemnitie the Sacrament of Gods body,* with twelue torches borne before, and so shewed the Sacrament to the poore man being at the stake. And then they demanded of him how he beleued in it, he answering: that he knew well it was halowed bread, and not gods body. And then was the tunne put ouer him, and fire put vnto him. And when he felt fire, he cried, mercie (calling belike vpon the Lord) and so the Prince immediatelie commanded to take awaie the tunne, and quench the fire. The Prince his commandement being done, asked him if he would forsake heresie to take him to the faith of holie Church: which thing if he would doo, he should haue goods enough, promising also vnto him a yearelie stipend out of the kings treasurie, so much as should suffice his contentation.

But this valiant champion of Christ, neglecting the princes faire words, as also contemning all mens deuises: refused the offer of worldly promises, no doubt, but being more vehemently inflamed with y^r spirit of God then with anie earthly desire.* Wherfore, whē as yet he continued vnmoueable in his former mind, the prince commanded him straight to be put again into the pipe or tunne, and that he should not afterward looke for any grace or fauour. But as he could be allured by no rewards, euē so was he nothing at all abashed at their torments, but as a valiant champion of Christ, he perseuered inuincible to y^e end. Not without a great and most cruell battayle, but with much more greater triumph of victorie: the spirit of Christ hauing alwaies the vpper hand in his members, maugre the furie, Page 523 rage, and power of the whole world. For the manifestation of which torment, wee haue here set forth the picture of his burning, in such maner as it was done.

This godly Martyr Iohn Badby hauing thus consummate his testimony and martyrdome in fire, the persecuting Bishops yet not herewith contented, and thinking themselues as yet eyther not strong inough, or els not sharpe enough agaynst tht poore innocent flock of Christ: to make all thinges sure and substantiall on theyr side,* in such sorte, as this doctrine of the Gospell nowe springing should be suppressed for euer: layd theyr conspiring heads together, & hauing now a king for theyr own purpose, ready to serue theyr turn in all poynts (during the time of the same Parliamēt aboue recited yet cōtinuing) the foresayd bishops and clergy of the realme, exhibited a Bul vnto the kings maiestie: subtilly declaring, what quietnes hath ben mayntayned within this realme by his most noble progenitours, who alwayes defended the auncient rites and customes of the Church, and enriched the same with large gifts, to the honor of God and the realme: and contrariwise, what trouble and disquietnes was now risen by diuers (as they termed them) wicked and peruerse men teachinge and preachinge openlye and priuilye,* acertayne new, wicked and hereticall kinde of doctrine, contrary to the Catholicke fayth and determination of holye Church: whervpon y^e king alwayes oppressed with blynd ignoraunce by the crafty meanes and subtile pretences of the clergie, graunted in the sayd Parliament (by consent of the nobilitie assembled) a statute to be obserued called Ex officio as followeth.

The Statute Ex officio.

*That is to say, that no man within this Realme or other the kinges maiesties dominions, presume or take vpon him to preach priuily or apertly, without speciall licence first obteyned of the ordinary of the same place (Curates in theyr owne parishe Churches, and persons heretofore priuiledged, and others admitted by the Canon law, onely excepted) Nor that any hereafter do preach mayntayne, teach, informe openly or in secret, or make or write any booke contrary to the catholique fayth, and determination of the holy Church. Nor that any hereafter, make anye conuenticles or assemblies, or keepe and exercise anye maner of schooles touching this sect, wicked doctrin and opinion. And further that no man hereafter shall by any meanes, fauour anye such preacher, any such maker of vnlawfull assemblies, or any such booke maker or writer, and finally any such teacher, informer, or stirrer vp of the people. And that all and singuler persons hauing anye the sayd bookes, writings, or schedules contayning the sayd wicked doctrines and opinions, shall within forty dayes after this present proclamation and statute, really and effectually deliuer or cause to be deliuered all and singuler the sayd bookes and writings, vnto the ordinary of the same place. And if it shall happen anye person or persons of what kinde, state, or condition soeuer he or they be, to doe or attempt anye manner of thing contrarie to this present proclamation & statute, or not to deliuer the same books in forme aforesayd: That then the ordinary of the same place in his owne diocesse by authoritie of the sayd proclamation and statute shall cause to be arested and detained vnder safe custody, the sayd person or persōs in this case diffamed, and evidently suspected or any of them, vntill he or they so offending haue by order of lawe purged him or themselues as touching the articles layd to hys or theyr charge in this behalfe: *or vntill he or they haue denyed and recanted (according to the lawes ecclesiasticall) the sayd wicked sect, preachinges, teachinges: and hereticall and erroneous opinions And that the sayd ordinary by himselfe or his Commissaries proceede openly and iudicially to all the effect of law agaynst the sayd persons so arested and remayning vnder safe custody, & that he end and determine the matter within three monethes after the sayd arest, (all delays and excuses set apart) according to the order and custom of the Canon law. And if any person, in any cause aboue mentioned, shalbe lawfully conuicted before the ordinary of the diocesse or hys Comissaries: that then the sayd Ordinary, may lawfully cause the sayd person so conuicted (according to the maner and quallitie of hys fact) to be layd in any of his owne prisons, and there to be kept so long as to hys discretion shall be thought expedient.

And further the sayd Ordinary (except in cases by the which according to the Canon law, the party offending ought to be deliuered to the seculer power) shall charge the sayd person wyth such a fine of mony to be payd vnto the kinges maiestye, as he shall thinke competent for the maner and quallitie of his offence, And the sayd diocesan shalbe bound to geue notice of the sayd fine, into the kinges maiesties Eschequer, by hys letters patent vnder his seale: to the intent that the sayd fine may be leuiod to the kinges maiesties vse of the goodes of the person so conuict.

And further if any person within this realme and other the the kinges maiesties dominion, shalbe conuicted before the Ordinary of the place, or hys Comissaryes, of the sayd wicked preachinges, doctrines, opinions schooles, and hereticall and erroneous informations or any of them: and will refuse to abiure and recant the sayd wicked sect, preachings teachings, opinions, schols and informations: Or if after hys abiuration once made, the relapse be pronounced agaynst hym by the diocesan of the place, or hys Commissaryes (for so by the Canon law he ought to be lefte to the secular power, vpon credite geuen to the ordinary or hys Commissaries) That then, the Sheriffe of the same Countie, the Mayor, Sheriffes, or Sheriffe, or the Mayor or Baliffes of the same Cittie, village or Borough of the same County, and neerest inhabiting to the sayd Ordinary or hys sayd Commissaryes: shall personally be present, as oft as they shalbe required, to conferre with the sayd Ordinary or his commissaries in geuing sentence against the sayd persons offending or any of them. *And after the sayd sentence so pronounced, shall take vnto them the sayd persons so offending, and any of them, and cause them openly to be burned in the sight of all the people: To the intent that this kinde of punishment may be a terror vnto others, that the like wicked doctrines and heretical opinions, or the authours and fauourers thereof be no more mayntayned within this Realme and dominions, to the great hurt (which God forbid) of Christian religion, and decrees of holy Church. In which all and singuler the premisses, concerning the statute aforesayd: Let the Sheriffes, Mayors, and Bayliffes of the sayd Counties, Cities: Villages, and Boroughes, be attendant, ayding, and fauoring, the sayd Ordinaryes and theyr Commissaries.

By this bloody statute so seuerely and sharply enacted agaynst these simple men, here hast thou (gentle Reader a little to stay with thy selfe: and to consider the nature and condition of this present world, howe it hath bene set and bent euer from the beginning, by all might, counsayle, and wayes possible, to striue agaynst the wayes of God, and to ouerthrow that which he will haue set vp. And although the world may see by infinite storyes and examples, that it is but in vaine to striue against him: yet such is the nature of this world (all set in malignitie) that it will not cease still to be like it selfe.

The like law and statute in the time of Dioclesian and Maximinus was attempted,* as before appeareth, pag. 83. & for the more strength were writtē also in tables of brasse, to the entent that the name of Christ should vtterly be extincted for euer. And yet, the name of Christ remayneth, where that brasen lawe remayned not three yeres. The which law writtē thē in brasse, although it differ in maner & form, from this our statute Ex officio, yet to the same ende & cruelty, to spill the blood of saintes, there is no difference betweene the one and the other. Neither is there anye diuersitie touching the first originall doer and worker of thē both. For the same Sathan, which then wrought his vttermost agaynst Christ, before he was bound vp: the same also now after his loosing out, doth what he can, though not after the same way, yet to the same intent. For then 〈◇〉 outward violence as an open enemy, he did what he could Now by a more couert way, vnder the title of the Church he unpugneth the Church of Christ, vsing a more subtile way to deceaue, vnder gay pretēsed titles: but no lesse pernicious in the end, wherto be shouteth, as well appeareth by this bloody statute Ex officio, the sequell wherof cost afterward, many a Christen mans life. As in processe of story remayneth more hereafter (Christ willing) to be declared.

Furthermore for the more fortification of this statute of the king aforesayd, concurrerth also an other constitution made much about the same tyme by the Archb. of Canterb. Thomas Arundell. So that no industrie nor pollicy of man here did lack to set the matter forward, but specially on the bishops partes, who left no meanes vnattempted, how to subuert the right wayes of the Lord.

First, in most dilligent and exquisite execution of the kinges statute set forth: the execution whereof they did so exactly apply, that maruell it is to consider, all other laws of kinges (commonly,) be they neuer so good) to be so coldly kept, and this onely among all the rest so neerely followed. But herein is to be scene the dilligence of the romishe Prelates, which neuer let any thing to fal, that maketh for the dignity of their estate.

Secondly, beside theyr vigilant care, in seeing y^r kinges statute to be executed: No lesse industrious also were they in adding thereunto mo^r constitutions of theyr owne, as from time to time appeareth as wel by other Archbishops hereafter, and by Pope Martine, as also by this constitution here present made by Thomas Arundell the Archb.

But before we enter to the relation of these foresayd Page 524 cōstitutious of y^t clergy mē, here cōmeth in more to be said and noted touching y^r foresayd Statute ex Officio to proue the same not onely to be cruell and impious but also to be of it selfe of no force and validitie for the burning of anye person for cause of Religion, for the disprofe of whiche statute we haue sufficient authoritie remayning as yet in the parliament Rolles to be seene in her maiesties Courte of Recordes: which here were to be debated at large but that vpon speciall occasiō we haue differed the amp^e discourse therof to the cruell persecution of the Lord Cobhame hereafter ensuing as may appeare in the defence of the sayd lord Cobham agaynst Nicholas Happeffield vnder the title and name of Alanus Copus And thus referring them for the examination of this statute to the place aforesaid, let vs now returne to Thomas Arundel, and his bloody constitutions aboue mentioned. The stile and tenour wherof, to the intent the rigour of the same may appeare to all men I thought hereunder to adioyne, in wordes as followeth.

 The constitution of Thomas Arundell, agaynst the followers of Gods truth.

*Thomas by the permission of God, Archbishop of Canterbury, Primate of all Englande, and Legate of the see Apostolicke: To all and singuler our reuerend brethren fellow Bishops, and our Suffraganes. And to Abbots, Priours, Deanes of Cathedrall Churches, Archdeacons, Prouostes and Canons: also to all persons, vicares, chaplaynes, & Clerkes in Parish Churches, and to all lay mē whome and where so euer, dwelling win our prouince of Canterbury, greeting: & grace to stand firmly in the doctrine of the holy mother Church. It is a manifest & playne case: that he doth wrong and iniury to the most reuerend councell, who so reuolteth from the thinges, being in the sayd Councell once discussed and decided. And whosoeuer dare presume to dispute of the supreme or principall iudgment here in earth, in so doing incurreth the payne of sacrilege, according to the authoritie of ciuill wisdom and manifest tradition of humayne law. Much more then they who trusting to theyr own wittes, are so bold to violate and with contrary doctrine to resist, and in word and deede to contemne the preceptes of lawes and Canons, rightly made and proceeding from the kaybearer and porter of eternall life and death: * bearing the rowme and person, not of pure man, but of true God here in earth: which also haue bene abserued hitherto, and of y^r holy fathers our predecessoures, vnto the glorious effusion of theyr blood, & voluntary sprinkling out of theyr braynes: Are worthy of greater punishmēt, deseruing quickly to be cut off, as rotten members, from the body of the Church militent. For such ought to consider, what is in the old testament written: Moses and Aaron among hys Priestes, that is, were chiefe heads amongst them. And in the new Testament among the Apostles there was a certayne difference: And though they were all Apostles yet was it graunted of the Lord to Peter, that he should beare preeminence aboue the other Apostles: And also the Apostles themselues woulde the same, that he shoulde be the chiefetayn ouer all the rest. And being called Cephas, that is, head: shold be as Prince ouer the Apostles. Unto whome it was sayd: Thou beyng once conuerted, confirme thy brethren: as though he wold say, If there happen any doubt among them, or if anye of them chaunce to erre and stray out of the way of fayth, of iust liuing, or right conuersation: Doe thou confirme and reduce him in the right way againe. Which thing no doubt the Lord would neuer haue sayd vnto him, if he had not so minded, * y^t the rest should be obedient vnto him. And yet al this notwithstanding, we know and dayly proue, that we are sory to speake, howe the olde Sophister, the enemy of mankinde, (foreseeing and fearing left y^t sound doctrine of the church determined from ancient times by the holy forefathers: should withstand his malices, if it might keep the people of god in vnitie of faith vnder one head of y^r church) doth therfore endeouour by al meanes possible, to extirp the sayd doctrine, feyning vices to be vertues. And so vnder false pretences of veritie dissimuled, soweth discorde in catholike people, * to the intent, y^t some goyng one way, some an other: He in the meane time may gather to himselfe a Church of the malignant, differing wickedly from the vniuersall mother holy church. In the which Satan transforming hymselfe into an Angell of light, bearing a lying and deceitfull ballaunce in hys hād, pretendeth great righteousnes, in contrarying the ancient doctrine of the holye mother church, and refusing the traditions of the same determined and appoynted by holy fathers: perswading mē (by fayned forgeries) the same to be nought: and so inducing other new kindes of doctrine, leading to more goodnes, as he by his lying perswasions pretendeth, although he in very truth neither willeth nor mindeth any goodnes but rather that he may sow schismes, wherby diuers opinions & contrary to themselues being raysed in y^t Church fayth thereby may be diminished, and also the reuerend holy misteries through the same contention of words may be prophaned with Paganes, Iewes, and other infidels, and wicked miscreantes.* And so that figure in the Apos. 6. is well verified, speaking of him that sate on the blacke horse, bearing a payre of balaunce in hys hand, by y^t which heretiques are vnderstand. Who at the first appearaunce lyke to weightes or ballance, make as though they would set forth right and iust thinges, to allure the hartes of the hearers. But afterward, appeareth the blacke horse, that is to say, their intention, full of cursed speaking. For they vnder a diuers shew and colour of a iust ballance,* with the tayle of a blacke horse sprinkling abroad heresies and erroures, do strike. And beyng poysoned themselues, vnder colour of good, rayse vp infinite slaunders, and by certayn persons fitte to doe mischief, do publish abroad as it were the sugred tast of hony mixt with poyson, therby the sooner to be taken: working and causing through their slight and subtilties, that error shoulde be taken for veritye, wickednes for holines, and for the true will of Christ. Yea and moreouer the foresayd persons thus picked out, do preach before they be sent, and presume to sow the seede, before the seede discreetely be seperate from the chaffe. Who not pondering the constitutions and decrees of the Canons, prouided for the same purpose agaynst suche pestilent sowers, do preferre sacrifice Diabolicall (so to terme it) before obedience be geuen to the holy Church militant

We therfore considering and weying,* that error which is not resisted, seemeth to be allowed, and hee that openeth hys bosome to wyde, whiche resisteth not the viper thinking there to thrust out her venome: And willing moreouer to shake off the dust from our feete, and to see to the honor of our holy mother Church, whereby one vniforme holye doctrine may be sowne and planted in the church of God, (namely in thys our prouince of Caunterbury) so much as is vs doth lye, to the encrease of fayth and seruice of God, first rooting the euill weedes and offenditles which by the meanes of peruerse preaching, mad doctrine, haue sprong vp hitherto, and are lyke more hereafter to grow: purposing by some conuenient way with all dilligence possible to withstand them in tyme, and to prouide for the perill of soules, whiche we see to ryse vnder pretence of the premisses: also to remoue al such obstacles, by which the sayd our purpose may be stopped, by the aduise and assent of all our Suffragans and other Prelates, being present in this our conuocation of the Clergie, as also of the procuratours of them that be absent: and at the instaunt petition of the procurators of the whole Clergie within this our prouince of Canterbury, for the more fortification of the common law in this part, adding thereunto punishment and penalties condigne as be here vnder written, we will and command ordayne and decree.

That no maner of person seculer or regular,* being authorised to preach by the lawes now prescribed, or licenced by special priuiledge: shal take vpon him the office of preaching the word of God, or by any meanes preach vnto the clergy or Laitie, either within the Church or without, in English, except he first present himselfe, and be examined of the Ordinary of the place where he preacheth. And so be ing found a fitte person, as well in maners as knowledge he shall be sent by the sayd Ordinary, to some one Church or more as shalbe thought expedient by the sayd Ordinary according to the quallitie of the person. Nor any person aforesayd shall presume to preach, except first he geue faythfull signification in due forme of his sending and authoritie, that is: That he that is authorised, doe come in forme appoynted him in that behalfe: and those that affirme they come by speciall priuiledge, do shew their priuiledge vnto the Parson or Vicare of the place where they preach. And those that pretend themselues to be sent by the ordinary of the place, shall likewise shew the Ordinaries letters made vnto hym for that purpose, vnder hys great seale. Let vs alwayes vnderstand, the Curate (hauing the perpetuities) to be sent of right vnto the people of his owne cure.* But if any person aforesayd, shalbe bidden by the ordinary of the place, or any other superiour to preach, by reason of his errors and heresies whiche before peradventure he hath preached and taught: that then and from thenceforth, he abstayne from preaching within our prouince: vntill he haue purged hymselfe, & be lawfully admitted agayne to preach by the iust arbitrement of him that suspended and forbad him. And shall alwaies after that, cary with hym to al places wheresoeuer he shall preach, the letters testimoniall of him that restored him.

Page 525 Moreouer, the Parish Priestes or Vicares temporall, not hauing perpetuities, nor being sent in forme aforesayd shall simply preach in y^t Churches where they haue charge onely those thinges whiche are expressly containyd in the prouinciall constitution set forth by Iohn our predecessour of good memory, to helpe y^t ignorance of the priests, which beginneth: Ignorantia Sacerdotum.* Which book of constitutions, we would should be had in euery parish Church in our prouince of Caunterbury, within three monthes next after the publication of these presentes, and (as therein is required) that it be effectually declared by y^t priestes themselues yearely, and at the tunes appoynted. And least thys wholesome statute might be thought hurtfull of some, by reason of payment of money, or some other difficultie: we therfore will & ordayne, that y^t examinations of the persōs aforesayd, and the making of theyr letters by the Ordinary be done gratis and freely without any exaction of money at all, by those to whome it shall appertayne. And if any man shall willingly presume to violate this our statute grounded vpon the old lawe, after the publication of the same: he shall incurre the sentence of greater excommunication ipso facto: whose absolution we specially reserue by tenoure of these presentes, to vs and our successours. But if anye such Preacher despising this wholsome Statute, and not weying the sentence of greater excommunication doe the secōd time take vpon hym to preach: saying and alledging, and stoutly affirming that the sentence of greater excommunication aforesaid, cannot be appoynted by the Church in the persons of the Prelates of the same: That then, the Superiours of the place, doe worthely rebuke him, and forbid him from the Communion of all faythfull Christians.

And that the sayde person hereupon lawfully conuicted (except he recant and abiure after the maner of y^t Church) be pronounced an hereticke by the Ordinary of the place. And that from thenceforth he be reputed and taken for an hereticke and schismaticke, and that he incurre (ipso facto) the penalties of heresie and schismacie, expressed in the law: And chiefly that his goodes be adiudged confiscate by the law, and apprehended and kept by them, to whome it shal appertayne. And that hys fauours, receiuers, & defenders being conuicted, in all cases be likewise punished, if they cease not of within one month, being lawfully warned therof by theyr superiours.

*Furthermore, no clergy man, or parochians of any parish or place within our prouince of Cant. shall admit any man to preach w^tin their Churches, churchyardes or other places whatsoever, except first there be manifest knoweledge had of his authoritie, priuiledge, or sending thither, according to the order aforesayd: Otherwise the Churche, churchyarde, or what place whatsoever, in whiche it was so preached, shal ipso facto, receiue y^e Ecclesiasticall interdict & so shall remayne interdicted, vntill they that so admitted and suffered him to preach, haue reformed themselues, and obtayned y^e place so interdicted, to be released in due forme of law, either frō the Ordinary of y^e place, or his superiour.

*Moreouer, like as a good housholder casteth wheat into the ground (well ordered for that purpose) therby to get the more encrease: euen so we wil and commaund, that the preacher of Gods word, * comming in form aforesayd, preaching eyther vnto the Clergy or Laity, according to hys matter proponed: shalbe of good behauour, sowing such seed as shalbe cōuenient for his auditory. And chiefly preaching to the Clergie, he shall touche the vices commonly vsed amongst them, and to the Laitie he shall declare the vices commonly vsed among them, and not otherwise: But if he preach contrary to this order, then shall he be sharply punished by the ordenary of that place, according to the quallitie of that offence.

Item, for as much as the part is vile, that agreeth not with the whole: * we do decree and ordayn, y^e no preacher aforesayd, or any other person whatsoever, shall otherwise teach or preach concerning the sacramēt of the aulter, matrimony, confession of sinnes, or any other sacrament of the Church, or article of the fayth, then that already is discussed by the holy mother Churche, nor shall bring anye thing in doubt y^e is determined by the church: * nor shal to his knowledg^e priuily or apertly pronounce blasphemous wordes concerning the same, nor shall teach, preach, or obserue any sect, or kinde of heresie whatsoever, contrary to the wholesome doctrine of the Church. He that shall wittingly & obstinately attempt the contrary, after the publication of these presentes, shall incur the sentence of excommunication ipso facto: From the which (except in poynt of death) he shal not be absolved, vntill he hath reformed himselfe by abiuration of his heresie, at the discretion of the Ordinary, in who^e territory he so offeded, and hath receiued wholsome penitence for his offences. But if the second tyme he shall so offend, being lawfully conuicted, he shalbe pronounced an hereticke, & his goods confiscate and apprehended, and kept by them to whome it shall appertayne. The penance before mentioned, shalbe after this manner: If anye man contrary to the determination of the Church, that is, in p^r decrees, decretals, or our constitutions prouinciall, doe openly or priuily teach or preach any kinde of heresie or secte he shall in the parish Church of the same place, where he so preached, vpon one sonday, or other solemne day, or more, at the discretion of the ordinary, and as his offence is more or lesse, expressly reuoke that he so preached, taught or affirmed, euen at the time of the solemnitic of the masse, whē the people are most assembled, and there shall effectually and without fraud preach, and teach the very truth determined by the church: and further shalbe punished after the quallitie of hys offence, as shalbe thought expedient to the discretion of the Ordinary.

Item, * for as much as a new vessell being long vsed, fauoreth after the head, we decree and ordayn, that no scholemaisters and teachers what soeuer, that instruct childrē in grammer, * or others whō so euer, in primitiue sciences shal in teaching them, intermingle any thing concerning y^e catholicke rayth, the sacrament of the aulter, or other Sacramentes of the Church, contrary to the determinations of y^e church. Nor shall suffer theyr schollers to expound the holy Scriptures, (except the text as hath bene vsed of auncient time,) nor shal permit them to dispute openly or priuily concerning the catholicke fayth, or Sacramentes of the Churche. Contrariwise, the offender herein shalbe greuously punished by the Ordinary of the place, as a fauourer o• errors and schismes.

Item,* for that a new way doth more frequently leade a stray, then an old way: we will and commaunde that no booke or treatise made by Iohn Wickliffe, or other whom soeuer, about that time or sithence, or hereafter to be made: be from henceforth read in schooles, halles, hospitalles, or other places whatsoever, within our prouince of Canterbury aforesayd,* except the same be first examined by the vniuersitie of Oxford or Cambridge, or at the last by twelue persons, whom the sayd vniuersities or one of the shal appoynt to be chosen at our discretion, or the laudable discretion of our predecessours: and the same being examined as aforesayd, to be expresly approued and allowed by vs or our successours, and in the name and authoritie of the vniuersitie, to be deliuered vnto the Stationers to be copyed out, and the same to be sold at a reasonable price, the originall therof alwaies after, to remayn in some chest of y^t vniuersitie. But if any man shall read any such kynd of booke in schooles or otherwise, as aforesayd: he shalbe punished as a sower offchisme, and a fauourer of heresie, as the qualitie or the fault shall require.

Item,* it is a daungerous thinge (as witnesseth blessed S. Hierome) to translate the text of the holy scripture out of one tongue into an other: for in the translation the same sense is not alwayes easily kept, as the same S. Ierome confesseth,* that although he were inspired, yet oftentimes in this he erred. We therefore decree and ordayne, that no man hereafter by his owne authoritie, translate any text of the Scripture into English, or any other tongue, by way of a booke, libell, or treatise, and if no man read anye suche booke libell or treatise, nowe lately set foorth in the time of Iohn Wickliffe, or sithence, or hereafter to be set forth, in part or in whole, priuily, or apertly: vpon paine of greater excommunication, vntill the said translation be allowed by the Ordinary of the place, or (if the case so require) by the Councell prouinciall: He that shall do contrary to this shal likewise be punished as a fauourer of error & heresie.

Item,* for that almighty God cannot be expressed with any Philosophicall termes, or otherwise inuented of man: And S. Augustine faith, That he hath oftentimes reuoked such conclusions as hath bene most true, because they haue bene offensiue to the eares of the religious: we doe ordeine and specially forbid, that no maner o• person, of what state degree,* or condition, so euer he be, doe allege or propone any conclusions or propositions in y^t catholicke fayth, or repugnant to good manners, (except necessary doctrine pertayning to theyr facultie of teaching or disputing in theyr schooles or otherwise) although they defend the same with neuer so curious termes and wordes. For as sayth blessed S. Hugh of the Sacramentes, that whiche oftentimes is well spoken, is not well vnderstood. If any man therefore after the publication of these presents, shalbe conuict wittingly to haue proponed such conclusions or propositions, except (being monished) he reforme himselfe in one month by vertue of this present constitution: He shall incur the sentence of greater excommunication ipso facto, and shalbe openly pronounced an excommunicate, vntill he hath confessed Page 526 his fault openly in the same place where he offended, and hath preached the true meaning of the sayd conclusion or proposition in one church or more, as shalbe thought ex^pedient to the Ordinary.

Item, no manner of person shall presume to dispute vpon y^t articles determined by y^t church,* as is cōtayned in the decrees, decretals, our constitutions prouinciall, or in the general Councils. But onely to seek out the true meaning therof, & that expressly, whether it be openly or in secret: * nor none shal cal in doubt the authoritie of the said decretals or constitutions, or the authoritie of him that made thē, nor teach any thing contrary to y^t determination therof: And chiefly concerning the adoration of the holy crosse the worshipping of Images, of sayntes, going on pilgrimage to certayne places, or to the reliques of saintes, or agaynst y^t othes in cases accustomed to be geuen in both cōmon places, that is to say, spirituall & temporall: But of al it shalbe commonly taught and preached, that the crosse & Image of the Crucifixe, and other Images of Saynts in the honour of them whom they present, * are to be worshipped with procession, bowing of knees, offring of frankincense, kissinges, oblations, lighting of candel, and pilgrimages, * and with all other kind of ceremonyes and manners that hath bene vsed in the time of our predecessoures: And that geuing of othes in cases expressed in the law, and vsed of all men to whome it belongeth in both common places, ought to be done vpon the booke of the Gospell of Christ. Contrarye vnto this who so euer doth preache, teache, or obstinately affirme (except he recant in manner and forme aforesayd) shall forthwith incurre the penaltie of heresie, and shalbe pronounced an heretique, in all effect of law.

*Item, we doe decree and ordaine, that no chaplayne be admitted to celebrate in any dioces within our prouince of Caunterbury, where he was not borne, or not receaued orders: * except hee bring with him hys letters of orders, & letters commendatory from his ordinary, and also from other Bishops in whose dioces of a long lyme he hath ben conuersaunt, whereby his conuersation and maners may appeare: So that it may be knowne, whether he hath bene detained with any new opiniōs touching y^t catholick faith or whether he be free from the same: otherwise, as well he that celebrateth as he that suffereth him to celebrate, shalbe sharply punished at the discretion of the Ordinary.

Finally, because those things which newly and vnaccustomably excepth vp, * standeth need of new and speedy helpe: and where more daunger is, there ought to be more mary circumspection and stronger resistance, & and not •out good cause: y^t lesse noble ought discretly to be cut away that the more noble may the more perfectly be nourished Considering therefore, and in lamentable wise shewing vnto you, how the auncient Uniuersitie of Oxford, which as a fruitful vine was wont to extēd forth her fruitful brāches to the honour of God, * the great perfection, and defēce of the Church: now partly being become wilde, bringeth forth bitter grapes, which being vndiscreetly eaten of auncient fathers that thought themselues skilfull in the law of God: hath set on edge y^t teeth of their childrē: and our prouince is infected with diuers and vnfruitfull doctrines, and defiled with a new & damnable name of Lollardie, to the great reproofe and offence of the sayd Uniuersitie being known in forren countryes: & to the great irkesomnes of the studentes there, and to the great damage and losse of the Church of England, which in times past by her vertue as with a strong wall, was wont to be defended, and now like to runne in ruine not to be recouered. At the supplication therfore of y^t whole clergie of our prouince of Cāterbury: and by the consent and assent of all our brethren & suffragans: and other the prelates in this conuocation assembled, and the proctors of them that are absent: least the riuer being clensed: the fountayne should remayne corrupt and so the water comming from thence should not be pure entending most holesomly to prouide for the honour and vtilitie of our holy mother the Church and the vniuersitie moresayd. We do ordeine and decree: that euery warden, Prouost: or maister of euery College, or principall of euery hall w^hin the vniuersitie aforesayd: shall once euery moneth at y^t least, diligently enquire in the sayd College, hall, or other place where he hath authoritie, whether anye scholler or inhabitant in such colledge, or hall. &c. haue holdē, alleaged, or defended,* or by any meanes proponed, any conclusion proposition or opinion concerning the catholick faith or sounding contrary to good maners, or contrary to the determination of the Church, otherwise then appertayneth to necessary doctrine. And if hee shall finde anye suspected or diffamed herein, he shall according to his office admonish him to desiste. And if after such monition geuen, the sayde partye offende agayne in the same or suche like, hee shall incurre ipso facto (besides the penalties aforesayd) the sentence of greater excommunication. And neuerthelesse, if it be a scholier that so offendeth the second tyme, whatsoever he shall afterward doe in the sayd vniuersitie, shall not stand in effect. And if he be a doctour, a maister, or bacheller, he shall sorth with be suspended frō euery schollers act, and in both cases shal lose the right that he hath in the said College or hall, wherof he is, Ipso facto: and by the warde: Prouost, Maister, principall, or other to whō it appertayneth, he shalbe expelled,* & a Catholique, by lawful meanes forth with placed in his place. And if the sayd wardens, Prouostes or Maisters of Colledges or principalles of halles, shalbe negligent concerning the inquisition and execution of such persons suspected and diffamed by y^t space of x. dayes, frō the time of the true or supposed knowledge of y^t publication of these presentes: y^t then they shal incurre y^t sentence of greater excommunication: and neuerthelesse shalbe depriued ipso facto, of all the right which they pretēd to haue in y^e colledges, halles &c. and the sayd Colledges & halles &c. to be effectually vacant: And after lawfull declaration hereof made by them to whom it shall appertayne, new wardens, Prouostes, Maisters, or principals, shalbe placed in they, places, as hath ben accustomed in colledges and halles, being vacant in the sayd vniuersitie. But if the wardens themselues, Prouostes, Maisters or principals aforesayd, be suspected and diffamed of and concerning the sayd conclusions or propositions, or be fauourers & defenders of such as doe therein offend: and doe not cease, beyng therof warned by vs, or by our authoritie: or by y^e ordinary of the place: that then by law they be depriued, as well of all priuiledge scholasticall within the vniuersitie aforesayd, as also of their right and authoritie in such Colledge, hall, &c. Besides other penalties afore mentioned, and that they incurre the sayd sentence of greater excommunication.

But if any man in any case of this present cōstitution or any other aboue expressed,* do rashly and wilfully presume to violate these our statutes in any part thereof (although there be an other penalty expressly there limited) yee shal he be made altogether vnable and vnworthy by the spare of three yeares after, without hope of pardon to obtayn any ecclesiasticall benefice within our prouince of Caunterbury: and neuertheles according to all hys demerites and the quallitie of hys excesse, at the discretion of his superiour he shalbe lawfully punished.

And further, that y^e maner of proceeding herein be not thought vncertayne: considering with ourselues,* that although there be a kinde of equallitie in the crime of heresie and offending the prince, as is auouched in diuers lawes: yet the fault is much vnlike, and to offend the deuine maiestie requireth greater punishment, then to oftend y^e Princes maiesty. And where it is sufficient (for feare of daunger that might ensue by delayes) to conuince by iudgement the offender of the Princes maiesties proceeding agaynst hym fully & wholly,* with a citation sent by messenger, by letters, or edict not admitting prooffe by witnesses, and sentēce definitiue to be: we do ordeine, will, and declare, for the easier punishment of the offēders in the premisses, and for the better reformation of the church deuided and hurt, that all such as are diffamed, openly knowne, or vehemētly suspected in any of the cases aforesayd, or in anye article of the catholicke fayth sounding contrary to good manners: by authoritie of the ordinary of the place or other superior, be cited personally to appeare, cyther by letters, publique messenger being sworne: or by edicte openly set at that place where the sayd offender commonly remayneth, or in hys parish Church, if he hath any certayne dwelling house. Otherwise, in y^e Cathedrall church of the place where he was borne, and in the parish church of the same place where he so preached and taught: And afterwarde certificate beyng geuen, that the citation was formally executed agaynst the party cited being absent and neglecting hys appearaunce it shalbe proceeded agaynst him fully and playnly without sound or shew of iudgement, and without admitting prooffe by witnesses and other canonicall probations. And also after lawful informatiō had, the sayd ordinary (al delays set apert) shall signifie declare, and punishe the sayd offender, according to the quallitie of his offence, and in forme aforesayd: and further, shall doe according to iustice, the absence of the offender notwithstanding.

Geuen at Oxford.

Who would haue thought by these lawes and constitutions so substantially founded, so circumspectly provided, so dilligently executed: but that the name and memory of this persecuted sort, should vtterly haue bene rooted vp, Page 527 & neuer could haue stand. And yet such be the works of th^e lord, passing all mēs admiratiō, all this notwithstanding so far was it of, that the number and courage of these good men was vanquished, that rather they multiplied dayly & encreased. For so I finde in Registers recorded, that these foresayd persons, whome the king and the Catholique fathers, did so greatly deteste for heretickes, were in diuers countries of this realme dispersed and increased: especially at London, in Lincolnshire in Northfolk, in Herefordshyre, in Shreusbury, in Callice, and diuers other quarters mo, with whom the Archb. of Caunterbury Thomas Arundell, the same time had much ado, as by hys own registers doth appeare. Albeit some there were, that dyd shrinke, many did reuolt and renounce, for daunger of the law. Among whom was Iohn Puruey, whiche recanted at Paules Crosse,* of whom more foloweth (the Lord willing) to be said in the yeare 1421. Also Iohn Edward priest of the dioces of Lincolne, who reuoked in the greene yard at Norwich, Richard Herbert, and Emmot Willy of Lōdon, also Iohn Becket, who recanted at London. Item, Iohn Seynons of Lincolneshyre, who was caused to reuoke at Caunterbury. The articles of whom which commonly they did hold, and which they were constraigned to abiure, most specially were these as follow.

Their Articles.

*First, that the office of the holy Crosse (ordayned by the whole Church) celebrated, doth contayne idolatry.

Item, they sayd and affirmed, that all they which doe reuerence and worship the signe of the crosse, do commit idolatry, and are reputed as Idolaters.

Item, they sayd and affirmed, that the true fleshe and bloud of our Lord Iesus Christ, is not in the sacrament of the aulter, after the words spoken by the priest truely pronounced.

Item, they sayd and affirmed, the sacrament of the aulter to be sacramentall bread, not hauing life, but onely instituted for a memoriall of Christes passion.

Item, they sayd and affirmed, that the body of Christe which is taken on the aulter, is a figure of y^t body of christ as long as we see the bread and wyne.

Item: they sayd and affirmed, that the decree of the prelates and clergie in the prouince of Caunterbury, in theyr last conuocation, with the consent of the king and the nobles in the last Parliament agaynst him that was brent lately in the citty of London: was not sufficient to chaunge the purpose of the sayd Iohn, when the substance of materiall bread is euen as before in the sacrament of the aulter, it was no change being made in the nature of bread.

1* Item, that any lay man may preach the Gospel in euery place, and may teach it by his owne authoritie, without the licence of his Ordinary.

Itē, that it is sinne: to geue any thing to the preaching friers: to the Minorites, to the Augustines, to the Carmelites.

Item, that we ought not to offer at the funerals of the dead.

Item, that the confession of sins to the people, is vnneedfull.

Item, that euery good man (though he be vnlearned) is a priest.

Item, that the infant (though he dye vnbaptised) shalbe saued.

Item, that neither the pope, nor the prelate, neither any ordinary can compell any man to sweare by any creature of God, or by the bible booke.

Item, that as well the Bishop, the simple man, the priest, and the lay man, be of like authoritie (as lōg as they liue well.)

Item, that no man is bound to geue bodily reuerence to any prelate.

William Thorpe.

*Thus much briefly being signified by the way, touching these which haue bene forced in time of this king, to open abiuration: Next commeth to our handes the worthy history of maister William Thorpe, a warriour valiaunt, vnder the triumphant banner of Christ, with the processe of his examinations, before the foresayd Thomas Arundell Archbishop of Caunterb. written by the sayd Thorpe and storyed by his owne pen, at the request of hys frendes as by hys own words in the processe here of may appeare. In whole examination (whiche seemeth first to begin. an. 1407.) thou shalt haue, good reader, both to learne and to merueile. To learne, in that thou shalt beare truth discoursed and discussed, with the contrary reasons of the aduersary dissolued. To marueile, for that thou shalt beholde here in this man, the merueilous force and strength of the Lordes might, spirite and grace, working and fighting in his souldiors, & also speaking in theyr mouthes, according to the word of hys promise. Luke xxi. To the rest of the sto^ry we haue neither added nor diminished: but as we haue receiued it, * copied out, & corrected by maister Williā Tindall (who had his own handwriting) so we haue here sent it, and set it out abroad.

Although for the more credite of the matter, I rather wished it in his own naturall speach wherein it was first written. Notwithstanding, to put away all doubt and scrouple herein, this I thought before to premonishe and testifie to the Reader, touching the certaintie hereof, that they be yet aliue whiche haue seene the selfe same copy in his own old English, resembling y^e true antiquitie both of the speach, and of the time: The name of whom as for recorde of the same to auouch, is M. Whithead, who as he hath seene the true ancient copy in the hādes of George Constantine, so hath he geuen credible relation of y^e sonne, both to the printer, & to me. Furthermore the sayd maister Tindall (albeit he did somewhat alter & amend the English therof, and frame it after our manner) yet not fully in al words: but that something doth remain, fauouring of the old speach of that time. What the causes were why this good man & seruauant of Christ, W. Thorp did write it• and pen it out himselfe, it is sufficiently declared in hys owne preface, set before his booke, whiche here is prefixed in maner as followeth.

The preface of William Thorpe.

THE Lord God that knoweth all thinges,* wroth well that I am right sorrowful for to write to make known this sentence beneath written: whereby of mine euē christē set in high state & dignitie, so great blindnes & malice may be knowne: that they which doe presume of themselues to destroy vices, and to plant in men vertues, neither dreade to offend God,* nor lust to please him as their workes doe shew. For certes the bidding of God and hys law, whiche in the praying of his most holy name he commaundeth to be known & kept of all men and women, yong and old, after the cunning & power that he hath geuen to them: The Prelates of this lande and their ministers, w^t the couent of priests chiefly consenting to them, enforce them most busily to withstand and destroy the holy ordinaunce of God. And there through, God is greatly wroth and moued to take hard vengeance, not onely vpon them that do the euil but also on them that consent to these Antichristes limnes: which know or might know, their malice and falshood, & dresse them not to withstand their mallice and theyr great pride.* Neuertheles, 4. things moueth me to write this sētence beneath.

The first thing that moueth me hereto is this, y^t where as it was knowne to certayn frendes, that I came from y^t prison of Shrewsbury, and as it befell in deed that I shold to the prison of Caunterbury: thē diuers friends in diuers places, spake to me full hartily and full tenderly: and commaunded me then, if it so were that I should be examined before the Archb. of Cant. that if I might in any wise, I should write mine apposing, and mine aunswering. And I promised to my special frendes, that if I might, I wold gladly doe their bidding as I might.

The second thing that moueth me to write this sentēce* is this: diuers frendes which haue heard that I haue bene examined before the Archbyshop, haue come to me in prison, and counsayled mee busily, and coueted greatly that I should doe the same thing. And other brethren haue sent to me, and required on Gods behalfe, that I should write out and make knowne, both mine apposing & mine aunswering, for the profite that (as they say) vpon my knowledging, may come thereof. But this they had me, that I should be busie in all my wits, to go as neare the sentence and the wordes as I could, both that were spoken to me & that I spake: Upauēture this writing may come an other time, before the archbishop and hys counsaile. And of thys counselling I was right glad: for in my conscience I was moued to doe this thing, & to aske hitherto the speciall help of God. And so then I considering the great desire of dyuers frendes of sondry places, according all in one: I occupied all my minde & my wits so busily, that through gods grace I perceaued by theyr meaning and their charitable desire, some profite might come there through. For southfastnes and trueth hath these conditions: where euer it is impugned,* it hath asweete smell, and thereof commeth a sweet fauour. And the more violently the enemies dresse themselues to oppresse and to withstand the trueth, the Page 528 greater and the sweeter smell commeth therof. And therefore, this heauenly find of Gods word, wil not as a smoke passe away with the winde: but it will descende and rest in some cleane soule, that thirsteth thereafter. And thus some deale by this writing may be perceaued thorough Gods grace, how that the enemies of the trueth (standing boldly in their malice) inforce them to withstand the fredome of Christes Gospell, for which freedome Christ became man & shed his hart bloud. And therefore it is great pitty & sorrow: y^t many men & women do their own weyward will nor busy thē not to know nor to do y^t pleasant wil of God.

The men & women that heare the truth and southfastnes, and heare or know of this (perceauing what is now in y^r churche) ought here through, to be the more moued in all their wits, to able them to grace, & to set lesser price by themselues, that they without ta•ieng: forsake wilfully & bodely all the wretchednes of this life, since they know not how soon, nor whē, nor where, nor by whō God wil teach them, & assay their pacience. For no doubt, who that euer will liue pittiously, that is charitably in Christ Iesu, shall suffer now here in this life persecution, in one wife or an o^ther. That is, if we shalbe sauēd, it behoueth vs to imagin ful busily: the vility and soulnes of sinne, and how y^r Lord God is displeased therfore: & so of this vility of bidiousnes of sinne, it behoueth vs to busy vs in al our wits, for to ab^horre and hold in our mind a great shame of sinne euer, & so then we owe to sorrow hartely therfore, and euer fleing all occasion therof. And then behoueth vs to take vpon vs sharpe penāce, continuing therin, for to obtayne of y^t Lord forgeuenes of our foredone sinnes, and grace to abstain vs hereafter from sinne. And but if we enforce vs to do thys wilfully: and in conueniēt time, the Lord (if he will not vtterly destroy and cast vs away) will in diuers manners moue tyrantes agaynst vs: for to constrayne vs violently to do penance,* which we would not do wilfully. And trust that this doing is a special grace of the Lord, & a great token of life & mercy. And no doubt, who euer will not apply him selfe (as is sayd before) to punish himself wilfully, neither wil suffer patiently, meekely, and gladly the rod of the Lord, howsoeuer that he will punish him: their wayward willes and their impacience, are vnto them earnest of euelasting damnation. But because there are but few in number that do able them thus faythfully to grace, for to liue here so simply and purely, and without gall of malice and of grudging: herefore the louers of this worlde hate & pursue them that they knowe patient, meek, chaste, & wilfully poore, hating and fleing all worldly vanities & fleshly lusts. For surely, their verteous conditions are euen cōtrary to the manners of this world.

The third thing that moueth me to wryte this sentēce is this, I thought I shall busie me in my selfe to do faythfully, that all men and women (occupying all their busines in knowing and in keeping of Gods commaundements) able them so to grace, that they might vnderstād truely the truth, and haue and vse vertue and prudēce, and so deserue to be lightned from aboue with heauenly wisdom: so that all their words & their workes may be hereby made pleasant sacrifice vnto the Lord God: and not onely for helpe of their own soules, but also for edification of holy Church For I doubt not: but all they that will apply them to haue this foresayd busines, shall profite ful me kill both to freds & foes. For some enemies of the truth, through the grace of God, shall through charitable folkes be made astonied in their conscience, and peradventure conuerted from vices to vertues: and also, they that labour to know and to keep faythfully the biddinges of God, and to suffer paciently all aduersities, shall hereby comfort many frendes.

And the fourth thing that moueth me to write this sētēce is this: ^{} I knowe by my sodein & vnwarned apposing and aunswering, that all they that will of good hart w^tout faining, able themselues wilfully & gladly after theyr cunning and their power, to follow christ paciently, traueling busily, priuily, and apertly in worke and in word, to withdraw whom soeuer that they may from vices, planting in them (if the may) vertues, comforting them & furtheryng them that stand in grace: so that therwith they be not born vp in vaine glory, through presumption of theyr wisdom nor inflamed with any worldly prosperitie: but euer meek and pacient: purposing to abide stedfastly in y^t wil of God, suffering wilfully and gladly without any grutching what soeuer rod the Lord wil chastise them with: that then, thys good Lord will not forget to comfort al such men and women in all their tribulations, & at euery poynt of temptation that any enemy purposed for to doe agaynst them. To such faithfull louers specially, & pacient followers of christ the Lord sendeth by his wisdom frō aboue, them which the aduersaries of the truth, may not know nor vnderstand. But through their old and new vnshamefast sinnes, those tyrantes and enemies of southfastnes, ^{} shalbe so blinded & obstinate in e•ill, that they shall weene themselues to doe pleasant sacrifices vnto the Lorde God in their malicious and wrongfull pursuing and destroying of innocent mens and womens bodyes: which men & women, for theyr vertuous liuing, and for their true knowledging of the trueth and theyr pacient wilfull and glad suffering of persecution for righteousnes, deserue through the grace of God, to be heyres of the endlesse blesse of heauen. And for the feruent desire and the great loue that these men haue, as to stand in southfastnes and witnes of it: though they be sodeinly & vnwarnedly brought foorth to be aposed of their aduersaries: the holy Ghost yet that moueth and ruleth them thorough his charitie, will in that houre of theyr aunswering speake in them and shewe hys wisdom: that all theyr enemies shall not agayn say, nor agaynst stand, lawfully.

And therefore, al they that are stedfast in y^r fayth of God yea, which through diligent keeping of his commaundementes, & for theyr pacient suffering of whatsoeuer aduersitie that commeth to them, hope surely in his mercy, purposing to stand cōtinually in perfect charitie. For those mē and womē, dred not so the aduersities of this life, that they wil feare (after their cunning and their power) to knoweledge prudently the truth of gods word, when, where, and to whom they thinke their knowledging may profite. Yea and though therfore persecution come to them in one wise or an other, certes they paciently take it, knowing theyr conuersation to be in heauen. It is an high rewarde and a speciall grace of God: for to haue and enioy the euerlasting inheritance of heauen, for the suffering of one persecution in so short time as is the terme of this life. For loe, this heuenly heritage & endles reward: is the Lord God hymselfe which is the best thing that may be. This sētence witnesseth the Lord God hymselfe where as he sayd to Abrahā I am thy meede: And as the Lord sayd: he was and is the meede of Abraham: so he is of all his other saynts. This most blessed and best meede, he graunt to vs all for his holy name, that made vs of naught, and sent his onely most deare worthy sonne, our Lorde Iesu Christ for to redeeme vs with his most precious hart bloud. Amen.

The examination of William Thorpe, penned with hys owne hand.

KNowne be it to al men,* that read or heare this writing that on the sonday next after the feast of S. Peter: that we call Lammesse: in the yeare of our Lord. 1407. I william Thorpe being in prison in the Castle of Saltwoode, was brought before Tho. Arundel Archbishop of Canterbury and Chauncellor then of Englande. And when that I came to him: he stode in a great chamber and much people about him: and when that he saw me, he went fast into a closit bidding all seculer men y^t followed hym to go foorth from him soone, so that no man was left than in that closet but the Archbishop himselfe and a Phisitian y^t was called Malueren, person of S. Dunstanes in London, & other two persons vnknowne to me which were ministers of y^r law. And I standing before them, by and by the Archbish. sayd to me: William, I know well that thou hast this xx. winters & more, trauelled about busily in the north coutry and in other diuers countryes of England,* sowing about false doctrine, hauing great businesse if thou might with thine vntrue teaching and shrewd will, for to infect & poysō all this land. But through the grace of God thou art now withstanded & brought into my ward, so that I shall now sequester thee from thine euill purpose, and let thee to enuenime the sheep of my prouince. Neuertheles S. Paul sayth: If it may be, as much as in vs is, we ought to haue peace w^t all men. Therefore William, if y^r wilt now meckly and of good hart, without any feyning, kneele downe and lay thy hand vpō a booke and kisse it,* promising faythfully as I shall here charge thee, y^t thou wilt submit thee to my correction, & stād to myne ordinaunce, & fulfill it duely by all thy cūning and power, thou shalt yet find me gracious vnto thee. Then sayd I to the archbishop. Syr, since ye deme me an hereticke & out of beleue, will ye geue me here audience to tell my beleue. And he sayd, yea tell on. And I sayde. I beleue that there is not but one God almighty, and in this Godhead, and of this Godhead, are three persons, that is, the father, the sonne, and the sothfast holye Ghost. And I beleue, that all these three persons are euen in power and in cunning, and in might, full of grace and of all goodnes. For what soeuer that the father doth or can or will, that thing also the sonne doth and can and will: and in all theyr power, cunning and will, the holy Ghost is equall to the father and to the sonne.

Page 529ouer this I beleue, that through counsell of this most blessed Trinity, in most cōuenient time before ordeined for the saluation of mankinde, the second person of this Trini^ty; was ordeined to take the forme of mā, that is, the kinde of mā. And I beleue, that this secōd person our Lord Iesu Christ, was conceiued through the holy ghost, in y^e wombe of the most blessed virgin Mary, without mans seed. And I beleue, that after 9. monethes Christ was borne of this most blessed virgine, without any payne or breaking of the closser of her wombe, and without filth of her virginity.

And I beleue, that Christ our Sauour was Circumcise• in the eight day after his birth, in fulfilling of the law, and his name was called Iesus, which was so called of y^e Angel, before that he was conceiued in the wombe of Mary his mother.

And I beleue, that Christ, as he was about xxx. yeare olde, was Baptised in the floud of Iordane of Iohn Baptist: and in the likenes of a Doue the holy Ghost descēded there vpon him, & a voyce was heard from heauen, saying: Thou are my welbeloued sonne, in thee I am full pleased.

And I beleue, that Christ, was moued then by the holy ghost, for to go into desert, and there he fasted 40 dayes & 40. nightes without bodely meat and drink. And I beleue that by and by after his fasting, when the manhood of christ hūgred, the fiend came to him, and tempted him in glottony, in vayne glory, and in courtise: but in all those temptations, Christ concluded the fiend, and withstood him. And then without taryng, Iesu began to preach and to say vnto the people: do ye penance, for the Realme of heauen is now at hand.

I beleue that Christ in all his time here liued most holity, and taught the will of his father most truly: and I beleue that he suffered therefore, most wrongfully, greatest reprints and despisinges.

And after this,* when Christ woulde make an end here of this rēporal life, I beleue that in the day next before that he would suffer passiō in the morne: In forme of bread and of wine, he ordeined the Sacrament of his flesh and hys bloud, that is, his owne precious body, & gaue it to his Apostles for to eat: cōmaunding them, and by them all their after commers, that they should do it in this forme that he shewed to them, vse themselues, and teach and comō forth to other men and womē this most worshipfull holiest sacrament, in mindfulnes of his holiest liuing, & of his most true preaching, & of his wilfull and patient suffering of the most paynefull passion.

And I beleue, that thys Christ our Sauour, after that he had ordeined this most worthy Sacrament of his own precious body: he wēt forth wilfully agaynst his enemies, and he suffered them most patiently to lay their hands most violently vpō him, and to binde him, and to lead him forth as a theefe, & to scorne him, and buffet him, and all to blow or file him with their spittings. Ouer this, I beleue, that Christ suffered most meekly and patiently his enemies, for to ding out with sharp scourges the bloud y^t was betwene his skinne and his flesh: yea without grudging Christ suffered the cruell Iewes to crowne him with most sharpe thornes, and to strike him with a reede. And after, Christ suffered wicked Iewes to draw him out vpon the crosse, & for to naye him thereupon hand and foote. And so through his pitifull nayling, Christ shed out wilfully for mans life, the bloud that was in his vaynes. And then Christ gaue wilfully his spirit into y^e hāds or power of his father, & so, as he would, & whē he would, christ died wilfully for mās sake vpon the crosse. And notwithstanding that Christ was wilfully, paynefully, & most shamefully put to death, as to the world: there was left bloud and water in his hart as before ordeined, that he would shedd out this bloud & this water for mās saluation. And therefore he suffred y^e Iewes to make a blinde knight to thrust him into the hart with a speare, and this the bloud and water that was in his hart, Christ would shed out formans loue, And after this, I be^lleue that Christ was taken downe from the crosse and buried. And I beleue that on the third day by power of hys Godhead, Christ rose againe from death to life. And the xl. day thereafter, I beleue that Christ ascēded vp into heauen and that he there sitteth on the right hand of the father almighty. And the fifty day after this vp going, he sēt to hys Apostles the holy ghost, that he had promised them before. And I beleue that Christ shall come & iudge all mankind; some to euerlasting peace, and some to euerlasting paines.

And as I beleue in the father & in the sonne, that they are one God almighty, so I beleue in the holy Ghost that he is also with them the same God almighty.

And I beleue an holy church, that is, all they that haue bene,* and that now are, & alwayes to the end of the worlde shalbe, a people the which shall endeouour them to know & to keepe the commaundements of God, dreading ouer all thing to offed God, and louing and seeking most to please him. And I beleue, that all they that haue had & yet haue, and all they that yet shall haue the foresayd vertues, surely standing in the belief of God, hoping stedfastly in his mercyfull doinges, continuing to theyr end in perfect charitye, wilfully, paciently and gladly suffering persecutiōs, by the example of Christ chieflye and his Apostles, all these haue theyr names written in the booke of life.

Therefore I beleue,* that the gathering together of this people, liuing now here in this life, is the holy Church of God, fighting here on earth agaynst the fiend, the prosperi^ty of the world, and theyr fleshly lusts. Wherefore, seing that all the gathering together of this Church before sayd, and euery part therof, neither coueteth, nor willeth, nor loueth, nor seketh any thing but to eschew y^r offēce of God, & to do his pleasing will: meekly, gladly, and wilfully, w^t all mine hart, I submit my selfe vnto this holy Church of Christ, to be euer buxome & obedient to y^r ordinaūce of it, & of euery member therof; after my knowledge and power by y^e help of God. Therefore I knowledge now and euermore shal, if God will, that with all my hart and with all my might, I wil submit me onely to the rule and gouernaunce of them, whō after my knowledge, I may perceiue by the hauing and vsing of the before sayd vertues, to be members of the holy Church. Wherefore these articles of belief and al other (both of the olde law and of the new, which after the commaundement of God any man ought to beleue) I beleue verely in my soule, as a sinful deadly wretch of my cunning and power, ought to beleue: praying the Lord God for his holy name, for to encrease my beliefe, and to helpe my vnbeliefe.

And for because to the praying of Gods name, I desire aboue all things to be a faithfull mēber of holy church,* I make this protesta^o before you all foure that are now here present, couering that all men & women that now be absent, knew the same: that is, what thing so euer before this time I haue sayde or done, or what thing here I shall doe or say, at any time hereafter.* I beleue, that all the olde law and the new law geuen and ordeined by the couēsell of the three persons of the Trinity, were geuen and written to the saluatiō of mankind. And I beleue, that these lawes are sufficient for mans saluation. And I beleue euery article of these lawes, to the intent, that these articles ordeined and commaunded of these 3 persons of the most blessed trinity, are to be beleued.

And therefore to y^r rule & the ordinaunce of these, Gods lawes, meekely, gladly and wilfully, I submit me with all mine hart: that whosoever can or will by authority of gods lawe, or by open reason, tell me that I haue erred or nowe erre, or any time hereafter shall erre in any article of beliefe (from which inconuenience God keepe me, for hys goodnesse) I submit me to be reconciled and to be buxum & obedient vnto those lawes of God, and to euery article of thē. For by authority, specially of these lawes, I will, thorow the grace of God, be vntied charitably vnto these lawes. Yea sir, & ouer this, I beleue & admit all the sentēces, authorities and reasōs of the saynts & doctors, according vnto holy scripture, and declaring it truely.

I submit me wilfully and meekely to be euer obedient after my cunning and power,* to all these saynts and Doctors, as they are obedient in worke and in word to God & to his law, and further not (to my knowledge) not for any earthly power, dignitie or state, thorow the helpe of God. But sir I pray you tell me, if after your bidding, I shal lay my hand vpon the booke, to what entent: to sweare thereby▪ And the Archby. sayd to me, yea, wherefore els? And I said to him.* Syr a book is nothing els but a thing coupled together of diuers creatures, and to swere by any creature both Gods law and mans law is agaynst it.

But Syr, this thing I say here to you before these your clerkes,* with my foresayd protestation, that how, where when, and to whom, men are boūd to sweare or to obey in any wise after Gods law, and saints, and true Doctours, according vnto Gods law: I will thorow Gods grace be euer ready thereto, with all my cunning and power. But I pray you sir for the charitye of God, that ye will before y^t I sweare (as I haue here rehearsed to you) tell me how or whereto, that I shal submit me: and shew me wherof that ye will correct me, and what is the ordinaunce that ye will thus oblige me to fulfill.

And the Archbishop sayd vnto me: I will shortly that now thou sweare here to me, that thou shalt forsake al the opinions which the sect of Lollordes holde, and is slaundered with: so that after this time, neither priuilye nor apertly, thou hold any opinion which I shal (after thou hast sworne) rehearse to thee here. Nor thou shalt fauor no mā Page 530 nor woman, young nor olde, that holdeth any these foresayd opinions: but after thy knowledge and power, thou shalt force thee to w^tstād al such distroublers of holy church in euery dioces, that thou comest in: and them that wyll not leaue their false and damnable opiniōs, thou shalt put them vp, publishing them and theyr names, and make thē knowne to the bishop of the dioces that they are in, or to y^t bishops ministers. And ouer this I will, that thou preach no more vnto the time y^t I know by good witnesse & true, that thy conuersation be such, that thy hart and thy mouth accord truely in one, contrarying all the seud learning that thou hast taught here before.

☞ And I hearing these wordes, thought in my hart, that this was an vnlefull asking: and demed my selfe cursed of God, if I consented hereto, & I thought how Susan sayd: Anguish is to me on euery side. And in that I stode still and spake not, the Archbishop sayd to me: Aunswere one wise or other. And I sayd: Syr, if I consented to you thus as ye haue here before rehersed to me, I should becom an appealer, or euery bishops espy, somoner of al Englād, For and I should thus put vp,* and publish the names of men and women, I should herein deceiue full many persons: Yea sir, as it is likely by the dome of my conscience, I should herein be cause of the death both of men and womē. yea both bodely and ghostly. For many men & women that stand now in the way of saluation: if I should for the learning and reading of theyr beleue, publish them therfore vp to Bishops or to their vnpiteous ministers, I know some deale by experience, that they should be so distroubled & diseased with persecution or otherwise, that many of thē (I thinke) would rather chuse to forsake the way of truth thē to be trauailed, scorned, slaūdered, or punished, as bishops and their ministers now vse for to constrayne men & women to consent to them.

But I finde in no place in holy scripture, that this office that ye would now enfeaffe me with,* accordeth to any Priest of Christes sect, nor to any other christen man. And therefore to do this, were to me a full noyous bond to bee boūdē with, & ouer greuouse charge. For I suppose, that if I thus did, many men and women would, yea Syr, might iustly vnto my confusion say to me, that I were a traytor to God and to them: since (as I thinke in mine hart) many men & women trust so mikle in this case, that I would not for sauing of my life, doe thus to them. For if I thus should do, full many men & women would (as they might full truely) say, that I had falsly and cowardly forsaken the truth, and slaundered shamefully the word of God. For if I consented to you to do here, after your will, for bonchefe or mischief that may befall to me in this life: I deme in my cōscience, that I were worthy herefore to be cursed of god and also of all his Saynts: fro which inconuenience, keep me and all christē people, almighty God now and euer for his holy name. And then y^e Archbishop sayd vnto me. Oh, thine hart is ful hard indurate as was the hart of Pharao,* and the deuill hath ouercomen thee and peruerted thee, & he hath so blinded thee in all thy wittes, that thou hast no grace to know the trueth nor the measure of mercye that I haue proferred to thee. Therefore, as I perceiue now by y^e foolish aūswere, thou hast no wil to leaue thine old errors.

But I say to thee leud losell, other quickly cōsent thou to mine ordinance and submit thee to stand to my decrees: or by S. Thomas, thou shalt be disgraded, and follow thy felow in Smithfield. And at this saying, I stode still and spake not,* but I thought in mine hart that God did to me great grace, if he would of his great mercy bring me to such an end. And in mine hart I was nothing afrayd with this manassing of the Archbishop. And I considered there two things in him. One, that he was not yet sorowfull for that he had made William Sawtre wrongfully to be burnt: & as I considered, that y^e Archbishop thirsted yet after more shedding out of innocēt bloud. And fast therfore I was mo'ned in al my wittes, for to hold the Archbishop neither for Prelate nor for Priest of God. And for that mine inward man was thus altogether departed from the Archbishop, me thought I shoulde not haue any dread of him. But I was right heauy and sorowfull, for that there was no audience of secular men by: but in my hart I prayd the Lorde God, for to comfort me and strength me agaynst them that there were agaynst the sothfastnesse. And I purposed to speake no more to the Archbishop and his clerkes then me need behoued: and all thus I prayde God for his goodnesse to geue me then and alway grace to speake, with a meke & an easy spirit: and whatsoeuer thing that I should speake, that I might thereto haue true authorities of Scriptures or open reason. And for that I stood thus still and nothing spake, one of the Archbishops Clerks sayd vnto me. What thing musest thou? Doe thou as my Lord hath now commaunded to thee here.

And yet I stood still and aunswered him not:* And then soone after the Archbishop sayd to me: Art thou not yet bethought, whether thou wilt doe as I haue sayde to thee? And I said then to him: Syr, my father and my mother, on whole soules god haue mercy (if it be his will) spent mikle mony in diuers places about my learning, for the intēt to haue made me a Priest to God. But whē I came to yeres of discretion, I had no will to be Priest, and therefore my frends were right heauy to me, and then me thought theyr grudging agaynst me was so paynefull to me, that I purposed therfore to haue left theyr company. And when they perceiued this in me, they spake sometime full fayre & pleasaunt wordes to me: But for that they might not make me to consent of good hart to be a Priest, they spake to me full oftentimes very greuous wordes, and manassed me in diuers maners, shewing to me full heauy cheare. And thus one while in fayre maner, an other while in greuous, they were long time (as me thought) full busye about me, or I consented to them to be a Priest.

But at the last, when in this matter they would no longer suffer mine excusations, but either I should consent to them, or I shoulde euer beare their indignation, yea, theyr curse (as they sayde.) Then I seeing this, prayd them that they would geue me licence for to go to them that were named wise Priestes, and of vertuous conuersation to haue theyr counsell, and to know of them the office & the charge of Priesthood. And hereto, my father and my mother cōsented full gladly, & gaue me their blessing & good leaue to go, and also mony to spend in this iourney. And so that I wēt to those Priestes whom I heard to be of best name, and of most holy liuing, and best learned, & most wise of heauenly wisdom: and so I communed with them vnto the time that I perceiued by their vertuous and cōtinuall occupations, that their honest and charitable workes passed theyr same which I heard before of them.

Wherefore Syr, by the example of the doctrine of them: and specially for the godly and innocent workes whiche I perceiued then of them, and in them: After my cunning and power, I haue exercised me then and in this time, to know perfectly gods law, hauing a will and desire to liue thereafter, which willethe that all men and women should exercise themselues faythfully there about. If than Syr, either for pleasure of thē that are neither so wise nor of so vertuous conuersation to my knowledge, nor by cōmon fame to any other mens knowledge in this land, as these men were of whom I tooke my counsell & information: I should now forsake thus sodenly and shortly, and vnwarned, all y^t learning that I haue exercised my selfe in this xxx. winter and more, my cōscience should euer be herewith out of measure vnquieted: and as Syr I know wel, that many mē & women should be there through greatly troubled & sclaundered: And as I sayd sir, to you before, for mine vntruth and false cowardnes, many a one should be put into full great reproofe, yea sir, I dread that many one (as they might thē iustly) would curse me full bitterly: and sir I feare not, but the curse of God, which I shoulde deserue herein, woulde bring me to a full euil end, if I continued thus. And if thorow remorse of conscience I repented me any time, returning into the way, which you do your diligēce to cōstraine me now to forsake: yea sir, all the bishops of this lād, with full many other Priests, would desame, me, and pursue me as a relapse: & they y^t nowe haue (though I be vnworthy) some confidence in me, hereafter woulde neuer trust to me, though I could teach & liue neuer so vertuously, more then I can or may. For if after your coūsell I left vtterly all my learning, I should hereby first wound & defile mine owne soule, and also I should here through, geue occasiō to many men and womē of full sore hurting, yea sir as it is likely to me, if I cōsented to your will: I should be rin by mine euill example in it, as farre as in me were, flea many folke ghostly, y^t I should neuer deserue for to haue grace of god, to the edifying of his church, neither of my self, nor of none other mans life, and vndone both before God and man.

But sir, by exāple chiefly of some whose names I will not now rehearse,* of H. of I. P. and B. and also by the present doing of Philip Rampingtō, y^t is now become B. of Lincolne: I am now learned (as many moe hereafter through Gods grace shalbe learned) to hate & to flee all such sclaunder that these foresayd men chiefly haue defiled, principally themselues with. And in it that in them is, they haue enue nimed all the church of God, for the sclaūderous reuoking at the crosse of Paules, of H.P. and of B. and how now Philip Rampingtō pursueth Christes people. And the faining that these men dissemble by worldly prudence, keeping thē cowardly in theyr preaching and communing within the bondes and termes (which without blame may be spoken Page 531 and shewed out to the most worldly liuers) wil not be vnpunished of God. For to y^t poynt of truth y^t these mē shewed out sometime, they will not now stretch forth their lines. But by example, each one of them as theyr words and their works shew, busy them through their fayning, for to sclaunder and to pursue Christ in his members, rather thē they will be pursued.

And the Archbishop sayd to me: These men the whiche thou speakest of now, were fooles and heretickes, whē they were counted wise men of thee and other such losels. But now they are wise men, though thou and such other deme them vnwise. Neuerthelesse I wist neuer none that right sayd, that any while were enuenimed with your contagiousnes, that is, contaminated and spotted doctrine.

☞ And I sayd to the Archbishop: Syr, I thinke well that these mē & such other are now wise as to this world:.* But as theyr words sounded sometime, and their works shewed outwardly, it was like to moue me that they had earnest of the wisdom of God, & that they should haue deserved much grace of God, to haue saued their owne soules & many other mens, if they had continued faythfully in wilfull pouerty, & in other simple vertuous liuing: and specially, if they had with these foresaid vertues continued in their busie fruitful sowing of Gods word: as to many mēs knowledge they occupied them a season in all their wits, ful busily to know the pleasaunt will of God, traueilling all their members full busily for to do thereafter, purely and chiefly to the praysing of the most holy name of god, and for grace of edification and saluation of Christen people.* But woe worth false couetise, and euill counsell and tyranny, by which they and many men and womē are led blindly into an euill end.

Then the Archbishop sayde to me: Thou and such other Losels of thy sect, would shaue your heardes full nere for to haue a benefice.* For by Iesu, I know none more couetous shrewes then ye are, whē that ye haue a benefice. For loe, I gaue to Iohn Puruay a benefice but a mile out of this Castle, and I heard more complaints about his couetousnes for tithes and other misdoinges, then I did of all men that were aduanced within my dioces.

☞ And I sayde to the Archbishop: Sir, Puruay is neither with you now for the benefice that ye gaue him, nor he holdeth faythfully with the learning that he taught and writ before time: and thus he sheweth himselfe neither to be hot nor colde, and therefore he and his felowes, may sore dread, that if they turne not hastily to the way that they haue forsaken: peraduenture they be put out of the number of Christes chosen people.

And the Archbishop sayde: Though Puruay be now a false harlot, I quite me to him: But come he more for suche cause before me (or we part) I shall know with whom he holdeth. But I say to thee: which are these holy men and wise, of whom thou hast taken thine information?

☞ And I sayd:.* Syr, Maister Iohn Wickliffe was holden of full many men, the greatest clearke that they knew then liuing, and therwith he was named a passing ruely man & an innocent in his liuing: and herefore, great men communed oft with him, and they loued so his learning, that they writt it, & busily inforced them to rule themselues thereafter. Therefore sir, this foresayd learning of M. Iohn Wickliffe, is yet holden of full many men and women, the most agreable learning vnto the liuing and teaching of Christ & of his Apostles, and most opely shewing & declaring how the church of Christ hath bene and yet should be ruled and gouerned. Therefore, so many men and women couet thys learning and purpose,* through Gods grace, to cōforme their liuing like to this learning of Wickliff. M. Iohn Aston taught & writ accordingly, and full busily, where and when, and to whom that he might, and he vsed it himselfe right perfectly vnto his liues end. And also Philip of Rāpington while he was a Canō of Leicester. Nicholas Hereford, Dauid Gotray of Pakring Monke of Byland and a Maister of Diuinitye, and Iohn Puruay and many other which were holden right wise men & prudent, taught and writ busily this foresayd learning, & cōformed them thereto. And with all these men, I was oft right homely & communed with them long time and oft: and so before al other men I those willingly to be informed of them and by thē, and specially of wickliffe himselfe, as of the most vertuous and godly wise man that I heard of or knew. And therefore of him specially and of these men I tooke the learning that I haue taught: and purpose to liue thereafter (if God wil) to my liues end. For though some of those mē be contrary to the learning that they taught before, I wote well that their learning was true which they taught: and therefore with the helpe of God I purpose to hold and to vse y^t learnyng which I heard of them, while they fate on Moyses chayre, & specially while that they sat on y^t chayre of Christ. But after y^t workes that they now do, I will not doe with Gods helpe. For they feyne, and hide, & contrary y^t trueth, which before they taught out playnely and truly. For as I know well, when some of those men haue bene blamed for their slaunderous doynge: they graunt not that they haue taught a misse or erred before time, but that they we•e constrayned by payne to leaue to tell out the soth, & thus they chuse now rather to blaspheme God, then to suffer a while here persecution bodely, for sothfastnesse that Christ shedde out his hart bloud for.

And the Archbishop sayd: * That learning that thou callest truth and sothfastnes, is open slaunder to holy church, as it is proued of holy Church. For albeit, that Wickleffe your author was a great clerke, and though that many mē held him a perfect liuer: yet his doctrine is not approued of holy church, but many sentences of his learning are damned as they well worthy are. * But as touching Philip of Rampington, that was first Chanon, and after Abbor of Leicester, which is now Bishop of Lincolne: I tell thee, that the day is commē, for which he fast the euen. For neither he holdeth nowe, nor will holde, the learning that hee taught, when he was a Canon of Leicester. For no byshop of this land pursueth nowe more sharply them that holde thy way, then he doth.

☞ And I sayd: * Sir full many men and women wondereth vpō him, and speaketh him mikle shame, and holdeth him for a cursed enemy of the truth.

And the Archbish. sayd to me: Wherefore taryest thou me thus here with suche fables, wilt thou shortly (as I haue sayd to thee) submit thee to me or no?

☞ And I sayd: Sir I tell you at one word, I dare not for the dread of God submit me to you, after the tenour & sentence tharye haue aboue rehearsed to me.

And thus as if he had be•e wroth, he sayd to one of his clerkes. Fetch hether quickly, the certification that came to me •rō Shrewsbury vnder the 〈◇〉 seale witnessing the errors and heresydes, which this Losel hath venunously sowne there.

Then hastely the clarke tooke out and layde forth on a cupbord, diuers rolles and writinges, among which there was a litle one, which the clarke deliuered to the Archbyshop. And by and by the Archbishop read this roll conteynynge this sentence.

The third sonday after Easter, * the yeare of our Lorde 1407. William Thorpe came vnto the towne of Shrewsbury, and thorow leaue graunted vnto him to preache: He sayd openly in S. Chaddes church in his sermon, that the sacrament of the aulter, after the consecration, was materiall bread. And that images, should in no wise be worship^pped. And that mē should not go on pilgrimages. And that priestes haue no tittle to tithes. And that it is not lawful for to sweare in any wise.

And when the Archbishop had red thus this roll, * he rolled it vp agayne, and sayd to me. Is this wholesome learning to be among the people?

☞ And I sayd to him: Sir I am both ashamed on theyr behalf, and right sorowful for them that haue certified you these thinges thus vntruelye: for I preached neuer, nor taught thus priuily nor apertly.

And the Archbishop sayd to me, I will geue credence to these worshipfull men which haue written to me, and witnessed vnder theyr scales there amōg them. Though now thou denyest this,* weenest thou that I will geue credence to thee? Thou Losell, hast troubled the worshipfull communalty of Shrewsbury, so that the Balifes and comminalty of that towne haue writtē to me, praying me that am Archbishop of Cant. primate and Chancellor of England, that I will vouchsafe to graunt them: that if thou shalt be made (as thou art worthy) to suffer open iouresse for thine heresies, that thou may haue thy iouresse openlye there among them: So that all they whome thou and suche other Losels haue there peruerted,* may thorow feare of thy deed be reconciled agayne to the vnity of holy Church. And also they that stand in true fayth of holy Church, may thorow thy deed be more established therein. And as if this asking well pleased y^r Archbishop, he sayd. By my thrift, this harty prayer, and feruent request, shall be thought on.

But certaynely, nother y^r prayer of the men of Shrewsbury, nor the manassing of the Archbischoppe made me any thing afayrd. But in rehearsing of this malice, and in the hearing of it,* my hart greatly reioysed, & yet doth. I thank God for the grace, that I then thought, and y^t think shall come to all the Church of God here thorow, by the speciall mercifull doing of the Lord. And as hauing no dread of the malice of tyrantes, by trusting stedfastly in the helpe of the Lord, with full purpose for to knowledge the sothfastnes, Page 532 and to stand therby after my cunning and power: I said to the Archbishop, Sir if the truth of Gods word might now be accepted as it should be, I doubt not to proue by likely euidence, that they that are famed to be out of the fayth of holy Church in Shrewsbury,* & in other places also, are in the true fayth of holy Church. For as theyr wordes found, and theyr workes shew to mans iudgement (dreading and louing faythfully God) theyr will, their desire, ther loue & theyr busines are most set to dread, to offend God, & to loue for to please him in true & faythfull keeping of his cōmaūdementes. And agayne, they that are sayd to be in the faith of holy Church in Shrewsbury & in other places, by open euidence of their proud, enuious, malicious, couetous, lecherous, and other foule words & workes: neither know, nor haue wil to know, nor to occupy their wits truely and effectuously in the right fayth of holy Church. Wherefore all these, nor none that folow theyr maners, shall any time come verely in the fayth of holy church, except they inforce them more truely to come in the way which now they despise. For these men and women that are now called faithfull and holden iust, nother know, nor will exercise thēselfe to know (of faythfulnes) one commaundement of God.

And thus full many men and womē now, and specially mē that are named to be principall lims of holy church, styree God to great wrath, & deserue his curse for that they call or hold them iust mē, which are full vniust, as their vicious wordes, their great customable swearing, and theyr slaunderous and shamefull works shew openly and witnes. And therefore, such vicious men & vniust in theyr own confusion, call them vniust men & womē, which after their power and cunning busy themselues to liue iustly after the cōmaundement of God. And where sir ye say, that I haue distroubled the cōminalty of Shrewsbury, & many other men and women with my teaching: If it this be, it is not to be wondred of wise men,* since all the communalty of y^t City of Ierusalem was distroubled of Christes own person, that was very God and man, and most prudent preacher that euer was or shalbe. And also all the Sinagoge of Nazareth was moued agaynst Christ, & so fulfilled with ire towards him for his preaching, that the men of the Sinagoge rose vp and cast Christ out of theyr City, & led him vp to the top of a moūtayn for to cast him down there headl̄ing. Also accordingly hereto, the Lord witnesseth by Moises, that he shall put dissention betwixt his people, and the people that cōtrarieth and pursueth his people. Who sir is he, that shall preach the truth of Gods word to the vnfaith full people, and shall set the sothfastnes of the Gospell, and the prophecy of God almighty to be fulfilled?

And the Archbishop sayd to me. It foloweth of these thy wordes, that thou and such other thinkest: that ye do right well for to preach and teach as ye do, without authority of any Bishop. For ye presume, that the Lord hath chosē you onely for to preach, as faythful disciples and speciall folowers of Christ.

☞ And I sayd: Syr by authority of Gods law and also of Sayntes and Doctors I am learned to deme, that it is euery Priestes office and duty for to preach busilye, freely & truely the word of God. For no doubt euery Priest should purpose first in his soule, & couer to take the order of priesthood chiefly for to make knowne to the people the word of God, after his cunning and power: approuing his words euey to be true by his vertuous works, and for this intent we suppose that Bishops & other Prelates of holy church, should chiefly take and vse their prelacye, and for the same cause Bishops should geue to Priestes their orders. For Bishops should accept no man to Priesthood, except that he had good wil and f•l purpose, & were wel disposed, and wel learned to preach. Wherefore sir, by y^e bidding of Christ, & by the example of his most holy liuing, & also by the witnessing of his holy Apostles and Prophets, we are bounde vnder full great payn, to exercise vs after our cunning and power (as euery Priest is likewise charged of God) to fulfil duely the office of priesthood. We presume not here of ourselues for to be esteemed (neither in our owne reputatiō nor in none other mās) faythful disciples, & special folowers of Christ. But sir, as I sayde to you before, we deeme this by authority chiefly of Gods word, that it is the chief duety of euery priest, to busy thē faythfully to make the law of God knowne to his people, & so to commune the cōmaūdement of God charitably, how that we may best, where, whē, and to whom that euer we may, is our very duety. And for the will & busines that we owe of due debt to do iustly our office through the styrring and speciall helpe (as we trust) of God,* hoping stedfastly in his mercy: we desire to be y^e fayth full disciples of Christ, and we pray this gracious Lord or his holy name, that he make vs able to please him with deuout prayers, & charitably Priestly works, that we may obtaine of him to folow him thankfully.

And the Archbishop sayd to me: L•ud losell, whereto makest thou such vayne reasons to me? Asu•h not Saynt Paule,* how shoulde Priestes preache, except they be sent? But I sent thee neuer to preache. For thy venemous doctrine is so knowne throughout England, that no Bishop will admitte thee to preache by witnessing of theyr letters. Why thē lewd Idiot, willest thou presume to preach, since thou art not sent nor licensed of thy soueraigne to preache. Sayth not S. Paul, that subiects ough to obey theyr soueraignes, and not onely good & vertuous: but also tiraunts that are vicious?

☞ And I sayd to the Archbishop: Sir, as touching your le•ter of licence or other Bishops,* which ye say we shoulde haue to witnes that we were able to be sent for to preache: We know wel that neither you sir, nor any other bishop of this land, wil graūt to vs any such letters of licence, but if we should oblige vs to you, and to other bishops by vnlefull othes, for to passe not the bondes and termes which ye sir, or other bishops will limit to vs. And since in this matter your termes be some to large, & some to strait: we dare not oblige vs thus to bee bounden to you for to keepe the termes, which you will limit to vs, as you do to Friers, & such other Preachers.* And therefore, though we haue not your letter sir, nor letters of any other bishops writrē with inke vpon parchmēt: we dare not therfore leaue y^e office of preaching (to which preaching, all Priests after their cunning and power are boūd: by diuers testimonies of Gods law, and great Doctors) without any mention making of Bishops letters. For as mikle as we haue taken vpon vs the office of Priesthood (though we are vnworthy thereto) we come and purpose to fulfill it with the helpe of God, by authority of his own law, and by witnesse of great doctors and Sayntes, accordingly hereto trusting stedfastly in the mercy of God.* For that he commaūdeth vs to do the office of Priesthood, he will be our sufficient letters and witnes, if we by example of his holy liuing and teaching, specially occupy vs faythfully to do our office iustly: yea y^t people to whom we preach (be they faythfull or vnfaythfull) shall be our letters, that is our witnesse bearers: for y^e truth where it is sowne, may not be vnwitnessed. For all y^t are conuerted & saued by learning of Gods word, & by working thereafter: are witnes bearers: that the trueth and sothfastnesse which they heard and did after, is cause of theyr saluation. And agayne, all vnfaythfull men and women which heard the truth told out to them, and would not do therafter: also all they that might haue heard the truth, & would not hear it, because that they would not do therafter.

All these shall beare witnes agaynst themselues, & the truth which they woulde not heare, or els heard it & despised to do therafter, through theyr vnfaythfulnes, is & shalbe cause of theyr damnation. Therefore sir, since this aforesayd witnessing of God, and of diuers Sayntes and Doctors, & of al the people good & euill, suffiseth to al true preachers: we thinke that we doe not the office of Priesthood, if that we leaue our preaching, because that we haue not, or may not haue duely Bishops letters, to witnesse that we are sent of them to preach. This sentence approueth Saint Paul, where he speaketh of himselfe, & of faithfull Apostles and disciples saying thus. We need no letters of commendatiō as some preachers do, which preach for couetousnesse of temporall goods,* and for mens praysing. And where ye say Syr, that Paule biddeth subiectes obey theyr soueraignes, that is soth, and may not be denied. But there is two maner of soueraignes, vertuous soueraignes and vicious tyrauntes.* Therefore, to these last soueraignes, neither mē nor womē that be subiect, owe to obey in two maners. To vertuous soueraignes & charitable, subiectes owe to obey wilfully and gladly, in hearing of their good counsel, in cōsenting to their charitable biddings. and in working after their fruitfull workes.

This sentence Paul approueth where he sayth to subiectes. Be ye mindefull of your soueraignes, that speake to you the word of God, & follow you the fayth of thē, whose cōuersation you know to be vertuous. For as Paul sayth, after these soueraignes, to whom subiectes owe to obey in following of the maners: worke besely in holy studying, how they may withstand and destroy vices, first in thēselues, and after in all their subiectes, and how they may best plāt in them vertues. Also these soueraignes, make deuout and feruēt prayers for to purchase grace of God, that they and their subiects may ouer all thing, dread to offend hym, and to loue for to please him. Also these soueraignste whō Paul biddeth vs obey, as it is said before, liue so vertuously: that all they that will liue well, may take of them good example, to know & to keep the cōmaundements of God. But in this foresayd wise, subiectes ought not to obey nor Page 533 to be obedient to tyrantes, while they are vitious tyrants, since their will,* their counsell, their biddinges, and theyr workes are so vicious, that they ought to be hated & lefte. And though such tyrantes be maisterfull and cruel in boas•ing and manasing, in oppressions & diuers punishinges: S. Peter biddeth the seruauntes of such tyrauntes, to obey meekely such tyrantes, sufferinges paciently their malitious cruelnes. But Peter counselleth not any seruaunt or subiect, to obey to any Lord or Prince, or soueraign in any thing that is not pleasing to God.

And the Archbishop sayd vnto me. If a soueraigne byd his subiect do that thing that is vitious, this soueraygne herein is to blame: but the subiect for his obedience, deserueth meede of God. For obedience pleaseth more to God, than any sacrifice.

☞ And I sayd. Samuell the Prophet sayd to Saule the wicked king, that God was more pleased with y^t obediēce of his commaundement, then with any sacrifice of beastes. But Daudid saieth, and S. Paule, and S. Gregory accordingly together,* that not onely they that do euill, are worthy of death and damnation: but also they that cōsent to euill doers. And sir, the law of holy Church teacheth in the decrees, that no seruant to his Lord, nor childe to the father or mother, nor wife to her husband, nor monke to his Abbot, ought to obey, except in lefull things, and lawfull.

And the Archbishop said to me. All these alledgings that thou bringest forth,* are not els but proude presumptuousnesse. For hereby thou inforcest thee to proue, that thou and such other are so iust, that ye ought not to obey to Prelats. And thus against the learnyng of S. Paule that teacheth you not to preach, but if ye were sent: of your owne authoritie, ye will go forth and preach, and do what ye lift.

☞ And I saide. Syr, presenteth not euery Priest the office of the Apostles, or the office of the disciples of Christ? And the Archbishop sayd, yea.

And I sayde. Syr, as the x. chapt. of Mathew, and the last chapter of Marke witnesseth: Christ sent his Apostles for to preach. And the x. chapter of Luke witnesseth, that Christ sent his two and seuēty disciples for to preach, in euery place that Christ was to come to. And S. Gregorie in the cōmon law saith, that euery man that goeth to priest hooode,* taketh vpon him the office of preaching: For as hee sayth, that Priest stirreth God to great wrath, of whose mouth is not heard the voyce of preaching. And as other more gloses vpon Ezechiell, witnesse: that the Priestes that preacheth not busilye to the people, shall be partaker of their damnation that perish through his default. And though the people be saued by other speciall grace of God then by the Priestes preaching,* yet the Priests, in that they are ordeined to preach, and preach not, as before God, they are mansleas. For as farre as in them is, such Priests as preach not busily and truely, sleyeth all the people ghostly: in that they withholde from them the word of God, that is life and sustenance of mens soules. And Saynt Hydore sayd, Priestes shall be damned, for wickednesse of the people, if they teach not them that are ignoraunt, or blame not them that are sinners. For all the worke or businesse of Priestes,* standeth in preaching and teaching, that they edify all men, as well by cunning of fayth, as by discipline of workes, that is vertuous teaching. And as the Gospell witnesseth: Christ sayd in his teaching. I am borne & comē into this world, to beare witnesse to the truth, and he that is of the truth, heareth my voyce.

Then Sir, since by the word of Christ specially, that is his voyce,* Priestes are commaunded to preache: whatsoeuer priest that it be, that hath not good wil and full purpose to doe thus, and ableth not himselfe after his cunning and power to doe his office by the example of Christ and of hys Apostles: whatsoeuer other thing that he doth displeaseth God. For loe, S. Gregory sayth, that thing left, that a man is bound chiefly to do, whatsoeuer other thing that a man doth: it is vnthankfull to the holy ghost: and therfore sayth Lincolne. The Priest that preacheth not the word of God, though he be seene to haue none other defaulte, he is Antichrist and Sathanas, a night theefe, and a day theefe, a sleyer of foules, and an aungel of light turned into darckenes. Wherefore Syr, these authorities and other well considered, I deme my selfe damnable, if I either for pleasure or displeasure of any creature, apply me not diligētly to prech the word of God. And in the same damnation I deeme all those Priestes, which of good purpose and will, enforce thē not busily to do thus, & also all them that haue purpose or will to let any Priest of this busines.

And the Archbishop sayde to those 3. Clerkes that stode before him. Lo Syrs, this is the maner and busines of this Losell and such other, to picke out such sharpe sentences of holy Scripture and Doctours, to mayntayne theyr sect & lore agaynst the ordinaunce of holy Church. And therefore Losell, it is thou that couetest to haue agayne the Psalter that I made to be taken frō thee at Caunterbury, to record sharpe verses agaynst vs. But thou shalt neuer haue that Psalter, nor none other booke, till that I know y^t thy hart & thy mouth accordfully, to be gouerned by holy Church.

☞ And I sayd: Syr,^{*} all my will and power is, & euer shal be (I trust to God) to be gouerned by holy Church.

And the Archbishop asked me, what was holy Church.

☞ And I sayd: Syr, I tolde you before, what was holye Church. But since ye aske me this demaund: I call Christ and his Saintes holy Church.

And the Archbishoppe sayd vnto me. I wore well that Christ and his Saintes are holy Churche in heauen, but what is holy Church in earth?

☞ And I sayd: Syr, though holy Churche be euery one in charity, yet it hath two partes. The first and pricipall part, hath ouercomen perfectly all the wretchednesse of this life, and raigneth ioyfully in heauen with Christ. And the other part is here yet in earth, busily & continually fighting day and night agaynst temptations of the fiend: forsaking and hating the prosperity of this world, dispising and withstāding theyr fleshly lustes, which onely are the pilgrimes of Christ, wandring toward heauen by stedfast fayth & grouēded hope, and by perfect charity. For these heauenly pilgrimes, may not, nor will not, be letted of their good purpose, by the reasō of any doctors discording from holy scripture, nor by the floudes of any tribulation temporall, nor by the wind of any pride, of boast, or of manasing of any creature: For they are all fast grounded vpon the sure stone Christ, hearing his word and louing it, exercising them faithfully and continually in all their wittes to do thereafter.

And the Archbishop sayd to his Clerkes. See ye not how his hart is indurate, and how he is trauelled with the deuill occupying him thus busily to alledgr suth sentences to mayntaine his errours and heresies? Certayne, thus he would occupy vs here all day, if we would suffer him.

One of the clerkes aunswered,* Sir, he sayd right now that this certification that came to you from Shrewsbury, is vntruely forged agaynst him. Therefore sir, appose you him nowe heare in all y^t points which are certified against him, & so we shall heare of his own mouth his answeres, and witnesse them.

And the Archb. took the certification in his hand, & looked theron a while, and then he sayd to me.

Loe here it is certified against thee by worthy men and faithfull of Shrewsbury, that thou preachedst there openly in S. Chads church: that the Sacramēt of the aaltar was material bread after the consecratiō, what sayst thou? was this truely preached?*

☞ And I sayd: Sir, I tell you truly y^t I touched nothing therof the sacrament of y^e aaltar, but in this wise, as I will with Gods grace tel you here. As I stood there in the pulpit, busiying me to teach the commaundemēt of God: there knilled a sacring bel, & therfore mickle people turned away hastily, and with noyse ran fro towards me. And I seing this, sayd to them thus: Good men ye were better to stand here still and to heare Gods word.* For certes the vertue & the mede of the most holy Sacrament of the aaltar stādeth mikle more in the beliefe therof y^t ye ought to haue in your soule, thē it doth in the outward sight therof. And therefore, ye were better to stand still quietly to heare gods word, because that through y^e hearing therof, mē come to very true belief. And otherwise sir, I am certaine I spake not there, of the worthy sacrament of the aaltar.

And the Archb. sayd to me: I beleue thee not whatsoever thou sayst, since so worshipful mē haue witnessed thus agaynst thee.* But since thou deniest that thou sayedst thus there, what sayst thou now? Resteth there after the consecration in the host, materiall bread or no?

☞ And I sayd: sir I know in no place in holy Scripture where this terme materiall bread is written: and therefore sir, whē I speak of this matter, I vse not to speake of materiall bread.

Then the Archb. sayd to me: Now teachest thou men to beleue in this sacrament?

☞ And I sayd: Syr, as I beleue my selfe, so I teach other men.

He sayd, tell out playnely thy beliefe thereof.

☞ And I sayd with my protestation: Sir, I beleue that the night before that Christ Iesu woulde suffer (wilfully) passiō for mankind on the morne after: he took bread in his holy and most worshipfull hands, lifting vp his eyes, and giuyng thanks to God his father, blessed this bread and brake it, and gaue it to his disciples, saying to them: Take and eate of this all you, this is my body. And that this is & ought to be all mens beliefe, Mathew, Marke, Luke and Page 534 Paule witnesseth. Other beliefe Sir I haue none, nor wil haue, nor teach: for I beleue, that this suffiseth in this matter. For in this beliefe with Gods grace I purpose to liue and dye, knowledging as I beleue and teach other men to beleue that the worshipfull Sacrament of the aaltar, is the Sacrament of Christes flesh and his bloud, in forme of bread and of wine.

And the Archb. sayd to me. It is sooth that this Sacrament is very Christes body in forme of bread. But thou & thy sect teachest it to be substance of bread. Thinke you this true teaching?

☞ And I sayd: Neither I, nor any other of the sect that ye damne, teach any otherwise then I haue tolde you, nor beleue otherwise to my knowing. Neuertheles sir, I aske of you for charity, that ye will tell me here playnly, how ye shall vnderstand the text of Saint Paule, where he sayth thus: This thing fele you in your self that is in Christ Iesu, while he was in the forme of god. Sir, calleth not Paul here the forme of God, the substance or kinde of God? Also sir, sayth not the church in the houres of y^e most blessed virgin accordingly hereto, where it is writtē thus? Thou author of health remember, that sometime thou tooke of y^e vndefiled virgine, the forme of our body. Tell me for charitye therefore, whether the forme of our body, be called here the kinde of our body or no?

* And the Archb. sayde to me: Wouldest thou make me to declare this text after thy purpose, since the Church nowe hath determined: that there abideth no substaunce of bread after the consecration, in the sacrament of the aultar? Beleuest thou not this ordinaunce of the church?

☞ And I sayd: Sir, whatsoever Prelates haue ordeyned in the Church, our beliefe standeth euer whole. I haue not heard, that the ordinaunce of men vnder beliefe, should bee put into beliefe.

And the Archb. sayd to me: If thou hast not learned this before, learne now to know that thou art out of beliefe. If in this matter and other, thou beleauest not as the holye Church beleueth. What say Doctors treating of this Sacrament?

☞ And I sayd: Sir, S. Paule that was a great Doctor of holy Church, speaking to the people, and teaching thē in y^e right belief of this most holy Sacrament: calleth it bread y^t we breake. And also in the Canon of the masse after the cōsecratiō: this most worthy Sacramēt is called holy bread. And euery priest in this lād, after that he hath receiued this sacrament, sayth in this wise: That thing that we haue taken with our mouth, we pray God that we may take it w^t a pure and clean mind. That is as I vnderstand, we pray God that we may receiue throw very beliefe, this holy sacrament worthely. And Sir, Saint Augustine sayth: that thing that is seene, is bread: but that mens fayth asketh to be informed of, is very Christes body. And also, Fulgence an ententife Doctour, sayth: As it were an errour to say that Christ was but a substaunce, that is very man, and not very GGD: or to say that Christ was very God, and not very man: so is it (this Doctour sayth) an errour to say, that the Sacrament of the aultar is but a substaunce: And also Sir, accordingly hereto, in the secret of the midde Masse on Christmas day,* it is written thus: Idem refulsit Deus, sic terrena substantia nobis conferat quod diuinum est: which sentence sir, with the secret of the fourth fery, quatuor temporum Septembris: I pray you sir declare here openly in English.

* And the Archbishop sayd to me, I perceiue well enough where about thou art, and how the deuil blindeth thee, that thou may not vnderstand the ordinaunce of holy Church, nor consent therto. But I commaund thee now, aunswere me shortly: Beleuest thou that after the consecratiō of this foresayd Sacrament: there abideth substaunce of breade, or not?

☞ and I sayd: Sir, as I vnderstand it is all one to graūt or beleue, that there dwelleth substance of bread, & to graūt and to beleue that this most worthy sacrament of Christes owne body is accidēt without subiect.* But Sir, for as mikle as your asking passeth my vnderstanding, I dare neither deny it nor graūt it, for it is schole matter, about whiche I busied me neuer for to know: & therefore I committe this terme accidens sine subiecto, to those Clerkes which delight them so in curious and subtle sophistry, because they determine oft so difficult and straūge matters, & wade and wander so in them from argument to argument, w^t pro & contra,* till that they wot not where they are, & vnderstand not thēselues. But the shame that these proude Sophisters haue to yelde them to men, and before men, maketh thē oft fooles and to be concluded shamefully before God.

And the archb. said to me: I purpose not to oblige thee to the subtle arguments of clerks, since thou art vnable therto: but I purpose to make thee obey to the determination of holy Church.

☞ And I sayd: sir, by open euidence and great wnesse, a M. yeare after the incarnation of Christ, the determination which I haue here before you rehearsed, was accept of holy Church as sufficient to the saluation of all them that would beleue it faythfully,* and work thereafter charitably. But Sir, the determination of this matter whiche was brought in since the fiend was loosed by Frier Thomas agayne, specially calling the most worshipfull Sacramēt of Christes owne body an accident without subiect:* whiche terme, since I know not that Gods lawe approueth it in this matter, I dare not graūt, but vtterly I deny to make this Friers sentence, or any such other, my beliefe, do with me God what thou wilt.

And the Archb. sayd to me:* Wel, wel, thou shalt say other\wise or that I leaue thee. But what sayest thou to this second point that is recorded agaynst thee by worthy men of Shrewsbury, saying that thou preachedst there, that Images ought not to be worshipped in any wise.

☞ And I sayd: Syr, I preached neuer thus, nor through gods grace I wil not any time consent to think nor to say thus, neyther priuily nor apertly. For lo, the Lord witnesseth by Moses, that the thinges which he made were right good, and so then they were, and yet they are & shalbe good and worshipfull in theyr kind. And therefore, to the end that God made them to, they are al praisable and worshipful, & specially man that was made after the image & likenesse of God,* is full worshipfull in hys kinde, yea this holy image that is man, God worshipping. And herefore euery man should worship other, in kinde, and also for heauenly vertues that mē vse charitably. And also I say, wood, tin, gold siluer, or any other matter that images are made of: al these creatures are worshipful in their kinde, and to the end that God made them for.* But the caruing, casting, & payntyng of an imagery, made within mans hād, albeit that this doynge be accept of man of highest state and dignitie, & ordayned of them to be a Calender to lend men, that neyther can nor will be learned to know God in hys word, neyther by his creatures, nor by hys wonderful & diuers workings: Yet this imagery ought not to be worshipped in fourme, nor in the likenes of mans craft. Neuerthesse, that euery matter the paynters paynt with since it is Gods creature, ought to be worshipped in the kinde, and to the ende that God made and ordayned it to serue man.

Then the Archbishop sayd to me, I graunt well that no body ought to doe worship to any suche images for themselues. But a crucifixe ought to be worshipped for the passion of Christ that is paynted therein,* and so brought there through to mans mind: and thus the images of the blessed Trinitie, and of the Virgine Mary Christes mother, and other images of sayntes,* ought to be worshipped. For loe, earthly kinges and Lordes which vse to send theyr letters ensealed with their armes, or with theyr priuy signet to them that are with them, are worshipped of these men. For when these men receiue theyr Lordes letters, in whiche they see and know the willes and biddinges of the Lords in worship of theyr Lordes they doe off theyr caps to these letters. Why not them, since in Images made wyth mans hande, we may read and knowe many diuers thinges of GOD, and of hys Sayntes, shall we not worship their images?

☞ And I sayd,* within my foresaid protestation I say, that these worldly vsages of temporal lawes that ye speak now of, may be done in case without sinne. But this is no similitude to worshippe Images made by mans hande, since that Moyses, Daud, Solomon, Baruch, and other saints in the Bible, forbid so playnely the worshipping of suche Images.

Then the archbishop sayd to me: Leud losell: in the olde law before that Christ tooke mankinde, was no likenes of any person of y^e trinitie, neither shewed to man nor known of man: But nowe since Christ became man, it is lefull to haue Images to shew hys manhoode. Yea though many men which are right great Clerkes & other also, held it an errour to paynt the Trinitie: I say it is well done to make and to paynt the Trinitie in images. For it is great moouing of deuotion to men, to haue and to behold the Trinitie and other images of saints, carued, cast, & paynted. For beyond the sea, are the best paynters that euer I saw. And sirs I tell you, this is their maner, and it is a good maner. Whē y^t an Image maker shall carue, cast in molde, or paint any Images, he shall go to a Priest, & shriue him as clean, as if he should then dye: and take penance, and make some certayne vowe of fasting or of praying or pilgrimages doing, praying y^e Priest specially to pray for him, that he may haue grace to make a fayre and a deuout Image.

Page 535☞ And I sayd: Sir, I doubt not if these paynters that ye speake of, or any other painters vnderstoode truly the text of Moyses, of Daud, of y^r wise man, of Baruch, and of other saints and doctors: These painters should be moued to shrine thē to God w^t ful inward sorowe of hart, taking vpon them to do right sharpe penāce for the sinful & vaine cra•t of painting, caruing, or casting they had vsed: Promising God faithfully, neuer to do so after: knowledging openly before al men their reprobable learning. And also sir, these priests that shrine (as you do say) painters, & enioine thē to do penance, & pray for their speede, promisyng to thē helpe of their prayers for to be curious in their sinful crafts: sinne herein more greuously, then the painters. For these priests do comfort and geue them, counsail to do that thing, which of great pain, yea vnder y^r pain of gods curse, they should vtterly forbid them. For certes sir, if the wonderful working of God, & the holy liuing & teachyng of Christ, and of his Apostles and Prophetes, were made knowen to the people by holy liuing & true, and busy reaching of priests: these thinges (sir) were sufficient bookes and Kalenders to know God by, & his Saynts, without any images made with mans hand.* But certes, y^e vicious liuing of priests and their couetousnes, are chiefe cause of this errour, and all other viciousnes that raygneth amōg the people.

Then the Archbish. sayd vnto me, I hold thee a vicious Priest and a curst, and all them that are of thy sect, for all priests of holy church, & all images that moue men to deuotion, thou & such other go about to destroy.* Losel, were i• a faire thing to come into the church and see therin none Image?

☞ And I sayd: sir, they that come to y^r church for to praye deuoutly to the lord God, may in their inward wittes be the more feruent, that al their outwarde wits be closed frō al outward seing & hearing, and frō all disturbance, & lettings. And since Christ blessed thē that saw him not bodely, and haue beleued faithfully in him: it suffiseth then to al mē (through hearing and knowing of gods word, and to do thereafter) for to beleue in God,* though they see neuer images made with mans hand after any person of y^e Trinitie, or of any other saint.

And the Archb. said to me, with a feruent spirit: I say to thee Iosell that it is right wel done to make and to haue an image of the Trinitie,* Yea, what saist thou? is it not a stirring thing to behold such an image?

☞ And I said: Sir, ye said right now that in the old lawe or Christ toke mākind, no likenes of any person of y^e Trinity was shewed to men: wherefore sir, ye said it was not thē leful to haue images, but nowe ye saye, since Christ is becomen mā, it is leful to make & to haue an image of the Trinitie,* & also of other saints. But sir, this thing would I learne of you: since y^e father of heauen, yea & euery persō of y^e Trinitie was without beginning God almightye, & many holy prophets that were deadly mē, were martired violētly in the old law, and also many men & women thē died Confessors: Why was it not then as leful & necessary as nowe to haue made an Image of the father of heauen, and to haue made and had other images of Martirs, prophets, and holy Confessors, to haue ben Kalenders to aduise men and moue thē to deuotion, as ye say that images now do?

* And the Archb. sayd: The sinagogue of the Iewes had not authoritie to approue those thinges as the Church of Christ hath now.

☞ And I sayd: Sir: S. Gregory was a great man in the new lawe, & of great dignity, and as the cōmon law witnesseth, he commended greatly a Bishop, in that he forbad vtterly the Images made with mās hand should be worshipped.

And the Archb. sayd: Ungracious Iosell, y^u sauourest no more truth then an hound. Since at the roode at y^e Northdore at Londō, at our Lady at Walsingham, & many other diuers places in Englād, are many great & praynable miracles done: should not y^e images of such holy saynts and places,* at the reuerence of God & our lady & other saintes be more worshipped then other places and images, wher no miracles are done?

☞ And I said: Sir, there is no such vertue in any imagery, that any images should herefore be worshipped, wher fore I am certaine that there is no miracle done of god in any place in earth, because that any images made w^t mans hād should be worshipped. And herfore sir, as I preached openly at Shrewsbury & other places, I say now here before you: That no body should trust that there were anye vertue in imagery made with mans hand, and therefore no body should vow to thē nor secke them, nor kneele to thē, nor bow to them, nor pray to them, nor offer any thing to them,* nor kisse them, nor ensence thē. For lo the most worthy of such images, the brasen Serpent (by Moises made, at Gods bidding) the good K. Ezechie destroied worthely & thankfully, & al because it was ensenced. Therefore sir, if men take good heede to the writing and to the learning of S. Augustine, of S. Gregory, and of Saint Iohn Chrisostome, and of other Saints and doctors, howe they spake & write of miracles, that shalbe done now in the last ende of the world: It is to dreyd, that for the vnfaythfulnesse of men & women, the Fiende hath great power, for to work many of the miracles that nowe are done in such places. For both men and women delight now more for to heare and know miracles, then they do know Gods worde, or to heare it effectuously. Wherefore, to the great cōfusion of all them that thus do Christ sayth: The generation of adulterers requireth tokens,* miracles, and wonders. Neuertheles as diuers saints say, now when the faith of god is published in Christendome, the word of God suffyseth to mans saluation, without such miracles: and thus also the worde of God suffiseth to all faythfull men & women, without any such images. But good sir, since the father of heauen that is God in his godhead, is y^e most vnknownen thing that may be, and the most wonderful spirit, hauing in it no shape or likenesse, and members of anye deadlye creature: in what likenes or what image may God the father be shewed or painted?

And the Archb. said:* as holy church hath suffered the Images of the Trinitie, & al other images to be paynted & shewed: it sufficeth to them y^t are mēbers of holye church. But since thou art a rotten member, cut away from holye church: thou fauorest not the ordinaunce therof. But since the day passeth, leaue we this matter

AND then he sayd to me:* What sayest thou to the third point that is ••••fied against thee, preaching opely in Shreusbury,* that pilgrimage is not lefull: and ouer this, thou saidest that those men and women that go on pilgrimages to Canterbury, to Beuerley, to Karlington, to Walsingham, and to any such other places, are accursed and made foolish, spending their goods in waste.

☞ And I said: Sir, by this certification I am accused to you that I should teach,* that no pilgrimage is lefull. But I said neuer thus. For I know that there be true pilgrimages and lefull, and full pleasant to God: and therfore sir, howsoeuer mine enimies haue certified you of me, I told at Shrewsbury of two maner of pilgrimages.

And the Archbishop said to me, whom callest thou true pilgrimes?

☞ And I said:* Sir, with my protestation, I call them true pilgrimes traueling toward y^e blisse of heauen, which in the state, degree, or order that God calleth them to, do busie them faithfullie for to occupie all their wits bodelie and ghostlie, to knowe truelie, and to keepe faithfullie the biddings of God, hating and fleeing all the seauen deadlie sins, and euerie branch of them: Ruling them vertuouslie (as it is said before) with all their wits, doing discretlie, wilfully, and gladly, all the workes of mercy, bodelie and ghostly, after their cunning and power, abling them to the gifts of the holy ghost, disposing them to receiue them in their soules, and to hold therein, the right blessings of Christ: Busieng them to knowe and to keepe, the seauen principall vertues, and so then they shall obtaine heere through grace, for to vse thankfully to God, all the conditions of charitie. And then, they shall be moued with the good spirit of God, for to examine oft and diligentlie their conscience, that neither wilfullie nor wittinglie they erre in anie article of beleefe, hauing continually (as frailtie will suffer) all their busines, to dread and to flee the offence of God, and to loue ouer all, and to seeke euer to do his pleasant will.* Of these pilgrimes I said, what soeuer good thought that they any time thinke, what vertuous word that they speake, and what fruitfull worke that they worke: Euery such thought, word and worke is a step numbred of God, toward him into heauen. These foresaid pilgrimes of God, delight sore when they heare of Saints or of vertuous men and women, how they forsooke wilfully the prosperitie of this life,* how they withstood the suggestion of the fiend, how they restrained their fleshly lusts, how discret they were in their penance doing, how pacient they were in all their aduersities, how prudent they were in counseling of men and women, mouing them to hate all sinne, and to flie them, and to shame euer greatly thereof, and to loue all vertues, and to drawe to them, imagining how Christ and his followers by example of him, suffered scornes and sclaunders, and howe paciently they abode and tooke the wrongful manasing of tyrantes: How homely they were and seruisable to poore men, to relieue and comfort them bodely and ghostly, after Page 536 their power and cunning, and how deuout they were in prayers, how feruent they were in heauenly desires, and how they absented them from spectacles of vaine sayings and hearings, and how stable they were to let and to destroy al vices, and how laborious and ioyfull they were, to sowe and to plant vertues. These heauenly conditions and such other, haue pilgrimes, or endeuour them for to haue: whose pilgrimage God accepteth.

And agayne, I sayde, as their workes shewe, the moste part of men and women that goe nowe on pilgrimages, haue not these foresaid conditions, nor loueth to busie thē faythfully for to haue. For as I well knowe, since I haue full oft assayde, examine whosoeuer will xx. of these pylgrimes, and he shall not finde three men or women that know surely a commaundement of God, nor can say their Pater noster, & Aue Maria, nor their Creede readely in anye maner of language. And as I haue learned & also knowe somewhat by experience of these same pilgrimes, tellynge the cause, why that many men and women go hether and thether now on pilgrimage: It is more for the health of their bodies, then of their soules: more for to haue ryches and prosperitie of this world, then for to be enriched with vertues in their soules: more to haue here worldly & fleshly frendship, then for to haue frindship of God, and of his saints in heauen. For whatsoever thinge man or woman doth,* the frendship of God, nor of any other Saint cānot be had, wythout keeping of Gods commaundementes. Further, with my protestation, I say nowe as I sayde in Shrewsbury, though they that haue fleshly willes, trauel farre their bodies and spend mekel money, to seeke and to visite the bones or Images (as they saye they doe) of thys Saint or of that: such pilgrimage going is neither praisable nor thankful to God nor to any saint of God, synce in effect, al such pilgrimes dispise God and al his cōmaundements & Saints. For y^t cōmaundemēts of God they will nother know nor keepe, nor cōform thē to liue vertuously by example of Christ and of his Saints.* Wh•refore sir, I haue preached and taught openly, and so I purpose al my life time to do with Gods help, saying that such fond people waste blamefully Gods goods in their vain pilgrimages, spending their goods vpon vitious hostelars, which are oft vncleane womē of their bodies: & at the least, those goods with the which they should do works of mercy after Gods bidding, to poore needy men and women.

These poore mens goods and their liuelode, these runners about,* offer to riche priestes which haue me kill more liuelode then they neede. And thus those goods they wast wilfully, & spend them vniustly against gods bidding vpon straungers, with which, they should helpe and relieue, after Gods wil, their poore nedy neighbors at home: ye & ouer this folly, oft times diuers men and women, of these runners thus madly hether and thither into pilgrimage: borow hereto, other mens gooddes, ye and sometime they stealemens goods hereto, and they pay them neuer again. Also sir, I know wel that when diuers men and women wil go thus after their owne wills, and fyndinge out one pilgrimage: they will ordeyne wyth them before, to haue with them both men and women, that can wel sing wanton songs, and some other pilgrimes, wil haue with them bagge pipes: so that euery town that they come through, what with the noyse of their singing, and with the soūd of their piping, and with the iangling of their Caunterbury bells, and with the barkyng out of dogges after them, that they make more noyce, thē if the king came there away, w^t all his clarions, & many other minstrels. And if these men and women be a month out in their pilgrimage, many of them shall be an halfe yeare after, great ianglers, tale tellers, and lyers.

And y^r Archb. said to me: Leud Iosel, thou seest not farre inough in this matter, for thou considerest not y^r great trauaile of pilgrims: * therfore, thou blamest that thing that is praysable. I say to thee, that it is right wel done, that pilgrimes haue with them both singers and also pipers: that when one of them that goeth barefoote, striketh his to vpon a stone, and hurteth him sore, & maketh him to blede: it is well done that he or his fellow begin thē a song, or els take out of his bosom a bagpipe, for to driue away w^t suche mirth, the hurt of his fellow. For with such solace, the trauaile and wearynes of pilgrymes, is lightly, and merily borne out.

☞ And I sayd: sir, S. Paule teacheth men to weepe with them that weepe.

And the Archb. said, what ianglest thou against mēs deuotion? Whatsoeuer thou or such other say, * I say that y^r pilgrimage that now is vsed, is to thē that do it, a praysable and a good meane to come the rather to grace. But I hold thee vnable to know this grace, for thou enforcest thee to let the deuotion of the people: since by authoritie of holye scripture, men may lefully haue & vse such solace as yⁿ reouest. For Daud in his last Psalme, techeth mē to haue diuers instruments of musike for to praise therwith God:

☞ And I saide: * sir, by the sentence of diuers Doctours expoūding the psalmes of Daud: that musike and minstrelsie y^t Daud & other saints of the olde lawe spake of, ought now nother to be taken nor vsed by the letter, but these instrumēts with their musike ought to be interpreted ghostly: For al those figures are called vertues and grace, with which vertues men should please god, & praise hys name. For S. Paul sayth: al such things befell to them in figure. Therefore sir, I vnderstād, that the letter of this psalme of Daud and of such other Psalmes and sentences doth slay them that take thē now litterally. This sentence as I vnderstand sir, Christ approueth himself, putting out y^r minstrels, or that he would quicken the dead damsell.

And y^e Archb. said to me. * Lend losel, is it not lefull to vs to haue Organes, in y^e church for to worship there withall God? And I sayd, ye sir, by mans ordinance: But by y^e ordinance of God, a good sermon to y^e peoples vnderstāding were mekil more pleasant to God.

☞ And the Archb. said, that Organes and good delectable songs, quickned & sharpened more mēs wits then should any sermon.

But I saide: sir, lusty men & worldly louers, delite and couet & trauail to haue al their wittes quickned & sharpened w^t diuers sensible solace: But al the the faythful louers and followers of Christ, haue al their delite to heare gods word, and to vnderstand it truely, and to worke thereafter faithfully and continually. For no doubt, to dread to offēd God, and to loue to please him in all things quickneth and sharpeneth all the wittes of Christs chosen people: and ableth them so to grace, that they ioy greatly to withdrawe their eares and al their wits and members, frō al worldly delite and from all fleshly solace. * For S. Ierome (as I thinke) sayth. No body may ioy with this world & raigne with Christ.

☞ And y^e Archb. (as if he had ben displeased w^t mine aunswer) said to his clerks. What gesse ye that this Idiot wyll speak there,* wher he hath no dread: since he speaketh thus now here in my presence? Wel, wel, by God thou shalt bee ordayned for. And then he spake to me al angrily.

What saiest thou to this fourth point,* that is certified against thee, preaching openly & boldly in Shrewsbury, that priests haue no title to tithes.

And I sayd. Sir, I named there no worde of tythes in my preaching. But more then a month after that I was arested: there in prison, a man came to mee into the pryson, asking me what I sayd of tythes. And I sayd to him. Sir, in this towne are many clerkes and priests, of which some are called religious mē, though many of them be seculars. Therefore, aske ye of them this question. And thys man sayd to me. Syr, our Prelates say, that we also are ob^liged to pay our tithes of all thinges that renue to vs: and that they are accursed,* that withdraw anye part wittingly fro them of their tythes. And I sayd (sir) to that man, as w^t my protestation I say now before you: that I wonder that any priest dare say, men to be accursed, without the ground of Gods word, And the man said. Syr our priests say, that they curse men thus by authoritie of Gods law. And I said Sir I know not where this sentence of cursing is authorised now in the Bible. And therefore syr, I pray you that ye will aske the most cunning clerke of this town, that yee may know wher this sentēce of cursing thē y^t tithe not, is now writtē in gods law: for if it were writtē there, I wold right gladly be learned wher. But shortly this mā would not go fro me, to aske this questiō, of an other body: But required me there, as I would aunswer before God, if in this case, that cursing of priests were lawfull & approued of God? And shortly herewith came to my mind the learning of S. Peter, teaching priests specially to halowe the Lord Christ in their harts: being euermore redy (as farre as in them is) to aunswer thorough faith and hope to thē that aske of them a reason. And this lesson Peter teacheth men to vse with a meeke spirit & with dread of the Lord. Wherefore sir, I said to this man in this wise. In the old law,* which ended not fully, till the time that Christ rose vp againe from death to life: God cōmanded tithes to be giuen to the Leuits, for the great busines and daily trauaile that pertained to their office. But priests, because their trauel was mekil more easy & light, then was the office of the Leuits: God ordeined y^r priests should take for their liuelode to do their office, the tenth part of those tithes y^t were giuen to y^e Leuits. But now (I said) in the new law, neither Christ nor any of his apostles tooke tithes of y^e people Page 537 nor cōmanded the people to pay tithes, neither to Priests nor to deacons.* But Christ taught the people to do almes, that is, works of mercy, to poore needie men (of surplus, that is superfluous of their temporall goods) which they had, more then them needed reasonably to their necessarie liueloode. And thus (I sayde) not of tithes, but of pure almes of the people, Christ liued and his Apostles: when they were so busy in preaching of the word of God to the people, y^r they might not trauell otherwise for to get their liueloode. But after Christes ascension, and when the Apostles had receiued the holy Ghost: they trauayled wyth their hands, for to get their liuelode, whē that they might thus do for busy preaching. Therefore by example of himselfe, S. Paule teacheth al the priestes of Chryst for to trauaile with their hand, when for busy teaching of the people they might thus do. And thus, all these Priests whose priesthode God accepteth now, or will accept, or did in the Apostles time, and after their discease: wil do to y^e worlds end. But (as Cisterciensis telleth) in the thousand yeare of our Lord Iesus Christ. 211. yeare, one Pope the x. Gregory ordeined new tithes first to be geuen to priestes now in the new law.* But Saint Paule in his tyme, whose trace or example all Priestes of God enforce them to follow, seing the couetousnes that was among the people, desiring to destroy the soule sinne through the grace of God & true vertuous liuing and example of himselfe: wrote & taught all priestes for to follow him as he followed Christ, pacyently, willingly, and gladly in hygh pouerty: Wherefore, Paule sayth thus.* The Lord hath ordeyned that they that preach the Gospell, shall lyue of the Gospell. But we (saith Paul) that couet and busye vs to be faythfull followers of Christ, vse not this power. For lo (as Paul witnesseth afterward) when he was full poore and needy, preaching among the people: he was not chargeous vnto them, but wyth hys handes he trauayled not onely to get his owne lyuing, but also the lyuing of other poore and needye creatures. And since the people was neuer so couetous, nor so auarous (I gesse) as they are now: It were good counsell that al priestes toke hede to this heauenly learning of Paul following him herein wilful pouerty, nothyng chargyng y^e people for their bodily liuelode. But because that many Priests do contrary to Paule in this foresayde doctrine: Paul biddeth the people take hede to those priests that folow him as he had geuē them example. As if Paul would say thus to the people: Accept ye none other Priests then they, that liue after the forme that I haue taught you. For certain, in whatsoever dignity or order y^r any Priest is in, if he conforme him not to follow Christ & his Apostles in wilful pouerty, & in other heauenly vertues, and specially in true preaching of Gods word: though such a one be named a Priest,* yet he is no more but a priest in name, for the worke of a very Priest, in such a one wanteth. This sentence approueth Augustine, Gregory, Chrisostom, & Limcolne plainly.

And the Archb. saide to me. Thinkest thou this wholesome learning for to sow openly, or yet priuily among the people? Certain, this doctrine contrarieth plainly y^e ordynance of holy fathers which haue ordeined, graunted, & licenced priests to be in diuers degrees, & to liue by tithes & offrings of the people, and by other dueties.

☞ And I said, sir, if priests were now in measurable measure & number, and liued vertuously, & taught busilye and truly the word of God, by example of Christ & of his apostles, without tithes, offrings, & other dueties that priests now challenge & take: the people would geue them freely, sufficient liuelode.

And a clerke said to me. How wilt thou make this good, that the people will geue freely to priestes their liuelode: since that now by the law euery priest cā scarcely cōstraine the people to geue them their liuelode.

☞ And I said. Sir it is now no wonder though the people grudge to geue priests the liuelode that they aske: Mekil people know now, how y^r priests should liue, & howe that they liue contrarye to Christ & to his Apostles. And therefore, the people is ful heauy to pay (as they doe) their temporal goods to parsons and to other vicares & priests, which should be faythfull dispensatours of the parishes goodes: taking to thēselues no more, but a scarce liuing of tithes, nor of offrings, by the ordinance of the cōmon law. For whatsoever priests take of the people (be it tithe or offering, or any other duety or seruice) the priests ought not to haue thereof no more, but a bare liuing: & to depart the residue to the poore men & womē specially of the parish of whom they take this temporal liuing. But y^e most dele of priests now wasteth their parishes goodes, and spendeth them at their owne wil after the world, in ther vain lusts: So that in few places poore mē haue dully (as they should haue) their own sustenāce, nother of tithes nor of offrings nor of other large wages & foundations that priests take of the people in diuers maners aboue y^r they nede for nede full sustenance of meat & clothing.* But the poore nedye people are forsaken and left of Priests to be sustayned o• y^e parishens, as if the priests toke nothing of the parishers for to helpe the people with.

And thus sir, into ouer great charges of the parishens they pay their tēporal goods twice where once myght suffice, if priests were true dispensatours. Also sir, the parishners that pay their temporal goods (be they tithes or offerings) to priests that do not their office amōg them iustly are parteners of euery sinne of those Priests: * because that they sustaine those priestes folly in their sinne, with their temporal goods. If these things be well considered, what wonder is it thē sir, if the parishners grudge against these dispensators?

Then the Archb. said to me, * Thou that shouldst be iudged & ruled by holy church, presumptuously thou deemest holy church to haue erred in the ordinance of tithes & other dueties to be paid to priests. It shal be long or thou thriue Losel, that thou despisest thy ghostly mother. How darest thou speake this (Losel) among the people? Are not tithes geuen to priests for to liue by?

☞ And I said: * Sir S. Paule saith, that tithes were geuen in the old law to Leuites and to Priests, that came of the linage of Leuy. But our priests he sayth, came not of the linage of Leuy, but of the linage of Iuda, to whych Iuda no tithes were promised to be geuen. And therfore Paule saith, since the priesthode is chaūged from y^e generation of Leuy to the generation of Iuda: It is necessary that chāging also be made of the law. So that priests liue now, w^t out tithes & other duety that they now claime, following Christ & his Apostles in wilfull pouerty, as they haue geuē thē example. * For since Christ liued (all the tyme of hys preaching) by pure almes of the people. And by example of him, his Apostles liued in the same wise, or els by y^e trauaile of their hāds as it is sayd aboue. Euery priest, whose priesthode Christ approueth, knoweth wel, & confesseth in worde and in worke, that a disciple ought not to be aboue his maister, but it sufficeth to a disciple to bee as hys maister, simple, and pure, meke and pacient: and by example specially of his maister Christ, euerye Priest shoulde rule him in al his liuing, & so after his cūning & power, a priest should busy him to enforme and to rule, whom so euer hee might charitably.

And the Archbish. said to me with a great spirite, * Gods curse haue thou & mine for this teachinge: for thou wouldest hereby, make the olde law more free and perfect thē y^r new law. For thou saiest, that it is leful to Leuites and to priests to take tithes in the old law, * and so to enioy their priuilegies: but to vs priests in the new law, thou sayest it is not lawfull to take tithes. And thus thou geuest Leuites of the old law, more freedome than to priests of the new law.

☞ And I said. Sir, I maruell, that ye vnderstand thys plaine text of Paule thus. * Ye wot well, that the Leuites and priests in the old lawe that tooke tithes, were not so free nor so perfect, as Christ and his Apostles that tooke no tithes. And sir, there is a Doctor (I thinke that it is Saint Ierome) that saith thus. The priests that challenge now in the new law, * tithes: Say in effect, that Christ is not become man, nor that he hath yet suffered death for mans loue. Wherefore, this Doctor saith this sentence. Since tythes were the hires and wages limitted to Leuites and to priests of the old law for bearing about of the tabernacle, and for slayeng and fleing of beasts, and for burning of sacrifice, and for keeping of the temple, and for tromping of battell before the hoste of Israell, and other diuers obseruances that pertained to their office: Those priests that will challenge or take tithes, deny that Christ is come in the flesh, and do the priests office of the old law, for whome tithes were granted: for els (as this Doctor saith) priests take now tithes wrongfully.

And the archb. said to his clarkes. Heard ye euer Losell speake thus? Certaine, this is the learning of them all, that whersoever they come, and they may be suffered: they enforce them to expugne the freedome of holy Church.

☞ And I said.* Sir, why call you the taking of tithes, and of such other duties that priests chalenge now (wrongfullie) the freedome of holy church: Since neither Christ nor his apostles, chalenge nor tooke such duties. Herefore these takings of priests now are not called iustly the freedome of holy church, but all such geuing and taking ought to be called and holden, the slanderous couetousnes of men of the holy church.

And the archb. said to me. Why Losell, wilt not thou Page 538 and other that are considered with thee, seeke out of holy scripture, & of the sence of doctors, al sharpe authorities against lords, knights, and squiers, & against other secular men, as thou doest against priests.

☞ And I said: Sir, whatsoever men or women, lords of ladies, or any other that are present in our preaching specially, or in our cōmoning after our cūning, we tell out to thē their office & their charges: But sir, since Chrisostome sayth, that priests are the stomack of y^e people, it is nedeful in preaching, & also in commoning, to be most busy about this priesthode:. Since by the viciousnes of priestes both Lordes & cōmons are most sinfully infected & led into the worst. And because y^r the couetousnes of priests & pride, & the boast that they haue & make of their dignity and power: destroyeth not onely the vertues of priesthod in priests thēselues, but also ouer this, it stirreth God to take great vengeance both vpon the Lords, & vpon cōmons, whych suffer these priests charitably.

* And the Archb. said to me. Thou iudgest euery priest proud y^r wil not go arayed as thou doest. By god I deme him to be more meke y^r goeth euery day in a scarlet gown, thā thou in thy threed bare blew gown. Wherby knowest thou a proud man?

☞ And I said. Sir a proud priest may be known, when he denieth to follow Christ & his Apostles, in wyfull pouerty and other vertues:*. & coueteth worldly worship, and taketh it gladly, & gathereth together with pleding, manasing, or with flattering, or w^t simony any worldly goodes: And most, if a priest busy him not chiefly in himselfe, & after in all other men, and women after his cunning & power, to withstand sinne.

* And the Archb. sayd to mee. Though thou knewest a priest to haue al these vices, & though thou sawest a pryest louely lye now by a womā, knowing her fleshly: wouldst thou therfore deme this priest dānable? I say to thee y^t in the turning about of thy hand, such a sinner may be verily repented.

☞ And I sayd. Sir I wil not damne any man for any sinne that I know done or may be done, so that the sinner leaueth his sinne. But by authoritie of holy Scripture, he that sinneth thus openly as ye shew here, is damnable for doing of such a sinne: and most specially, a priest y^e shoulde be example to al other for to hate & flye sinne.* And in how short time that euer ye say y^e such a sinner may be repēted: he ought not of him y^e knoweth his sinning, to bee iudged verily repentant, without open euidence of great shame & harty sorow for his sinne. For whosoeuer (and specially a priest) that vseth pride, enuy, couetousnes, lechery, simony or any other vices: sheweth not as open euidēce of repentance as he hath geuen euil exāple & occasion of sinning, if he cōtinue in any such sinne as long as he may: it is likely that sinne leaneth him, & he not sinne. And as I vnderstād such a one sinneth vnto death, for whō no bodye oweth to pray, as S. Iohn sayth.

* And a Clerke saide then to the Archb. Sir, the lenger that ye appose him, the worse he is: and the more ye busye you to amend him, the waywarder he is. For he is of so shrewd a kinde, that he shameth not onely to be himselfe a soule nest, but withou: shame he busyeth him to make his nest souler.

*☞ And the Archbishop saide to hys Clerke. Suffer a while, for I am at an ende with him, for there is an other poynt certyfied agaynst hym, and I will heare what hee sayth thereto.

And so thā he said to me. Lo it is here certified against thee, y^t thou preachedst opēly at Shrewsbury, that it is not lawful to sweare in any case.

☞ And I said, Sir I preached neuer so openlye, nor I haue taught in this wise in any place. But sir, as I preached in Shrewsbury, w^t my protestation I say to you now here: * that by the authoritie of the Gospell of S. Iames, & by witnes of diuers Saints & doctours: I haue preached opēly in one place or other, that it is not leful in any cause to sweare by any creature. And ouer this Sir, I haue also preached and taught by the foresaid authorities: y^e no body should sweare in any case, if that without othe in any wise he that is charged to sweare might excuse him to them that haue power to compel him to sweare, in leful thing & law|ful. But if a man may not excuse him without oth, to them that haue power to cōpel him to sweare, than he ought to sweare onely by God, taking him onely that is southfastnesse, for to witnes the southfastnes.

*And then a Clarke asked me if it were not leful to a subiect at the bidding of his Prelate, for to kneele downe and touch the holy Gospel booke, and kisse it, saying: So helpe me God and this hollydome, for he should after hys cuninge and power, doe all thynges that hys Prelate commaundeth hym.

☞ And I said to them: Sirs, ye speake here full generally or largely. What if a prelate commaūded hys subiect to do an vnlawful thing, should he obey therto?

And the Archb. said to me: A subiect ought not to suppose, * that his prelate wil bid him do an vnlawfull thinge. For a subiect ought to thinke that his prelate wil bid him do nothing but that he wil aunswer for before God, that it is leful: And then, though y^e bidding of the prelate bee vnleful, the subiect hath no peril to fulfil it, since that he thinketh & iudgeth, that whatsoeuer thing his prelate byddeth him do, that it is leful to him for to do it.

☞ And I sayd, sir I trust not thereto. But to our purpose: Sir I tel you, y^t I was once in a gentlemās house, and there were then two Clarkes there, a maister of diuinity, and a man of law, which man of law was also communing in diuinitie. And among other things, these men soake of othes,* & the man of law sayd: at the bidding of his soueraigne, which had power to charge him to sweare, he would lay his hand vpon a booke, and heare hys charge: and if his charge to his vnderstanding were vnlefull, he would hastily withdraw his hand vpō the booke, taking there onely God to witnes, that he would fulfil that lefull charge, after his power. And the maister of diuinitie sayde then to him thus. Certaine, he that layeth his hand vpō a booke in this wise, and maketh there a promise to do that thing that he is commaunded: Is obliged therby by boke othe, then to fulfil his charge. For no doubt, hee that chargeth him to lay his hand thus vpon a booke (touching the booke, & swearing by it, and kissing it, promisinge in this forme to do this thing or that) wil say and witnes, that he that toucheth thus a booke, and kisseth it, hath sworne vpon that booke. And al other mē that see that man thus do, and also all those that heare hereof, in the same wise wyll say and witnes, that this man hath sworne vpon a booke. Wherefore,* the maister of diuinitie sayde, it was not lefull neyther to geue nor to take any such charge vpon a booke: for euery booke is nothing els, but diuers creatures, of which it is made of. Therefore to sweare vpon a booke, is to sweare by creatures, and this swearinge is euer vnlefull. This sentence witnesseth Chrisostome playnely,* blaming them greatly that bring forth a booke for to sweare vpon, charging Clarkes, that in no wise they constrayne any body to sweare, whether they thinke a man to sweare true or false.

And the Archbishop and his Clarkes,* scorned mee, and blamed me greatly for this saying. And the Archb. manassed me with great punishment & sharpe, except I left thys opinion of swearing.

☞ And I said: Sir, this is not myne opinion, but it is the opinion of Christ our sauour, & of S. Iames, & of Chrysostome, & other diuers saints and doctours.

Than the Archb. had a clarke read this homely of Chrisostom: which homely, this clerke held in his hand writtē in a roule: which roule the Archb. caused to be taken from my fellow at Caūterbury. And so then this clark read this role, til he came to a clause where Chrisostome sayth, that it is sinne to sweare well.

And then a clark Malueren (as I gesse) said to y^e Archb. Sir,* I pray you were of him, how he vnderstādeth Chrysostome here, saying it to be sin to sweare well.

And so the Archbish. asked me, how I vnderstode here Chrisostome.

And certaine,* I was somewhat afraid to aunswer hereto: For I had not busied me to study about the sense therof, but lifting vp my minde to God, I praied him of grace, And as fast as I thought how Christ said to his apostles: When for my name ye shall be brought before Iudges, I shall geue into your mouth, wisdom y^t your aduersaries shal not against say. And trusting faithfully in the word of God, I said: Sir, I know wel that many men & women, haue nowe swearing so in custome,* that they knowe not, nor wil not know, y^t they do euil for to sweare as they do: But they thinke and say, that they do wel for to sweare as they do, though they know wel that they sweare vntruely. For they say, they may by their swearing (though it be false) voide blame or temporal harme, which they shoulde haue,* if they sweare not thus. And sir, many men and women maintaine strongly that they sweare well, when that thing is sooth that they sweare for. Also, full many men & women say nowe, that it is well done to sweare by creatures, when they may not (as the say) otherwise be beleueed. And also, ful many men and women now say, that it is wel done to sweare by God, and by our Ladye, and by other saints, for to haue them in minde. But since al these sayings are but excusatiuous, and sinne: mee thinketh sir, that this sense of Chrisostom may be alleaged wel against Page 539 all such swearers: witnessing that al these sinne greuously though they thinke themselues for to sweare in thys foresayd wise, well. For it is euil done and great sinne, for to sweare truth, when in any maner, a man may excuse himselfe without othe.

And the Archbishop sayd, that Chrysostome might bee thus vnderstand.

*And then a clerke sayd to me: wilt thou tarye my Lorde no lenger, but submit thee here mekely to the ordinance of holy Church, and lay thy hand vpon a booke touching the holy Gospell of GOD, promising not onelye wyth thy mouth, but also with thine hart to stand to my Lords ordinaunce?

☞ And I sayd: Sir haue I not told you here, how that I heard a maister of diuinity say: that in such case it is al one to touch a booke,* and to sweare by a booke?

And the Archb. sayd: There is no maister of diuinitie in England so great, y^e if he hold this opinion before me, but I shall punish him as I shal do thee, except thou sweare as I shall charge thee.

☞ And I sayd: Sir, is not Chrisostome an ententife Doctour?

And the Archb. sayd, yea.

☞ And I sayd: if Chrisostome proueth him worthy great blame, that bringeth forth a booke to sweare vpon: it must nedes followe, that he is more to blame that sweareth on that booke.

* And the Archb. said: if Chrisostome ment accordingly to the ordinance of holy church, we wil accept him.

☞ And then said a clerke to me. Is not y^e word of God & God himselfe equipolient, that is, of one authoritie?

And I sayd, yea.

☞ Then he said to me, why wilt thou not sweare then by the Gospell of God, that is gods word, since it is al one to sweare by the word of God, & by God himselfe.

And I said: Sir, since I may not now otherwise be beleued, but by swearing: I perceiue (as Austen saith) that it is not spedeful that ye y^e should be my brethren should not beleue me: therefore I am redy by the word of God (as the lord commaunded me by his word) to sweare.

☞ Then the Clarke sayd to me. Lay then thine hand vpon the booke, touchinge the holy Gospell of God and take thy charge.

And I said: Sir I vnderstand that the holy Gospell of God may not be touched with mans hand.

☞ And the Clarke sayde I fonded, and that I sayde not truth.

And I asked this clerk whether it were more to reade y^r Gospel to touch the Gospell.

☞ And he said it was more to read the Gospell.

* Then I said: Sir, by authority of S. Hierome, the gospel is not the gospel for reading of the letter, but for the belief that men haue in the word of God. That it is the gospel that we beleue, and not the letter that we read: for because the letter that is touched with mans hand, is not the Gospel, but y^e sentence that is verily beleued in mā's hart, is the Gospel. For so Hierome saith. The Gospel, y^t is the vertue of Gods word, is not in y^t leaues of the boke, but it is in the roote of reason. Neyther the Gospel (he sayeth) is in the writing aboue of the letters, but the Gospell is in y^e marking of the sentence of scriptures. This sentence approueth S. Paule, saying thus. The kingdome of God is not in word but in vertue. And Dauid saith: The voice of the Lord that is his word, is in vertue. And after Dauid sayth: Through the word of God y^e heauē's were formed, and in the spirite of his mouth is all the vertue of thē. And I pray you sir,* vnderstand ye wel how Dauid sayth, then in the spirit of the mouth of y^r Lord, is all the vertue of angels and of men.

And the clarke sayd to me. Thou wouldest make vs to fond with thee.* Say we not that the Gospels are written in the Masse booke?

☞ And I sayd. Sir, though men vse to saye thus, yet it is vnperfect speech. For the principal part of a thinge is properly the whole thing. For lo, mans soule y^t may not now be sene here, nor touched w^t any sensible thing, is properly man. And al the vertue of a tree is in the roote thereof that may not be sene, for do away the roote, & y^e tree is destroied And sir,* as ye sayd to me right now, God & hys word are of one authoritie: And sir, S. Hierome witnesseth, y^r Christ (very God & very mā) is hid in the letter of the law: thus also sir, y^r gospel is hid in the letter. For sir, as it is ful likely many diuers men and womē here in the earth, touched Christ & saw him, & knew his bodely persō, which neither touched, nor saw, nor knewe ghostly his godhead. Right thus sir, many men now touch & see, & write, & read y^e scrip'tures of gods law, which neither see, touch, nor read effectually the gospel. For as the godhead of Christ (that is the vertue of God) is knowen by the vertue of beliefe, so is y^e Gospel, that is, Christes word.

And a clerke said to me.* These be full misty matters and vnsauery that thou shewest here to vs.

☞ And I said: Sir, if ye, y^t are maisters, know not plainly this sentence, •e may sore dread that y^e kingdome of heauen be taken from you, as it was frō the princes of priests and from the elders of the •owes.

And then a Clerke (as I gesse) Malueren, sayde to me. Thou knowest not thine equiuocations: for the kingdom of heauen hath diuers vnderstandings. What callest thou the kingdom of heauen in thys sentence, that thou shewest here?

☞ And I said: * Sir, by good reason and sentence of doctors the Realme of heauen is called here, the vnderstanding of Gods word.

And a clerke said to me. From whom thinkest thou that this vnderstanding is taken away?

☞ And I sayde: Sir (by authoritie of Christ himselfe) the effectuall vnderstanding of Christes word is taken away from al them chiefly, * which are great lettered men, & presum to vnderstand high things, & wil be holden wise men & desire maistership & high state & dignitie: but they wyll not conforme them to the liuing and teaching of Christ & of his Apostles.

Then y^e Archb. said. Wel, wel, thou wilt iudge thy soueraignes. By God, y^e king doth not his duety, but he suffer thee to be condemned.

☞ And then an other Clerke sayd to me. * Why (on Fryday that last was) counsailedest thou a man of my Lordes that he should not shriue him to no man but onely to god?

And with this asking I was abashed: And then by and by I knew that I was subtilly betraied of a mā that came to me in prison on the Friday before, cōmoning with mee in this matter of confession. * And certaine, by his words I thought, that this man came then to me, of ful feruent and charitable will: But now I know he came to tempt me & to accuse me, God forgeue him if it be his wil. And withal mine hart when I had thought thus, I said to this clerk, Sir, I pray you that ye would fetch this man hether: and all the wordes as nere as I cā repete them, which that I spake to him, on Friday in the prison. I wil rehearse now here before you all, and before him.

☞ And (as I gesse) the Archbishop said then to me. They that are now here, suffice to repete them. How saidst thou to hym?

And I sayd: Syr, that man came and asked me in diuers thinges, * and after hys asking, I aunswered him (as I vnderstoode) that good was: And as he shewed to me by his wordes, he was sory of hys liuing in court, and right heauy for his owne vicious liuing, and also for the viciousnes of other men, and specially of priests euil liuing: & herefore he sayd to me with a sorrowfull hart (as I gessed) that he purposed fully within short time for to leaue the court, and to busie him to know Gods lawe, and to confirme all hys life thereafter. And when he had sayd to me these wordes & moe other whiche I would rehearse and he were present, he prayed me to heare hys confession. And I sayd to him, sir, wherefore come ye to me, to be confessed of me, ye wote wel y^e the Archb. putteth & holdeth me here, as one vnworthy either to geue or to take any sacrament of holy Church.

☞ And he sayd to me. Brother I wote well, and so wote many other moe, that you and such other are wrongfully vexed, and therefore I common with you the more gladly. And I sayd to him. Certayne I wote well that many men of this court, and specially the priestes of this housholde would be full euill apayd both you & with me, if they wist that ye were confessed of me. * And he sayd, that he cared not therfore, for he had full little affection in them: And as me thought, he spake these wordes and many other, of so good will and of so high desire, for to haue knowne and done the pleasant will of God. And I sayd to hym, as with my foresayd protestation I say to you now here: Syr, I counsaile you, for to absent you from all euill company, and to draw you to them that loue and busie them to knowe and to keepe the preceptes of God: And then the good spirite of God will moue you for to occupy busily all your wittes in gathering together of all your sinnes, as farre as ye can bethinke you, shaming greatly of them and sorrowing hartely for them: Yea syr, the holy Ghost will thē put in your hart a good will and a seruent desire for to take and to hold a good purpose, to hate euer and to flie, (after your cūning and power) al occason of sinne: and so then, wisdomē shal come to you from aboue, lightening (with diuers beames of grace and of heauenly desire) all your wittes,* enforming you how ye shall trust stedfastly in the mercy of the Lorde: Page 540 knowledging to him onely all your vicious liuing, praying to him euer deuoutly of charitable counsel and contynuaunce. Hoping without dout, that if ye cōtinue thus, busying you faythfully to know & to kepe his biddings, that he wil (for he onely, may) forgeue you al your sinnes. And this man said to me. Though God forgeue men their sins yet it behoueth men to be assoyled of priests, & to do y^e penance that they enioyne them.

And I sayde to him, Sir, it is all one to assoyle men o^r their sinnes, & to forgeue mē their sinnes. Wherefore, sined it pertayneth only to God to forgeue sinne:* It sufficeth in this case, to counsel men & women for to l•aue their sinne, and to comfort them that busy them thus to do, for to hope stedfastly in the mercy of God. And agayne ward, Priestes ought to tel sharply to customable sinners, that if they wil not make an ende of their sinne, but cōtinue in diuers sin[•] while that they may sinne, all such deserue payne without any en[•] And herefore, Priests should ouer busye them to liue wel and holyly, and to teach the people 〈◇〉 & truly the worde of God, shewyng to all folke in open preaching and in priuy counseling; that the lord God only forgeueth sinne. And therefore, those priests y^t take vpō thē to assoyle mē of their sinnes, blaspheme God: since that it pertaineth onely to the Lord, to assoile men of all their sinnes, For no doubt, a thousand yere after y^r Christ was man, no Priest of Christ durst take vpon him to teach the people, neither priuily nor apertly, that they behoued nedes to come to be assayled of them, as Priests now do. But by authoritie of Christes word: Priests bounde indurate customable synners, to euerlasting paines, which in no time of their lyuing, would busy thē faithfully to knowe the biddings of God, nor to kepe thē. And again, al they that would occupy al their wits to hate & to flye al occasion of sinne, dreading ouer al thing, to offend God, and louing for to please him continually: to these men & women Priests shewed, how the Lord assoyleth them of all their sinnes. And thus Christ promised to confirme in heauen, al the binding and loosing that priests by authoritie of his word, binde men in sinne that are indurate therin, or loose thē out of sinne here vpon earth,* that are verely repentaunt. And this mā hearing these words said, that he might well in conscience cōsent to this sentence. But he sayd. Is it not nedefull to the lay people y^t can not thus do, to go shrine them to priests[•] And I said, If a man feele himselfe so distroubled with any sinne,* y^r he can not by his own witte auoide this synne without counsel of them that are herein wiser than he. In such a case, the counsell of a good Priest is full necessarye. And if a good priest fayle as they do now cōmonly, in such a case S. Augustine sayth, that a man may lawfully common and take counsel, of a vertuous secular mā. But certain, that mā or womā is ouerladen and too beastly, which cannot bring their owne sinnes into their minde, busying them night and day for to hate & to forsake al their sinnes, doing a sigh for them after their cunning and power. And sir, full accordingly to this sentence vpō Midlentō Sūday (two yere as I gesse now agone) I hard a Monk of Feuersam that men called Morden,* preache at Caūterbury at the crosse within Christ Church Abbey, saying thus of cōfession. That as through the suggestiō of the feend without counsell of any other body, of themselues many men & women, can imagine and find meanes & ways inough to come to pride, to theft, to lechery, and other diuers vices: In contrary wise this Monke said. Since the Lord God is more ready to forgiue sinne than the feend is or may be of power, to moue any body to sinne: than whosoeuer wil shame and sorow hartely for their sinnes,* knowledging them faithfully to God, amending them after their power and cunning, without counsell of any other body than of God and himselfe (through the grace of God) all such men and women may find, sufficient meanes to come to Gods mercy, and so to be cleane assoiled of all their sinnes. This sentence I sayd sir to this man of yours, and the selfe words as neere as I can gesse.

And the Archbishop said. Holy Church approoueth not this learning.*

☞ And I said. Sir, holy Church of which Christ is head in heauen and in earth, must needs approue this sentence. For loe, hereby all men & women may, if they will, be sufficiently taught to know & to keepe the commandements of God,* & to hate & to flie continually all occasion of sinne, and to loue and to seeke vertues busily, & to beleue in God stably, and to trust in his mercy stedfastly, & so to come to perfect charitie & continue therein perseuerantly. And more the Lord asketh not of any man here now in this life. And certaine, since Iesu Christ died vpon the crosse, wilfully to make men free: Men of the Church are to bold and to busie, to make men thrall, binding thē vnder y^e paine of endles curse (as they say) to do many obseruaunces and ordynaunces, which neither the liuing nor teachyng of Chryst nor of his Apostles approueth.

And a Clerke said thē to me: Thou shewest plainly here thy deceit, which thou hast learned of them that trauell to sow people amōg y^e wheat. But I coūsel thee to go away cleane frō this learning, & submit thee lowly to my lorde, and thou shall finde him yet to be gracious to ther.

And as fast then, an other Clerke said to me: How wast thou so bold at Paules Crosse in London, to stande there hard with thy upper boundē about thine head, and to reprove in his Sermon the worthy clerke Alkerton, drawing away al that thou mightest: yea, & the same day at afternoone, thou meeting the worthy Doctour in Watlyng streete, calledst him false flatterer and hipocrite.

☞ And I said: Sir, I thinke certainly that there was no man nor womā that hated verelye sinne, & loued vertues (heauing y^e Sermō of the clerk at Oxford, and also Alkersons Sermon) but they sayd, or might iustly say, that Alkerton reprobued that clerke vntruely, and slandered him wrongfully and vncharitably. For no doubt, If the liuing & teaching of Christ chiefly and of his Apostles be true, no body that loueth God and his law, wil blame any sentēce that the clerke then preached there: since by authoritie of Gods word, & by approued Saints & Doctours, & by opē reason, this Clerke approued all thinges clearly that hee preached there.

And a Clerke of the Archbishops saide to me, his Sermon was false, and that he sheweth openlye, since he dare not stand forth and defend his preaching that he thē preached there.

☞ And I saide: Sir, I thinke that he purposeth to stande stedfastly thereby, or els he scaundereth foully himself, and also many other that haue great trust that he will stand by the truth of the Gospel. For I wote wel, this Sermon is written both in Latin and English, and many men haue it & they set great price thereby. And sir, If ye were present with y^r Archbishop at Lambeth when this Clarke appeared and was at his aunswere before the Archbishoppe, ye wote wel that this Clerke denied not there his Sermon, but two daies he maintained it before the Archbishop and his Clerkes.

And then the Archbishop or one of his Clerkes said (I wote not which of them) that harlot shalbe met wyth, for that Sermon. For no man but he and thou, and such other false harlots, prayseth any such preaching.

And then the Arbhb. said. Your cursed sect is busie, and it ioyeth right greatly to contrary & to destroy y^e priuilege and fredome of holy Church.

☞ And I said: * Sir, I know no men that trauell so busily as this sect doth (which you reprove) to make rest and peace in holy church. For pride, couetousnes, and simony, which distrouble most holy Church: this sect hateth & fleeth, and trauayleth busilye to moue all other men in like maner, vnto meekenes and wilfull pouerty, and charitie, and free ministring of the Sacraments: this sect loueth & vseth, and is full busie to moue all other folkes thus to do. For these vertues, owe all mēbers of holy church, to their head Christ.

Then a Clerke said to the Archbishop: Sir, it is farre dayes, and ye haue farre to ride to night: therfore make an end with him, for he wil none make. But the more sir, that ye busy you for to draw him toward you, y^e more cōtumax he is made, and the farther fro you.

And then Malueren said to me: * William, kneele down, and pray my Lord of grace, & leaue al thy phantasies, and become a child of holy church.

☞ And I said: Sir, I haue prayed the Archbishop oft, and yet I pray him for the loue of Christ, that he wil leaue hys indignation that he hath against me: and that he wil suffer me after my cūning & power, for to do mine office of priest|hode, as I am charged of god to do it. For I couet nought els, but to serue my God to hys pleasing in y^e state that I stand in, and haue taken me to.

And y^r Archbishop said to mee: If of good hart thou wilt submit thee now here meekely, to be ruled from this time forth by my counsel, * obeying mekely and wilfully to mine ordinance, thou shalt finde it most profitable & best to thee for to doe thus. Therefore tary thou me no lenger, graunt to do this y^t I haue sayd to thee now here shortly, or denie it vtterly.

☞ And I said to the Archbishop: Sir, owe we to beleue that Iesu Christ was and is, very God and very man?

And the Archbishop sayd Yea.

☞ And I said: Sir, owe we to beleue that al Christes lyuing and his teaching is true in euery point?

And he sayd, yea.

Page 541☞ And I sayd: Syr, owe we to beleue, that the liuinge of the Apostles, and the teaching of Christ, and all the Prophetes, are true whiche are written in the Bible, for the health and saluation of good people?

And he sayd yea.

☞ And I sayd: Syr, owe all Christen men & women after their cunning and power, for to conforme all their liuing, to the teaching specially of Christ, and also to the teaching and liuing of his Apostles and of Prophetes, in all thinges that are pleasaunt to God, and edification of his Church?

And he sayd, yea.

☞ And I sayd: Syr ought the doctrine, the bidding, or the counsell of any body, to be accepted or obeyed vnto: except this doctrine, these biddings, or this counsel, may be graūted and affirmed by Christes liuing and his teaching specially, or by the liuing and teaching of his Apostles & Prophetes?

And y^e Archbishop said to me: Other doctrine ought not to be accepted,* nor we owe not to obey to any mans bidding or counsell, except we can perceiue that his bidding or counsell, accordeth with the life and teaching of Christ, and of his Apostles and Prophetes.

☞ And I sayd: Syr, is not all the learning, and biddings and counsels of holy Church, meanes and healefull remedies, to know and to withstand the priuy suggestions,* and the aperte temptations of the fiende? and also wayes and healeful remedies, to slea pride and all other deadly sinnes, and the braunches of them, and souereign meanes to purchase grace, for to withstand and ouercome all the fleshlye lustes and mouinges?

And the Archbishop sayd yea.

☞ And I sayd: Syr, whatsoeuer thing ye or any other body bid or counsel me to do, accordingly to this forsayd learning, after my cunning & power, through the helpe of god, I will meekly with all my hart obey therto.

And the archbishop sayd to me: Submit thee than now here meekly and wilfully, to the ordinance of holy church, which I shall shew to thee.

☞ And I sayd: sir, accordingly as I haue here now before you rehearsed, I will nowe be ready to obey full gladly to Christ the head of the holy Church, & to the learning and biddinges, and counselles of euerye pleasing member of him.*

Thē the archbishop striking with his hand fiercely vpō a cupborde, spake to me with a great spirit saying: By Iesu, but if thou leaue such additions, obliging thee now here without any exceptiō to mine ordinance (or that I go out of this place) I shall make thee as sure, as any theefe that is in the prison of Lanterne. Advise thee now what thou wilt do. And then as if he had bene angred, he went fro the cupborde where he stood, to a window.

And then Malueren and an other Clerke came nearer me, and they spake to me many words full pleasantly: and an othe while they manassed me, and counselled full busily to submitte me,* or els they sayd I shoulde not escape punishing ouer measure: For they sayd, I should be degraded, cursed, and burned, & so then damned. But now they sayd, thou mayst eschew all these mischiefes, if thou wilt submit thee wilfully & meekely to this worthye prelate, that hath cure of thy soule. And for the pittie of Christ (sayde they) bethinke thee, howe great Clerkes the Bishop of Lincolne, Hereford, and Purney were, and yet are, and also B. that is a well vnderstanding man. Which also haue forsaken & reuoked, all the learning and opinions, that thou and such other hold.* Wherfore, since each of them is mikle wiser thē thou art, we counsell thee for the best: that by the example of these foure Clerkes, thou follow them submitting thee as they did.

And one of the Bishops Clerkes sayd then there, that he heard Nicoll Hereford say: that since he forsook & reuoked all the learning & Lolards opiniōs, he hath had mikle greater fauour and more delite to hold agaynst them, then euer he had to hold with them, while he held with them.

*And therefore Malueren said to me: I vnderstand and thou wilt take thee to a Priest, and shriue thee cleane, forsake all such opinions, & take the penance of my Lord here, for the holding & teaching of them: within short time, thou shalt be greatly comforted in this doing.

☞ And I sayd to the Clerkes, that thus busily counselled me to folow these foresayd men: Sirs, if these mē of whom ye counsell me to take example, had forsakē benefices of tēporall profite, & of worldly worship, so that chey had absēted them, and eschewed from al occasions of couetousnes & of fleshly lustes, and had taken upon them simple liuing, & wilfull pouerty: they had herein geuen good example to me and to many other, to haue folowed thē. But now, since all these foure men, haue slaunderously and shamefully done the contrary, consenting to receiue and to haue and to hold tēporall benefices, liuing now more worldly & more fleshly then they did before, conforming them to the maners of this world: I forsake them herein, and in all their foresayd slaunderous doing. For I purpose with the helpe of God (into remissio of my sinnes, and of my •oule cursed liuing) to hate and to flee priuily and apertly, to follow these men, teaching and counselling whome so euer that I may,* for to flee & eschew the way that they haue chosen to go in, which will lead them to the worst end, (if in conuenient time they repent them not) verely forsaking and reuoking opēly the flaunder that they haue put, and euery day yet put, to Chri|stes Church. For certayne, so open blasphemy and slaunder as they haue spoken and done, in their reuoking & forsaking of the truth, ought not nor may not priuily be amēded, duely. Wherfore sirs, I pray you that you busy not for to moue me to follow these mē, in reuoking and forsaking the trueth, and sothfastnes as they haue done, and yet doe: wherein, by open euidence they stirre God to great wroth, and not onely agaynst themselues, but also agaynst all thē that fauor them, or consent to them herein, or that communeth with them, except it be for their amendement. For where as these mē first were pursued of enemies, now they haue obliged them by othe for to slaūder and pursue Christ in his members. Wherfore (as I trust stedfastly in y^e goodnes of God) the worldly couetousnes, and the lusty liuing and the sliding from the truth of these runnagates: shall be to me and to many other men and women, an example & an euidence, to stand more stifly by the truth of Christ.

For certayne,* right many men and women, doe marke and abhorre the foulnes and cowardnes of these foresayd vntrue men, how that they are ouercome & stopped wyth benefices, and withdrawen from the truth of Gods word, forsaking vtterly to suffer therfore bodely persecution. For by this vnfaithfull doing and apostasye of them (specially that are great lettered men) and haue knowledged openly the truth: * and now, either for pleasure or displeasure of tyrauntes, haue taken hire and temporall wages to forsake the truth and to hold agaynst it, slaundering and pursuing them that couet to followe Christ in the way of righteousnes, many men and womē therefore are now moued. But many mo thorow the grace of God, shall be moued hereby for to learne the truth of God, and to doe thereafter, and to stand boldly thereby.

Then the Archbishop sayd to his clerkes. Busye you no lenger about him, for he and other such as he is, are cōsidered together, * that they will not sweare to be obedient, & to submit them to prelates of holy church. For now since I stode here, his fellow also sent me word that he will not sweare, and that this fellow counselled hym that he should not sweare to me. And losell, in that thing that in thee is, thou hast busied thee to lose this young man, but blessed be God, thou shalt not haue thy purpose of him. For he hath forsaken all thy learning, submitting him to be buxum & obedient to the ordinaunce of holy church, and weepeth full bitterly, and curseth thee full hartily for the venemous teaching which thou hast shewed to him, counselling hym to do thereafter.

And for thy false counselling of many other & him, thou hast great cause to be right sory. For long time thou hast bu'sied thee to peruert whomsoeuer thou mightest. Therefore, as many deathes thou art worthye of, as thou hast geuen euill counselles. And therefore by Iesu, thou shalt go thether, where Nicoll Harford & Thom. Puruay were harbered. And I vndertake, or this day viij. dayes, thou shalt be right glad for to doe what thing that euer I did thee to do. * And Losell, I shal assay, if I can make thee there as sorowfull (as it was tolde me) thou wast glad of my last goyng out of England. By S. Thomas, I shall turne thy ioy into sorow.

☞ And I sayd: Syr there can no body proue lawfully that I ioyed euer, * of the maner of your going out of this land.

But Syr, to say the soth, I was ioyfull when ye were gone: for the bishop of London in whole prison ye left me, found in me no cause for to hold me lenger in his prisō, but at the request of my frēdes, he deliuered me to them, asking of me no maner of submitting.

Then the archbishop sayd to me. Wherefore that I yede out of England, is vnknowne to thee: But be this thinge well knowne to thee, that God (as I wote well) hath called me agayn, and brought me into this land, for to destroy thee and the false sect that thou art of: as by God, I shall pursue you so narrowly, that I shall not leaue a slip of you in this land.

☞ And I sayd to the archbishop: Syr, the holy Prophette Ieremy sayd to the false Prophet Anany. When the word that is the prophecy of a Prophet, is knowne or fulfilled: Page 542 then it shalbe knowne, that the Lorde sent the Prophet in trueth.

And the Archbishop (as if he had not bene pleased with my saying) turned him awayward hether and thether, and sayd. By GOD, I shall set vpon thy shinnes a payre of pearles, * that thou shalt be glad to chaunge thy voyce.

These and many moe wonderous and conuicious wordes, were spoken to me, manassing me and al other of the same sect, for to be punished and destroyed vnto the vttermost.

And the Archbishop called then to him a Clerke, and rowned with him: * and that Clerk went forth, and soone he brought in the Constable of Saltwoode Castle, and the Archbishop rowned a good while with him: And then the Constable went forth, and then came in diuers seculars, & they scorned me on euery side, & manassed me greatly. And some counselled the Archbishop to burne me by and by, & some other counselled him to drowne me in the Sea, for it is neare hand there.

And a Clerke standing beside me, there kneeled downe to y^e Archbishop, praying him that he would deliuer me to him, for to say Martins with him: & he would vndertake: that within three dayes I shoulde not resist any thing that were commaunded me to do of my Prelate.

And the archbishop sayd, that he would ordayn for me himselfe.

And then after, came agayne the Constable and spake priuily to the Archbishop: And the archbishop cōmaunded the Constable to lead me forth thence with him, & so he did. And when we were gone forth thence, we were sent after agayne. And whē I came in agayne before the archbishop: a Clerke bad me kneele downe and aske grace, and submit me lowly, and I should finde it for the best.

*☞ And I sayd thē to the archbishop. Syr, as I haue sayd to you diuers times to day, I will wilfully & lowlye obey and submit me to be ordeined euer after the cunning and power, to God & to his law, and to euery member of holy Church, as farre forth as I can perceiue that these members accord with their head Christ, and will teach me, rule me, or chastise me by authority, specially of Gods law.

And the archbishop sayd. I wist wel he would not with out such additions submit him.

And then I was rebuked, scorned & manassed on euery side: * and yet after this, diuers persons cried vpon me to kneele downe and submit me, but I stood still and spake no word. And then there was spoken of me and to me many great words, & I stood and heard them manasse curse and scorne me: but I sayd nothing.

Then a while after, y^e archbishop sayd to me. Wilt thou not submit thee to the ordinaunce of holy Church?

☞ And I sayd: Syr, I will full gladly submitte me, as I haue shewed you before.

And then the Archbishop bad the Constable, to haue me forth thence in haste.

And so then I was led forth, and brought into a foule vn honest prison, * where I came neuer before. But thanked be God, when all mē were gone forth then from me, & had sparred fast the prison doore after them: By and by after, I therin by my selfe, busied me to thinke on God, & to thanke him of his goodnesse. And I was then greatlye comforted in all my wits, not onely for that I was then deliuered for a time from the sight, from the hearing, from the presence, from the scorning, and from the manassing of mine enemies: but much more I reioysed in the Lord,* because that through his grace he kept me so, both among the flattering specially, and among the manassing of mine aduersaryes, that without heauinesse and anguish of my conscience, I passed away from them. For as a tree layd vpon an other tree, ouerwharte or Crosse wise, so was the Archbishoppe and hys three Clerkes alwayes contrarye to me, and I to them.

Now good God for thine holy name, and to the praysing of the most blessed name: make vs one together, if it be thy will (by authority of thy word, that is true perfite charity) and els not. And that it may thus be, all that this writing read or heare, pray hartely to the lord God, that he for his great goodnesse that can not be with tongue expressed, graunt to vs and to all other, which in the same wise, and for the same cause specially, or for any other cause be at dystaūce, to be knit & made one in true fayth, in stedfast hope, and in perfite charity. Amen.

Besides this examinatio here aboue described, came an other treatise also to our hands of the same W. Thorne, vnder the name and title of his testament: which rather by the matter and handling thereof, might seme to be counted a complaynt of vicious Priestes: which treatise or Testament, in this place we thought not meere to be left out.

MAtthew an Apostle of Christ,*and his Gospeller, witnesseth truly in the holy Gospell, the most holy liuing and the most wholesome teachyng of Christ. He rehearseth how that Christ likeneth thē that heare his wordes and keepe thē, to a wise mā that buildeth his house vpon a stone, that is a stable and a •ad ground. This house is mans soule in whome Christ delighteth to dwell, if it be grounded, that is stablished faythfully in his liuing & in his true teaching, adourned or made faire with diuers vertues, which Christ vsed and taught without any medling of any error, as are chiefly the conditions of charity.

This foresaid stone is Christ,*vpon which euery faythful soule must be builded, since vpon none other ground then vpon Christes liuing and his teaching, no bodye may make any building or housing, wherein Christ will come and dwell. This sentence wytnesseth S. Paule to the Corinthians, shewing to them that no body may set any other ground then is set, that is, Christes liuing and teaching. And because that all men and women shoulde geue all their businesse here in this life,*to build them vertuously vpon this sure foundation: S. Paule knowledging the seruent desire, and the good will of the people of Ephesye, wrote to them comfortablye saying: Now ye are not straungers, guestes, nor yet comelinges, but ye are the Citizens and of the householde of God, builded aboue vpon the foundement of the Apostles and Prophetes. In which foundement, euery building that is builded or made thorough the grace of God, it encreaseth or groweth into an holy tēple, that is: Euery body that is grounded or builded faythfully in the teaching and liuing of Christ, is there through, made the holy temple of God.

This is the stable groūd and stedfast stone Christ, which is the sure corner stone,*fast ioyning & holding mightely together, two walles. For through Christ Iesu, meane or middle person of the Trinitye: the Father of heauen is pitious or mercifully ioyned and made one together to mankinde. And through dread to offēd God, and seruent loue to please him, mē be vnseparably made one to God and defended surely vnder his protection. Also, this foresayd stone Christ,*was figured by the square stones of whiche the temple of God, was made. For as a square stone, wheresoeuer it is cast or layd, it abideth and lyeth stably: so Christ and euery faythfull member of his Church by example of him, abideth and dwelleth stably in true fayth, and in all other heauēly vertues in all aduersityes that they suffer in this valley of teares.

For loe, when these foresayd square stones were hewen and wrought for to be layde in the walles or pillars of Gods temple, none noyse or stroke of the workeman was heard. Certaine this silēce in working of this stone, figu•eth Christ chiefly and his faithfull members, which by example of him, haue bene and yet are, and euer to the worldes end shall be so meeke and pacient in euery aduersity, that no sound nor yet any grudging shall any time be perceiued in them.

Neuerthesse, this chiefe and most worshipfull corner stone which onely is ground of all vertues, proude beggers repriued: but this despight and reproofe, *Christ suffered most meekely in his owne person, for to geue example of all meekenesse and pacience to all his faythfull folowers. Certayne, this world is now so full of proud beggers which are named Priestes: but the very office of working of Priesthood which Christ approueth true, and accepteth, is farre from the multitude of Priests that now reigne in this world.

For from the highest Priest to the lowest all (as who say) study, that is, *they imagine and trauell busilye, how they may please this world and theyr flesh. This sentence and many such other dependeth vpon them, if it be well considered, other God the father of heauen hath deceiued all mankinde by the liuing specially and teaching of Iesu Christ, and by the liuing and teaching of his Apostles and Prophetes: or els all the Popes that haue bene, since I had any knowledge or discretion, with all the Colledge of Cardinals, Archbishops, *and Bishops, Monks, Canons, and Friers, with all the contagious flock of the communalty of Priesthood, which haue (all my life time and mikle lenger) reigned and yet reigne, & increase damnably from sinne into sinne: haue bene and yet bee proud, obstinate heretickes, couetous simoners, and defouled adulterers in the ministering of the Sacramentes, and specially in the ministring of the Sacrament of the aultar. For as their workes sheweth whereto Christ biddeth vs take heed: the highest Priestes and Prelates of this Priesthood, *challenge and occupy vnlefull, tēporall Lordships. And for temporall fauour and meed, they sell & geue benefices to vnworthy and vnable persons, yea these simoners sell sinne, suffering men and women in euery degree and estate, to lye, and continue, from yeare to yere, in diuers vices slaūderously. And thus by euil example of high priests in the church, lower Priestes vnder them are not onely suffered, but they are mayntayned to sell full deare (to the people for temporall meed) all the Sacraments.

And thus all this foresayd Priesthooode, is blowne so high and borne vp in pride and vaine glory of their estate and dignity & so blinded with worldly couetousnes: *That they disdayne to follow Christ in very meekenesse and wilfull pouerty, liuing holylye and Page 550 preaching Gods word truely, freely and continually, taking theyr liuelihood at the free will of the people of their pure almes, where and when they suffice not for theyr true and busy preaching to get their sustenance with their handes. To this true sentence grounded on Christes owne liuing and teaching of his Apostles, these foresaid worldly & fleshly Priests wil not consent effectually. *But as theyr workes and also their wordes shew: boldly and vnshamefastly these forenamed Priestes and Prelates, couet, and enforce them mightely and busily, that all holy scripture were expounded and drawne accordingly to their maners, and to theyr vngrounded vsages and findinges. For they will not (since they hold it but folly and madnesse) conforme their maners to the pure and simple liuing of Christ and his Apostles,*nor they will not followe freely their learning. Wherefore, all the Emperours and Kinges, and all other Lordes and Ladyes, and all the common people in euery degree and state, which haue before time knowne or might haue knowne, and also all they that now yet know or might know this foresayde witnes of Priesthood, and would not nor yet will, enforce them after theyr cunning and power, to withstand charitably the foresayd enemies and traytors of Christ, and of his church: all these striue with Antichrist agaynst Iesu. And they shall heare the indignation of God almighty without end,*if in conuenient time they amend them not, and repent them verelye, doing therefore due mourning and sorow, after their cunning & power. For through presumtuouesnesse and negligence of Priestes & Prelates (not of the Church of Christ, but occupying theyr prelacye vnduely in the Church) and also flattering and false couetousnes of other diuers named Priestes: Lousengers and lounderers, are wrōgfully made and named Heremites, and haue leaue to defraud poore and needy creatures of their liuelode, and to liue by theyr false winning and begging, in slouth and in other diuers vices. And also of these Prelates, these coker noses, are suffered to liue in pride and hipocrisy, and to defoule themselues both bodelye and ghostly. Also by the suffering and counsell of these foresayde Prelates and of other Priestes, are made both vayne brotherhoodes and sisterhoodes, full of pride and enuye, which are full contrary to the brotherhood of Christ, since they are cause of mickle dissetion, and they multiply and susteyne it vncharitably: for in lustye eating and drinking, vnmeasurably and out of time, they exercise themselues. Also this vaine confederacy of brotherhoodes, is permitted to be of one clothing, and to hold together.

And in all these vngrounded and vnlefull doinges, priests are parteners and great medlers and counsellors. And ouer this viciousnesse, Heremites and Pardoners, Ankers, and straūge beggers, are licensed and admitted of Prelates and Priestes, for to beguile the people with flatteringes and leasinges slaunderously agaynst all good reason and true beleue, and so to encrease diuers vyces in themselues, and also among all them that accept them or consent to them.

And thus, the viciousnesse of these foresayd named Priestes & Prelates, haue bene long time, and yet is, and shal be cause of wars both within the Realme and without. And in the same wise, these vnable Priestes haue bene, and yet are, and shalbe chiefe cause of pestilence of men, and morein of beastes, and of barrennesse of the earth, and of all other mischiefes, to the tyme that Lordes and cōmons able them through grace, for to know and to keepe the cōmaundements of God, inforcing them than faythfully and charitably by one assent, for to redresse and make one this foresayde Priesthood, to the wilfull, poore, meeke, and innocent liuing and teaching, specially of Christ and his Apostles.

Therefore, all they that know or might know, the viciousnes that raigneth now cursedly in these Priests and in theyr learning, if they suffice not to vnderstand this contagious viciousnesse: let them pray to the Lord hartily for the health of his Church, absteyning them prudently from these indurate enemyes of Christ and of his people, and from all their Sacraments, since to them all that know them or may know, they are but fleshly deedes and false: as S. Cyprian witnesseth in the first question of decrees,*and in the first cause. Ca. Si quis inquit. For as this Saynt and great Doctour witnesseth there, that not onely vicious Priestes, but also all they that fauour them or consent to them in their viciousnesse: shall together perish with them, if they amend them not duely, as all they perished that cōsented to Dathan and Abiron. For nothing were more confusion to these foresayd vicious Priestes, than to eschew them prudently in all theyr vnlefull Sacramentes, while they cōtinue in their sinnefull liuing slaunderously, as they haue lōg time done and yet do. And no body need to be afrayde (though death did folow by one wise or other) for to dye out of this world without taking of any Sacrament of these foresayd Christes enemyes: since Christ will not fayle, for to minister himselfe all Iefull & healfull Sacramentes and necessary at all time (and specially at end) to all them that are in true fayth, in stedfast hope, and in perfect charity.

But yet some mad fooles say (for to eschew slaunder) they wil be shriuen once in the yeare, and communed of theyr proper Priestes, though they knowe them defouled with slaunderous vyces. No doubt, but all they that thus do or consent priuely or apertly to such doing, are culpable of great sinne: since S. Paul witnesseth, that not onely they that do euill, are worthy of death and damnation, but also they that consent to euill doers. Also (as their slaūderous workes witenesse) these aforesayd vicious Priestes, despise and cast from them heauenly cunning, that is geuen of the holye ghost Wherefore, the Lord throweth all such despisers from him, that they vse nor do any Priesthood to him.

No doubt than, all they that wittingly or wilfully, take or cōsent that any other body should take any Sacrament of any suche named Priest, sinneth openly and damnably agaynst all the Trinity, and are vnable to any Sacrament of health.

And that this foresayd sentēce is altogether true, into remission of all my sinnefull liuing, trusting stedfastly in the mercye of God, I offer to him my soule.

And to proue also the foresayde sentence true with the helpe of God, I purposefully for to suffer meekely and gladly my most wretched bodye to bee tormented, where God will, of whom he will, and when he will, and as long as he will, and what temporall payne he will and death, to the praying of his name, and to the edification of his Church.

And I that am most vnworthy and wretched caytife, shall now through the speciall grace of God, make to him pleasaunt sacrifice with my most sinnefull and vnworthy body. Beseechyng hartely all folke that read or heare this end of my purposed Testament, that through the grace of GOD, they dispose verely and vertuously all their wittes, and able in lyke maner all their members for to vnderstand truely, and to keepe faythfully, charitably, and continually all the commaundementes of God, and so than to pray deuoutly to all the blessed Trinitie, that I may haue grace with wisdom and prudence from aboue, to end my lyfe here in this foresayd truth and for this cause, in true fayth and stedfast hope, and perfect charitie. Amen.

What was the ende of this good man and blessed seruant of God Williā Thorpe, I finde as yet in no story spe|cified. By all coniectures it is to be thought,* that the archbishop Thomas Arundell being so hard an aduersarye agaynst those men, would not let him goe. Much lesse it is to be supposed, that he would euer retract his sentence and opinion, which he so valiantly mayntayned before the byshop, neither doth it seeme that he had any such recanting spirite. Agayne, neyther is it founde, that he was burned. Wherefore it remayneth most like to be true, that he beyng committed to some straight prison (according as the Archbyshop in his examination before, dyd threaten him) there (as Thorpe confesseth himselfe) was so straightly kept, that eyther he was secretly made away, or els there he dyed by sicknesse.

The like end also I finde to happen to Iohn Aston, an other good folower of Wickliffe, who for the same doctrine of the sacrament was condemned by the Bishops, And be'cause he would not recant, he was committed to perpetuall prison, wherein the good man continued till his death. An. 1382.

John Puruey.

FUurthermore, in the sayd examinatiō of Williā Thorpe, mention was made (as ye heard) of Iohn Puruey,* of whom also something we touched before: promising of the sayd Iohn Puruey, more particularly to entreate in order and processe of time. Of this Puruey, Tho. Walden writeth thus in his second tome, Iohn Puruey sayth he, was the Library of Lollordes, and gloser vpon Wickliffe. He sayde, that the worshipping of Abrahā was but a salutatiō. And in his third Tome, he sayth: this Iohn Puruey with Harford a doctour of diuinity, were greuously tormented, and punished in the prison of Saltwood, and at y^e length recanted at Paules crosse at London (Tho. Arundel being then Archb. of Canterbury.)* Afterward agayne, he was emprisoned vnder Henry Chicheley Archb. of Canterbury, in the yeare of our Lord 1421. Thus muche writeth Walden. The workes of this man which he wrote, were gathered by Richard Lauingame his aduersarye, whiche I thinke worthy to be remēbred. First, as touching the Sacrament of the last supper, the Sacrament of penance, the Sacrament of orders, the power of the keyes, the preaching of y^e Gospell, of Mariages, of Uowes, of possessiōs, of the punishing and correcting of the Clergy, of the lawes and decrees of the Church, of the state and condition of the Pope and the clergy: Of all these generally, he left diuers monuments grauely and exactly written, part whereof, here in the end of his story we thought to exhibite, being translated out of Latine into English.

The articles which he taught, and afterward was forced to recant at Paules crosse,* were these hereafter folowing.

1. That in the Sacrament of the aultar after the consecration, there is not, neither can be, any accident without the subiect: But there verely remaineth the same substaūce Page 544 and the very visible and incorruptible bread, & likewise y^e very same wine the which before the consecration were set vpon the aultar to be consecrate of the Priest: likewise as when a Pagan or infidell is baptised, he is spiritually conuerted into a member of Christ through grace, and yet remayneth the very same man whiche he before was in his proper nature and substaunce.

2. Auricular confession or priuate penance, is a certeyne whispering, destroying the libertye of the Gospell & newly brought in by the Pope and the Clergye, to intangle the consciences of mē in sinne, & to draw their soules into hel.

*3. Euery lay man being holy, and predestinate vnto euer lasting life (albeit he be a lay man) yet is he a true Priest be'fore God.

4. That diuers Prelates and other of the Clergy, do liue wickedly contrary to the doctrine and example of Christ & his Apostles. Therefore they whiche so liue, haue not the keyes neyther of y^e kingdome of heauen, neither yet of hell: neither ought any christian to esteme his cēsure any more, then as a thing of no force. Yea albeit the pope should peradventure interdite the realme, yet could he not hurt, but rather profite vs, for so much as thereby we should be dismissed from the obseruation of his lawes, and from saying of seruice according to the custome of the Church.

*5. If any man do make an othe or vow, to keepe perpetuall chastity, or do any thing els whereunto God hath not appoynted him, geuing him grace to perform his purpose: the same vow or othe, is vnreasonable and vndiscreet, neither can any Prelate compell him to keep the same, except he will do contrary vnto Gods ordinaunce. But he ought to commit him, vnto the gouernance of the holy ghost & of his owne conscience: for so much as euery man which will not fulfill his vow or othe, can not do it for that cause.

*6. Whosoeuer taketh vpon him the office of priesthood, although he haue not the charge of soules cōmitted vnto him according to the custome of the Church: Not onely they may, but ought to preach the Gospel frely vnto the people otherwise he is a thief, excommunicated of God, and of the holy Church.

*7. That Innocentius the third Pope, and 600. bishops, and a thousand other Prelates, with all the rest of the clergy, which together with the same Pope agreed and determined: that in the sacrament of the aultar, after the couersion of the bread and wine into the body & bloud of Christ, that the acesdentes of the sayd bread and wine do remayne there, without any proper subiect of the same: the whiche also ordeyned, that all Christians ought to confesse theyr sinnes once a yeare vnto a proper priest, & to receiue the reuerent Sacrament at Easter, & made certaine other lawes at the same time: All they sayth he, in so doing were fooles and Blockeheades, Heretickes, Blasphemers and Seducers of Christian people. Wherefore, we ought not to beleue their determinations, or of their successours, neither ought we to obey theyr lawes or ordinances, except they be plain^{ly} grounded vpon the holy Scripture, or vpon some reasō which can not be impugned.

Other Articles drawne out of Purueyes bookes more at large by Ry. Lauingham.

*AS touching the Sacramēt of thanks geuing, he sayth: That that chap. of repentance and remission: Omnis vtriusque sexus, wherein it is ordeined that euery faithfull mā ought once euery yeare at the least, that is to say, at Easter to receiue the Sacrament of Eucharist: is a beastly thing, hereticall and blasphemous.

*Item, that Innocenius the 3. Pope, was the head of Antichrist, who after the letting loose of Sathan, inuented a new article of our sayth, and a certayn fayned verity touching the Sacrament of the aultar: That is to say, that the Sacramēt of the aultar is an accidēt without a substance, or els an heape of accidences without a substaunce. But Christ and his Apostles doe teach manifestly, that the Sacrament of the aultar is bread, and the body of Christ together after the maner that he spake: And in that he calleth it bread, he woulde haue the people to vnderstande as they ought with reason, that it is very and substaunciall bread, and no false nor sayned bread.

And although Innocētius that Antichrist doth allege, that in the councell at Lions where this matter was decided were 600. Bishops with him, and 1000. Prelates, which were in one opiniō of this determination: Al those notwithstanding he talleth. fooles according to that saying of Eccl. Of footes there are an infinite number. And so in like maner he calleth them false Christes & false prophets; of whom Christ speaketh the 24. of Mathew: Many false Christes and false Prophets shall arise and deceiue many: And therfore, euery Christian man ought to beleue firmly that the sacrament of the aultar is very bread in deed, and no false nor sayned bread, And although it be very bread in deed, yet notwithstanding, it is the very body of Christ in y^e sort he spake and called it his body: and so it is very bread, and the very body of Christ. And as Christ concerning hys humanity, was both visible and passible, and by his Diuinity was inuisible and unpassible: So likewise, this sacrament in that it is very bread, may be sene with the corporal eie, and may also abide corruption. But although a man may see that Sacrament, yet notwithstanding, cannot the body of Christ in that Sacrament be seene with the corporall eye, although it be the body of Christ in that maner he spake it: For that notwithstanding, the body of Christ is now incorruptible in heauē. So the Sacrament of the cup is very wine, & the very bloud of Christ, according as hys maner of speaking was. Also Innocentius, 3, with a great multitude of his secular Clerkes, made a certayne new determination: that the Sacrament of the aultar is an accident without a substance,* whereas, neither Iesus Christ nor any of his Apostles, taught this sayth (but openly and manifestly to the contrary) neither yet the holy Doctours, for the space of a thousand yeares & more, taught this faith openly.

Therefore, when Antichrist or any of his shauelinges doth aske of thee that art a simple Christian, whether that this Sacrament be the very body of Christ or not: affirme thou it manifestly so to be. And if he aske of thee whether it be materiall bread, or what other bread els: say thou, that it is such bread as Christ vnderstood and ment by his proper word:* and such bread, as the holy ghost ment in S. Paule when he called that to be very breade whiche he brake, and wade thou no further herin. If he aske thee, how this bread is the body of Christ: Say thou, as Christ vnderstoode the same to be his body which is both omnipotent and true, & in whom is no vntrueth. Say thou also, as the holy Doctors do say, that the terrestriall matter or substaunce, may be conuerted into Christ, as the Pagan or infidell may bee Baptised: and herby spiritually to be conuerted and to be a member of Christ, and so after a certayne maner to become Christ, and yet the same man to remayne still in his proper nature. For so doth S. Augustine graunt, that a sinner forsaking his sinne and being made one spirite with God by fayth, grace, and charity: may be cōuerted into God, and to be after a maner, God: as both Dauid, and S. Iohn do testifie, and yet to be the same person in substaunce and nature, and in soule and vertue to be altered & chaūged. But yet, men of more knowledge and reasō, may more plainely conuince the falsity of Antichrist both in this matter and in others, by the gift of the holy Ghost working in thē. Notwithstanding, if those that be simple men will hūbly holde and keepe the manifest and apparaunt wordes of the holy scripture, & the playn sense and meaning of the holy ghost, and proceed no farther, but humbly to commit that vnto y^e spirite of God which passeth theyr vnderstanding: Then may they safely offer themselues to death, as true Martyrs of Iesus Christ.

As touching the Sacrament of penance: That chapter Omnis vtriusque sexus, by which a certayne newe founde auricular confession was ordeined:* is full of hipocrisie, heresy: couetousnes, pride, & blasphemy he sayth, and reproueth the same chapter verbatim, and that by the sentences of the same proces. Also, that the penance and paynes limited by the Canons, be vnreasonable and vniust, for the austerity and rigorousnes which they conteine, more then are taxed by Gods law. He also doth exemplify, of the solemne and publicke deniall of penitentes to be receiued into orders, according to the decree of the generall Councell Distinctione 50. cap Ex poenitentibus. Also of the seuenfold penitence of a priest committing fornication, according to the chapter. Praes biter Distinct. 82. And farther sheweth, an other example of the penitence of Priestes according to that chater. Qui praes biterum &c. Whereas the decretall of the generall Counsell sayth, that such a one ought to remayne continuing his life, in the warres, and not to mary. And how Innocentius 3. brought in a new founde confession: whereby, the Priestes do oppresse the simple lay men. And that many other things they do, compelling them to confesse themselues to blind and ignoraunt Priests, in whom is nothing els then pride and couetousnes, hauing suche in contempt as are learned and wise. Also, that the Decretall of Innocentius 3. touching the foresayd auricular or vocal confession: was brought in and inuented, to intricate & intangle mens consciences with sinne, & to draw thē downe to hell. And furthermore, that such maner of confession, destroyeth the Euangelicall libertye, and doth let men to inquire after, & to retayn, the wise counsell & doctrine of such Page 545 as be gods priests: which know faithfully how to obserue his precepts and commaundements, & which would willingly teach the people, the right way to heauē. For which abuse, all Christen men and spicially all Englishmē, ought to exciayne agaynst such wicked lawes.

As touching the Sacrament of order he sayth: That al good christians, are predestinate and be ordeined of God, & made true Priestes to offer Christ in themselues, and to Christ, themselues: as also to teach and preach the Gospell to their neighbors, as well in word as in exāple of liuing. But the worldly shauelings do more magnify the naked & bare signes of priesthood (inuented by sinfull men) then the true & perfect priesthood of God, grounded by a true & liuely sayth, annexed with good works. Also, if it were needfull to haue such shauelings, God knoweth how, & can make when it pleaseth him, priestes (without mans working & sinfull signes, that is to say, without either sacramentes or characters) to be known & discerned of the people, by their vertuous life and example, and by their true preaching of y^e law of God for so made he the first made priestes & elders before the law of Moyses: and so made he Moyses a priest before Aaron, & before the ceremonies of the law, without mans operation at all: And euen so hath God made al such as are predestinate, to be his priestes. But such as be true Christians,* receiue none such as Priestes, but vnlesse they follow Christ and his apostles, neither do they beleue that they make the sacrament of the auitar (which they affirme to be Gods body) when it pleaseth thē: least happely God be not with them, forasmuch as that they do this thing for couetousnes sake, or els to brag of their owne power And therefore such as be simple men, will worship that Sacrament in this doubtfulnes, with a silent conditiō, that is, if it be made by Gods authority, and to haue their deuotiō to the body of Christ in heauen. Also, that as such be elders, if they be Gods priestes, be Bishops, Prelates, and Curats of their Christian brethren, whom they may lead to heauē by the example of their holy conuersariō, and by preaching of the gospell although they make no sacrifice to that Antichrist of Rome for their confirmation: neither be they dedicated to the world by secular diuine thinges, and by consuming the liuinges of the poore: as be those secular bishops, prelates & curates.* Also, that although there were no pope according as the custome of the church is: yet Christ which is the hed of his church, doth ordeyne such a Pope as pleaseth him: and that is, whomsoeuer is most humble & lowly and best doth the office of a true Priest, although he be vnknown to y^e world. And although ther were no such proud bishop aboue all the rest, as the church doth vse: yet all the priestes might well gouern the church by common asient, as once they did, before such wordly pride crept in amōgst the Bishops, &c. And admit that no such Priestes were according to the accustomed vse now of receiuing of order & torsure,* by such a mytred Byshoppe and his tonsure: yet: Christ knoweth both how to make and chuse such as shall well please him, both in conuersation of life, & sincere preaching of the Gospell, in ministring to his people all necessary sacraments. And euery holy man which is a minister of Christ, although he be not shauen, is a true Priest ordeined of God, although no mitred Bishoppe euer lay his character vpon him: So, that the Pope and Prelates, doe make more estimation of their Characters (as tonsures & crownes by them inuented) then of the true and perfect priesthood ordeined of God: whereas, all those that are predostinate, are true Priestes made of him.

As touching the authoritye of the keyes and censures, no Christian man ought to esteeme Sathan (whom men call the pope) and his vniust cēsures: more then the hissing of a serpēt, or the blast of Lucifer. Also, that no man ought to trust or put confidence in the false indulgences of couetous Priestes, which indulgences do draw away the hope which men ought to repose in God, to a sort of sinful men, and do robbe the poore of such almes as is geuen to them: Such Priestes be manifest betrayes of Christ and of the whole Church, and be Sathans own stuardes to beguyle christen soules by theyr hipocrisy and fayned pardons. Also, forasmuch as those prelates and clergy men liue so execrable a life, contrary to the gospel of Christ, and examples of his Apostles, & teach not truly the gospell, but only lies and the traditions of sinfull wicked men: It appereth most manifestly that they haue not the keyes of the kingdome of heauen, but rather the keyes of hell. And they may be right well assured, that God neuer gaue vnto them authority to make & establish so many ceremonies & traditions, which be contrary to the liberty of the Gospell, and are blocks in christen mens wayes, that they can neither know nor obserue the same his Gospel, in liberty of cōscience, and so attayne a ready way to heauen.

Also, that al maner of religious men, notwithstanding the chapter Religiosi, touching the priuiledges in the Clementines: may lawfully minister all sacramēts to the that are worthy the same. Forasmuch as the same is a worke of charity, which onely the will and ordinance of the pope and his sautors in this case is to hinder and set. Item, if the Pope shall interdict this our realme: that cannot hurt vs,* but much profite vs: Because that therby he should seporate vs from all his wicked lawes, and frō the charges of sustaining of so many thousand shauelings, which with smal deuotiō or none at all, patter and charter a new solid song seoundum vsum Sarum. So that not whatsoeuer y^e pope in his generall counsell hindeth in earth, is bound of God in heauen: either for that he hindeth vnreasonably, and cōtradictorily doth agaynst himself, or els for that he hath forsaken the iudgement of God.

As touching the preaching of the Gospell: whoseuer receiueth or taketh vpō him y^e office of a priest or of a bishop and dischargeth not the same by the example of his good cō|uersation and faythfull preaching of the Gospel: is a theef, excommunicate of God, and of holy church. And further if the curates preach not the word of God, they shalbe damned, and if they know not how to preach, they ought to resigne their benefices: So that those prelates which preach not the Gospel of Christ (although they could excuse themselues from the doing of any other euill) are dead in themselues, are Antichristes, and Sathans trāffigured into angels of light, might theues, manquellers by day night, & betrayes of Christ his people.

Concerning the sacrament of Matrimony:* Notwithstanding any spirituall kinred or gossopry, a man and woman may lawfully mary together by the law of god, with out any dispensatiō

papistical. And in y^e same place he sayth that if our realm do admit one not borne in matrimony or illegitimate to the imperiall crowne, so that he doth well discharge the office of a king: God maketh him a king, and by cōsequence doth reiect an other king or heyre of y^e kindome, being borne in matrimony and legitimate: So, for such spirituall kindred there ought no diuorse to be made. Also notwithstanding the Cap. Si inter de sponsalibus: If any man shall make any contract with any woman by y^t wordes of the future tence, by an oth taken: & afterwards shall with an other woman make the like contract by the wordes of the present tence: * that then the second contract standeth. Also, if a man make any cōtract with a womā by the wordes of the future tence, vpō his oth taken: & maketh afterwarde the like contract with another not altering the words and hath carnal copulation vpon the same: the first contract maketh the matrimony good, and not the second. Also, if a man before witnes assure himselfe to a woman by a contract made in the present tence, & hath children by the same woman: & afterward the same man marieth another woman, with the like wordes in the present tence, before witnesse: Although the first witnesses be deade, or els by bribes corrupt, and y^e second bring his witnesses before the iudge to proue the second contract: the first cōtract yet standeth in force, although the Pope (allowing the secōd contract) doth compell them to liue in adultery agaynst y^e conmaundement of God. Also, he condemneth the decretall of the restitution of things stollen Cap. Literas tuas: which wrieth, that a man and woman hauing carnall copulation in the degree of consanguinity foriddē, and hath no witness hereof: If the woman will depart from the man she shall be compelled by the censures, to remayne with him, and to yelde her debt. Also, in case where a man hath made cōtract with two women, with one secretly hauing no witnesse, and wich the other openly hauing witnesse: Then were it better to acknowledge the insufficiency of the law, and to suffer men to be ruled by their owne consciences, then by the censures to compell them, to committe and lyue in adultery.

As touching the keeping and making of vowes: * That vow or othe is beastly, and is without al discretion made: which to performe and keep a man hath no power but by grace geuen him of God. Because that some such there be, whom god doth not accept to perseuere in the state of chastity and perpetuall virginity: and such a one cannot keep his vow, although he make the same. Also that euery one making a vow of continencye or chastitye, when making the same he shall not be accepted of God: doth very vndiscretly, and as one without al reason maketh the same, whē he is not able of himself without y^e gift of God to fulfil his promise: according to that saying of the wise mā. cap. 8. No man hath the gift of cōtinency, vnles that God geue it vnto him. For otherwise, if god help not such a one to perform the vow or othe which he hath made and sakē: No prelate can compell him, vnles he do cōtrary to Gods ordinance: Page 546 but he ought to cōmit himself to the gouernment of Gods holy spirit, and his owne conscience.

For the possessions of the Church: In another treatise it is declared, how the king, the Lordes and commōs may without any charge at all, kepe 15. garrisons, & finde 15000. souldiours, (hauing sufficient landes and reuenues to liue vpon) out of the temporalties gotten into the hands of the clergy & fained religious men: which neuer do that, which pertayneth to the office of curates to doe, nor yet to secular lords. And moreouer, the king may haue euery yere 20000 pound to come freely into his cofers and aboue. Also, may find or sustaine 15. Colledges more: and 15000. priestes and clerkes, with sufficient liuing: and a 100. hospitals for the sicke & euery house to haue one hundreth marks in lands. And all this may they take of the foresayde temporaltyes, without any charge to the realme: wherunto, the king, the Lords, and the commons are to be inuited. For otherwise there seemeth to hang ouer our heads, a great and maruelous alteratiō of this realme, vnlesse the same be put in exe'cution. Also, if the secular Priestes and sayned religious, which be simoniackes and heretiques, which sayne themselues to say masse, and yet say none at all, according to the Canons, which to their purpose the bring and alledge. 1. q 3. Audiuius. & cap. Pudenda. & cap. Schisma: By which chap. such priestes and religious do not make the Sacrament of the aultar: That then all Christians, especially all the soūders of such Abbeyes and indowers of bishoprickes, priories, and chaunteries: ought to amend this fault and treason committed agaynst their predecessors, by taking from them such secular dominiōs which are the mayntenance of all their sinnes. And also, that Christian Lords & princes are bound to take away from the clergy, such secular domi'nion as noseleth & nourisheth them in heuesies: & ought to reduce them vnto the simple and poore life of Christ Iesus, and his Apostles.

And further, that all Christian Princes (if they will amend the maledictiō and blasphemy of the name of God) ought to take away their temporalities frō that shauen generation,* which most of all doth nourish them in such malediction: And so in likewise, the fat tithes from Churches appropriat to rich monks & other religions fained by manifest lying, & other vnlawful meanes, likewise ought to debar their golde to the proud Priest of Rome, which doth poyson all Christendome with Simony and heresy. Further, that it is a great abhomination that Bishops, mōks, and other prelates, be so great Lords in this world, where as Christ with his Apostles, and disciples, neuer took vpon thē secular dominion, neither did they appropriat vnto them churches as these men do: but led a poore life, & gaue a good testimony of theyr priesthood. And therefore, all Christians ought to the vttermost of theyr power and strength to sweare that they will reduce such shauelings, to the humility and pouerty of Christ and his Apostles: And whosoever thus doth not, consenteth to theyr heresy. Also, that these two chapiters of the immunitye of Churches, are to be condemned, that is, cap. Non minus, and cap. Aduersus. Because they doe decree, that temporall Lordes may neyther require tallages nor tenthes, of any Ecclesiasticall per'sons.

Now to the correction of the clergy: By the law of god and by reason, the king and all other Christians may take reuenge of Italye, and of all the false Priests and Clerkes within the same, and to reduce them vnto the humble ordinaunce of Iesus Christ. Also, that the law of Siluester the Pope, which is declared in 2. q. 5. cap. Praesul, and cap. Nullam, is cōtrary to the law of Christ & either testament. And that proud and ambitious Siluester by this lawe, so defended two Cardinals which were not to be defended by the law of Christ: that by no meanes they might be conuincid, although they were both vicious & euil. And although christ sustened and suffered the iudgemēt of vniust temporal iud'ges: Our mitred prelates in these dayes, so magnify them'selues beyond christ and his Apostles, that they refuse and will none of such iudgements. Also, that those decretals of accusations cap. Quando & Qualiter. Which do prohibite that any clerkes should be brought before a secular iudge to receiue iudgement: do contayne both heresy, blasphemy, and error, and bringeth great gayne and commodity to Antechristes cofers.

Furthermore, that all Christian kinges and Lordes, ought to exclayme agaynst the Pope and those that be hys sautors, and banish them out of theyr landes, till such time as they will obey God, and his Gospell, Kings and other ministers of Gods iustice. Also, that bishops and theyr fauourers, that say it appertayneth not to kings and secular Lordes (but vnto them and theyr Officials) to punish adultery and fornicatiō: do fall into manifest treason agaynst the king,* and heresy agaynst the scripture. Also, that it appertayneth to the king, to haue the order both of priests & bishops, as these kings Salomon and Iosaphat had.

Furthermore, that chapter Nullus iudicium de foro competenti, by the which secular iudges are forbidden without the Bishops commandement to condemne any Clerk to death: Is manifestly agaynst the holy scripture, declaryng that kinges haue power ouer clerkes & priestes to punish thē for their deserued crimes. Also that the decree of Boniface de poenis in 6. cap. foelicis, made agaynst the persecutors, strikers, and imprisoners of Cardinals, as contrary both to the holy scripture & to all reason. Also, that by the law of God and reason a secular Lord may lawfully take a Cardinal & put him in prison for committing the crime of open sunony, adultery, & manifest blasphemy. Also y^t the chapier Si Papa dist. 40. which sayth that the Pope ought to be iudged of none, vnles he be deuus a fide, is cōtrary to y^e gospell which sayth: If thy brother sinne agaynst thee correct him. Also where as S. Gregory and S. Augustine called themselues the seruants of Gods seruants: this proud bishop of Rome which will not be iudged by his subiects (which be in very deed his Lordes, if they be iust & good men) doth destroy the order of Gods law, and all humility, and doth extoll himself aboue God and his Apostles. Also, that christian kings ought, not onely to iudge this proud bishop of Rome, but also to depose him, by the example that Cestrensis lib. 6. cap. 8. declareth, of Otho the Emperour, which deposed Iohn the xii. and did institute Leo in his place.* And further, he maketh an exhortation to the Princes to iudge the Church of Rome, which he calleth the great and cursed strompet, of whom S. Iohn writeth in the Apocalips, chap. 17.

Lastly, touching the lawes and determinations of the church: Christians haue reasonable excuses and causes to repell the statutes of the pope and of his shauelings, which be not expresly grounded in the holy scriptures, or els vpon reason ineuitable. Also he sayth that that law whiche is set forth of consecration distinctione. 2. cap. Seculares & cap. Omnis homo, & cap. Et si non frequentius, & cap. In coena domini.* That such secular men as do not receiue the sacrament of the aultar at Christmas, Easter, and Whitsontide, are not to be counted amongst the number of Christians, nor are to be esteemed as christiās: wherby it followeth, that all Clerkes and lay men that obserue not the same, it seemeth they go strait to hell. But if this law be of no force, for that the custome and vse in receiuing is contrary to the same: then may we blesse such rebellion & disobediēce to the pope and his law, for otherwise we should flee to hel without any stay or let. Wherby we may conclude, that all Christiās ought well to practise this schoole of disobedience against y^e Pope and all his lawes (not founded vpon the holy scripture) which do let men to clime to heauen by the keping of charity, and the liberty of the Gospell. Also, that Christian men haue great cause to refuse the lawes and statutes of these worldly clerkes, which y^e people call the papal lawes and bishoplike statutes, for the couetousnesse and voluptuousnesse of them: without the which, the church & congregation of God might safely run towards heauē by y^e sweet yoke of the Lord, as it did 1000. yeres before the said lawes were prescribed and sēt to the Uniuersities, and withdrew mē from studyng of y^e holy scripture, for the desire of benefices and worldly goods. Also that simple men do reuerētly receiue the sentences of the Doctors and other lawes,* so farre forth as they be expresly groūded vpon the holy scripture or good reason. Also, that where as the Popes lawes, & lawes of his ministers & clerks be both cōtrary to them selues, and haue not theyr fōundation neither vpon y^e scripture, nor yet vpon reason: simple mē ought to bid thē farewell. Also, that when all the apostles faith fayled thē in the time of the Lords passiō, faith thē rested in the blessed virgin: much more might that proud priest of Rome with all his rabble easily erre in the fayth, and yet is the Christian fayth preserued whole and safe, in the faythful members of Christ, which are his true Church: But the Pope and all his rabblement,* cannot proue that they be any part of thys Church. Also, that the Pope with all his fautours, may as well be deceiued by a lying spirite, as was Achab and all his prophetes: and that one true prophet, as was Micheas may haue the verity shewed vnto him contra concilium, Also, that all good Christians ought to cast from them the Popes lawes, saying: Let vs breake their bandes in sonder, and let vs cast from our neckes those heauy yonkes of theyrs.* Also, that where these prelates doe burne one good booke, for one error perhaps conteyned in the same: they ought to burne all the books of the Canon law, for the manifold heresies contayned in them.

And thus muche out of a certaine olde written booke Page 547 in parthment borrowed ouce of I.B. which booke conteining diuers auncient records of the vniuersitie: seemeth to belong sometimes to the library of the Uniuersitie, bearing the yeare of the compiling thereof. 1296. Which computation if it be true, then was it written of him or that he recanted before Thomas Arundell Archbishop at Saltwood, where he was imprisoned. Whereunto I thought also to annexe, a certayne godly and most frutefull Sermon, of like antiquitie, preached at Paules crosse much about the same time, learned clerke, as I find in one old monument, named R. Wimbeldon. Albeit among the auncient registers and records belonging to the Archbishop of Canterbury: I haue an old worne copy of the said Sermon, written in very old English, and almost halfe consumed with age: purposing the said autor beere of bearing also the foresayd name. The true copy of which Sermon, in his owne speech wherein it was first spoken and preached at the crosse, on the Sonday of Quinquagesima, and after exhibited to the Archbishop of Canterburie (being then as it seemeth William Courtney) here foloweth.

A Sermon no lesse godly then learned, preached at Paules Crosse on the Sonday of Quinquagesima. ann. 1389. by R. Wimbeldon.

*My dere frends, ye shullen vnderstand: that Christ autor and doctour of trueth, in his booke of the Gospell (likening the kingdome of heauen to anhouholder) saith on this maner. Like is the kingdome of heuen to an housholding man, that went out first on the morow to hire workemen into his vine. Also, about the third, sixt, nienth and enleunte houres he went out, and found men standing idel. And sayd to them. Go ye into min vineyerde, and that right is, I wille geue you. Whan the day was agoo, he clepid his stuard and high to geue echē man a peny.

*The spirituall vnderstanding of this housholder, is our Lord Iesu Christ that is head of the household of holy Church. And thus clepith men in diuerce houres of the day, that is in diuerce agees of the worlde. As in time of law of kinde, he cleped by enspiryng, Abel, Ennok, Noe, and Abraham. In time of the old law, Moses, Dauid, Isay, and Ieremy. And in time of grace, Apostles Martyrs, and Confessours and Virgines. Also he cleped men in diuers agees, some on childhode, as Iohn Baptist: some on state of waxing, as Iohn the Euangelist: some in state of manhoode, as Peter and Andrew: and some in old agee as Gamaliel, and Ioseph of Arimathie. And all these he clepeth to trauaile in his vine, that is the Church, and that in diuers maner. For right as yee seeth, that in tilling of the materiall vine there ben diuers labours, for some kutten away the voyde braunches, some maken forkis and railles to beren vp the vine, and some diggen away the olde earth fro the rote, and leyn there fatter. And all this offices ben so necessary to the vine, that if any of them faile, it shall harme greatly, other destroy the vine: For but if the vine be kutte, she shall waxe wilde, but if she be rayled she shall be ouergo with netles and wedis. And but if the rote be fatted with donge, shee for feblenes shuld waxe baraine.

Right so in the Church beth nedefull thes three offices, priesthood, knythode, and laborers. To priests it falleth, to kut away the void braunches of sinnes with the swerd of her tong. To knighthode it falleth to letten wronges, and thefftes to ben done, and to maintaine Goddis law, and them that ben teachers therof, and also to kepe the londe from enemies of other londes. And to labourers it falleth, to trauail bodelich, and with ther sore swete, geten out of the earth bodillech lifelode for hem, and other parties. And these states beth also nedefull to the Church, that none may well ben without other, for if priesthod lacked, the people for default of knowing of Gods lawe, should waxe wilde in vices, and deyen gostely. And if the knithod laked, and men to rulin the puple by law and hardinesse, theeues and enemies shulden so encres that no man shuld liue in peace. And if the laborers were nought, both knightes and priestes must bicomme acre men and herdis: and els, they shuld for defaute of bodily sustenaunce deye. And therefore saith clerk Auicenne, that euery vnreasonable best if he haue that that kind hath ordeined for him: as kinde hath ordeined it: he is suffisaunce to liue by himselfe without any helpe of other of the same kind. As if there were but one horse other one shepe in the world, yet if he had grasse and corne as kind hath ordeined for such beastes, he shuld liue well I now. But if there ne were but O man in the world, though he had all that good that is therein, yet for defaut he shuld deie, or his life shuld be wors tha if he were naught, & the cause is this for that thing that kind ordeineth for a mans sustenaunce, without other arraieng than it hath of kind, accordeth nought to him. As though a man haue corne as it commeth from the earth, yet it is no meate according to him, vnto it be by mans craft, chaunged into bread: and though he haue flesh other fish, yet while it is rawe as kinde ordeined it, till it be by mans trauaile sodden, roasted, or baken, it cordit not to mans lifelode. And right so, wolle that the sheepe beareth mot by mannis diuers craftis and trauailes be chaunged or it be able do cloth any man: and certis O man by himselfe; shuld neuer doo all these laboures. And therefore saith this clerke, it is neede that some be acre men, some bakers, some makers of cloth, and some marchaunts to fetch that, that on londe fetteth from an other there it is plentie.

And certis this shuld be a cause why, euery state shuld loue other. And men of o craft shuld nor despise ne hate men of none other craft, fith they be so nedefull euerich to other. And oft thelke craftes that ben most vn timerly, might worst ben forbore: and o thing I dare well say that he that is neither trauailing in this world, on studieng, on praiers, on preaching, for helpe of the people as it falleth to prists, neither ruling the people, mainteining ne defending fro enemies as it falleth to knights, neither traueling on the earth, in diuerse craftes, as it falleth to labourers: Whan the day of rokening commeth that is, the end of this life, right as he liued here withouten trauaile, so he shall there lack the reward of the pense, that is, the endles ioie of heauen. And as he was here liuing after none state ne order, so he shall be put than in that place that no order is in, but eueralasting horror and sorow, that is in hell. Herfore, eueriche man se to what state God hath cleped him, and dwell he therin by trauaile according to his degree.* Thou that art a laborer or a crafty man, do this truely. If thou art a seruaunt or a bond man, be suget and lowe in drede of displeasing of thy Lord: If thou art a marchaunt, disceiue nought thy brother in chaffering. If thou art a knight or a Lord, defend the poore man and needy fro handes that will harme them.* If thou art a Iustice or a Iudge, go not on the right hand by fauour, neyther on the left hand, to punish any man for hate. If thou art a priest, vndernine, praye, and repreue, in all maner patience and doctrine. Vnderuime thilke that ben negligent, pray for thilke that bene obedient, reprove tho that ben vnobedient to God. So euery man trauaile in his degree. For whan the euen is come, that is, the end of this worlde: than euerye man shall take reward, good or euill, after that he hath trauallled here.

The wordes that I haue taken to make of my sermon, be thus muche to say. Yelde reconing of thy bayly. Christ autour of pitye and louer of the saluation of his people, in the proces of this gospell enfourmeth euery man what is his baylye, by maner of a parable of a bayly that he speaketh of, to aray him to answer of the goodes that God hath taken him, when the day of straight reconing shall be come, that is the day of dome. And so I at this tyme throwe the helpe of God, folowing him that is so great a maister of autoritie, because that I know nothing that should more drawe away mans vnreasonable loue fro the passing ioy of thys world, then the minde of the dreadfull reconing. As much as suffice, I shall shewe you how ye shall dispose you to auoide the vengeance of God, when ther shalbe time of so straight doome, that we shall geue reconing of euery idle word that we haue isproken. For than it shal be said to vs,* and we shall not flee it: Yelde reconing of thy bayly.

But for forther proces of this first party of this sermon, yee shall wete: that there shall be three bay lifes that shall be cleped to this straight reconing. Twaine to answer for them selfe and for other, that bene priests that haue cure of mens soules, & temporal mē that haue gouernayle of people: and the thirde baylyf shall account onely for himselfe, and that is euerye Christen man, of that he hath receiued of God. And euery of these shall aunswer to three questions.* To the first question, how hast thou entred? The second, how hast thou ruled: And to the third, how hast thou liued? And if thou canst well assoile these three questions, was there neuer none earthly Lord that euer so well rewarded his seruant without comparison, as thy Lord God shal reward thee, that is with blisse, and ioye, and life that euer shall last. But on that other side, and thou wilt now be recheles of thine owne welfare, and take none heede of this reconing: If that day take thee sodainly, so that thou passe hence in deadly sinne (as thou worst neuer what shall fall thee) all the tounge that euer were, or euer shall be, mow not tell the sorrowe and wo that thou shalt euer be in, and suffer. Therefore, the desire of so great ioy, and the dread of so great paine, though loue ne dread of God were not in thine hart: yet should that make thee afeard to sinne, for to thinke that thou shalt giue reconing of thy bayly. Therefore as I say to thee, the first question that shall be proposed to the first bayly, that is a prelat other a Curat of mens soules, is this: How hast thou entred? Math. xxij. Friend, how entredst thou hether? Who brought thee in to this office? Truth or Symony? God or the Deuill? Grace or mony? The flesh or the spirit? Giue thou thy reconing if thou canst. If thou canst not, I rede that thou tary for to learne. For vp hap ere night thou shalt be cleped. And if thou stande dombe for vnkunning, Page 548 or els for confusion of thy conscience: thou fall into the sentence that anon followeth: Binde his handes and his feete, and cast him in to the vtter warde of darknes, there shall be weeping and grenning of teethe.

Therefore I rede thee, that thou aduise thee how thou shalt answer to this question. How hast thou entred? whether by cleeping, or by thine owne procuring: for that thou wouldest trauaile in Gods gospell, other for thou wouldest be richly arayed? Answer now to thy owne conscience as thou shalt answer to God, thou that hast take now the order of prieste, whether thou be curate or none: who stirred thee to take vpon thee so high an estate? Whether for thou wouldest liue as a priest ought to do studying of Gods law to preach, and most hartely to pray for the people: or for to liue a delicious life, vpon other mens trauaile, and thy selfe trauaile nought.* Why also setten men theyr sonnes either their cousins to schole? Where to, but for to get them great aduancements, or to make them the better to knowe howe they shoulde serue God? This men may see openly, by the sciences that they set them to. Why I pray you, put men their sonnes to the law ciuill,* or to the kings court to write letters & writs: rather thā to Philosophy or Diuinity, but for the hope that these occupations shoulde be euer means, to make them great in the world. I hope that ther wil no man say, that they ne shoulde better learne the rule of good liuing in the booke of Gods law, than in any bookes of mans worldly wisdom? But certes now it is so the, that Iohn Chrisostom saith Mothers be louing to the bodies of their children, but the soule they despise, they desire them to wel fare in this world, but they take none hede what they shall suffer in the tother: Some or deinen fees for their children, but none ordeine them to godward: The lust of their bodies they wol deere by, but the health of their soule the reke nought of. If they see them poore or sicke, they sorrow and sigheth, but though they see them sinne, they sorrowe not. And in this they shew that they brought forth the bodies but not the soules.* And if we take heede truly, what abominations be scattered and spread abroad in holy church now adayes among priestes: we shul wel wit, that they come not all to the folde of Christ by Christes clepping for to profite: but by other wayes to get them worldly welth, and this is the cause of lesing of soules, that Christ bought so deare, and of many errors among the people: and therefore, it is iwrit in the booke of mourning, where the prophet speaketh thus to God. Tre 1. The enemy hath put his hand to all things desyrable to him:* for he hath let lawles folke enter into the sanctuary, of the which thou hadst commaunded, that they should not enter into the church: This enemy is Sathanas, as his name sowneth, that hath put his hande to all that him liketh. What sinne I pray you will the fiend haue sow on men, that nis now yvsed? In what plentie is now pride, enuy, wrath and couetise? Whan were they so great as they be now, and so of all other sinnes. And why trowest thou? But for there be a lawles people entred into thy sanctuarie, that neither keepe in hemselfe the law of God, ne konne teachen other:* And to euery such, saith God by the prophet, Ose 4. For that thou hast put away cunning: I shall put thee away that thou shal vse no priesthooode to me. Lo that God expresly heere in holy writte, forbiddeth men to take the state of pristhooode on them, but they haue cunning, that needeth them. Thou than that canst neither rule thy selfe ne other, after the lawe of God, beware how thou wilt answer to God, at his dreadfull dome, when he shall say to thee, that which I tooke to my theame.

Yeld the reckening of thy baily, how thou hast entred.

The second question, that euery curate and prelate of holye Chirch shall aunswer to, is this. How hast thou ruled? That is to say, the soules of thy suggets, and the goods of poore men: Geue now thine acounte. First, how thou hast gouerned gods folke that were take thee to keepe: Whether art thou an herde or an hired man? that doost all for loue of bodelich hi e? As a father, or as a Wolfe, that eaten his sheepe and keepeth them nought? Say whome thou hast turned from his cursed liuing, by thy deuout preaching,* Whome hast thou taught the law of God that was earst vncunning: Ther shal ben heard a greuous accusing of fatherles children, and a hard aleding, that priests haue liueden by their wages, and not done away their sins. Yelde also rekoning how thou hast ruled and spende the goodes of poore men. Harke what S. Bernard saith. Dreade clarkes, dreade the ministers of the Church, the which ben in the place of saintes, that they do so wickedly, nought holding them apayd with such wages that were sufficient to them: That ouerplus that needy men shuld be sustained by, they be not ashamed to wast in the house of their pride and leachery, and withholden to themselfe wickedly and cursedly that which should be the lifeloode of poore men. With double wickednes truly they sinne. First, for they reeuen other mens goods, and faith they misuse holy things in their vanities and in their filthes. Euery such Bayly therefore beware, for anone, to the last far thing he shall reckon with Christ. Trowest thou not then, that thou ne shalt be disallowed of God of that thou hast mispende in in feeding of fat Palfreys, of hounds, of Haukes, and if it so be that is worst of all, on lecherous women? Heare what is sayd of suche. They had led their dayes in wealths. And in a poynt they bene gone down into hell: Think therefore I rede thee, that thou shalt yelde reckening of thy bayly.

The third question that this baily shal aunswer to, is this: How hast thou lyued? What light of holynes hast thou shewed in thy liuing to the people, or what mirrour hast thou ben of holynes to them? Geue now thy reconing, how thou hast liued, as a priest, or as a leude man as a man or as a beast. That is to wonder truelye how the lyfe of priestes is chaunged They be clothed as knights, they speaken as vnhonestly as carels, other of wynnyng as Marchaunts: They riden as princes, and al that is thus spende, is of the goodes of poore men, and of Christs heretage. Therefore saith an holy doctor: The clay of Egypt was tough and stinking, and medled with bloud. The slates were harde to bee vndoe, for they were baked with fire of couetise, and with the light of lust. In this trauayleth riche men, in this they wake, a wayting poore men. In these trauaileth prelates, that ben to much blent with to much shining of riches, that make them houses lyke churches in greatnes, that with diuers pointries, coloren their chambers, that with diuers clothinges of colours, make images gay: but the poore mā for default of clothes beggeth; and with an empty wombe cryeth at the doore: And if I shall the foth say, saith this doctor, oft tyme poore men be robbed for to clothe the trees and stones:  Of such speaketh the Prophet. Howe art thou here? or as who art thou? Here thou art occupying the place of Peter and of Poule, or of Thomas or of Martine: But how, as Iudas among the Apostles, as Symon Magus among the disciples, as a candle now queinte that stincheth all the house in steede of a light lanterne, as a smoke that blindeth mens eyen, in place of cleane fire. If thou contrarye thus the forme of liuing that Christ and his disciples left to priests:  Lo what saith the prophet Ieremye. They haue entred, and they haue had and nought ben obedient. They hauen with false title or with their false and corrupt intention, had poore mens goodes to their misusing, and they haue not bee obedient to the lawe of God in their owen liuing. * Therefore it is writ, that the hardest dome shall fall on such. An hard dome, for they haue misentred An harder dome, for they haue misruled. And the hardest dome, for they haue so cursedlie liued. Thinke therefore I rede, how thou wilt giue reckning of thy bayly.

The second Bayliff,  that accounteth at this dome for himselfe and also for other, is he: that keping hath of any communitie, as kings, princes, Maiers, and Shireues, and iustices. And these shull also answer to the same three questions. The first question, how hast thou hentred, that is to say, into thine office: Other for help of the people to destroy falshed and forthren treuth? other for desire of winning or worldly worship? If thou take such an office, more for thine owne worldly profite, than for helpe of the comunite, thou art a tirant as the pholosopher seith. For it is to feare least there bene too many that desiren suche states, that they may the rather oppresse thilke that they hateth, and take giftes to spare to punish thilke, that hauen trespassed, and so maketh them parteners of their sinnes. And many such, when they ben so high, they reck nought that they beeth poore mens brethren: but they wene to passe them in kind, as they passeth in worldly worship, that is but winde: of which God faith by the prophet, they hauen raigned, but nought of me, they haue bene princes but I knowe nought. So we reade of Roboam, that was the son of king Salomon, what time he was first king, the people of Israell comen to him, and sayd: Thy father in his last dayes, put on vs great charge. We pray thee some deale make it lighter, and we willen serue thee. And the king tooke counsayle of the olde wise men, and they counsailden to answer them faire, and that should be for the best. But he left these old wise mennis counsayle, and did after the counsayle of children that were his playferen, and sayd to the people, when they came agayne: My left finger, is greater then my fathers riegge. My father greeued you somewhat, but I will echen more thereto. And the people heard this, and rebeleden to him, and tooke them another king and fith, the kingdome came neuer whole againe. And therefore it is good, that euery ruler of cominalties, that they be not lad by follies, ne by none other eare rowner, that he ne haue an eygh of loue to the comontie that he hath to rule. For were ye well be he neuer so high, that he shall come afore his higher, to yelde reconing of his bayly.

The second question is: * How hast thou ruled the people, and the office that thou haddest to gouerne? Thou that hast bene a Iudge in causes of poore men, how hast thou kept this hest of God? Thou shalt not take heede to the person of a poore man, to bee to him the harder for his pouertie,* ne thou shalt not behold a rich mans semblance, to spare or to fauour him in his wrong for his riches. O Lorde, what abusio is there among officers of both lawes, now adayes: If a great man pleadeth with a poore man, to haue ought that he holdeth, euery officer shall be readie to hye all that he may, that the rich man might haue such an end as he desired. But if a poore man pleade with a ritch man, than there shall be so manye delayes, that though the poore mans right be open to all the Countrie, for pure faute of spending, he shall be glad to cease. Shriues and Bayliffes willen retourne Page 549 poore mens writs, with tarde Genit, but gif they feelen meede in their hands. And yet I heare sale, men that hauen seyen both lawes,* that ilke court that is cleeped Christes court, is much more cursed. Therefore it is writ: giftes they taken out of mens bosoms,* to ouerturne the right way of dome. But it is to dread the word of Christ: In what dome ye deeme, ye should be demed when ye comen to yelde a reconing of your bayly.

The third question is: Howe hast thou lyued, thou that deemest and punishest other men for their trespas. A great doctor saith: * thee behoueth to flee the wickednes of other men, that thou chastieest them for their trespas. For if thy selfe do vnlawfullich in deeming other men, thou damnest thy selfe, sythe thou doest that thou damnest. And Poul saith: why teachest thou nought thy selfe,* that thou teachest other? Why stealest thou, that teachest nought other men to steale? Saint Gregorie saith: He shall not take gouernaile of other, that can not go before them in good liuing. And when anye man stand before him in dome, he must take heede to fore what Iudge he shall stand him selfe, to take his dome after his deedes. But it is to dread, that manie fareth as the twe false priests that woulde haue damned to death holie Susan,* for she would not assent to their leacherie. Of the which it is writ: they turned awaie their eyen, for they would not see heauen, ne haue mynde of rightfull domes. So it happeth ofte, they that were more woorthie to bee hanged, damneth them that be lesse woorthye, as a clarcke telleth of Socrates the Philosopher,* sayth hee, vpon a day a man asked of hym why hee laughed. And hee sayd: for I see great theeves leaden a little theefe to hanging. I pray thee, whether is hee a greater theefe that bynimeth a man hys house and hys land from hym and from his heyres for euermore,* other hee that for making of great neede, stealeth a sheepe or a calfe. Whether trow wee nought, that it happeth such extortioners to be other whyle Iudges, and demeth men thus: But I read thee that thus deemest other, thinke on that dome thou shalt come to, to yelde the rekening of thine bayly.

The third Baylife that shall be cleped to this dreadfull a count shall bee euerie Christian man, that shall geue rekening to his Lord God, for goods that he hath had of hys. And heere I wyll speake but of the first question,* that is this: How entrest thou, And heere by the waie, yee that haue goten anie, worldly good, other take by extortion, by rauayne, by vsurie, other by disceit: Wo shall be to him at this dreadfull daie as Sainct Austen sayth. If he be cast into the fire that hath nought giuen of his owne good: where trowest thou shall he be castin, that hath reued other mens from them. And if he shulle brenne with the send that hath nought clothed the naked,* where trowest shall he brenne that hath made him naked that was earst clothed. But as Sainct Gregorie sayth, two thinges maketh men to liue thus by rauaine of other neighbours, that they desire heynes and drede pouertie, and what vengeance falleth of this sinne of couetise, I may see by figure in holy writ, whan the Angell sayd to Prophet Zacharie. Rere vp thine eyen, and see what is that goeth out. And the Prophet sayd what is it? Then the Angell sayd, this is the pot going out, this is the eize of hem on all the earth, And there was a weihgt of lede I bore, and there was a woman sitting in the middle of this potte. And the Angell sayd, this is impietie: And he tooke her, and cast her into the middle of this pot, and he tooke the gobette of leed and caste it into the pots mouth. And the Prophet lift vp his eye,* and he saw twoo women comming out, and spirites in her wing is like two kytes other gledes: and they are rid vp this pot betweene heauen and the earth, and than the Prophete spake to the Aungell, whider wol these beare this pot? And he sayd, into the lond of Sennaar: This pot is couetise. For right as a pot hathe a wide open mouth, so couetise gapeth after worldly good: and right as the licour in the pot, profiteth nought to the pot, but to men that draweth and drinketh thereof: so worldlie good ofte, profiteth not to churles, but to other that commeth after, as it is written. He that hath money, shall haue no frute of it. And this couetise is the eye of couetous men:* for they ben blinde to see how they shuld see to go to heauen, but to winning of worldly things they see manie wayes, lyke to owles, and nightcrowses, that seene better by night than by day. The gobbet of lead, is the syn of obstination. The woman that sat in the pot, is vnpittie, as the Angell sayd, that foloweth vnrighteousnes and auarice. For through auarice, a man leeseth the pitie that he shuld haue of the mischiefe of his soule. For oft tyme, men leese the lyfe of theyr soule, by deadlie sinne that they doo to haue worldly winning: and also they leese the pitie that they should haue of their bodie, putting them selves to manie great bodelye trauayls and perils both by sea, and land, and all maketh couetise. This pot is stopped with the gobbet of leade, when vnpitie is thus by synne of obstination closed in couetise, that he may not goe out of the chinchs harte by penaunce.* For as Iob sayth: when he is fulfilled, he shall bee stopped. The two women that bare vp this pot, are pride and lust of flesh, that be cleped in holie writ the twey daughtren of the water Lethe, crying: bring, bring. And they had wings: the fyrst wing is grace spirituall, as cunning, wisdom, and counsell, with such other manie For which gifts manie men wexe proud. The second wing is bodely grace,* as strength, fairehood, gentrie, and manie other such, whereof men wexe proud. The winges of the second woman that is fleshlie desire, both glotony and slouth. Of glotonie speaketh S. Gregorie:* when the wombe is fulfilled, the prickles of leacherie beth meued. And of slouth S. Austine sayth: Lot the while he dwelled in busines among shrewes in Sodome, he was a good man. But when he was in the hyll slowe, for sykkernes, he in his dronkennes lay by hys daughtren. And these women had wynges lyke Kytes, that with a crieng voyce seecheth theyr meate, as Bartholomeus sayth. And thus fareth couetise of men. Witnessing Sainct Austine, what is the greedynes of fleshlye desire. In as much as the rauinous fyshes haue sometime measure, yet when they hunger, they rapin, and when they fulfill, they spare: But onely couetise of men may not bee fulfilled. For euer he taketh, and neuer hath inough. Neither hee dreadeth God, neither shame of men. He ne spareth hys father, ne knoweth his mother, ne accordeth with his brethren, neyther keepeth truth with hys frende. He ouerpresseth widowes and fatherles children. Freemen he maketh bond, and bringeth foorth false witnes, and occupieth dead mens things, as he shoulden neuer dye. What manhoode is this, sayth this doctour, thus to leese lyfe and grace,* and get death of soule? Win gold, and leese heauen? And herefore sayth the Prophet, haue trauaile in the midst, and leaue vnrighteousnes. Also Innocent speaking of the harmes that come of couetoise, sayth thus: O how manie men hath couetise deceiued and spilt? When couetise Balaam would for giftes that the kinge profered him, haue cursed Gods people, his owne Asse reprobued hym, and hurt his foote agaynst a wall. Achor was stoned to death, for couetise made him steale gold and clothes, against the commaundement of God. Giesy was smit with mesilrie,* for he sold Naamans heale, that came of Gods grace. Iudas for couetise sold Christ, and afterward hoong himselfe. An any and Zaphira his wife were dead sodainlie, for they forsoken to giue Peter theyr money that they had. And couetise maketh also that rich men eate the poore, as beastes done their lesous holding them lowe. This may we see all daye, in deede I dread. For if a ritche man haue a field, and a poore man haue in the midst or in the side thereof one acre, and a riche man haue all a streete saueth O house, that some poore brother of hys oweth, he ceaseth neuer till he get it out of the poore mans hand, eyther by prayer, or by bying, or by pursuing of disceit. Thus fared it by kyng Achab, that throughe his false Queenes ginne slowe the poore man Naboth, for that he woulde not sell hym hys vyneyard that was nye to the Kings palace. Vpon which proces,* thus sayth Sainct Ambrose: How far wyll yee ritche men stretch your couetise? Wyll yee dwell alone vppon the earth, and haue no poore man wyth you? Why put yee out your felow by kynde, and chalenge to your selfe the possession comen by kynde? In commune to all ritch and poore the earth was made, Why will yee ritche chalenge proper right heerein? Kynde knoweth no riches, that bringeth foorth all men poore. For wee bee not got with rich clothes, ne borne wyth golde ne wyth syluer. Naked hee bringeth them to this world, needie of meate and of drinke and clothing. Naked the earth taketh vs, as she naked brought vs hyther. She can not close with vs our possession in sepulchre, for kynde maketh no difference be•weene poore and rich, in comming hyther, ne in goyng hence. All in o manner hee bringeth foorth, all in o manner he closeth in graue. Who so wyll make difference of poore and rytch, abyde tyll they haue a little while leyne in the graue. Than open and looke among dead bones who was rych, and who was poore, but if it be thus that mo clothes rotteth with the ritche, then wyth the poore: and that harmeth to them that beth on lyue,* and profytte not to them that beene deade: Thus sayth the Doctour of suche extortion as it is writ. Other mens fields they repeth, and fro the vyne of hym that the harme oppressed, they plucke awaye the grapes: they leueth men naked, and taketh awaye her clothis that hath nought wherewith to helle them in cold, and liften vp this pot bytwene heauen and earth. For couetous men nother haueth charite to ther brethren vpon earth, neyther to God in heauen: and they bare this pot into the lond of Sennaar, that is to say, into the lond of Stenche, that is hell, for there shall be stench, in stede of sweete smelling as I say sayth. Beware I rede, that yee nought haue to do with this pot, no with the woman therein: and on all maner that ye be nought wed did to her for than yee must be both one. This is thilke foule lecherous woman: the kynges and marchauntis of the earth haue done lechery, and of her vertue they haueth bee made riche, whose dampnation is writen in the booke of priuities in these wordes. In o day, shall come all this vengeaunces of her death, weping and hunger and fire shall brenne her, for stronge is God that shall venge hym on her, and than shulleth weepe and howle vp on her the kyng• of the earth, that haueth done lechery with her, and haueth liu••• delices when they shull see the smoke of her brenning, stonding aferre weping and weyling and saying. Page 543 Alas alas, thilke great citie that was clothed with bis and purple, and brasile, and ouergilte with gold and precious stones and pearle. For in one houre all these great riches shall be destroyed, than shall they sey that shall bee damned with her. We haue erred fro the waye of trouth and rightwisnes, light haue not shined to vs, and the sonne of vnderstanding haue not resen to vs: we haue be made weery in euerich way of wickednes and of lust, and haue gone hard wayes, but the wayes of God we knew nought: what hath pride profited to vs, or the boast of riches what hath it brought to vs? All this is as a shadow of death, and we mow now shew no token of holynes: in our wickednes we be wasted away. Thinke therefore I read, that thou shalt yelde rekening of thy bayly.

Here endeth the first part of this Sermon, and beginneth the second part.

IN which secōd part with the helpe of God I will shew first, who shall clepe vs to this recKenynge. Afterward, to fore what iudge we shall reckyn: and last what punishyng shall be do to them that ben found false seruauntes and wicked, and what reward shall be gyue to them that be founde good and true. For the first ye shall wetoen that there shall be twey domes. The first doome anone after the departyng of body and of soule, an this shall be speciall. And of this rekenyng or doome speaketh the Gospell of Luke. The second rekenyng or doome shal be anone after the generall resurrection,* & shal be vniuersal. And of this is to spekē in the Gospel. To the first euery man shalbe cleped after other, as the wolrde passeth. To the secunde shall comeo togedre in the stroke of an eye all mankynde.* To the first, men shalbe cleped with three sumners other Sergeauntes: the firstlis sicknesse, the second is age, and the third is death: the first warneth, the second threteth, and the third taketh. This is a kyndly order, but otherwise it fayleth, for sume we seeth dyeth that neuer wist what was sicknes ne age, as children that ben sodenly slayne. And sume, ye the most part that deyeth now a dayes deyeth, byfore her kynde agee of deeth: therefore I say, that the first that clepeth to this speciall reckning is sicknes, that followeth all mankind, so that euery man hath it: and sum is sicknesse that sume men haueth but nought all. Yet the first sicknesse is double, for sume is withinne in the mightes of the soule, and sume is without in feblenes of the bodie that needis mo be stroyed, whan time by hem selfe is cause of corruption as Philosophie sayth, that thereby feblenes and sicknes. And so may we see hereby, though that a man shut out of the house of hys hart all maner of worldlie and fleshlie thoughtes, yet vnneth shall a man for ought that he can doo, thinke on God onelie, the space of o Pater noster, but that some other thing that is passing, entreth into the soule, and draweth her from contemplation. But O Lorde God, what seekenes is this, an heuie burden on the sonnes of Adam, that on fowle moock and fen of the world we may thinke long ynow. But on that the soule should most delectation haue by kinde, mow we nought thinke so little a space, but if the cokle enter among the whete. Of this seekenes speaketh Poule, where he sayth. I see a lawe in my limmes fighting agenes the lawe of my sprite, and taking me into the law of sinne. So that it fares by vs, as by a man that would looke ageyns the sun, and may nought do it long for nothing. And forsooth that is for no default that is in the sunne, for she is most cleere in her selfe, and so by reason best should be seyn, but it is for feblenes of mans eye. Ryght so, syth Adam our first fader was put out of Paradyse, all hys offpring haue ben thus sicke, as the Prophet seyth. Our fadres haue eat a bitter grape, and the teeth of the children be wexe an edge. The second sicknes, that is commune to all mankind, commyth of feblenes of the body: as hunger and thorst, cold and heate, sorow & werines, and many other as Iob. 18. sayth.* A man that is ibore of a woman, liuing a little whyle, is fulfilled with many miseases. Yet there is other sicknes that commeth to some men,* but not to all, as Lepvr, Palsey, Feuer, Dropsie, Blindnes, and many other, as it was seyden to the people of Israell, in holy writ. But thou keepe the commaundements that be writ in this booke, God shal echen the sicknes of thee and of thy seede, great sickenes and long abiding. Yet yee shall vnderstand, that God sendeth other while, such sicknes to good men, and other while to shrewes. To good men God doth it for two causes, and that is sooth. Of sicknes I wol to be vnderstand also, of all maner of tribulations. The first cause, for they shold alway euer know, that they haue none perfection of them selfe,* but of God onely, and to echen theyr meekenes. And thus sayth Poule, least the greatnes of reuelations rere me vp into pride, is giuen a pricke of my fleshe, the Aungell of Sathanas to smite me on the necke, wherefore I haue thrise prayed God, that he shuld go fro me, and he answered me: My grace is suffisant to thee for vertue is fulfilled in sicknes, where on thus sayn the glose. The fend axing Iob to be tempted, was herd of God, and nought the Apostle axing his temptation to be remoued. God herd him that shuld be damned, and he herd nought him, that he shuld saue. For oft the sick mā axit many things of the leche, that he wol not geue him, & that is for to make him whole of sicknes. Also God sendeth Saints oft sicknes & po••ution, to giue vs sinfull wretches example of patience: For if he suffer his Saints to haue such tribulation in this world, and they thankin him thereof, much more wretchis that God sendeth not the hundred aparty of their sorowe, shulden beare it meekely sith we haue diserued a thousand so much as they haueth.* Whereof, Tobie that one day whan he was wery of byrying of poore men, the which shulden haue ley vnburied, and haue be etene of houndis, and foules, as caraynes, of other vnreasonable bestes, whan for werynesse he had leide him to reste, through Goddis sufferauce the swallowes that bredden aboue on his hous, maden ordure into his eyen, and he wexet blind. Thus it is writ of this temptation for soth▪ Therefore God suffered to come to him, that to them that comen after, shuld be geuen ensample of pacience, as by the temptation of holie Iob. For sith from his childhod, euermore he drede God, and euer kept his hestes: He was not agreeued ayenst God that the misthief of blindnesse fell to him: but vnmoueable dwelled in the dread of God, thanking him all the dayes of his life. Lo that holy writ sayth expresly, that God suffered this holie man to haue that sicknes, to geue them that should come after him ensample of pacience. Also other whyle, God sendeth syckenes and tribulation to wicked men, and for two causes. First for that they should the rather drede God, and leaue their sinne.* As it is writ: their sickenes hath bene multiplied, and after they haue hyed to Godward. For we see oft men in sicknes know their God, that neuer would haue turned to him whyle they had beene whole. Also God sendeth them sicknes oft to agast other men, lest they follow their sin. As the sickenes of kyng Antioche, whome God smote with such a sickenes, that wormes fell out of hys body whyle he lyued, in so farforth, that he stanke so foule, that his frends were so wearye of it, that they might not suffer it. And at the last, when he himselfe might not suffer his owne stinch, then he began to know himselfe, and sayd: It is rightfull, to be subiect to God, and a deadly man not to hold himselfe onely euen with God, and the story saith he asked mercie of God, and made a vowe to God, that he would make the Citie of Ierusalem free, and the Iewes to make them as free as the men of Athens: and that hee would honour Gods temple wyth pretious ary, and multiply the holy vessels, and finde of his owne rent and spenses pertaining to the sacrifice. And he would become a Iew, and go ouer all the lond to preach Goddes might. And yet God gafe him not such mercy as he desired. And I trow certein that it was for good. In as much as God knew he would not afterward hold his couenaunt, or els for he axket it too late. What mede was it for him to forsake his wickednes whan hee was vnmightie to doo good or euill. Neuertheles, I trow he was not dampned, in as much as he had such repentaunce, for repentaunce in this life come neuer too late if it be trew. But by thys vengeance that God tooke on thys king, should men see, what it is to be vnobedient to God. And also it is to take heede, that whan euer sickenes commeth, euer it sheweth, that hee that suffreth this deadly, shall nedes dye For though he may skape of his sicknes, yet hee may not skape death. And so thou must needs come giue rekenyng of thy bayly. The second somnour that shall clepe thee to this particuler doome,* is elde or age. And the condition of him is this, though that he tarie with thee, he will not leue thee, till he bring thee to the thirde, that is death. But there be many that though they haue this somnour with them, they take none hede, though they see ther he are hore, her back crook, her breth stynke, her teeth fayle, her yen derk, her visage riuely, her crene wexit heuy to her. What meneth all this, but that age sunneth to the dome.

But what more madhead may be than a man to be cleped, and drawe to so dreadfull a reckenyng there, where but he aunswere well he forfegeth both body and soule to damnation for euer. If seing a litle wordly merth on the way, he thinketh so mekill theron, that he forgetteth who draweth him, or whether he draweth. So doth he that is smiten with age and liketh so on the false world is wealth, that he forgetteth whether he is away: Herefore sayth an holy Doctour, that among all abusions of the world most is of an old man that is obstinate: for he thinketh not on his out going of this world, ne of passing into the lyfe that is to come: he heareth messengers of death, and he leueth hem not, and the cause is this, for the threfold cord that such an old mā is bounden with, is hard to breke. This cord is custome, that is of three plights, that is, of idel thought, vnhonest speach, and wicked deede: the whiche if they groweth in a man from the childhood into mans age, they maketh a treble cord to bynde the old man on custome of sinne.* Herefore sayth Esay breake the bondes of sinne. Thinke herefore whosoeuer that thou be that art thus sumned, that thou might not scape that thou ne shalt yeld the rekenyng of thy bailly.

The third somner to this reckenyng, is death. And the condition of him is,* that whan euer he come, first, other the secōd, other the last houre he ne spareth, neither power, ne yought, ne he dreadeth no thretning, ne he ne taketh hede of no prayer ne of no gift, ne he graunteth no respit, but withouten delay he bringeth forth to the dome. Herefore seyth Sainct Austen. Well ought euerie man drede the day of his death. For in what state a mans last day findeth hym, whan he dyeth out of this worlde, in the same state Page 551 he bringeth hym to hys dome. Herfore seyth the wise man. Sonne, thinke on thy last day, and thou shalt neuer sinne. Therefore I rede that thou thinke, that thou shalt geue reconyng of thy bayly.* I sayd also, that there shall be another doome, to the which all men shall come together, and this shall be vniuersall. And right as to the other dome, euery man shall be cleped with these three sumnours: so to this dome all this world shall be cleped with three generall clepers. And right as the other three messengers tell a mans end, so these tell the end of the world. The first cleper is the worldly sicknes,* the second cleper is feblenes, and the third is the ende. The sicknes of the world thou shalt know by charitie a cooling. His elde and febles thou shalt knowe by tokens fulfilling, and hys end thou shalt know by Antichristes pursuing. First I sayd, thou shalt knowe the worldes sicknes by charitie a cooling.

Clerkes that treate of kynde sayne: that a bodie is sicke, when his bodely heate is to lite, or when his vnkindely heate is too much.* Sythe then all mankynde is one bodye, whose kindly heate is charity (that is loue to God and to our neighbors) vnkindly heate is lustfull loue to other creatures. When therefore thou seest that the loue of men to Godwa•de and to their neighbour is litle and faynt, and the loue of worldlye thynges and lustes of the flesh is great and feruent: then wit thou well, that vnkindly heate is too great, and kindly heate is too little. That this be acknowlich of this sicknes, I may proue by autoritie of Christ. For he himselfe gaue them as a signe of the drawing to the ende of the world: For that wickednes shall be in plente, charitie shall acoole. Therefore whan thou seest charitie this little in the worlde and wickednes encrease, know well, that this world passeth and hys welth, and that this somner is come.* And thus seyth Seint Poule, Wit ye well, that in the laste dayes shall come perilous times, and there shall be men louing them selfe, that is to say, their bodyes, couetous by pride, vnobedient to father and mother, vnkynd fellows, withouten affection, withouten peace, blamers, incontinent, vnmylde, withouten benignitie, traytours, rebels, swelling, louers of lustes more then of God, hauing a lykenes of pietie, and denying the vertue thereof. And these flee thou. If thou seest the people busied wyth such conditions, wyt thou well that the firste sumnour warneth all the world, that the day of reconing draweth towarde.

The second Sumnour, that warneth all the world, is elde or age of the world and hys feblenes, and sheweth tokens fulfillyng. But I know wel, that we be nought suffisaunt to know the times other the whyles that the fader in trinitie hath put on hys owne power, to shew certainly the day, yeere, other houre of this dome, sith this knowleche was hid fro the priuey Apostles of Christ, and fro Christs manhode as to shew it to vs. Natheles, we inough by autoritie of holy writ, wyth reasons, and expositions of Saints, well and openly shew, that thys day of wrath is nygh:.* But yet least any man sey in hys hert as it is writen of solie baylies, that they shall seien, my Lord, that is, tarrieth to come to the dome, and vppon hope hereof he taketh to smite seruauntes and hynen of God, eate and drinke and make him dronk: I shall shewe that this day is at the hond,* howe ny neuertheles, can I not seie ne wole For if Poule sayd now for a thousand and three hundred yeer, and passed moe: we ben thilke, into whome the endis of the worlde ben come, much rather may we seie the same that been so much neere the end than he was.* Also S. Chrysostome sayth: thou seest ouer all darkenesse, and thou doutest that the day is go, first on the valeyes is darknesse whan the day draweth downeward: whan therefore thou seest the valeies I derked, why doutest thou whether it be nigh euen, but if thou see the sunne so lowe that derknesse is vpon the hilles, thou wolt seie doutles, that it is night. Right so, if thou see first in the seculers and the lewd christen men begynneth derknesses of sinnes and to haue the maistrie,* it is token that this world endeth. But whan thou seest priests that ben put on the high toppe of spirituall dignities, that shulden be as hilles abouen the commune people in perfit liuing, that derknesse of sinnes hath taken them, who douteth that the world nis at the end. And also Abbot Ioochim in exposition of Ieremye, seyeth: Fro the yeare of our Lord 1200. all times beth suspect to me, and we ben passed on thys suspecte time nigh 200. yeare.* Also mayden Hyldegare in the booke of her prophecie the third partie, the xj. vision, the vij. chapter, meueth thys reason. Ryght as on seauen dayes God made the world, so in 7000. yeare the world shall passe. And right as in the sixt day man was made and fourmed: so in 6000. yeares he was brought ageine and reformed. And as in the seauenth daye the world was full made, and God left off hys working, right so its the 7000. yeare, the number of them that shullen be saued shall be fulfilled, and rest shall be to Seintes full in bodye and soule. If that it be so as it seemeth to followe of this maydens words, that 7000. in passing of the world accordeth to seauen dayes in hys making it, see what lacketh that these 7000. yeares ne beth fulfilled. For if wee reken the number of yeeres fro the natiuitie of Christ, to the yeares fro the beginning of the world, to Christ, and thou wilt folowe Austyne, Bede, and Orosie, and most probable doctors treating of this matter,* are passed now almost, sixe thousand and sixe hundred as it is open in a booke that is cleped Speculum iudiciale So it suweth, that this last day is more than a halfe a go, if we shulden geue credence to thys maydens reasun: But if we shull lene to the Gospell, than we shall finde in the Gospell of Mathew, that the Disciples axiden of Christ three questions First,* what time the Citie of Ierusalem should be destroyed. The second, what token of hys comming to the doome. And the third, what signe of the endyng of the world. And Christ gaue them no certayne tyme of these thinges when they shoulde fall, but he gaue them tokens, by which they myght know when they drew nighe, and so as to the first question of the destruction of Ierusalem,* he sayd: when the Romaines come to beseege that Citie, then soone after she shall bee destroyed.

And as to the second and the thirde, hee gaue manye tokens, that is to say: that Realme shall rise against Realme, and people agaynst people, and pestilences and earthquakinges, the which we haue seene in our dayes. But the last token that hee gaue, was thys: when yee seene the abhomination of elengnesse sayd of Daniel the Prophet, standyng on the Sanctuary: then who so readeth, vnderstand. Vpon which text, thus argueth a Doctour in a booke that he maketh of the end of the world. If the wordes of Daniel hauen autoritie (as God sayth that they hauen) it sufficeth of the number of the yeares of the ende of the world, that Daniell hath written. Now Daniell in the twelfth chapter, speakyng of thys abhomination, putteth betweene the ceasing of the busie sacrifice of the Iewes, the which fell, when by Titus and Vespasianus, Ierusalem was destroyed, and the people of Iewes were disparkled into all the world. And thys abhomination that Doctors sayne, shall be in the great Antichristes dayes. 1290.* Nowe proueth thys Doctour, that a daye must be taken for a yere, both by autoritie of holy writ in the same place, and in other, and also by reason: So it seemeth to this clerke, that the great Antichrist shoulde come in the 1400. yere fro the birth of Christ, the which number of yeares is now fulfilled, not fully twelue yeares and a half lacking. And this reason put not I as to shewe anie certayne tyme of hys commyng, sithe I haue not that knowledge: but to shewe that he is nye, but how nygh I wot neuer. But take we heede to the fourth part of the second vision of Saint Iohn, put in the booke of Reuelations, in the which vnder the opening of the seauen seales, is declared the state of the Church, from the time of Christ into the end of the world. The opening of the foure first seales, shew the state of the Church, fro the tyme of Christ, to the tyme of Antichrist and his foregoers, the which is shewed in the opening of the other three seales. The opening of the fyrst seale, telleth the state of the Church in the tyme of the preaching of Christ and of hys Apostles. For the first, that is, the Lyon, gaue hys voyce, that betokeneth the preachers of Christes resurrection and hys ascension. For then yede out a whyte horse, and he that sat vppon hym, had a bow in hys hand, and he yede out ouercomming to ouercome. By thys whyte hors we vnderstand, the cleane life and conuersation that these preachers haden: and by the bowe, their true teaching, pricking sorow in mens hartes for their sinnes withouten flatteryng. And they wenten out of Iewry that they comen of, ouercommyng some of the Iewes, and maken them to leaue the trust that they hadden in the olde law, and to beleue in Iesus Christe, and shewen hys teachynge. And they wenten out to ouercome the Paynemes, shewyng to them that theyr Images were no Gods, but mens woorkes, vnmighty to saue them selfe, or any other, drawyng them to the beliefe of Iesus Chryst God and man. In the opening of the second seale, there cryed the second beast, that is, a calfe, that was a beast wonted to be slayne, and offered to God in the old law. Thys sheweth the state of the Church in the time of Martyrs,* that for their stedfast preachyng of Gods true law, shed theyr bloud, that is signified by the red hors that went out at thys seale opening: and thys estate began at Nero the cursed Emperour, and dured into the time of Constantine the great, that endowed the Church. For in thys tyme, many of Christes seruaunts, and namely the leaders of Gods flocke were slayne. For of xxij. Byshops of Rome that were betwene Peter and Siluester the first, I reade but of foure, but that they weren Martyrs for the lawe of Christ. And also in the tyme of Dioclesian the Emperour, the persecution of the Christen men was so great, that in xxx. dayes weren slayne xxij. thousand men and women in diuers counties, for the law of God.

The opening of the third seale, telleth the state of the Church in time of Heretikis that beth figured by the blacke hors,* for false vnder standing of holy write: for than cryed the third beest that is a man, for at that time was it neede to preache the mistery of Christes incarnation, and his passion ayenst these erretikis that feliden mis of these pointis:* how Christ tooke verreyly mans kynde of our Lady, hym beyng God as hee was bifore, and hys moder beeyng mayden byfore and after. The opening of the fourth scale, telleth the state of the Church in tyme of ypocritis, Page 552 that beth signified by the pale hors,* that beth signes of penaunce with outfoorth to blinde the people. And he that sate vpon thys hors his name was death, for they shulle flee gostly them that they leden, and teacheth to trust vpon other thing than God: and helle foloweth him, for helle receiueth thilke that these disteineth. At that time shall it neede, that the fourth beast that is the Egle make hys cry, that flyeth highest of foules to reare vp Gods Gospell: and to preise that law aboue other, least mens wit, and their traditions ouergone and treden downe the law of God, by enforming of these ypocritis, and this is the last state, that is, other shall be in the Church, bifore the comming of the great Antichrist.* The opening of the fift seale, telleth the state of the Church that than shall folow, and the desire that louers of Goddis law shulleth haue after the end of this world to be deliuered of thys wo.* The opening of the sixt seale telleth the state of the Church, in time of Antichristis times, the which state yee may know to be in the Church whan ye seth fulfilled, that Saint Iohn Prophecieth to fall on the opening of thys, where hee sayth thus: After thys I saw foure Angels standing vpon foure corners of the earth, holdyng the foure windes of the earth that they blowen nought vpon the earth, ne vpon the sea, ne vpon eny tree. These foure Angels beth the number of all the Deuils ministers, that on that tyme shulleth in the pleasance of their Lord Antichrist, stoppe the four windis that beth the foure Gospels to be preached, and so let the breath of the grace of the holie Ghost to fall vpon men morning for sinne, and calling them to amendement, and to other that wolden encrease in vertues, other vpon perfit men. What is there after thys to fall, but that the mystery of the seauenth seale be shewed, that he come in hys owne person. That Iesu Chrst shall slee with the spirite of hys mouth, whan the fiend shall shew the vtmost persecution, that he and hys seruauntis may doo to Christis limmes, and that shall be the third warning that the world shall haue to come to thys dreadfull dome.

In all thys matter haue I nought seid of my selfe, but of other Doctours that beth proued.* I seyed also in my second principall part, that it were to wete tofore what Iudge we shull reken. Wherefore we shulleth wite, that God him selfe shall heere thys rekening, he that seeth all our dedis, and all our thoughtes fro the beginning of our lyfe to the end, and he shall shew there the hid thingis of our hert opening to all the world the rightfulnes of hys dome. So that with the myght of God, euery mans dedis to all the world shall be shewed,* and so it semeth by the wordes of Seint Iohn, in the booke of preuites, there he seith thus. I saw dede men litel and great, stondyng in the sight of the throne, and bookes weren opened: and an other booke was opened that was of lyfe, and dede men weren iudged after the thyngs that weren written in the bokes after their worchings. These bokes beth mens consciences that now beth closed. But than they shulleth be opened to all the world to reden therein both dedis and thoughtes. But the booke of life, is Christis liuing and doctrine, that is now hid to men that shulleth be damned thugh theyr owne malice, that demeth men to serue the world, rather than God: In the first booke shall be writ all that we haueth doo, in that other booke, shall be write that we shulden haue doo, and than shulle dede men, be demyd of thilke thingis that ben written in the bokis: For if the dedis that we hauen do, the which ben written in the bookis of our conscience, bee accordyng to the booke of Christes teachyng and hys liuing, the whych is the booke of lyfe, we shulle be saued, and els we shulle be damned, for the dome shall be geuen after our workis. Looke therefore now what thing is written in the booke of thy conscience, while thou art here: and if thou findest ought contrary to Christis life, other to hys teaching, with the knite of penaunce and repentaunce, scrape it awaie and write it better, euermore hertly thynkyng that thou shalt yelde rekenyng of thy bayly.

Also I said principally that it were to witen, what reward shal be geue on that doome, to wise seruauntes and good, and what to false seruauntes and wicked. For the which it is to wite, that our Lord Iesu Christ, shall come to the dome here into this world, in the same body that he tooke of our Lady, hauyng thereon the wound is that he suffred for our agayne bieng. And all that euer shullen be saued, taking agayne their bodies clyuing to their head Christ, shull be rauished metyng him in the ayre as Paul sayth: They that shall be damned lyen vpon the earth, as in a tonne of wyne the dreggis dwellen byneth and the cliere wyne houeth aboue. Than shall Christ axe rekenyng of the deedes of mercy, reprouyng false Christen men for the leuyng of them, rehearsing the deedes of the same, and other truth is by the which his trewe seruauntes than folowed hym: than shulle thike false seruauntes goe with the deuill, whom they haue serued in the earth, then swallowyng into the endlesse fire. And rightfull men shullen goe into euerlastyng lyfe, than shall be fulfilled that is written, in the booke of priuitees. Woe, woe, woe, to hem that dwellen in the earth. Woe to the paynyme that gafe that worshyp to dead Images wrought of mans handes, and to other creatures that hee shuld haue gone to GOD that him wrought: Woe to the Iewe that trusteth so muchil in the ould law, than shall he see Maries sonne deemyng the world whō he despised and set on the Crosse: Woe to the false Christen man that knew the will of his Lord, and fulfilled it nought.

Also woe for sinne of thinkyng to thee, that thou hast shytt out the meine of God, that is mynde of his Passion, holy contemplation, of his goodnesse and memorie of his benefites, fro the chaumber of thine herte: and hast made it an house of swyn and a den of theeues, by vncleane thoughtes and delites. As thou here hast sperd God out of thine hert, so he shall spere thee out of heauen: Thou hast herberwid the meine of the fiend, and with them in hell thou shalt thou shalt euer abide: woe also for sinne of speach, for thou might nought open thy foule and stynkyng mouth with the whiche thou hast spoken vnhonesty, cursyng, fraude, deceite, leasinges, forswearyng, scornynge, and backebityng, to prayse God in the felowshyp of Saintes. For louyng is nought comynlych, in mouthes of sinners. For in the whiche gif thou haddest kept thy mouth cleane, thou shouldest haue songen in felowshyp of Aungels this blessed song: Sanctus, Sanctus, Sanctus, Domenus Deus omnipotens. Holy, holy, holy, Lord God almighty. Than yellyng and weepyng thou shalt cry in company of deuils. Ve, Ge, Ge, quante sunt tenebrae. Woe, woe, wo, how great beth these darkenes, wo also for sinne of deede. Thou hast bene proud, thy pryde shall be drawn to hell, as Esay sayth, or thou hast bene brent wyth enuye of the deuill. Enuy entred into the world, and they shoulde folowen him that ben on hys syde, as Salomon sayth. Or thou hast be stirred with wrath, and euerich man that beareth wrath to hys brethren, is gilty in dome, as Christ in the Gospell sayth of Mathew. Or thou hast be slowe to good deedes, myssawe shall come to thee as a wayfaring man, and thy pouert as a man iarmed, as the booke of Prouerbes sayth. Or thou hast haunted lechery, glotonye, or couetise. That forsoth wete ye, that euerych auouterer, or vnclane man, that is a gloton, other chynch, shall neuer haue heritage in the Realme of Christ and of God, as Poule sayth. But fire, brimstone, and the spirit of tempests, that is, the fiend of hell, shulen be a partie of their payne, as it is written in the Psalter, when these damned men bee in this woe, they shulen syng thys reufull song that is ywritten in the booke of mourning.* The ioye of our hart is a go, our quier is turned into wo, the crowne of our heade is fallen vs fro. Alas for synne that we haue do. But ioye and ioye, and ioye to them that be saued. Ioy in God, ioy in them selfe, ioy in other that ben saued. Also ioy for theyr trauayle is brought to so gracious an end.* Ioy, for they scaped the payne of hell, ioy fore theyr blisse that they han in the sight of God, Cui sit honor & gloria, in secula seculorum, Amen.

And thus much concerning this worthie and fruitfull Sermon, whych as by the auncienines of the phrase seemeth to be preached much about the time of Iohn Wicklesse: so I thought heere, by the occasion of William Thorpes examination, best to place the same: for the apt coherence both of the spirit, and of the matter. Especially hauing before our eyes, the publique vtilitie of the Reader, to whome by the studious reading thereof, might rise plentifull matter of true Christian information, both of the wholesome fearing of God, and of the right guiding of euery Christian mans life.

Wherevnto I thought good to anexe further in our story, after the examination of William Thorpe, and the martyrdome of William Sawtrey, and of Iohn Badby thus described (as ye haue heard) which was about the yere 1409. By the way here is to be considered, at least to be admonished, that al this while the schisme in the church of Rome did yet continue, and so endured till the councell of Constance, which was in whole, the space of xxix. yeres. The origine whereof (as was sayd page. 000.) first began at Urbanus. 5. which Urbanus being dead, an. 1389. next folowed Pope Boniface the 9. who sate 14. yeres.* He in selling his pardons was so impudent and so past shame, that he brought the keyes of Peter (as sayth Platina) in contempt.* After hym succeeded Innocentius. 7. and sate 2. yeres: who being dead, the Cardinals consulting together, and seeing the foule enormitie and inconuenience growing vpon this contentious schisme in their Church of Rome (minding to prouide some remedie for the same, after the best deuise they could) in their conclaue where they were assembled for a new election of the Pope,* tooke this order, promising among themselues with solemne vow made to God, to Mary the blessed virgine, to Peter and Paule, and to all the blessed company of saints: That if any of them within the colledge or without the colledge, should be called to that high place of Apostolicall preeminence: he should effectuously renounce the iurisdiction and title of his Popedome, if or whensoeuer the cōtrary Pope for the time being, would in like maner renounce his place Page 553 and title, and his Cardinals in like maner to cōdescend to the other Cardinals of Rome. So that both these two colleges of Cardinals agreeing together: one chiefe byshop might be chosen and takē out of them both, to be made the true Pope. Prouided moreouer, that none should seeke any releasement or absolution from the sayd promise, vow, and bond, once passed among them: Unto al which things furthermore, euery one subscribed with his hande. These things thus prefixed and ratified vpon the same, they proceeded to y^e election. In which was chosen Gregorius the xii. who the same day of hys election, in the presence of all the cardinals: confirmed the vow, sacrament and promise made,*subscribing the same with his hand in forme as followeth. And I Gregorie, thys day being the last of Nouember, in the yeare of our Lorde 1407. chosen and elected for bishop of Rome: do sweare, vowe, and promise, & confirme all the premisses aboue contained. &c. Thys being done, shortly after he was crowned, being of the age of 80. yeares. As the time thus passed, the people and Cardinals were in great expectation, waiting when the Pope according to his othe would geue ouer, wyth the other pope also. And not long after, the matter began in deede betwene the two Popes to be attempted,*by letters from one to another: assigning both day and place, where and whē they should meete together: but yet no effect did folow.

This so passing on, great murmuring was among the Cardinals,*to see their holy periured father, so to neglecte his othe, and vow aforenamed. In so much, that at length, diuers of them did forsake the Pope, as being periured (as no lesse he was) sending moreouer to kings and princes of other lands, for their counsell and assistance therein, to appease the schisme. Amongest the rest, Cardinall Bituriensis was sent to the king of Englande: who publishing diuers propositions and cōclusions (remaining in the registers of Thomas Arundell) disputeth, that the pope ought to be subiect to lawes and counsels.*Then K. Henry (moued to write to Gregory the pope) directeth his letter here vnder ensuing, which was the yeare of our Lorde. 1409. The contents of the letter be these.

The letter of king Henry the fourth, to Pope Gregory 12.

MOst blessed father, if the discrete prouidence of the Apostolike sea,* would call to mind, with what great pearils the vniuersall world hath ben damnified hetherto, vnder pretēce of thys present schisme: and especially would consider, what slaughter of Christen people to the number of two hūdreth thousand (as they say) hath bene throughe the occasion of warre raised vp in diuers quarters of the world,* and now of late, to the number of thirty M. souldiours which haue bene slaine through the dissention moued about the Bishopricke of Leodium, betwene two set vp, one by the authoritie of one Pope, the other by the authoritie of the other Pope, fighting in campe for the title of that Bishoprike: Certes yee would lament in spirite, & be fore greeued in minde for the same. So that, with good conscience you wold relinquish rather the honour of the sea Apostolike, then to suffer such horrible bloudshed heereafter to ensue, vnder the cloake of dissimulation, followinge herein the example of the true mother in the booke of kings: who pleading before Salomon for the right of her childe, rather would depart from the childe, then the childe shoulde bee parted by the sword. And although it may be vehemently suspected by the new creation of 9. Cardinals, by you last made contrary to your othe (as other men do say) that you do but little heede or care for ceasing the schisme: Yet farre be it from the hearing and noting of the world, that your circumspect seat shoulde euer be noted & distained with such an inconstancie of minde: whereby the last errour may be worse, then the first. Ex Chron. D. Albani. part. 2.

King Henry the 4. to the Cardinals.

*AND to the Cardinales likewise, the sayde King directeth an other letter wyth these contentes heere following: Wee desiring to shewe what zeale wee haue had and haue, to the reformation of peace of the Church: by the consent of the states of the Realme, haue directed to the Byshop of Rome our letters after the tenoure of the copie herewith in these presentes enclosed, to bee executed effectually. Wherefore, we seriously beseeche your reuerende colledge, that if it chaunce the sayde Gregory to be present at the councell of Pise,*and to render vp hys Popedome, according to your desire, and hys owne othe: you then so ordaine for hys state totally, that chiefly God may be pleased therby, and that both the sayde Gregory, and also wee which loue intierly hys honor and commodity, may haue cause to geue you worthely condigne thanks for the same. Ibid.

This being done in the yere of our Lorde 1409. afterward in the yere next folowing,* an. 1410. the Cardinals of both the Popes, to witte of Gregorius, and Benedictus: By common aduise assembled together at the citie of Pise,* for the reformation of vnity and peace in the Church. To the which assembly,* a great multitude of Prelates and bishops being conuented, a newe Pope was chosen, named Alexander 5.* But to thys election, neither Gregorius, nor Benedictus did fully agree. Whereby there were 3. Popes together in the Romaine church (that is to vnderstande) not 3. crownes vpon one Popes head, but 3. heads in one Popish church together. This Alexander being newly made pope, scarcely had well warmed his triple crowne: but straight geueth out full remission, not of a fewe, but of all maner of sinnes whatsoever: to all them that conferred any thing to the monastery of*. Bartlemew by Smithfeld resorting to the saide church any of these dayes following: to wit,* on Maundy thursday, good Friday, Easter euen, the feast of the Annunciation, from the first euēsong to the latter. But thys Pope which was so liberall in geuing remission of many yeares to other, was not able to geue one yere of life to himselfe: for within the same yere he died.* In whose stead stept vp Pope Iohn 23.

In the time of this Alexander, great stirre began in the country of Bohemia,* by the occasion of the bokes of Iohn Wickliffe, which then comming to the hands of I. Husse, and of other both men & women, especially of the lay sort, and artificers, began there to doe much good. In so much, that diuers of them not onely men, but women also, partly by reading of those bookes translated into their tounge, partly, by the setting forwarde of Iohn Husse, a notable learned man, and a singulare preacher at that time in the vniuersitye of Prage: were in short time so ripe in iudgement, and prompt in the scriptures, y^t they began to moue questions, yea and to reason wyth the Priestes, touchyng matters of the Scriptures.

By reason whereof, complaint was brought to the sayd Pope Alexander the fifte,* who caused eftsoones the forenamed Iohn Husse to bee cyted vp to Rome. But when hee came not at the Popes citation, then the sayde Pope Alexander addressed hys letters to the Archbyshop of Suinco. Wherein he straightly charged him to prohibit and forbid, by the authority Apostolicall, all manner of preachings or sermons to be made to the people, but onely in Cathedrall Churches or Colledges, or Parish churches, or in Monasteries, or els in theyr Churchyardes. And that the articles of Wickliffe, shoulde in no case of any person of what state, condition or degree so euer, be suffered to be holdē, taught, or defended, eyther priuily or apertlye. Commaunding moreouer and charging the sayde Archbyshop, that wyth foure Bachelers of Diuinitie, and two Doctours of the Canon lawe ioyned vnto hym: would proceede vpon the same, and so provide that no person in churches, schooles, or any other place,* should teach, defend, or approoue any of the foresayd Articles. So that who so euer should attempt the contrary, should be accounted an hereticke. And vnles he shall reuoke solemnly and publikely the sayde articles, and shall for euer abiure the bookes wherein the foresayde articles be contained, so that they may be vtterly abolished out from the eyes of the faithfull: the same to be apprehended and imprisoned, all appellation set apart, the help also of the secular arme being called thereunto, if nede shall require. &c. These were the contentes of this mighty & fierce bull of Pope Alexander.

Against the whych bull on the other side Iohn Husse iustly complaining,* excepteth againe and objecteth manye things, as appeareth in his boke intituled De Ecclesia. cap. 18. Where he declareth thys mandate of the pope to stande directly against the doings and sayings both of Christ and of his Apostles:* Considering, how Christ himself preached to the people, both in the sea, in the desert, in fields, in houses, in synagoges, in villages: and the Apostles also in all places did the same, the Lord mightely working in them. He declared moreouer, the said mandate or bul of the pope to redound vnto the great detriment of the church, in binding the word of God, that it might not haue his free passage. Also, the same to be preiudicial vnto chappels newly erected for the word of God to be preached in them. Wherefore (sayeth he) from thys commaundement or mandate of Pope Alexander,* I did appeale vnto the sayd Alexander, being better informed and aduised. And as I was persecuting my appeale, the Lord Pope (sayth Iohn Husse) immediately died.

Then the Archbishop of Suinco aforesayde, to whome this present bul was directed, whē he saw the proces, buls and mandates of the bishop of Rome, to be thus cōtemned of Iohn Husse, and hys fellows, neyther hauing any hope of redresse in winceslaus the king: which semed to neglect Page 554 the matter, went out of hys countrey into Hungarie, to complaine vnto Sigismonde kyng of Hungarie, and brother to the sayd Wincseslaus. But this quarelling Archbyshop, whether before (as the Bohemians say) or after (as Syluius sayeth) that he had spoken with Sigismond: immediatly there (by the iust iudgement of God) died in Hūgary,* as the story saith for sorrow. Whereby a little more liberty and quiet was geuen by the Lord vnto hys Gospel, newly beginning to take rote among the Bohemians. Albeit, this tranquility there, did not long continue without trouble and persecution, neither coulde it in those furious daies and raigne of Antichrist.* For after this Alexander aforesayde succeeded Pope Iohn 23. Who likewise playing hys parte in this tragedy, bent all his might and maine to disturbe the Bohemians, as more heereafter (Christ willing) shalbe declared in further processe of our history, comming to the yere of our Lord. 1413.

Thus the poore Christians (as ye see) like to the seely Israelites vnder the tyrāny of Pharaο, were infested and oppressed in euery place, but especially heere in England: and y^t so much the more here, because that the king not like to Wincseslaus, went ful and whole wyth the pope and his prelates against the Gospellers.

*By reason wherof, the kingdome of the Pope and hys members here in this realme began to be so strong, y^t none durst stirre or once mute agaynst them. The Byshops hauing the king so full on their side, armed moreouer wyth lawes, statutes, punishments, imprisonments, sword, fire and fagot: raigned and ruled as they listed, as kings and princes wythin thēselues. So strong were they of power, that no humaine force was able to stande against them: so exalted in pride and puft vp in glory, that they thought all things to be subiect to their reuerent maiesties. What so euer they set foorth or decreed, it must of all men be receyued and obeyed.

And such was their superstitious blindnesse and curious vanitie, that whatsoeuer toy came once in their fantasie: it was straightwayes determined and stablished for a lawe of all men to be obserued, were it neuer so friuolous or superstitious. As wel appeareth by Thomas Arundell Archb. of Cant. and other, who hauing now a litle laisure from slaying and killing the innocēt people, Martyrs and Confessors of the Lord, & hauing nowe brought their enemies (as they thought) vnder feete: began to set vp themselues, and to inuent newe customes, as the guise is of the Popes church, euer to intrude into y^e church of God, some ceremony or custome of their owne making, whereby the Church of Christ hath bene hitherto exceedingly pestred. So likewise this Thom. Arundel, thinking the church yet not sufficiently stuffed with ceremonies and vaine traditions of men: bringeth in a new found gaud, commonly called the tolling of Aues, in honour of our Ladye, wyth certayne Aues to be saide, and daies of pardon to be geuen for the same. For the ratification wherof, vnder the pretence of the kings request,* he directed his mandate to the Byshop of London, well stuffed wyth woordes of I dolatry, as by the reading thereof may appeare, in forme of termes as followeth.

 A mandate of Tho. Arundel directed to the Bishop of London, to warne men to say certayne prayers at the tolling of the Aues, or ringing of Curfew.

*Thomas, &c. To the right reuerend our brother, the Lorde Robert by the grace of God bishoppe of London, greeting. &c. While we lift our eyes rounde about vs, and beholde attentiuely with circumspect consideration, how the most high woorde that was in the beginning with God, chose to him an holy and immaculate virgin of the kingly stocke: in whose wombe he tooke true flesh by inspirall inspiration, that the mercifull goodnesse of the sonne of God that was vncreate, might abolish the sentence of condemnation, which all the posterity of mankind that was created, had by sinne incurred. Amongst other labours in the vine of the Lorde of Sabaoth, we song to God our sauour with great ioy in him: carefully thinking, that though all the people of the Christian religion did extol with voices of praises so worthy a virgin, by whō we receiued the beginnings of our redemptiō, by whom the holy day first shined to vs, which gaue vs hope of saluation. And although all the same people were drawen to reuerēce her, which being a happy virgin, cōceiued the sonne of God, the king of heauen, the redemer and sauour of all nations, ministring light to the people that were miserably drowned in the darkenesse of death: We truely as the seruaunts of her owne * inheritance, and such as are wrytten of, to be of her peculiar dower, as we are by euery mans confession acknowledged to be: we I say, ought more watchfully then any others, to shewe the endeouours of our deuotion in praising her. Who being hetherto mercifull to vs, yea being euen cowardes, would that our power being, as it were spread abroad euery where through all the coastes of the world, shoulde with a victorious arme, feare all foreine nations. That our power being on all sides so defended with the buckler of her protection, did subdue vnto our victorious standards, and made subiect vnto vs, nations both neare at hand and farre off.

Likewise our happy estate (all the time that wee haue passed since the beginning of our liues) may be well attributed onely to the helpe of her medicine: * to whom also we may worthely ascribe nowe of late in these our times vnder the mighty gouernment of our most Christian king, our deliuerāce from the rauening wolues, * and the mouthes of cruell beasts: which had prepared against our bankets, a messe of meat mingled full of gall, and hated vs vniustly, secretly lying in wait for vs, in recompence of the good wil that we shewed to them. Wherefore, that shee being on high sitting before the throne of the heauenly maiestie, the defendresse & patronesse of vs all, being magnified with al mens praises: may more plentifully exhibite to vs the sonnes of adoption the teates of her * grace, in all those things that we shall haue to do. At the request of the speciall deuotion of our Lord the king himself, we commād your brotherhode, straightly enioyning you: that you commaund the subiects of your citie and diocesse, and of al other suffraganes, to worship our Lady Mary the mother of God, and our * patronesse and protectresse, euermore in all aduersity: with such like kinde of prayer and accustomed maner of ringing, as the deuotiō of Christes faithful people is wont to worship her at the ringing of cōure le feu. * And when before day in the morning ye shall cause them to ring, that with like maner of praier & ringing, she be euery where honored deuoutly by the aforesaid our and your suffraganes and their subiects as wel religious as secular, in your and their monasteries and collegiate churches: That wee so humbly calling vpon the mercy of the heauenly father, the right hande of the heauenly piety, may mercifully come to the helpe the protection & defence of the same our Lord the king, who for the happy remedy of quietnesse, and for our succour from tempestuous flouds, is ready to apply his hands to worke, and his eyes with all his whole desire to watching. We therefore coueting more earnestly to stirre vp the mindes of all faithfull people to so deuout an exercise of God. &c. Wee graunt by these presents, to all and euery man. &c. that shall say the Lordes prayer and the saluation of the Angell fiue times at the morning peale with a deuout mind, * totiens quotiens, (how oft so euer) 40 dayes of pardon by these presents.

Geuen vnder our seale in our manor of Lambeth the 10. day of February, Anno nostrae trans. 9.

Ex. Regist. Thom. Arundel.

By this friuolous and barbarous constitution w^t many other of like sort heaped into the church by the papists: appeareth the proper nature and cōdition of this catholick generation. * Who being thēselues not greatly exercised nor experienced in any serious cogitation of spirituall matter (as semeth) take vpon them to gouern the spiritual church of Christ, wherof in deede they haue no skill or very little. And therefore according to their vnskilfull handling, they lead and rule the church after such outward sights and ceremonies, seemely perhaps to their owne grosse affection: but not agreeing (nay rather cleane contrary) to the ryght nature & condition, of the spiritual house and kingdome of the Lord. And like as in their inuentions they swarue vtterly from the right handling of all spiritual gouernment: so in their maners & forme of life likewise, they do resemble little or no part almost, of such as are and ought to be, true pastors and ministers of the mysticall body of Christ.

Examples heereof are plenty and plaine, in these Romaine Prelates to be noted: who so well considering the humble state and lowly spirite which ought to be in pastorall leaders of the church, will compare the same wyth the vsuall pompe of these glorious potestates.

As for example,*what can be more conuenient for a true pastor ecclesiasticall, then humility of hart and spirit, according to the example of the head bishop himselfe? So, what greater shew of arrogācy and pride could there be, then in this: whom I haue oft named before. Th. Arundel, archb. of Cant. who passing by the high streat of London, did not only looke and waite for the ringing of the belles, for a triumph of his comming, but tooke great snuffe and did suspende all suche Churches in London (not onely wyth the steeple and bells, but also with the organes) so many as did not receiue his comming with the noyse of bells: according as out of his own registers may appeare, y^e wordes wherof written to his owne Somner, I haue hereto annexed in his owne forme as followeth.

A Commission directed to the Somner, to suspende certaine churches of London, because they rong not their bells, at the presence of my Lord the Archb. of Canterbury.

THomas by the permission of God, &c. To oure well beloued Thom. Wilton our Somner sworn, health, grace, and blessing. Page 555 The comelinesse of our holy Church of Canterb. ouer which wee beare rule:* deserueth and requireth, that while wee passe throughe the prouince, of the same our Church (hauiug our crosse caryed before vs) euery parish church in their turnes, ought & are bounden in token of speciall reuerence that they beare to vs, to ryng the bells. Which notwithstanding, ye on Tuesday last past, when wee betwixt 8. and 9. of the clocke before dinner, passed openly on foote as it were, through the middest of the citie of London, with our crosse caryed before vs: Diuers churches whose names are heere beneath noted, shewed towardes vs willingly (though they certainly knewe of our comming) vnreuerence rather then reuerence, and the duety that they owe to our church of Canterb. ringing not at all at our comming. Wherefore, wee being willing to reuenge this iniurie,* for the honor of our spouse as we are boūden: commaunde you, that by our authoritie, you put all those churches vnder our interditement, suspēding Gods holy organes and instruments in the same Which we also suspend by the tenor of these presentes, till the ministers of the aforesayde Churches be able hereafter to attaine of vs the benefit of more plentifull grace. Geuen. &c.

What great reason was in this, why this Archb. either should thus looke for the ringing of the belles, or why hee should be so displeased with not ringing, I do not see. Belike his minde in the meane time was greatly occupied w^t some great muse, as feling of Gods feare, with repentance and remembrance of hys sinnes, with zelous care and sollicitude for his flocke, wyth the earnest meditation of the passion & life of our sauour, who in this world was so despised: or else was set vppon some graue studie, while hee so waited for the ringing of the bells, which are wont to be so noisome to all students. And why were not the trūpetters also shent as well, because they did not soūd before his person? But and though the bells did not clatter in the sreples, and therefore his thunderbolt should haue fallen vpon the steples which had deserved: why shoulde the bodye of the church therefore be suspended? At least, the poore Organes (me thinketh) had some part of wrong to be put to silence in the quier,*because the bells rang not in the tower.

Of the like matter also we read in the sayde registers, falling betweene the B. of Worcester, and the priorie of the same towne, for not ringing at the bishops comming into the church. Wherupon much sute and contention was betweene them, till at length the Archb. of Cant. tooke vp the matter, moderating it, as in the said registers, fol. 441. appeareth to be seene as followeth.

VNiuersis. &c. Thomas &c. where as there happened variance lately betwene our reuerend brother the Lorde B.* of Worcester on the one partye, and the religious and discrete men the Prior and couent of the same church on the one partye, for not ringing of bells at the comming of our saide brother to his foresayde church,* at length the parties (considering the great incōuenience that might come therof) at our instance and request did agree on this maner: that as often as it shall happen our reuerende brother to go to his aforesaide church, either to celebrate orders, or to visite his church in the head or in the inferiours, or to make creame and oyle in the same church: also in the feast of the Assumption of the blessed virgin Mary, which is the chieffest feast in the Abbey aforesayde: then the Prior and the couent, and their successours for the time being, shall ring solemnly against his comming, or shall cause to be ronge solemnly without all contradiction, or any reclaiming hereafter to be made against the same. Which agrement that it may be more firmly kept, we let you all vnderstād by these presents, sealed with our seale. Geuen at our palace of Canterb. 12. Iuly, the 10. yeare of our gouernment.

The like stirre for bell ringing and for processyons had almost hapned betwene the Archb. of Can. successor to this Tho. Arundel, named Hen. Chichly on the one party, and the abbey of S. Albons on the other party, had not the abbot in time submitting hymselfe to the Archb. so prouided, that the ringing of their bells at hys comming, myght not redounde to any derogation of their liberties. Whereunto the Archb. graunted by these his letters as followeth.

HENry &c. to the religious men, the Abbot and Couent of the Monastery of S. Albons in the diocesse of Lincoln, health. &c. When as of late there happened a matter of variance betwene vs, and you the Abbot & Couent, by reason of not geuing reuerence to vs, being due to our prouince of Cant. that is, for not ringing the bells and meeting vs with processions when wee passed by diuers places of our prouince as well due of common custome as of olde vse, and for the prerogatiue of the Church of Canterb. as also being due of euery one being within the compasse of this our sayd prouince, when and as often as we shal passe by their places: at length your Lord Abbot (comming personally to vs) did grant both for you and the Couent aforesaye, to do and to geue of your gentlesse all reuerence and honour, wyth such reuerence be the to vs and our church of Cant. as often as wee passe by your monasterie, or the places nigh or adioyning therto, or shall hereafter go by: So that it might not be preiudicial to your exemption and nothing be attempted to the violating of your priuiledge: and that it might not be chalenged for duety hereafter. Wherefore, wee desiring to kepe you from damage, let you vnderstande by these presents, that it is not our entent to derogate your exemptions or priuiledge whatsoever herein: nor by any meanes to be preiudiciall to you by these your reuerences or other dueties, whatsoever you haue or shall graunt to vs of your deuotion and liberalitie, both by you, and in places vnder your dominion. In wytnesse where of. &c.

Dated the 28. day of Ianuary 1425. at S. Albons, the 12. yere of our gouernment.

To expresse moreouer and describe the glorious pompe of these princelike prelates in these blinde dayes of popish religion raigning then in the church: I thought to adioyn hereunto an other example not much vnlike, neither differing muche in time,* concerning certaine poore men cited vp, and enioyned straight penance by W. Courtney predecessour of the sayd Tho. Arundel, for bringing litter to hys horse, not in waines as they should do, but in priuy sacks, in a secrete maner vnder their clokes or cotes. For y^e which so hainous and horrible trespasse, the sayd Archbishop sitting in hys tribunall seate, did call and cite before hym the sayde persons (pro litera. i. for litter, after his owne Latine) and after theyr submission enioyned them penance. Whych penance, what it was, & what were the names of the foresaid parties,*here followeth out of the sayd Arch. registers, both by his owne words, & by picture of the persons in the same registers annexed and painted, in all resemblance, as there standeth, and heere is also to be seene.

A description of the poore men doing their penaunce, with their strawe on their backe.

This bagge full of strawe I beare on my backe.

Because my Lordes horse his Litter did lacke.

If ye be not good to my Lordes graces horsse,

You are like to goe barefoote before the crosse.

Vnde super hoc euocati coram domino, die Iouis in hebdomada Paschae in castro suo de Statewode pro tribunali sedente personaliter comparentes, ipsius iudicio in hac parte se humiliter submiserunt, veniam & misericordiam pro commissis deuotè petēdo. Et deinde dominus praefatus, Hugonem Pennie, Iohannem Forstal, Iohannem Boy, Iohannem Wanderton, Gulielmum Hayward, & Iohannem White, destando mandatis ecclesiae, & fideliter peragendo poenam eis pro eorum demeritis iniungendam, iuratos absoluit in forma iuris, nunciata eis & eorum cuilibet, pro modo culpae poena salutari: videlicet, quòd die dominica tunc proximè sequente, praedicti poenitētes nudi capita & pedes, processionem apud ecclesiam collegiatam de Wengham faciendam cum singulis saccis super humeris suis palam portantes (plenis videlicet foeno & stramine) ita quòd stramen & foenum huiusmodi ad ora saccorum patentium intuentibus prominerent, lentis incessibus procederent humiliter & deuote.*In English.

Ignorance the mother of error so much hath blinded and deceiued certaine persons, to witte, Hugh Penny, Iohn Forstall, Iohn Boy, Iohn Wanderton, Will. Haywarde, and Iohn White, tenants of the Lord of Wengham: that against the comming of the aforesayde Archbishop to hys palace of Canterbury on Palmes Sunday euen, the yere of our Lord 1390, Where they being warned by the baillife, to conuey and cary hay, strawe, and other littour to the aforesayd palace,*as they were bounde by the tenor of theyr landes, which they hold of the sea of Canterbury: refusing and disdainng to doe their due seruice, as they were accustomed, brought their straw and other littor, not in cartes and waines openly & sufficiently, but by peece meale, and closely in bagges or sakes, in contempt of their Lord, and derogation of the right and title of the sea of Canterbury. Whereupon they being ascited & presented before the archb. sitting in iudgement at hys manour of Statewood, yelded and submitted themselues to hys Lordshyppes pleasure, humbly crauing pardon of their trespassse. Then the aforesayd archbishop absolved the aboue named Hugh Penny, &c. they swearing to obey the lawes and ordinance of holy church,*and to do the punishment that shuld be appoynted them for their desertes, that is: that they going laysurely before the procession, euery one of them should cary openly on hys shoulder, his bagge stuffed with hay and strawe, so that the sayd hay and strawe should appeare hanging out, the mouthes of the sakes being open.

 Notes of certaine Parliament matters passed in this kings dayes.

To proceede now further in the raigne of this king, & to intreat also some thing of his parlamentes, as we haue done of other before,* first we wil beginne with the Parliament holden in the first yere of hys comming in.

Moreouer, forsomuch as our Catholike papistes will not beleue yet the cōtrary, but that the iurisdiction of their father the pope hath euer extended throughout all y^e world, as well here in England as in other places: here therefore speaking of the Parliaments holden in this kings dayes concerning thys matter, I refer them to the Parliament of the sayd king Henry in his first yere holden,* and to the 27. article of the same. Where they may reade in the 10. obiection laid against K. Richard in plaine words: how that, for asmuch as the crowne of this realme of England, and the iurisdiction belonging to y^e same, as also the whole realme it selfe, at all times lately past, hath ben at such libertie, and enioyed such prerogatiue, that neyther the Pope, nor any other out of the same kingdome ought to intrude himselfe, nor intermedle therein: it was therefore objected vnto the forenamed king Richard the 2. for procuring the letters Apostolical from the Pope, to the confirming and coroborating of certaine statutes of hys, and that hys censures myght be prosecuted against the breakers thereof. Whyche seemed then to the Parliament, to tend against the crowne and regall dignitie, as also against the statutes & liberties of the said thys our realme of England.*Act. Parl. An. 1. Reg. Henrici 4. Act 27.

Furthermore, in the second yere of the saide king, thys was in the Parliament required, that all such persones as shalbe arested by force of the statute made against the Lollardes,* in the 2. yere of Henry 4. may be bailed, and freely make their purgation: That they be arested by none other then by the Sheriffes or such like officers, neither that any hauocke be made of their goods. The king granted to take aduise therein.

In the 8. yeare moreouer of thys kings raigne, it was likewise propounded in the Parliament,* that all suche persons as shall procure or sue in the court of Rome any processe touching any benefice, collation, or presentation of the same, shal incurr the paine of y^e statute of prouisors, made in the 13. yeare of Richard 2. whereunto the king granted,* that the statutes herefore prouided should be obserued.

Item, in the sayde Parliament, there it was put vp by petition, that the king might enioy halfe the profits of euery parsons benefice, who is not resident thereon. Therunto the king aunswered, that the ordinaries should do theyr duties therein, or els he would prouide further remedie, to stay their pluralities.

Item,* in the sayde Parliament, it was required: that none do sue to the court of Rome for any benefice, but only in the kings courtes.

In the next yere folowing, which was the 9. of this Kyng, an other petition of the Commons was put vp in Parliament against the court of Rome, whych I thought good here to expresse as foloweth.

The Commons do beseeche, that forasmuch as diuers prouisors of the benefices of holy Church,* dwelling in the Court of Rome, through their singular couetounes now newly imagined to destroy those that haue bene long time incumbents in diuers their benefices of holy church peaceably, some of them by the title of the king, some by title ordinary, and by the title of other true patrōs therof, by coulour of prouisions, collations, and other grauntes made to the sayd prouisors by the Apostoil, of the sayd benefices, do pursue processes in the said court by citation made beyond the sea,* without any citations made within the Realme in deede against the same incumbents, whereby many of the said incumbents through such priuy & crafty processes and sentences of priuation and inhabilitation, haue lost theyr benefices, and others put in the places of the saide incumbents before the publication of the same sentēces, they not knowing any thing, and many are in great hassarde to lose theyr benefices through such processes, to theyr perpetuall destruction and mischief: and forasmuch as thys mischief cannot be holpen wythout an especiall remedy be had by parliament: Pleaseth it the king to consider the great mischief and daunger that may so come vnto diuers hys subiects without their knowledge through such citations out of the realme, and therupon to ordaine by the aduise of the Lords of this present Parliament, that none presented, be receiued by any ordinarie vnto any benefice of any such incumbent for any cause of priuation or inhabilitation wherof the processe is not founded vpon citation made wythin the realme, and also that such incumbents may remaine in all theyr benefices, vntil it be prooued by due enquest in the court of the King, that the citations whereupon such priuations & inhabilitations are graunted, were made within the Realme: and that if such Ordinaries, or such presented or others, doe pursue the contrary, that then they and theyr procurators, fautours and counsellours doe incurr the paines contained in the statute made against prouisors in the 13. yere of the raigne of the late Richard king of England the second, by processes to be made as is declared in the statute made against suche prouisors in the 27. yeare of the raigne of king Edward, predecessour to our Lorde the king that nowe is, any royall licences or grauntes in any maner to the contrary notwithstanding, and that all other statutes made against prouisors, and not repealed before this present Parliament, be in their full force, and be firmly kept in all poyntes.

That the kings counsell haue power by authoritye of Parliament, in case that any man finde himselfe grieved in particular, that he may pursue: and that the said counsel by the aduise of the iustices do right vnto the parties. This to endure vntil the next parliament, reseruing alwayes vnto the king his prerogatiue and libertie.

Item,* that no Popes collector thenceforth should leuy any money within the realme, for first fruites of any ecclesiasticall dignitie, vnder payne of incurring the statute of prouisions.

Besides in the sayd Parliament holden the 11. yeare of this king,* is to be noted: how the commōs of the land, put vp a Bill vnto the kyng, to take the temporall landes out from spirituall mens handes or possession. The effecte of which Bill was, that the temporalities, disordinately wasted by men of the Church, might suffice to finde to the K. xv. Earles, xv. C. Knights, vi. M. CC. Esquires, and a C. houses of almose, to the reliefe of poore people, moe then at those dayes were wythin England: And ouer all these foresayd charges, the king might put yearly in his cofers xx. M. pounce.

Prouided, that euery Earle should haue of yerely rent iii. M. marke, and euery Knight C. marke, and iiii. plough landes: Euery Esquier xl. marke by yeare, with ii. plough landes, & euery house of almose C. marke, wyth ouersight of two true seculars vnto euery house: And also with prouision, Page 557 that euery township should keepe all pore people of their owne dwellers, whych might not labour for theyr liuing: with condition, that if moe fell in a towne then the towne might maintaine, than the said almes houses to relieue such townships.

And for to beare these charges, they alledged by theyr sayd bil,* y^t the temporalities, being in the possession of spiritual men, amounted to iii. C. and xxii. M. marke by yeare. Wherof they affirmed to be in the see of Cant. with the abbaies of Christes church, of S. Augustines, Shrewsbury, Coggeshale, and S. Osus xx. M. marke by yere. In the see of Yorke and Abbeyes there xx. M. marke. In the see of Winchester, and abbeyes there xx. M. marke. In the see of London, w^t abbeyes and other houses there, xx. M. marke. In the see of Lincolne, wyth the abbeyes of Peterborowe, Ramsey and other, xx. M. marke. In the see of Norwyche, with the abbeyes of Bury and other, xx. M. marke. In the see of Ely, Spalding and other, xx. M. marke. In the see of Bathe, wyth the abbey of Okinborne and other, xx. M. marke. In the see of Worcester, wyth the abbeyes of Euisham, Abingdon & other, xx. M. marke. In the see of Chester with the precinct of the same, with the sees of s. Daud, of Salisbury, and Exceter, wyth their precinctes xx. M. marke. The abbeis of Rauens or Reuans of Fountains, of Bernons, and diuers other to the number of v. moe, xx. M. marke. The abbeyes of Leicester, Waltham, Gosborne, Merton, Ticetir, Osney and other, vnto the number of vi. mo, xx. M. marke. The abbeyes of Douers, Batil, Lewys, Couentry, Dauentre, & Tourney, xx. M. marke. The abbais of Northhampton, Thortō, Bristow, Killingworth, Winchcombe, Nailes, Parchissor, Frideswide, Notly, and Grimmisby, xx. M. marke.

The which foresaid sommes amount to the full of iii. c. M. marke. And for the odde of xxii. M. marke, they apointed Hardford, Rochester, Huntingdō, Swineshed, Crowland, Malmesbury, Burton, Teukesbury, Dunstable, Shirborne, Taunton and Biland.

And ouer this they alleaged by the sayde bill, that ouer and aboue the said summe of iii. C. and xxii. M. marke, diuers houses of religion in England, possessed as many tēporalties as might suffice to find yerely xv. M. priests and clerks, euery priest to be allowed for his stipend vii. marke by the yeare.

To the which Bill no answer was made, but that the king of this matter wold take deliberation & aduisement, and wyth that answer ended, so that no further labor was made.

*These things thus hitherto discoursed, touching suche actes and matters as haue bene incident in the lyfe time of this king, followeth next the 13. yeare of his raigne. In the which yeare, the sayd king Henry the 4. after that hee had sent a little before a certaine company of captaines & souldiours to aide the duke of Burgundy in Fraunce (among whome was the Lord Cobham) keping his Christenmas at Eltham, fell greeuously sicke. From thence, he was conneied to London, where he began to call a parliament, but taryed not the end. In the meane time, the infirmitie of the king more and more increasing, * he was takē and brought into a bed in a fair chamber at Westminster. And as he lay in his bed, he asked how they called the same chamber: and they answered and sayde, Ierusalem. And then he sayde it was his prophecie, that he should make his ende in Ierusalem. And so disposing himselfe towarde hys ende, in the foresayd chamber he died: vpon what sicknesse, whether of leprosie, or some other sharpe disease, I haue not to affirm. Ex vetust. Chron. Anglico, cuius initium, That all men called. The like prophecy we read, that pope Siluester, 2. pa. 180. to whom being inquisitiue for the time and place where he should die, * it was answered, that he shuld die in Ierusalē. Who then saying Masse in a Chappel (called likewise Ierusalem) perceiued his end there to be nere, and died. And thus K. Henry the 4. successor to the lawful K. Richard 2. finished hys life at Westminster, and was buried at Cant. by the tombe of Thomas Becket. &c. An. 1413.

King Henry the fift.

*After thys Henry the 4. reigned Henry the 5. hys sonne, which was borne at Munmorth in Wales, of whose other vertues and great victories gotten in Fraunce, I haue not greatly to intermeddle: Especially, seeing the memory of hys worthy prowesse, being sufficiently described in other writers in this our time, may both content the reader and vnburden my labor herein. Especially, seing these latter troubles and perturbatiuous of the Church offer me so much, that vnneth any vacant laisure shalbe left, to intermeddle wyth matters prophane,

After the coronatiō then of this new king, * which was the 9. day of April, called then passion Sondag, which was an exceding stormy day, and so tēpestuous, that many did wonder at the portent thereof: not long after the same, a parliament began to be called & to be holden after the feast of Easter, at Westminster An. 1413. At whych time, Thomas Arundel the Archbishop of Canterburie, collected in Paules church at London, * an vniuersal Synode of all the bishops and clergie of England. In that Synode among other weighty matters and ponderous, was determined: that the day of S. George, and also of S. Dunstane should be double feast, called Duplex Festum in holy kitching, in holy Church I would say.

And because the order and maner of those Pope holy feastes, either yet is not sufficiently knowen to some rude and grosse capacities, or may peraduenture growe out of vse, and to be straunge & vnknownen to our posteritie hereafter: Therfore to geue a litle memorandum therof (by the way for eruditio of times hereafter to come) touching this misticall science of the Popes deepe and secrete diuinitie: here is to be noted, that the feastes of the Popes holy mother Catholique church,* be deuided in sondry members: Like as a plentifull roote in a fruitfull felde riseth vp and burgeneth into manifold armes, and the armes againe do multiply into diuers and sondry brāches, out of the which moreouer although no frute do come, yet both leaues and flowers doe bud and blossome in most copious wise, right beautifull to beholde: Euen so thys Festum, conteinyng a large matter of great variety of dayes and feasts, groweth to it selfe and multiplieth, being thus deuided: first into Festum duplex, and into Festum simplex, that is into feast double, and to feast simple. Againe, thys Festum duplex brauncheth foure folde wise, to wit, into Festum principale duplex: into Maius duplex: into Minus duplex, and infernis duplex, that is, in principal double, in greater double, in lesser double, and inferior or lower double. Unto these seneual sorts of feasts what daies were peculiarly assigned, it were to long to recite. For this present purpose it shall suffice to vnderstand: that as vnto the principall double feast onely belonged 8. daies in the yere: so the Maius duplex festum, had geuen vnto him by thys conuocation, the day of S. George, and of S. Dunstane, as is afore remembred: albeit by constitution it was so decreed, yet by custome it was not so vsed. Item, to be noted, that these two feastes, to witte, Principale duplex, and Maius duplex, did differ and were knownen from all other by foure notes, by seruice in the kitching, and by seruice in the Church, which was both double: by ringing in the steeple, which was with double peale: by copes in the quier, and by thurifyng or censeng the aultares. For in these two principall and greater double feasts, the vii, viii, and ix. lesson must be read wyth silken copes. Also at the said feasts in the time of the lessons, the altars in the church must be thurified, that is, smoked with incēse. &c. And likewise the Minus duplex, and Inferius duplex had also their peculiar seruice to them belonging.

Secondly the Simplex festum,* whych is the seconde arme springing of this diuision, is thus diuided: Eyther hauing a triple inuitorie, or a double, or els a single inuitorie. Of the which moreouer, some haue 3. lessons, some haue 9. &c.

And thus much by occasion for Popish feasts, not that I doe so much deride them, as I lament, that so much and manifest idolatry in them is committed to the great dishonor of our Lord our God, whych is onely to be honoured.

The trouble and persecution of the Lord Cobham.

BUT to lette this by matter passe,* againe to returne to the foresayde vniuersal Synode assembled by Thomas Arundel at S. Paules church in London, as is before remembred: the chiefe and principall cause of the assembling thereof (as recordeth the Chronicle of S. Albones) was to repress the growing and spreading of the Gospell, and especially to withstand the noble & worthy Lorde Cobham: Who was then noted to be a principall fauourer, receiuer, and maintainer of them, whome the Byshop misnamed to be Lollards, especially in the diocesses of London, Rochester, and Hereforde: setting them vp to preache whome the byshops had not licensed, and sending thē about to preach, which was against the constitution prouinciall, before remembred, pag. 5 24. holding also and teaching opinions of the sacraments,* of images, of pilgrimage, of the keyes and church of Rome, contrary and repugnant, to the receiued determination of the Romish church. &c.

In y^e meane time, as these were in talke amōgst them, Page 558 concerning the good Lord Cobham: resorted vnto them the 12. Inquisitors of heresies (whom they had appoynted at Oxford the yeare afore,* to searche out hereticke, wyth all Wickleffes bookes) who brought 200. and 46. conclusions, which they had collected as heresies out of the sayd bookes. The names of the sayd Inquisitors were these.

- 1. Iohn Witnam, a maister in the now Colledge.
- 2. Iohn Langedon, Monke of Christ church in Cant.
- 3. William Vfford, regent of the Carmelites.
- 4. Thomas Claxton, regent of the Dominickes.
- 5. Robert Gilbert.
- 6. Richard Earthisdale.
- 7. Iohn Lucke
- 8. Richard Snedisham.
- 9. Richard Flemming.
- 10. Thomas Rotborne.
- 11. Robert Ronbery.
- 12. Richard Grafdale.

These things thus done, & the Articles being brought in: further they proceded in their communication, concluding among themselues, that it was not possible for them to make whole Christes coat w^out seame (meaning therby their patched Popish synagoge) vnlesse certaine great men were brought out of the way which seemed to be the chiefe maintainers of the sayde Disciples of Wickleffe. Among whō thys noble knight sir Iohn Didcastle the Lord Cobham, was complained of by the generall proctors to be the chiefe principall.* Him they accused first for a mighty maintainer of suspected preachers in the dioces of London, Rochester, and Hereford, contrary to the mindes of their ordinaries. Not only they affirmed him to haue sēt thether the saide preachers, but also to haue assisted them there by force of armes, notwithstanding their Synodall constitution made afore to the contrary. Last of al, they accused him, that he was farre otherwise in beliefe of the sacrament of the altar of penance,* of pilgrimage, of image worshipping, and of the Ecclesiastical power, then the holy Church of Rome had taught many yeares before.

*In the ende it was concluded among them, that w^out any further delay, processe shoulde be awarded out against him, as against a most pernicious hereticke.

Some of that fellowship which were of more crafty experience then the other: thought it not best to haue y^t matter so rashly handled, but by some preparation made therunto before. Considering the sayde Lorde Cobham was a man of great birth, and in fauour at that time with the K. their counsaile was to know first the kings minde, to saue all things vpight. This counsaile was well accepted, and thereupon the Archbyshop thomas Arundell wyth hys other bishops, and a great part of y^e clergie, went straight waies vnto the king, then remaining at Kenningston. And there laid forth most greuous complaints against the sayd Lorde Cobham, to his great infamy and blemish, being a man right godly. The king gently heard those bloud thirsty Prelates, and farre otherwise then became his princely dignitie: notwythstanding requiring, and instantly desiring them, that in respect of hys noble stocke and knighthode, they should yet fauourably deale with him. And that they would if it were possible, without all rigor or extreme handling, reduce him again to the Churches vnitie. Hee promised them also,* that in case they were contented to take some deliberation, hys selfe would seriously common the matter wyth him.

Anone after, the king sent for the saide Lorde Cobham. And as he was come, he called him secretly, admonishing him betwixt him and him, to submit himself to his mother the holy church, and as an obedient child, to acknowledge himselfe culpable. Unto whome the Christen knight made this aunswer: You most worthy Prince, saith he, I am alwaies prompt & willing to obey, for somuch as I knowe you a christen king, & the appoynted minister of God, bearing the sworde to the punishment of euil doers, & for safegard of them that be vertuous. Unto you (next my eternal God) owe I my whole obedience, & submit thereunto (as I haue done euer) all that I haue, eyther of fortune or nature, ready at all times to fulfil whatsoeuer ye shall in the Lord, commaund inc. But as touching the Pope and hys spiritually, I owe them neither sure nor seruice, forsomuch as I knowe him by the Scriptures to be the great Antichrist, the sonne of perdition, the open aduersary of God, & the abomination standing in the holy place. When y^e king had heard thys, w^t such like sentences more, he would talke no longer with hym, but left him so vtterly.

And as the Archbyshop resorted againe vnto hym for an answer, he gaue him his full authority to cite him, examin him, & punish him according to their deuillish decrees, which they called the lawes of holy church. Then the sayde Archb.* by the counsaile of his other Byshops and Clergy, appoynted to cal before him Sir Iohn Didcastle the Lord Cobham, and to cause hym personally to appeare, to aunswere to such suspect Articles as they shoulde lay agaynst hym. So he sent forth hys chiefe Sommoner, wyth a very sharpe citation vnto the castle of Cowling, where as he at that time dwelt for his solace. And as the sayd Sommoner was come thether, hee durst in no case enter the gates of so noble a man wythout his licence, and therefore he returned home againe, hys message not done.

Then called the Archbish.* one Iohn Butler vnto him, which was then the doore keper of the kings priuy chamber: and wyth him he couenaunted through promyses and rewards, to haue this matter craftly brought to passe, vnder the kings name. Whereuppon, the sayde Iohn Butler tooke the Archbyshops Somner with him, and went vnto the saide Lord Cobham: shewing him, y^t it was the kings pleasure that he should obey that citation, and so cited him fraudulently. Then saide he to them in few words, that he in no case would consent to those most deuillish practises of the Priestes. As they had informed the Archbyshop of that aunswere, and that it was for no man priuately to cite him after that, without pearil of life: he decreed by & by to haue him cited by publique processe or open cōmandement. And in all the hast possible, vpon the Wednesday before the Natiuity of our Lady in September: he commaunded letters citatorir, to be set vpon the great gates of the Cathedrall church of Rochester (whych was but 3. English miles frō thence) charging hym to appeare personally before him at Ledis the 11. day of the same moneth and yeare,* all excuses to the contrary set apart. Those letters were taken down anone after,* by such as bare fauor vnto the Lord Cobham and so conueyed aside. After that caused the Archbish. new letters to be set vp on the natiuity day of our Lady, whych also were rent downe and vtterly consumed.

Then for somuch as he dyd not appeare at the day appoynted at Ledys (where her sate in Consistorie, as cruell as euer was Cayphas, with his court of hypocrites about him) he iudged him, denounced him, and condemned him, of most depe contumacy. After that, whē he had bene falsly informed by his hired spies,* and other glosing glauers: that the sayd Lord Cobh. had laughed him to scorn, disdained al his doings, maintained his old opinions, contemned the churches power, the dignity of a Bishop, & the order of priesthood (for all these was he than accused of) in his mody madnes w^tout iust profe, did he openly excommunicate him.* Yet was not withal this, his fierce tyranny satisfied: but commanded him to be cited a fresh, to appeare afore him the Saterday before the feast of S. Mathewe the Apostle, w^t these cruel threatnings added thereunto: that if he did not obey at the day, he wold more extremely handle him. And to make himselfe more strong towards the performāce thereof, he compelled the lay power by most terrible manasings of curses and interdictions: to assist hym against that seditious apostata, schismaticke, and hereticke, the troubler of the publike peace, that enemy of the realme and great aduersary of all holy Church, for al these hateful names did he geue him.

Thys most constant seruant of the Lorde and worthy Knight sir Iohn Didcastle, the Lorde Cobham, beholding the vnpeaceable furie of Antichrist, thus kindled agaynst him:* perceiuing himself also compassed on euery side wyth deadly daungers: He tooke paper and pen in hand, and so wrote a Christen cōfession or rekening of his faith (whych followeth heereafter) both signing and sealing it wyth his owne hand. Wherein he also answered to the 4. chieftest articles that the Archbyshop laid against him. That done, he tooke the copie with him, and went therewith to the king, trusting to finde mercy & fauour at his hande.* None other was y^t confession of his, then the common beleue or summe of the Churches faith, called the Apostles Creede, of all Christen men than vsed, with a brief declaration vpon the same, as here vnder ensueth.

The Christen beliefe of the Lorde Cobham.

I Beleue in God the father almighty, maker of heauen and earth.* And in Iesu Christ hys onely sonne our Lorde, which was cōceiued by the holy ghost, borne of the virgin Mary, suffred vnder Ponce Pilate, crucified dead and buried, went downe to hell, the thirde day rose agayne from death, ascended vp to heauen, sitteth on the ryght hande of God the father almighty, and from thence shal come again to iudge the quicke & the dead. I beleue in the holy ghost, the vniuersal holy Church, the communion of Saints, the forgeuenesse of sinnes, the vprising of the flesh, and euerlasting life. Amen.

And for a more large declaration (sayth he) of thys my*Page 559 sayth in the Catholicke Church: I stedfastly beleue, that there is but one God almighty, in and of whose Godhead are these three persons, the father, the sonne, and the holye Ghost, and that those three persons are the selfe same God almighty. I beleue also, that the second person of this most blessed Trinitie, in most conuenient tune appoynted therunto afore,* tooke flesh and bloud of the most blessed virgin Mary, for the sauegarde and redemption of the vniuersall kind of man, which was afore lost in Adams offence.

Moreouer I beleue, that the same Iesus Christ our Lord thus being both God and man, is the onely head of the whole Christian Church, and that all those that hathe bene or shalbe saued, be members of this most holy church. And this holy Church I thinke to be deuided into three sortes or companyes.

Wherof the first sort be now in heauen, and they are the sayntes from hence departed.* These as they were here cōuersant, conformed alwayes their liues to the most holye lawes and pure examples of Christ, renouncing Sathan, the world, and the flesh, with all their concupiscences and euils.

*The second sort are in Purgatory (if any suche place be in the scriptures) abiding the mercy of God and a full deliuerance of payne.

The third sort are here vpon the earth, and be called the Church militant. For day and night they contend against crafty assaultes of the deuill, the flattering prosperities of this world, and the rebellious filthines of the flesh.

This latter congregation by the iust ordinance of God is also seuered into three diuers estates,* that is to say, into priesthood, knighthood, and the commons. Among whom the will of God is, that the one should ayd the other, but not destroy the other. The priestes first of al seclued from all worldlines, should conforme theyr liues vtterly to the examples of Christ and his Apostles. Euermore shoulde they be occupied in preaching and teaching the scriptures purely,* and in geuing wholesome examples of good liuing to the other two degrees of men. More modest also, more louing, gentle, and lowly in spirite, should they be, then ano other sortes of people.

In knighthood are all they, which beare sword by law of office. These should defend Gods lawes, and see that the Gospell were purely taught,* conforming theyr liues to y^t same, and secluding all false preachers: yea these ought rather to hazard their liues, thē to suffer such wicked decrees as either blemisheth the eternall Testament of God, or yet letteth the free passage therof, whereby heresies & schismes might spring in the Church. For of none other arise they as I suppose,* then of erroneous constitutiōs, craftely first creeping in vnder hipocriticall lies, for aduauntage. They ought also to preserue Gods people from oppressours, tyrauntes, and theeues, & to see the clergie supported so long as they teach purely, pray rightly, and minister the Sacramentes freely. And if they see them doe otherwise, they are bound by the law of office to compell them to chaung their doinges: & to see all thinges performed according to gods prescript ordinaunce.

*The latter fellowship of this Church, are the common people: whose duery is, to beare their good mindes & true obedience, to the aforesayd ministers of God, theyr kinges ciuill gouernours and Priestes. The right office of these, is iustly to occupy euery man his facultie, be it marchaundise, handicraft: or the tilthe of the ground. And so one of them to be as an helper to an other, following alwayes in their sortes the iust commaundementes of the Lord God.

Ouer and besidés all this, I most faythfully beleue y^e the Sacramentes of Christes Church are necessary to all Christen beleuers: this alwayes seen to: that they be truly ministred according to Christes first institution and ordinaunce. And forasmuch as I am maliciously & most falsly accused of a misbeliefe in the sacrament of the aulter, to the hurtfull slaunder of many: I signifie here vnto all men, y^t this is my fayth concerning that. I beleue in that Sacrament to be contayned very Christes body and bloud vnder the similitudes of bread and wyne, yea the same body y^t was conceiued of the holy ghost, borne of y^t virgine Mary done on the crosse: dyed, that was buryed, arose the thyrd day from the death: and is now glorified in heauen. I also beleue, the vniuersall law of God to be most true and perfect, and they which doe not so follow it in theyr fayth and works (at one time or an other) can neuer be saned: Where as he that seketh it in fayth, accepteth it, learneth it, delighteth therin, and performeth it in loue, shall cast for it the felicitie of euerlasting Innocencie.

*Finally, this is my fayth also, that God will aske no more of a Christen beleuer in this life, but onely to obey y^t preceptes of that most blessed law. If any Prelates of the Church require more, or els any other kinde of obedience, then this to be vsed: he contemneth Christ, exalting hymselfe aboue God, and so becommeth an open Antichrist. Al the premisses I beleue particularly, and generally all that God hath left in his holy scripture: that I should beleue. Instantly desiring you my siege Lord and most worthye king, that this confession of mine, may be iustly examined by the most godly wise and learned men of your Realme. And if it be found in all pointes agreeing to the veritie, thē let it be so allowed: and I therupon holden for none other then a true Christian. If it be proued otherwise: then let it be vtterly cōdemned: prouided alwayes, that I be taught a better beliefe by the word of God: and I shall most reuerently at all times obey therunto.

This brieue confession of this fayth, the Lorde Cobham wrote (as is mentioned afore) and so tooke it with him to the court, offering it withall meekenes vnto the kyng to read it ouer. The king would in no case receaue it, but cōmanded it to be deliuered vnto thē that should be his iudges. Then desired he in the kinges presence, that an hundred knightes and Esquiers might be suffered to come in vpon hys purgation, which he knew, woulde cleare hym of all heresies. Moreouer he offered himsel•e after the lawe of armes, to fight for life or death in any man liuing, Christen or heathen, in the quarrell of hys fayth, the king and the Lordes of hys Councell excepted. Finally with all gētlenes he protested before all y^t were present, that he wold refuse no maner of correction that shold after the lawes of God he ministred vnto him, but that he would at al times with all meekenes obey it. Notwithstanding all this, the king suffered him to be sommoned personally in his owne priuy chamber. Then sayd the Lord Cobham to the king that he had appeled from the Archbishop to the Pope of Rome, & therefore he ought he sayd, in no cause to be hys iudge. And hauing his appeale there at hand ready writtē, he shewed it with al reuerence to the king. Wherewith the king was then much more displeased then afore, and sayde angerly vnto him, that he should not pursue hys appeale: but rather he should tary in hold, till suche time as it were of the Pope allowed. And thē, would he, or nild he, y^t archbishop should be his iudge. Thus was there nothing allowed that the good Lord Cobham had lawfully afore required. But for so much as he woulde not be sworne in all things to submit himselfe to the Church, and so take what penaunce the archbishop would enioyne him: He was arested agayne at the kinges commaundement, and so ledde forth to the Tower of London, to keepe hys day (so was it then spoken) that the archbishop had appoynted him afore in the kinges chamber.

*Then caused he the foresayd confession of his fayth to be copyed agayne and the aunswere also (which he had made to the foure articles proponed agaynst him) to be written in maner of an Indenture in two sheetes of paper: That when he should come to hys aunswere, he might geue the one copy vnto the archbishop, and reserue the other to him selfe. As the day of examination was come, which was the 23. day of September the Saturday before the feast of saint Mathewe: Thomas Arundell the Archbishop, sitting in Cayphas rowme in the Chapter house of Paules, wyth Richard Clifford Byshop of London, and Henry Bolnig broke Byshop of Winchester: sir Robert Morley knight and Liefetenant of the Tower, brought personally before hym the sayd Lord Cobham, and there left him for the time vnto whom the archbishop sayd these wordes.

* The first examination of the Lorde Cobham.

Sir Iohn in the last generall conuocation of the clergie of this our Prouince, ye were detected of certayne heresies, and by sufficient witnesses found culpable. Whereupon ye were by forme of spirituall law cited, and woulde in no case appeare. In conclusion, vpon your rebellious cōtumacie, ye were both priuately and openly excommunicated. Notwithstanding we neyther yet shewed our selues vnready to haue geuen your absolution (nor yet doe not to this houre) would ye haue meekely asked it. Vnto this the Lord Cobham shewed, as though he had geuen no eare; hauing hys minde otherwise occupied, and so desired no absolution. But sayd, he would gladly before him and hys brethren make rehearsal of that fayth which he held and en tended alwayes to stand to, if it woulde please them to licence him thereunto. And then he tooke out of his vosome a certayn writing endented, concerning the articles wherof he was accused, and so opely read it before them, geuing it vnto the Archbishop, as he had made thereof an ende. Whereof this is the copy.

Page 560*I IOhn Didcastle Knight Lord of Cobham, will that all Christen men weet and vnderstād: that I clepe almighty God into witnesse, that it hath bene, nowe is, and euer with the helpe of God, shall be mine entent and my will, to beleue faythfully and fully all the sacramentes that euer God ordayned to be do in holy Church: and moreouer to declare me in these foure poynts, I beleue that the most worshipfull Sacrament of the aulter is Christes body in forme of bread, the same body that was borne of the blessed virgin our Lady sayne Mary, done on the crosse, dead and buried, the thyrd day rose from death to life, the which body is now glorified in heauen.

*Also as for the sacrament of penaunce I beleue, that it is needefull to euery man that shalbe saued to forsake sinne and do due penaunce for sinne before done, with true confession, very contrition, and due satisfaction as Gods lawe limitteth and teacheth, and els may he not be saued: which penaunce I desire all men to doe.

And as of Images I vnderstand, that they be not of be'leue, but that they were ordayned sith the beleue was zewe of Christ,* by sufferance of the Church to be Calenders to lewd men, to represent and bryng to minde the passion of our Lord Iohn Christ, and martyrdome and good liuing of other sayntes: And that who so it be, that doth the worship to dead Images that is due to God, or putteth suche hope or trust, in helpe of them, as he should doe to God, or hath affection in one more then in an other, he doth in that the greatest sinne of maumerry.

*Also I suppose this fully, that euery man in this earth is a pilgrime toward blisse, or toward payne: and that he that knoweth not, ne will not know ne keepe the holy comaundementes of God in his liuing here (albeit that he be go on Pilgrimages to all the world, and he dye so) he shalbe damned: and he that knoweth the holy commaundementes of God, and keepeth them to hys ende, he shalbe saued though he neuer in hys lyfe goe on pilgrimage, as men now vse to Caunterbury or to Rome or to any other place.

This aunswere to hys articles thus ended and read, he deliuered it to the Bishops as is sayd afore. Than counceled the Archbishop with the other two Bishops, and with diuers of the Doctours, what was to be done in this matter: commaunding hym for the tyme to stand aside. In cōclusion by their assent & information, he said thus vnto him Come hether Syr Iohn. In this your wryting are many good thinges containyd, and right Catholicke also, we deny it not: but ye must consider y^t thys day was appoynted you to aunswere to other pointes concerning those articles, wherof as yet no mention is made in this your Bil. And therefore ye must yet declare vs your minde more playnly.

And thus: whether that ye holde, affirme, and beleue, that in the sacrament of the aulter, after the consecration rightly done by a priest, remayneth materiall bread, or not? Moreouer,* whether ye do hold, affirme and beleue, that as concerning the sacrament of penance (where as a competent number of priestes are) euery Christen man is necessarily bound to be confessed of hys sinnes to a priest ordained by the Church, or not.

After certayn other communication, this was the answere of the good Lord Cobham. That none otherwise would he declare his minde, nor yet aunswere vnto hys articles, then was expressly in his writing there containyd. Then sayd the Archbishop agayne vnto hym:* Syr Iohn, beware what ye do. For if ye aunswere not clearely to those thinges that are here objected agaynst you (especially at the time appointed you onely for that purpose) the law of holy Church is, that compelled once by a iudge, we may openly proclayme ye an hereticke. Unto whome he gaue this aunswere: Do as ye shall thinke best, for I am at a poynt.* Whatsoeuer he or the other Byshops did aske him after that, he had them resorte to hys Bill: for thereby would he stand to the very death. Other aunswere woulde he not geue that day, wherwith the Bishops and Prelates were in a maner amased and wonderfully disquieted.

At the last, the archbishop councelled agayne with hys other Bishops and Doctours, and in the end therof declared vnto him, what the holy Church of Rome (following the saying of S. Augustine, S. Hicrome, S. Ambrose, and of other holy Doctours) had determined in these matters, no maner of mention once made of Christ. Whiche determination (sayth he) ought all Christen men both to beleue and to follow.

Then sayd the Lord Cobham vnto him, that he would gladly both beleue and obserue whatsoeuer holy church of Christes institution had determined, or yet whatsoeuer God had willed him either to beleue or to do. But that the pope of Rome with his Cardinals,* Archbishops, bishops and other prelates of that Churche had lawfull power to determine such matter as stode not with his worde throughly: that would he not (he sayd) at the time affirme. With this y^t archbish. had him to take good aduiseement til the monday next following (which was the 25. day of Sep^tember) and then iustly to aunswere, specially vnto thys poynt: whether there remayned materiall breade in the sacrament of the aulter, after the wordes of consecration, or not? He promised him also, to send vnto hym in writing those matters clearely determined,* that he might then be the more perfect in his answere making. And all this was nought els, but to blinde the multitude with somewhat. The next day following, according to his promise, y^e Archbishop sent vnto hym into the Tower, this foolishe and blasphemous writing made by him and by hys vnlearned Clergy.

 The determination of the Archbyshop and Clergy.

The faith and determination of y^e holy Church touching the blisfull sacrament of the aaltar, is this: that after the Sacramentall wordes be once spoken by a Priest in hys Masse, the material bread, that was before bread, is turned into Christes very body. And the materiall wine, that was before wine, is turned into Christes very bloud. And so there remayneth in the sacrament of the aulter, from thenceforth, no materiall bread, nor materiall wine, which were there before the Sacramentall wordes were spoken: Now beleue ye this article? ^{} Holy church hath determined that euery Christen man liuing here bodely vpon the erth ought to be shriuen to a priest ordeined by the Church, if he may come to him. Now feelee ye this article?

Christ ordayned S. Peter the Apoistle to be his vicare here in earth, ^{} whose sea is the holy church of Rome: And he graunted, that the same power which he gaue vnto Pe|ter, should succeed to all Peters successours, which we call now Popes of Rome: ^{} By whose power in Churches particuler, be ordayned Prelates, as Archbishops, Byshops, Parsons, Curates, and other degrees more. Unto whom Christen men ought to obey after the laws of the church of Rome. This is the determination of holy Church. Howe feelee ye this article?

Holy church hath determined, ^{*} that it is meritorious to a christen man, to go on pilgrimage to holy places: And there specially to worship holy reliques and Images of Saintes, Apostles, and Martyrs, Confessours, & all other Saintes besides, approued by the church of Rome. Howe feelee ye this article?

And as the Lorde Cobham had reade ouer this most wretched writing, ^{} he maruailed greatly of their mad ignorance. But that he considered agayne, that God had geuen them ouer for their vnbeliefes sake, into most deepe errors & blindnes of soule. Agayne, he perceiued hereby, that their vttermost mallice was purposed agaynst him, howsoeuer he should answer. ^{} And therefore he put hys life into the handes of God, desiring hys onely spirite to assiste hym in his next answer. When the sayd xxv. day of September was come (whiche was also the Monday before Michaelmas) in the sayd yeare of our Lord, 1413. ^{} Thomas Arundell the Archbishop of Caunterbury commaunded his indiciall seate to be remoued from y^t chapter house of Paules to the Dominicke Friers within Ludgate at Londō. And as he was there set with Richard Byshop of London: Hēnry the Byshop of Winchester: ^{} and Bennet the Byshop of Bangor: He called in vnto him his counsell & his officers, with diuers other Doctours and Fryers, of whome these are the names here following, maister Henry ware, y^e Officiall of Caunterbury: Phillip Morgan, Doctour of both lawes: Howell Kiffin, Doctor of the Canon lawe. ^{} Iohn Kempe, Doctor of the Canon lawe. Williā Carleton, Doctour of the Canon law. Iohn Witnā, of the new College in Oxford. Iohn Wighthead, Doctor in Oxford also, Rob. Wōbewel, Vicare of S. Laurence in the Iewry, Thomas Palmer, the Warden of Minors, Robert Chamberlayne, Prior of the Dominickes, Richard Dodington, ^{} Prior of the Augustines. Thomas Walden: Priour of the Carmelites, all Doctours of Diuinitie. Iohn Stephens also, and Iames Cole, both Notaryes, appoynted there purposely to write all that shoulde be eyther sayd or done. All these with a great sorte more of Priestes, Monkes, Chanons, Friers, Parishe Clerkes, belryngers, Pardoners, disdayned him, with innumerable mockes & scornes, reconding him to be an horrible hereticke, and a man accused afore God.

Page 561 ^{} Anone the Archbishop called for a masse booke, & caused all those Prelates and Doctors to sweare there vpon, that euery man should faythfully doe his office and duety that day. And that neyther for fauour nor feare, loue nor hate of the one party nor the other: any thing should there be witnessed, ^{} spoken or done, but according to the truth, as they wold answer before God & all the world at the day of dome. Then were the two foresayd Notaryes sworne also, to wryte and to witnesse the processe that there shoulde be vttered on both parties, and to say their mindes (if they otherwise knew) before they should register it.* And al this dissimulation was but to colour their mischiefes, before the ignoraunt multitude.

Consider herein (gentle reader) what this wicked generation is, and how far wide from the iust feare of God for as they were then, so are they yet to this day.

After that, came forth before them Syr Robert Morley Knight and lieftenant of the Tower,* and he brought with him y' good Lorde Cobhā, there leauing him among them as a Lambe among wolues, to his examination and aunswere.

 An other examination of the Lorde Cobham.

Then saide the archbishop vnto him: Lord Cobham ye be aduised (I am sure) of the wordes & processe which we had vnto you vpon Saterday last past in the chapterhouse of Paules: which processe were nowe to long to be rehearsed agayne? I said vnto you then, that ye were accursed for your contumacie & disobedience to holy Church thinking that ye should with meekenes haue desired your absolution.

Then spake the Lord Cobham with a chearful countenaunce, and sayde. God sayde by his holy Prophet, Maledicam benedictionibus vestris,* whiche is as much to say as I shall curse where you blesse.

The archbishop made then as though he had continued forth his tale and not hearde him,* saying: Sir, at that tyme I gently profered to haue assoyled you if ye woulde haue asked it. And yet I doe the same if ye will humbly desire it in due forme and maner, as holy church hath ordayned.

Then said the Lord Cobham. May forsooth will I not for I neuer yet trespassed agaynst you,* and therefore I will not do it. And with that he kneeled downe on the pauement, holding vp his handes to wardes heauen, and sayd, I shriue me here vnto thee my eternall liuing God, that in my frayle youth I offended thee (Lord) most greuously in pride, wrath, and gluttony: in couetousnes, and in leche'ry. Many men haue I hurt in mine anger,* and done many other horrible sinnes, good Lorde I aske thee mercye. And therewith weepingly he stode vp agayne and sayde with a mighty voyce. Loe, good people, loe. For the breaking of Gods law and his great commaundementes, they neuer yet cursed me. But for their owne lawes and traditions, most cruelly doe they handle both me and other mē. And therefore, both they and theyr lawes, by the promise of God, shall vtterly be destroyed.

At this the archbishop and his companye were not a litle blemished. Nothwithstanding, he tooke stomack vnto him agayne after certayne words, had in excuse of their tyranny, and examined the Lord Cobham of his Christen beleue.

Whereunto the Lord Cobham made this godly aunswere. I beleue (sayth he) fully and faithfully the vniuersall lawes of God. I beleue that all is true whiche is conteyned in the holy sacred scriptures of the Bible. Finally I beleue,* all that my Lord God would I shoulde beleue. Then demaunded the Archbishop an answere of that Bill whiche he and the Clergie had sent him into the Tower the day afore, in maner of a determination of the Churche concerning the foure Articles whereof he was accused, specially for the Sacrament of the aulter, howe he beleueed therein.

Whereunto the Lord Cobham sayd, that with that bill he had nothing to doe. But this was his beliefe (he sayd) concerning the sacrament. That his Lord and Sauour Iesus Christ, sitting at his last supper with his most deare disciples, the night before he should suffer, tooke bread in his hand. And geuing thanks to his eternall father, blessed it, brake it, and so gaue it vnto them, saying: Take it vnto you,* and eat therof all, this is my body whiche shall be betrayed for you: Doe this hereafter in my remembraunce. This doe I thoroughly beleue (sayth he) for this sayth am I taught of the Gospell in Mathewe, in Marke, and in Luke, and also in the first Epistle of S. Paule to the Corinthians. chap. 11.

Then asked the Archbishop,* if he beleueed that it were bread after the consecration or sacramentall words spoken ouer it.

The Lord Cobham said. I beleue that in the sacramēt of the aulter is Christes very body in forme of bread, the same that was borne of y^t virgin Mary, done on the crosse, dead, and buried: and that the third day arose from death to life, which now is glorified in heauen.

Then sayd one of the Doctors of the law.* After the sacramentall wordes be vttered: there remaineth no bread, but onely the body of Christ.

The Lorde Cobham sayd then to one Maister Iohn whitehead:* You sayd once vnto me in the castell of Couling, that the sacred host was not Christes body. But I held then against you, and proued that therein was his body, though the seculars and Friers could not therein agree but held ech one against other in that opinion. These wer my wordes then, if ye remember it.

Then shouted a sorte of them together and cryed wyth great noyse.* We say all that it is Gods body.

And diuers of them asked him in great anger, whether it were materiall bread after the consecration or not?

Then looked the L. Cobham, earnestly vpon the archbishop, and said: I beleue surely that it is Christes body in forme of bread. Syr beleue not you thus?

And the archbishop sayd,* yes mary do I?

Then asked him the Doctors, whether it were onely Christes bodye after the consecration of a Priest, and no body or not?

And he sayd vnto them, it is both Christes body and bread I shall proue it as thus. For like as Christ dwelling here vpon y^t earth, had in him both Godhead & manhood, and had the inuisible Godhead couered vnder that manhode, which was onely visible and seene in him:* So in the sacrament of the aulter, is Christes very bodye and bread also, as I beleue the bread is the thinge, that we see wyth our eies, the body of Christ (which is his flesh & his bloud) is there vnder hyd and not seene, but in fayth.

And moreouer,* to proue that it is both Christes bodie and also bread after the consecration, it is by playne wordes expressed by one of your owne Doctours writing agayne Eutiches, whiche faith: Like as the selfe same Sacraments, do passe by the operation of the holy Ghost, into a Diuine nature: and yet notwithstanding keepe the propertie still of their former nature: so, that principall mistery declareth to remayne, one true, and perfect Christ. &c.

Then smiled they eache one vpon other,* that the people shoulde iudge him taken in a great heresie. And with a great brag diuers of them sayd. It is a foule heresie.

Then asked the Archbishop what bread it was? And the Doctors also inquired of him whether it were materiall or not?

The Lorde Cobham said vnto thē.* The scriptures maketh no mention of this worde materiall, and therfore my faith hath nothing to doe therwith. But this I say and beleue, that it is Christes body and bread.* For Christ sayd in the vi. of Iohns Gospell. Ego sum panis viuus, qui de coelo descendi. I which came downe from heauen, am the liuing and not the dead bread. Therfore I say now agayne as I sayd afore, as our Lord Iesus Christ is very God and very man: so in the most blessed sacrament of the aulter, is Christes very body and bread.

Then sayd they all with one voyce.* It is an heresie.

One of the Byshops stode vp by and by, and sayd. What? it is an heresie manifest, to say that it is bread after the Sacramentall wordes be once spoken, but Christes body onely.

The Lord Cobham sayd: S. Paule the Apostle was (I am sure) as wise as you be now,* and more gladly learned. And he called it bread, writing to the Corinthians. The bread that we breake, sayth he, is it not the partakyng of the body of Christ? Lo, he called it bread and not Christes body, but a meane whereby we receaue Christs body.

Then sayd they agayne. Paule must be otherwise vnderstand. For it is sure on heresie to say that it is bread after the consecration, but onely Christes body.

The Lord Cobham asked,* how they could make good that sentence of theirs?

They aunswered him thus. For it is agaynst the determination of holy Church.

Then sayd the archbishop vnto him. Syr Iohn, we sēt you a writing concerning the fayth of this blessed Sacrament, clearely determined by the church of Rome our mother, and by the holy Doctors.

Then he sayd agayne vnto him. I know none holier then is Christ and his Apostles. And as for that determination I wore, it is none of theirs: for it standeth not with the Page 562 scriptures, but manifestly against them. If it be the Churches, as ye say it is, it hath bene hers onely since she receaued the great poyson of worldly possessions, and not afore.

Then asked they him, to stop his mouth therewith. If he beleued not in the determination of the Church?

*And he sayd vnto them. No forsooth, for it is no God. In all our Creede, this word (in) is but thrise mentioned concerning beleue. In God the father, in God the sonne, in in God the holy Ghost three persons and one God. The byrth, the death, the buriall, the resurrection and ascension of Christ, hath none (in) for beleue, but in him. Neyther yet hath the Church, the sacramentes, the forgeuenes of sinne, the latter resurrection, nor yet the life euerlasting nor anye other (in) then in the holy ghost.

Then sayd one of the Lawyers. Such, that was but a word of office. But what is your beliefe concerning holy Church?

*The Lord Cobham aunswere. My beliefe is: (as I sayd afore) that all the scriptures of the sacred Bible are true. All y^e is grounded vppon them I beleue throughly. For I know, it is Gods pleasure that I shuld so do. But in your Lordly lawes and idle determinations, haue I no beliefe. For ye be no part of Christes holy church, as your open deedes doth shew: But ye are very Antichristes, obstinately set agaynst his holy law and wil. The lawes that ye haue made, are nothing to his glory, but onely for your vayne glory and abhominable couetousnes.

*This they sayd, was an exceeding heresie (and that in a great fume) not to beleue the determination of holye Church.

Then the Archbishop asked hym, what he thought of holy Church.

He sayd vnto him my beliefe is, that the holye Churche is the number of them, which shalbe saued, of whō Christ is the head. Of this church, one part is in heauen wyth Christ, an other in purgatorye (you say) and the thyrd is here in earth. This latter part standeth in three degrees in knighthoode, priesthoode, and the communaltie, as I sayd afore playnely in the confession of my beliefe.

Then sayd the Archbishop vnto hym. Can you tell me who is of this church?

The Lord Cobham answered: Yea truely can I.

Then sayd Doctor walden the Prior of the Carmelits It is no doubt vnto you who is thereof.* For Christ sayeth in Mathewe Nolite iudicare, presume to iudge no man. If ye be here forbidden the iudgement of your neighbour or brother, much more the iudgement of your superiour.

The Lorde Cobham made him this aunswere: Christ sayth also in the selfe same chapter of Mathew, that like as the euill tree is knowne by hys fruit, so is a false Prophet by his works, appeare they neuer so glorious: But that ye left behind ye. And in Iohn he hath this text: Operibus credite, belecue you the outwarde doinges.* And in an other place of Iohn: Iustum iudicium iudicate, when wee knowe the thing to be true, we may so iudge it, and not offend. For Dauid sayd also: Rectè iudicate filij hominum. Iudge rightly alwayes ye children of men. And as for your superiority were ye of Christ, ye shoulde be meeke ministers, and no proud superiours.

Then said Doctor walden vnto him, ye make here no difference of iudgements.* Ye put no diuersitie betwene y' euill iudgements, whiche Christ had forbidden, and the good iudgements, which he hath cōmaunded vs to haue. Rash iudgment, and right iudgement, al is one with you. So swift iudges alwayes are the learned schollers of Wicklisse.

Vnto whom the Lord Cobham thus aunswered: It is wel sophistred of you, forsooth. Preposterous are your iudgements euermore.* For as the Prophet Esay sayth, ye iudge euill, good, and good, euill. And therefore the same prophet concludeth, that your wayes are not Gods waies nor Gods wayes your wayes. And as for that vertuous man wicklisse, whose iudgements ye so highly disdayne: I shall say here of my part,* both before God and man, that before I knew that despised doctrine of his, I neuer abstayned from sinne. But since I learned therin to feare my Lorde GOD, it hath otherwise I trust, bene with me: so muche grace coulde I neuer finde in all your glorious instructions.

Then said Doctor Walden agayne, yet vnto him: It were not well with me (so many vertuous men liuing, & so many learned men teaching the scripture, being also so open, and the examples of fathers so plenteous) If I thē had no grace to amend my life, till I heard the deuil preach S. Hierome sayth, that he whiche seeketh suche suspected Maysters, shall not finde the midday light, but the midday deuill.

The Lord Cobham sayd:* Your fathers the old Phariseis, ascribed Christes miracles to Belzebub, and his doctrine to the deuil. And you as their natural children, haue still the selfe same iudgement, concerning his faythfull followers. They that rebuke your vicious liuing must needs be heretickes, and that must your doctors proue, whē you haue no scripture to do it. Then sayde he to them all: To iudge you as you be, we neede no further go, then to your owne proper actes. Where do ye find in all Gods law, that ye shold thus sit in iudgement of any Christen men, or yet geue sentence vppon any other man vnto death as ye doe here dayly? No grounde haue ye in all the Scriptures so Lordly to take it vppon you, but in Annas and Cayphas, which sat thus vpon Christ, and vppon his Apostles after hys ascension. Of them onely haue ye taken it to iudge Christes members as ye doe, and neither of Peter nor Iohn.

Then sayd some of the Lawyers: yes forsooth syr, for Christ iudged Iudas.

The Lord Cobham sayd: No, Christ iudged him not, but he iudged himselfe, and thereupon went forth, & so did hange himselfe: But in deede Christ sayde, woe vnto him, for that couerous act of hys, as he doth yet still vnto many of you. For since the venune of him was shed into y^e church ye neuer followed Christ: neither yet haue ye stande in the perfection of Gods law.

Then the Archbishop asked him, what he ment by that venune?

The Lord Cobham sayd: your possessions and Lordships. For then cried an aungell in the ayre (as your owne Chronicles mentioneth) wo,* wo, woe, this day is veuime shed into the church of God. Before that time, all the Byshops of Rome were martyrs in a manner. And since that time, we read of very few. But in deede since y^t same time, one hath put down an other, one hath poysoned an other, one hath cursed an other, and one hath slayne an other, and done much more mischief besides, as all the Chronicles telleth. And let all men consider well this, that Christ was meeke, and mercifull. The pope is proude, and a tyraunt. Christ was poore and forgaue. The pope is riche and a malicious mansleaver, as hys dayly actes doe proue hym. Rome is the very neast of Antichrist, and out of that neast commeth all the disciples of him. Of whome Prelates, Priestes, and Monkes, are the body, and these pud Friers are the tayle which couereth his most filthy part.

Then said the Prior of the Fryers Augustines: Alacke sir, why do you say so? That is vncharitably spoken.

And the Lord Cobham said.* Not onely is it my saying but also the Prophet Esayes, long afore my time. The proph^t saith he, which preacheth lyes, is the tayle behind. For as you Fryers and monkes be (like Phariseis) deuided in your outward apparell and vsages, to make ye deuision a^mong the people. And thus, you with such other, are y^e very naturall members of Antichrist.

Then said he vnto them all:* Christ saith in his GossPELL. Woe vnto you Scribes and Phariseis, Hipocrites. For ye close vp the kingdome of heauen before men. Neyther enter ye in your selues, nor yet suffer any other y^t wold enter into it. But ye stop vp the wayes therūto with your owne traditions,* and therefore are ye the housholde of Antechrist: ye will not permit Gods veritie to haue passage, nor yet to be taught of his true ministers, fearing to haue your wickednes reprobued. But by suche flatterers as vphold you in your mischiefes,* ye suffer the common people most miserably to be seduced.

Then sayd the archbishop. By our Lady syr, there shal none such preach within my dioces (and God will) nor yet in my iurisdiction (if I may know it) as either maketh diuision or yet dissention among the poore commons.

The Lord Cobham sayd. Both Christ and hys Apostles were accused of sedition making, yet were they moste peaceable men. Both Daniell and Christ prophesied that such a troublous tyme shoulde come, as hath not bene yet since the worldes beginning. And this prophecy is partlye fulfilled in your dayes and doinges. For manye haue yee slayne already,* and more wil ye ssay hereafter, if God fulfil not his promise. Christ sayth also, if those dayes of yours were not shortened, scarsly shold any flesh be sauēd.* Therefore looke for it iustly, for God will shorten youre dayes. Moreouer, though Priestes and deacons for preaching of Gods word, and for ministring the sacraments, with prouision for the poore: be grounded on Gods lawe: yet haue these other sectes no maner of ground hereof, so farre as I haue read.

Then a Doctor of lawe,* called maister Iohn Kempe, plucked out of his bosome a copy of the bil which they had afore sent him into the tower, by the Archbishops counsel, Page 563 thinking thereby to make shorter worke with hym.* For they were so amased with his aunsweres (not all vnlike to them whiche disputed with Stephen) that they knewe not well how to occupy the time,* their wits and sophistry (as God would) so fayled them that day.

My Lord Cobham (sayth this Doctor) we must briefly know your minde concerning these foure poyntes here following. The rest of them is this. And then he read vpō the bill: * The fayth and determination of holy churche touching the blessed sacrament of the aulter is this. That after the sacramentall wordes be once spoken of a Priest in his masse: the materiall bread that was before bread, is turned to Christes very body. And the materiall wine is turned into Christes bloud. And so there remayneth in the sacrament of the aulter from thenceforth no material bread nor materiall wine which were there before the sacramentall wordes were spoken. Sir beleue ye not this?

*The Lord Cobham said: This is normy beliefe. But my fayth is (as I sayd to you afore) that in the worshipfull sacrament of the aulter, is Christes very body in forme of bread.

Then sayd the archbishop: sir Iohn ye must say otherwise.

The Lord Cobham said: Nay, that I shall not, if God be vpon my side (as I trust he is) but that there is Christs body in forme of bread, as the common beliefe is.

Then read the doctour againe.

The second poynt is this. * Holy Church hath determined that euery Christen mā liuyng here bodely vpō earth ought to be shriuen of a priest ordeined by the church, if he may come to him: syr what say you to this?

*The Lord Cobham aunswered and said: A diseased or sore wounded man, hath need to haue a sure wise Chirurgian and a true, knowing both the ground and the daunger of the same. Most necessary were it therefore to be first shriuen vnto God which onely knoweth our diseases and can helpe vs. I deny not in this the going to a priest, if he be a man of good life and learning. * For the lawes of God are to be required of the priest, which is godly learned. But if he be an idiote or a man of vicious liuing that is my curate, I ought rather to flee from him then to seeke vnto him: For sooner might I catch euill of him that is nought then any goodnes towards my soules health.

Then read the doctour agayne.

The third poynt is this, * Christ ordayned S. Peter the Apostle to be his vicare here in earth whose sea is y^e church of Rome. And he graunted that the same power whiche he gaue vnto Peter, should succede to all Peters successours which we call now popes of Rome. By whose special power in churches particular, be ordayned Prelates & archbishops, parsons, Curates, and other degrees more. Vnto whom Christen men ought to obey after the lawes of the Church of Rome. This is the determination of holye Church. Sir beleue ye not this?

To this he answered and sayd: He that followeth Peter most nighest in pure liuing, * is next vnto him in succession. But your Lordly order esteemeth not greatly y^e lowly behaiour of poore Peter, whatsoeuer ye prate of him. Neither care ye greatly for the humble manners of them that succeeded him, * till the time of Siluester, whiche for the more part were martirs, as I told you afore. Ye can let all their good conditions go by you, and not hurt your selues with them at all. All the world knoweth this well inough by you and yet ye can make boast of Peter.

With that one of the other doctors asked him: thē what do ye say of the Pope?

The Lord Cobham answered. As I said before. He & you together maketh whole the great Antichrist.* Of whō he is y^e great head you bishops, priests, prelates, & monks are the body: and the begging friers are the taylor, for they couer y^e filthines of you both, with their subtile sophistry, Neither will I in conscience obey any of you all, till I see you with Peter follow Christ in conuersation.

Then read the doctor againe.

The 4. point is this. Holy Churche hath determined that it is meritorious to a Christen man,* and to go on pilgrimage to holy places. And there specially to worship the holy reliques and images of saintes, Apostles, Martirs, Confessours and all other saintes besides, approued by y^t Church of Rome. Sir what say ye to this?

Wherunto he 〈◇〉. I owe them no seruice by any commaundement of god:,* and therefore I minde not to seeke them for your couetousnes. It were best ye swepte them faire from copwebs and dust, and so layde them vp for catching of scathe.* Or els to bury them fayre in y^t ground as ye do other aged people which are Gods Images.

It is a wonderfull thing, that sayntes now being dead shoulde become so couetous and needy, and thereupon so bitterly beg: which all the life time hated al couetousnesse, and begging. But this I say vnto you, and I would all y^t world should mark it. That with your shrines and Idols your fained absolutions and pardons, ye draw vnto you the substaunce,* wealth and chiefe pleasures of all christen realmes.

Why sir (said one of the clerkes) will ye not worshippe good images?

What worship should I geue vnto them?,* said the Lord Cobham.

Then said Frier Palmer vnto him. Sir will ye worship the crosse of Christ, that he died vpon?

Where is it, sayd the Lord Cobham?

The Frier said, I put you the case sir, that it were here euen now before you?

The Lord Cobham aunswered.* This is a great wise man, to put me an earnest question of a thinge, and yet he himselfe knoweth not where the thing it selfe is. Yet once againe I aske you what worship I should do vnto it?

A clerke said vnto him.* Such worship as Paule speaketh of: and that is this. God forbid that I should ioy, but onely in the crosse of Iesu Christ.

Then said the Lord Cobham, and spread his armes abroad. This is a very crosse, yea, and so muche better then your Crosse of wood, in that it was created of God. Yet will not I seeke to haue it worshipped.

Then sayd the bishop of London. Sir, ye wote well that he died on a materiall crosse?

The Lord Cobham said,* and I wote also that our saluation came not in by that materiall crosse, but alone by him which died therupon. And well I wote that holy S. Paule reioyced in none other crosse, but in christes passion and death onely, and in his owne sufferinges of like persecution with him, for the same selfe veritie that he had suffered for afore:

An other clerk yet asked him. Will ye then do none honour to the holy crosse?

He answered him. Yes, if he were mine own I would lay him vp honestly, and see vnto him that he shoulde take no more scath abroad, nor be robbed of his goodes as he is now a dayes.

Then sayd the Archbish. vnto him.* Sir Iohn, ye haue spoken here many wonderfull wordes to the slaunderous rebuke of the whole spiritualtie, geuing a great euil example vnto the common fort here,* to haue vs in the more disdaine. Much time haue we spent here about you, and al in vaine so far as I can see. Well, we must nowe be at this short point with you, for the day passeth away: Ye must otherwise submit your selfe to the ordinaunce of holy church or els throw your selfe (no remedy) into most deepe daunger. See to it in time, for anone it will be els to late.

The Lord Cobham sayd: I know not to what purpose I should otherwise submit me. Muche more haue you offended me, then euer I offended you, in thus troubling me before this multitude.

Then said the archbishop again vnto him, we once agayne require to remember your selfe well,* & to haue none other maner opinion in these matters, then the vniuersall faith, and beliefe of the holy church of Rome is. And so like obedient childe returne agayne to the vnitie of your mother. See to it I say in time, for yet ye may haue remedy, where as anone it will be to late.

The Lord Cobham sayd expresly before them all. I wil none otherwise beleue in these poyntes, then that I haue told ye here afore. Do with me what ye will.

Finally then the archbishop sayd,* wel, then I see none other but we must needes doe the lawe: we must proceede forth to the sentence dissinitue, and both iudge you, & condemne you for an hereticke.

And with that, the Archb. stood vp, and read there a bill of his condemnation, all the clergy and laity vayling theyr boners. And this was the tenour therof.

 The diffinitue sentence of hys condemnation.

IN the name of God. So be it.* We Thomas by the sufferance of God, Archbishop of Caunterbury, Metropolitane, and primate of al England, and Legate from the apostolicke see of Rome, willeth this to be knowne vnto all men. In a certayne cause of heresy and vpon diuers articles,* wherupon sir Iohn Oldcastle knight and Lord Cobham, after a diligent inquisition made for the same, was detected, accused, and presented before vs in our last conuocation of all our prouince of Caunterbury, holden in the Cathedrall Church of Paules at London: At the lawfull denouncement and request of our vniuersal Clergy in the sayd conuocation, we proceded Page 564 agaynst him according to the law (God to witnes) with al the sauour possible.* And following Christes example in all that we might, which willeth not the death of a sinner, but rather that he be conuerted and liue: we tooke vpon vs to correcte him, and sought all other wayes possible to bring him againe to the churches vnitie,* declaring vnto him what the holy & vniuersal church of Rome hath sayd, holden, determined, and taught in that behalf. And though we founde him in the Catholicke fayth farre wyde and so stifnecked, that he would not confesse hys error, nor purge himself, nor yet repent him therof: We yet pitttieng him of fatherly compassion,* and intirely desiring the health of his soule, appoynted hym a competent tyme of deliberation, to see if he wold repent and seek to be reformed: but since that time we haue found him worse and worse. Considering therefore, that he is not corrigible we are driuen to the very extremitie of the lawe, and wyth great heauines of hart, we nowe proceede to the publication of the sentence diffinitive, agaynst him.

Then brought he forth an other bill, conteynynge the sayd sentence, and that he read also in his beggerly Latine. Christi nomine inuocato, ipsum{que} solum prae oculis habentes. Quia per acta inactitata, and so forth. Whiche I haue also translated into Englishe, that men may vnderstand it.

Christ we take vnto witnesse, that nothing els we seeke in this our whole enterprise,* but his onely glory. For as much as we haue found by diuers actes done, brought forth and exhibited by sundry euidences, signes and tokens, and also by many most manifest proues, the sayd sir Iohn Oldcastle knight and L. Cobham, not onely to be an euident hereticke in his owne person, but also a mighty maintainer of other hereticke agaynst the fayth and religion of the holy and vniuersall church of Rome:* namely about the two sacramentes (of the aaltar, and of penaunce) besides the popes power, and pilgrimages. And that he as the childe of iniquitie and darcknes,* hath so hardened his hart, that he will in no case attend vnto the voyce of his pastor. Neyther will he be allured by straight admonishmentes, not yet be brought in by fauourable wordes. The worthines of the cause first wayed on the one side, and his vnworthines agayn cōsidered on the other side, his faults also aggrauated or made double through his damnable obstinacie (we being loth that he which is nought shoulde be worse,* and so with his contagiousnes infecte the multitude) by the sage counsel and assent of the very discrete fathers, our honourable brethren and Lordes, Byshops here present, Richard of London, Henry of Winchester, and Bennet of Bangor, and of other great learned and wise men here, both doctours of diuinitie, and of the lawes canon and ciuill, seculers and religious, with diuers other expert men assisting vs: we sententially and diffinitively by this present writing, iudge, declare & condemne the sayd syr Iohn Oldcastle, Knight,* and Lord Cobham, for a most pernicious and detestable hereticke, conuicted vpon the same, and refusing vtterly to obey the Church agayne, committing him here from henceforth as a condemned hereticke to the secular iurisdiction, power & iudgement, to doe him thereupon to death. Furthermore, we excommunicate and denounce accursed,* not onely this hereticke here present: but so many els besides, as shall hereafter in fauoure of his errour, either receaue him or defend him, counsell him or help hym, or any other way mayntayne hym: as very fautors receauers, defenders, counsaylers, ayders, and mayntayners of condemned hereticke.

And that these premisses, may be the better knowne al faithfull Christen men: * we commit it here vnto your charges, & geue you straight commandement therupon by this writing also: That ye cause this condemnation and diffinitive sentence of excommunication, cōcerning both this heretick and his fautours: to be published throughout all diocesses, in Cities, towns & villages by your curates and parish priests, at such time as they shal haue most recourse of people. And see that it be done after this sorte. As the people are thus gathered deuoutly together, let the curate euery where goe into the pulpit and there open, declare, and expound, this excesse in the mother tongue, in an audible and intelligible voyce, that it may be perceiued of all men: and that vpon the feare of this declaration also, the people may fall from theyr euill opinions conceiued nowe of late by seditious preachers. Moreouer we will, * that after we haue deliuered vnto each one of you bishops which are here present, a copy hereof: that ye cause the same to be written out agayne into diuers copies, and so be sent vnto the other byshops and Prelates of our whole Prouince, that they may also see the contentes thereof solemnly published within theyr diocesses and cures. Finally we will that both you and they signifie agayne vnto vs seriously and distinctly by your writinges as the matter is, without fayned colour in euery poynt performed: the day wheron ye receaued this processe, * the time when it was of vs executed, and after what sort it was done in euery condition, according to the tenour hereof, that we may knowe it to be iustly the same.

A copy of this writing sent Thomas Arundel the arch\bishop of Caunterbury, afterward from Mydstone the x. * day of Octobr, within the same yeare of our Lord 1413. vnto Richard Clifford the bishop of London, which thus beginneth: Thomas permissione diuina. &c.

The said Richard Clifford sent an other copy thereof, enclosed within his owne letters: vnto Robert Maschall a Carmelite frier, which was then bishop of Herforde in Wales, written from Haddam the 23. day of October in the same yeare, and the beginning thereof is this: Reuerende in Christo pater, &c.

This Robert Mascall directed an other copye thereof from London the 27. * day of Nouember in the same yeare enclosed in his owne commission also, vnto his archdeacon and and Deanes in Hareforde and Shrewsbury. And this is therof the beginning: Venerabilibus & discretis vitis. &c. In like maner did the other bishops within their diocesses.

After that the archbishop had thus read the bill of hys condemnation, with most extremitie before the whol multitude: * The Lorde Cobham sayd with a moste cheerefull countenance. Though ye iudge my body whiche is but a wretched thing, yet am I certayne and sure, that ye can do no harme to my soule, no more then could Sathan vppon the soule of Iob. He that created that, * will of his infinite mercy and promise saue it, I haue therein no manner of doubt. And as concerning these articles before rehearsed, I will stand to them euen to the very death, by the grace of my eternall God.

And therwith he turned him vnto the people, castyng hys handes abroad, and saying with a very loude voyce: Good Christen people, for Gods loue be well ware of these men. * For they will els beguile you, and leade you blindling into hell with thēselues. For Christ sayth plainly vnto you: If one blinde man leadeth an other, they are like both to fall into the ditch.

After this, he fell downe there vpon his knees, & thus before thē all prayed for his enemies,*holding vp both hys handes and his eyes towards heauen and saying: Lorde God eternall, I beseeche thee of thy great mercies sake, to forgeue my pursuers, if it be they blessed will. And then hee was deliuered to syr Robert Morly, and so led forth again to the tower of London. And thus was there an ende of that dayes worke.

Whyle the Lord Cobham was thus in the Tower,*he sent out priuely vnto his friendes. And they at his request wrote this little bill here following, causing it to be set vp in diuers quarters of London, that the people should not beleue the slaunders and lyes that his enemies the Byshops seruauntes and priestes, had made on him abroade. And thus was the letter.

FOR as much as Syr Iohn Oldcastle knight,*and Lorde Cobham, is vntruely conuicted and imprisoned, falsly reported and slandered among the common people by his aduersaries, that he should otherwise both thinke & speak of the sacramentes of the churche, and specially of the blessed sacrament of the aultar, then was written in the confession of his beliefe which was indended and taken to the clergy,*and so set vp in diuers open places in the cittye of London. Knowne be it here to all the worlde, that he (neuer since) varied in any poynt therefro, but this is playnly his beliefe: that all the sacramentes of the churche be profitable and expedient also to al them that shall be saued, taking them after the intent that Christ and hys true church hath ordayned. Furthermore he beleueeth, that the blessed sacrament of the aultar is verily and truely Christes body in forme of bread.

After this the bishops and priests were in much great discredite both with the nobilitie and commons,*partly for y^t they had so cruelly handled the good Lorde Cobham: & partly agayn, because hys opinion (as they thought at that tyme) was perfect concerning the sacrament.*The Prelates feared this to grow to further incōueniēce towards thē both wayes, wherfore they drew theyr heads together & at the last consented to vse an other practise somewhat cō|trary to that they had done afore. They caused it by and by to be blowne abroad by theyr feed seruauntes, frends, and babling sir Iohns: that the sayd Lord Cobham was becomen a good man, and had lowly submitted himselfe in all thinges vnto holy Church vtterly 〈◇〉 his opinion concerning the sacrament.*And thereupon, they counterfayted an abiuration in hys name, that the people shoulde take no hold of that opinion by any thing they had hearde of him before, and to stand so the more in awe of them. Cōsidering hym so great a man, and by them subdued.

This is the abiuration (say they) of sir Iohn Oldcastle knight, sometime the Lord Cobham.

 An Abiuration counterfaited of the Byshoppes.

IN Deinomiue. Amon. I Iohn Oldcastle denounced, detected and conuincd,* of and vpon diuers articles sauoring both heresye and error, before the reuerend father in Christ & my good Lord, Thomas by the permission of God, Lord Archbishop of Caunterbury, and my lawfull and rightfull iudge in that behalfe, expresly graunt and confesse: that as cōcerning the estate and power of the most holy father the Pope of Rome,* of his Archbishops, his Bishops and hys other prelates, the degrees of the church, and the holy Sacramentes of the same, specially of the Sacramentes of the aultar of penaunce and other obseruaunces besides of our mother holy Church, as Pilgrimages and pardons: I affirme (I say) before the sayd reuerend father Archbishop & els where, that I being euill seduced by diuers sedicious preachers, haue grieuously erred, and heretically persisted, blasphemously aunswered, and obstinately rebelled. And therefore I am by the sayd reuerend father,* before the reuerend fathers in Christ also, the bishops of London, Winchester, and Bangor, lawfully condemned for an hereticke.

*Neuertheles yet, I now remembring my selfe, and coueting by this meane to auoyd that temporall payn which I am worthy to suffer as an hereticke, at the assigned 〈◇〉 of my most excellent Christen prince and siege Lord, King Henry the 5. now by the grace of God most worthy Kyng both of England and of Fraunce: Minding also to prefere the wholesome determination, sentence and doctrine of the holy vniuersall Church of Rome, before the vnwholesom opinions of my selfe, my teachers, and my followers: I freely, willingly, deliberately, and throughly cōfesse, graūt, and affirme, that the most holy fathers in Christ, S. Peter the Apostle and his successors byshops of Rome, specially now at this time, my most blessed Lord Pope Iohn, by the permission of God, the xxiii. Pope of that name, which now haldeth Peters seat (and each of them in theyr succession) hath full strength and power to be Christes Vicar in earth, and the head of the church militant. And that by the strēgth of his office (what though he be a great sinner, and afore knowne of God to be damned) he hath full authority and power to rule and gouerne, bynde and loose, saue and destroy, accurse and assoyle, all other Christen men.

And agreeably still vnto this, I confesse, graunt, and affirme all other Archbishops, Byshops, and Prelates in their prouinces, Dioces, and Parishes (appoynted by the sayd Pope of Rome, to assiste him in his doinges or busines) by his Decrees, Canons, or vertue of his office: to haue had in times past to haue now at this time, and that they ought to haue in time to come: authoritye and power to rule and to gouerne, binde and loose, accurse and assoyle, the subiects or people of theyr aforesaid prouinces, dioces, & parishes, and that their said subiectes or people ought of right in all things to obey them.* Furthermore, I confesse, graunt, and affirme, that the sayd spirituall fathers, as our most holy father the Pope, Archbishops, Bishops, & Prelates: haue had, haue now, and ought to haue hereafter, authority and power for the estate, order and gouernaunce of their subiectes or people, to make lawes, decrees, statutes and constitutions, yea and to publishe, commaund, and compell their sayde subiectes and peoyle, to the obseruation of them.

Moreouer I confesse, graunt and affirme, that all these foresayd lawes,* decrees, statutes and constitutions made, published and commaunded, according to the forme of spirituall law, all christen people, and euery man in himself is straightly bound to obserue, & meekely to obey according to the diuersity of the foresayd powers. As the lawes, statuts, canons and constitutions of our most holy father the Pope, incorporated in his Decrees, Decretals, Clementines, Codes, Chartes, Rescriptes, Sextiles, and Extrauagants ouer all the world: and as the prouinciall statuts of Archbishoppes in their prouinces, the Sinodall actes of Bishops in their dioces, and the commendable rules & customes of prelates in their colledges, and Curates in their parishes,* all Christen people are both bound to obserue, & also most meekly to obey. Ouer & besides all thys, I Iohn Oldcastle vtterly forsaking and renouncing all the aforesayd errors and heresies, and all other errors and heresies like vnto them, lay my hand here vpon this booke or holye Euangely of God, & sweare: that I shall neuer more from henceforth holde these aforesayd heresies, nor yet any other like vnto them wittinglye.* Neither shall I geue counsell, ayde, helpe, nor fauor at any time, to them that shall holde, teach, affirme, or maintayne the same, as God shall helpe me, and these holy Euangelies.

And that I shall from henceforth faythfully obey and inuiolably obserue all the holy lawes, statutes, Canons, and constitutions of all the Popes of Rome,* Archbishops Bishops, and Prelates, as are conteyned and determined in their holy Decrees, Decretalles, Clementines, Codes, Chartes, Rescriptes, Sextiles, Sumnies, papall, Extrauagantes, statutes prouinciall, actes synodall, and other ordinary regules and customes cōstituted by them, or that shall chaunce hereafter directly to be determined ormade. To these and all such other, will I my selfe with all power possibly apply.* Besides all this, the penaunce whiche it shall please my sayd reuerend father the Lord Archbishop of Caunterbury hereafter to enioyne me for my sinnes, I will meekely obey and faythfully fulfill. Finally, all my seducers and false teachers, and all other besides, whome I shall hereafter know suspected of heresy or errors:* I shall effectually present, or cause to be presented vnto my sayde reuerend father, Lord Archbishop or to them which haue his authority, so soone as I can conneniently do it, and see that they be corrected to my vttermost power.

This abiuration neuer came to the hands of the Lord Cobham, neither was it compiled of them for that purpose, but onely therewith to bleare the eyes of the vnlearned multitude for a time. After the whiche like fetch and subtle practise, was also deuised the recantatiō of the Archbishop Thomas Cranmer, to stop for a time the peoples mouthes. Which subtly in like manner was also practised with the false recantatiō of Bishop •oper, and diuers other, as in their places hereafter (Christ graunting) shalbe shewed.

And thus much hitherto concerning the first trouble of sir Iohn Oldcastle Lorde Cobham,* with all the circumstances of the true time, place, occasion, causes, and order belonging to the same. Wherin I trust I haue sufficiently satisfied all the parties, requisite to a faythfull history, with out corruption. For the confirmation wherof, to the intent the mind also of the wrangling cauiller may be satisfied, & to stop the mouth of the aduersary (which I see in all places to be ready to barke) I haue therfore of purpose anexed with all my ground & foundation taken out of the Archines and Registers of the Archb. of Cant, Ex epist. Thom. Arund. ad Rich. Lond.* Wherby may appeare, the manifest error both of Polydorus and of Edward Hall, who being deceiued in the right distinction of the times, assigne this citation and examination of the Lord Cobham, to be after the councell of Cōstance: when as Thomas Arundell Archbishop of Caunterbury at the councell of Constance was not aliue. The copy and testimony of his owne letter, shall declare the same, written and sent to the bishop of London in forme as foloweth.

 The copy of the Epistle of the Archbishop of Caunterbury, written to the Bishop of London, whereupon dependeth the grounde and certaynety of this foresayd history of the Lord Cobham, aboue premised.

TO the reuerend father in Christ and Lord, the Lord Robert by the grace of God Bishop of Hereford, Richard by the permission of God bishop of London, health and continuall increase of sincere loue.

We haue of late receiued the letters of the reuerend father in Christ and Lord, the Lorde Thomas by the grace of God Archb. of Cant. primate of all England, and Legate of the Apostolicke see, vnto our reuerend brother the Lord Richard Bishop of London, health and brotherly loue in the Lord. It was lately concluded before vs in the conuocation of Prelates and Clergye of our prouince of Caunterb. last celebrate in our church of S. Paul, intreating amongst other thinges with the sayd prelates & clergy vpon the vnion and reformation of the Church of England by vs, and the sayd prelates and Clergy: that it was almost impossible to amende the hole of our Lordes coate whiche was without seame, but that first of all certayne nobles of the realme, which are authors, fauourers, protectors, defenders, and receiuers of these heretickes called Lollardes, were sharply rebuked, and if neede were by the censures of the Church, and the helpe of the secular power, they be reuoked from their errorrs.* And afterward hauing made diligent inquisition in the conuocation amongst the proctors of the Clergy and others which were there in great number out of euery dioces of our prouince: It was found out amongst others, that sir Iohn Oldcastle knight, was and is the principall receiuer, fauourer, protector and defender of them: and that specially in the Diocesse of London, Rochester, and Hereforde, he hath sent the sayd Lollardes to preach, not being licenced by the ordinaryes and Bishoppes of the Dioces or places, contrary to the prouinciall constitutions in that behalfe made, and hath Page 566 bene present at theyr wicked Sermōs, greuously punishing with threatnings, terrors, and the power of the secular sword: suche as did withstand him: alledging and affirming amongst others, that we and our fellow brethren Suffragans of out prouinces had not, neither haue any: power to make any such constitutions. Also he hath holden, and doth holde opinion and teach as touching the sacramentest of the aultar, of penance, of pilgrimage, of the worshiping of Sayntes, and of the keyes contrary to that which the vniuersall church of Rome doth teach ond affirme.

Wherefore, on the behalfe of the sayd prelates and clergy, we were then required that we would vouchsafe to proceed agaynst the sayd sir Iohn Oldcastle vpon the premisses. Notwithstanding, for the rouerance of our Lord the king, in whose fauour the sayde sir Iohn: at that presēt was, & no lesse also for honor of his knighthood:* we with our fellow brethren and Suffraganes then present, with a great part of the Clergy of our prouince, comming personally before the presence of our Lord the king, being then at hys Manor of Kenington, put vp against the said sir Iohn, a complaint, and partly reciting the defaultes of the sayd sir Iohn. But at the re^quest of our Lord the king, we desiring to reduce the sayd sir Iohn to the vnity of the church, without any reproche, we deferred all the execution of the premisses for a great time. But at the last, for so much as our sayd Lord the king after his great trauelles taken about the conuersion of him, did nothing at all profite, as our said Lord the king, vouchsafed to certify vs both by word & writing: We immediatly decreed to call forth the sayd sir Iohn personally to aunswere before vs at a certayne time already passed, in and vpon the premisses, and sent our messengers with these our letters of citation to the sayde sir Iohn, then being at his castle of Cowling, vnto the which messenger we gaue commaundement that he should in no case go into the Castle except he were licensed. But by the meane of one Iohn Butler, porter of the kings chāber, he should require the sayd sir Iohn, that he would either licēse the sayd messenger to come into the Castle, or that he would cite him, or on the least that he would suffer himselfe to be cited without his Castle. The whiche sir Iohn openly aunswered vnto the sayd Iohn Butler, declaring the premisses vnto him on the behalfe of our Lord the king: that he woulde by no meanes be cited, neither in any case suffer his citation. Then we being certified of the premisses lawfully proceeded further.

First, hauing faythfull report made unto vs, that he could not be apprehended by personall citation, we decreed to cite him by an edict, to be openly set vppe in the porches of the Cathedrall Church of Rochester next vnto him, litle more then three English miles distant from the sayd castle of Cowling. As we had thus caused him to be cited, and our edict aforesayde to be publickely & openly set vpon the porches of the said Church, that he should personally appeare before vs the 11. day of September last past to aunswere vnto the premisses, and certayne other thinges concerning heresye: The which day being come, we sitting in the tribunall seat in our greater chappell within the Castle of Leedes of our dioces, the which we then inhabited, and where as we then kept residence with our court, and hauing taken an othe whiche is requisite in the premisses, and the information by vs heard and receiued,* as the common report goeth: In the partes whereas the sayd sir Iohn dwelleth (fortifying himselfe in his sayd castle, defending his opinions manifoldly, contemning the ke•es of the church and the Arbishops power.) We therefore caused the sayde Syr Iohn cited, as is aforesayd, to be openly with a loude voyce called by the cryer: and so being called, long looked for, and by no meanes appearing, we iudged him (as he was no lesse worthy) obstinate, and for punishment of his sayd obstinacye, we did then and there excommunicate him. And for so much as by the order of the premisses,* and other euident tokens of hys doinges, we vnderstand that the sayde sir Iohn for the defence of his errour doth fortify himselfe, as is aforesayd against the keyes of the Church, by pretence whereof, a vehement suspition of heresy and schisme riseth agaynst him: We haue decreed if he may be apprehended, agayne personallye to cite him, or els as before, by an edict that he should appeare before vs the Saterday next after the feast of Saint Mathew the Apostle and Euangelist next comming, to shew some reasonable cause if he can, why we shoulde not proceede agaynst him, to more greuouse punishment, as an open hereticke, schismaticke and open enemy of the vniuersall church. And personally to declare why he should not be pronounced such a one, or that the ayde of the secular power shoulde not be solemnely required agaynst him. And further to aunswere, do and receiue as touching the premisses, whatsoever iustice shal require. The which time being come, that is to say, the Saterday next after the feast of S. Mathew being the 24. day of September, sir Rob. Morley knight Lieftenant of the tower of London appeared personally before vs, sitting in the chapter house of the Church of S. Paule at London, with our reuerent fellowe brethren and Lordes, Richard by the grace of God Bishop of London, and Henry Byshop of Winchester, and brought with him sir Iohn Oldecastle Knight, and set him before vs (for a little before he was taken by the kinges seruantes and cast into the tower) vnto which sir Iohn Oldcastle so personally present, we rehearsed all the order of the proces, as it is contayned in the actes of the of the daye before passed with good and modest wordes and gentle meanes.* That is to say, howe he the said sir Iohn was detected and accused in the conuocation of the prelates and clergy of our sayd prouince as is aforesayd vpon the articles before rehearsed, and how he was cited & for hys contumacy excommunicate. And when we were come to that poynt, we offered our selues ready to absolue him. Notwithstanding, the sayd sir Iohn, not regarding our offer, sayd, that he would willingly rehearse before vs, and my sayde fellowe brethren, the fayth which he held & affirmed. So he hauing his desire & obtaining licence, tooke out of his bosome a certayne Scedule indented, and there openly reade the contentes of the same, and deliuered the same Scedule vnto vs, and the Schedule of the articles, wherupon he was examined, which was as in forme folowing.

 The catholicke fayth and confession of the Lord Cobham.

I Iohn Oldcastle knight, Lord of Cobham, desire to made manifest vnto all Christians, & God to be taken to witnesse, that I neuer thought otherwise or would thinke otherwise (by Gods helpe) then with a stedfast & vndoubted fayth to imbrace all those his Sacramentes whiche be hath instituted for the vse of his Church.

Furthermore that I may the more, playnly declare my mynde in these iiii.* pointes of my fayth: First of all I beleue the Sacramēt of the aulter to be the body of Christ vn der y^e forme of bread the very same body which was borne of his mother Mary, crucified for vs dead and buried, rose againe the third day, sitteth on the right hād of his immortall father, now being a triumphant partaker with him of his eternall glory.* Then as touchyng the Sacrament of penaunce this is my belief, that I doe thinke the correction of a sinnefull lyfe to be most necessary for all such as desire to be sauēd and that they ought to take vpō them such repentaunce of their former lyfe by true confession, vnfayned contrition, and lawfull satisfaction, as the worde of God doth prescribe vnto vs. Otherwise there will be no hope of saluation.

Thirdly, as touchyng images, this is my opiniō, that I do iudge them no poynt of fayth,* but brought into the worlde after the fayth of Christ by the sufferance of the Church, & so growen in vse that they might serue for a kalender for the lay people and ignoraūt. By the beholdyng wherof they might the better call to remēbraunce the godly examples & martyrdome of Christ and other holy men: but if any man do otherwise abuse this representatiō, and geue the reuerence vnto those Images, which is due vnto the holy men whom they represent, or rather vnto him whom the holy •en themselues owe all theyr honour, setting all theyr trust and hope in them which ought to be referred vnto God: or if they be so affected toward the domb Images, that they do in any behalfe addict vnto them, eyther be more addicted vnto one Saint then another, in my minde they doe little differ from Idolatrye, grievously offending agaynst God the author of all honor.

Last of all I am thus perswaded that there be no inhabitants here in earth,* but that we shall passe straight either to life or punishment: for whosoever doth so order his lyfe that he stumble at the commaundementes of God, whiche either he knoweth not, or he will not be taught them, it is but in vayne for him to look for saluation, although he ran ouer all the corners of the world. Contrarywise, he which obserueth his commaundements cannot perish, although in all his life time he walked no pilgrimage, neither to Rome, Caunterbury, nor Compostella, or to any other place, whither as the common people are accustomed to walke.

This Scedule with the articles therin contained being read (as is aforesaid) by the sayd sir Iohn: we with our felow brethren aforesaid, & many other doctors & learned mē had conference vpon the same. And at the last by the counsell and consent of them, we spake these wordes folowing vnto the sayd sir Iohn there present. Behold sir Ioh. there are many good and catholicke things contained in this scedule. But you haue this time to answeere vnto other matters which sauor of errors & heresies. Wherunto, by the cōtentes of this scedule, it is not fully answered, and therefore you must answeere therunto & more plainely expresse & declare your fayth & opinions as touching those poynts in y^e same bill. That is to say, whither you hold, beleue and affirme, that in the sacrament of the aultar, after the cōsecration rightly done,* there remayneth materiall bread or not.

Item, whether you hold, beleue, and affirme, that it is necessary in the sacrament of penance for a man to cōfesse his sinnes vnto a priest appoynted by the church.

The which articles in this maner deliuered vnto him, Page 567 amongst many other thinges he answered plainly, that he would make no other declaration or answere therunto thē was conteyned in the sayd Scedule. Wherupon we fauoring the sayd sir Iohn, with benigne & gentle meanes we spake vnto him in this manner. Sir Iohn take heed, for if you do not playnly answere to these thinges, which are obiected agaynst you within a lawful time now graūted you by the Iudges, we may declare you to be an hereticke, but the said sir Iohn perseuered as before, and would make no other answere. Consequently notwithstanding, we together with our sayd fellow brethren and others of our counsell took aduise, and by their counsell declared vnto the said sir Iohn Oldcastle, that the sayd holy Church of Rome in this matter following the saying of blessed S. Augustine Ierome,* Ambrose and other holy men, hath determined, y^e which determinations euery catholicke ought to obserue. Wherupon the said sir Iohn answered, y^t he would beleue and obserue whatsoever the holy Church determined, and whatsoever god would he should obserue and beleue. But that he would in no case affirme that our Lord the Pope, y^e cardinals, Archbishops, and Bishops or other prelates of the church haue any power to determine any such matters. Wherunto,* we yet fauoring him, vnderhope of better aduisement promised the sayd sir Iohn: that we would geue him in writing certaine determinatiōs vpon the matter aforesaid. Wherunto he should more plainly answere, writtē in latin, and for his better vnderstanding translated into English: wherupon, we commaunded and hartily desired him that agaynst monday next folowing, he should geue a playne & full answere, the which determinations we caused to be trāslated the same day & to be deliuered vnto him the sonday next folowing. The tenor of which determinations here folow in this maner.

*The fayth and determination of y^t holy Church vpon the holy Sacrament of the aultar is this. That after the consecration done in the masse by y^t priest, y^t material bread shall be chaunged into the materiall bodye of Christ, & the materiall wine into y^e materiall bloud of Christ. Therefore after the consecratiō there remayneth no more any substāce of bread and wine, which was there before. What doe you answere to this article?

*Also the holy church hath determined that euery christian dwelling vpon earth ought to confesse his sinnes vnto a priest ordeined by the Church, if he may come vnto hym. How thinke you by this article?

Christ ordeined S. Peter his Vicare in earth, whose seat is in the Church of Rome, geuing and graunting the same authority whiche he gaue vnto Peter also to his successours which are now called Hopes of Rome, in whose power it is to ordeine and institute prelates in particulare churches.* As Archbishops, bishops, curates, and other ecclesiastical orders, vnto whom the Christian people ought obedience according to the traditiō of the church of Rome. This is the determination of the holy church. What thinke you by this article?

*Besides this the holy Church hath determined, that it is necessary for euery christian to go on pilgrimage to holy places, & there specially to worship the holy reliques of the Apostles, Martirs confessors, & all sayntes, whosoever the church of Rome hath allowed. What thinke you of this article?

Upon which monday being the 25. day of the sayd moneth of September before vs and our fellow brethrē aforesayd, hauing also takē vnto vs our reuerēd brother, Benedict by the grace of God, * Bishop of Bangor, & by our cōmaundement our counsellors and ministers. Master Hen'ry ware officiall of our court of Cant. Philip Morgan D. of both lawes, Dowell Kissin Doctor of y^e decretals, Iohn Kempe and William Carlton Doctors of law, Ioh Witnā Thomas Palmer, Rob. Wombewell, Iohn Withe and Robert Chamberlayne, Richard Dotington & Thomas Walden professors of diuinity. Also Iames Cole, & I. Ste'uens our notaries appointed on this behalf. They all and euery one being sworne vpon y^t holy gospell of god laying their handes vpon the booke that they shoulde geue theyr faythfull counsell in, and vpō the maner aforesayde, and in euery such cause and to the whole world. By and by appered sir Robert Morley Knight, Lieuutenant of the Tower of London, and brought with him the foresayde Syr I Oldcastle setting him before vs. Unto whom we gentlye and familiarly rehearsed the actes of the day before passed. And as before we tolde him that he both is and was excōmunicate, requiring and intreating him that he would desire and receiue in due forme the absolution of the Church. Unto whom the said Syr Iohn then and there plainly answered, that in this behalfe he would require no absolutiō at our handes but onely of God. Then afterward by gentle and soft meanes we desires and required him to make playne answer vnto the articles which were laid against him. And first of al, as touching the Sacrament of the aultar. To the which article, * besides other thinges he answered and sayd thus: That as Christ being here in earth had in him both Godhead & manhoode. Notwithstanding the Godhead was couered and inuisible vnder the humanity, the which was manifest and visible in him: so likewise in the sacrament of the aultar there is the very body and very bread, bread which we do see, the body of Christ hidden vnder the same which we do not see. And playnly denyed, that the fayth as touching the said Sacrament determined by the Romish church and holy doctors and sent vnto him by vs in the sayd Schedule, to be the determination of the holy Church. But if it be the determination of the Church he sayd that it was done contrary vnto the scriptures, after the church was endowed, and that poyson was poured into the Churche and not afore. Also as touching the Sacrament of penance and confession, he playnly sayd and affirmed thē and there: that if any man were in any greuous sinne, out of the which he knew not how to rise, it were ex'pedient and good for him to go vnto some holy and discreet priest to take counsell of him. * But that he shoulde confesse his sinne to any proper Priest, or to any other although he might haue the vse of him, it is not necessary to saluation, for so much as by only contrition such sinne can be wiped a way, & the sinner himselfe purged. As concerning the worshipping of the crosse, he sayd and affirmed that y^t only body of Christ which did hange vpon the crosse is to be worshipped. For so much as that body alone was & is y^t crosse, which is to be worshipped.

*And being demaunded what honor he would do vnto the Image of the crosse. He aunswered by expresse wordes that he would only do it that honor that he would make it clean and lay it vp safe. As touching the power and authority of the keyes, the Archbishops, Bishop, and other prelates, he sayde that the Pope is very Antichrist, that is the head: the Archbishops, Bishops and other prelates to be his members, and the Friers to be his tayle. * The whiche Pope, Archbishops and bishops a man ought not to obey, but so far forth as they be followers of Christ & of Peter, in their life, maners & conuersation, and that he is the successor of Peter, whiche is best and purest in life & maners. Furthermore, y^e said sir Iohn spreading his handes wyth a loude voyce,* sayd thus to those whiche stode about hym. These men which iudge and would condemne me, wil seduce you all & themselues, and wil lead you vnto hell, therfore take heed of them. When he had spoken those wordes, we agayne as oftentimes before with lamentable countenance, spake vnto the said sir Iohn, exhorting him wyth as gentle wordes as we might that he would returne to y^e vnity of the church, to beleue & hold that which the church of Rome doth beleue & hold. Who expresly aunswered that he would not beleue or holde otherwise then he had before declared. Wherefore, we perceiuing as it appeared by hym that we coulde not preuayle: at the last wyth bitterness of hart, we proceeded to the pronouncing of a definitiue sentence in this maner.

In the name of God Amen:* We Thom. by the permission of God Archb. and humble minister of the holy Church of Cant. primate of all England, and Legate of the Apostolicke see, in a certayne cause or matter of heresy vpon certeine articles, wherupon sir Iohn Oldcastle knight, Lord Cobham, before vs in the last cōuocation of our Clergy of our prouince of Caunterbury holden in the Church of S. Paul in London after diligēt inquisition therupon made, was detected & accused, & by our said prouince notoriously and openly defamed.* At the request of the whole Clergy aforesayd therupon made vnto vs in the said conuocatiō: with all fauour possible that we might (God we take to witnes) lawfully proceding agaynst him, following the footsteps and example of Christ which woulde not the death of a sinner, but rather that he should be conuerted and liue, we haue endeououred by all wayes and meanes we might,* or could to reforme him, and rather reduce him to the vnity of the church: declaring vnto him what the holy vniuersall Church of Rome doth teach, hold and determine in this behalfe. And albeit that we founde him wandring astraye from the Catholicke fayth, and so stubberne and stiffnecked that he would not confesse his error or cleare himselfe thereof, to detest the same: Notwithstanding we fauouring him with a fatherly affection, and hartily wishing and desiring his preferuation, prefixed him a certayne competent time to deliberate with himself, and if he would to repent and reforme himselfe. And last of all, for so much as we perceiued him to be vnreasonable: obseruing chiefly those thinges whiche by the lawe are required in this behalfe, with great sorow and bitterness of hart, we proceeded to the pronouncing of the definitiue sentence in this maner.

Page 568The name of Christ being called vpon setting him onely before our eyes. For so much as by actes enacted, signes exhibited, euidences and diuers tokens, besides sundry kinde of proofes, we find the said Sir Iohn to be, & haue ben an heretick, and a folower of heretickes in the fayth and obseruation of the sacred vniuersall Church of Rome, and specially as touching the sacraments of the Eucharist and of penaunce. And that as the sonne of iniquitye and darcknesse he hath so hardened his hart, that he will not vnderstand the voyce of his shepheard,* neither will be allured with his monitions, or conuerted with any fayre speech. Hauing first of al searched and sought out, and diligently considering the merites of the cause aforesayd, and of the sayd Sir Iohn, his desertes and faultes aggrauated through his damnable obstinacy: Not wil'ling that he that is wicked, should become more wicked, & infect other with his contagion, by the counsell and consent of the reuerent men of profound wisdom and discretion, our brethren the Lordes Richard bishop of London, Henry Byshop of Winchester, and Benedict Bishop of Bangor,* and also of many other doctours of Deuinity, the decretals and ciuill law, and of many other religious and learned persons our assistantes, we haue iudged & declared sententiallye, and definitiue condemned the sayde Syr Iohn Oldecastle knight, Lord Cobham, being conuict in and vpon that most detestable guilt, not willing penitently to returne vnto the vnity of the Church, and in those things which the sacred vniuersall Church of Rome doth holde, teach, determine, & shew forth. And specially as one erring in the articles aboue written, leauing him from henceforth as an heretick vnto the secular iudgement.

*Moreouer we haue excommunicated, and by these writings do pronounce and excommunicate him as an hereticke, and all other which from henceforth in fauour of his errour, shall receiue, defend, or geue him counsell or fauour, or helpe him in this behalfe, as fauourers, defenders, and receiuers of heretickes. And to the intent that these premises may be knowne vnto all faythfull Christians, we charge and commaund you, that by your sentence definitiue, you do cause the Curates which are vnder you, with a loud and audible voyce in their Churches, when as moste people is present, in theyr mother tongue, through all your Cittyes and dioces to publish and declare the sayd Sir Iohn Oldcastle as is before sayd, to be by vs condemned as an hereticke, schismaticke, & one erring in the articles aboue sayde: and all other which from henceforth in fauour of his errours shall receiue or defend hym, geuing him any counsell, comfort, or fauour in this behalfe, to be excommunicate as receiuers, fauorers, and defenders of heretiks. As is more effectually cōteined in the proces. That by such meanes the erroneous opinions of the people (which peradventure hath otherwise conceiued the matter) by those declarations of the trueth, how the matter is, may be cut of. The which thing also we will and commaund to be written and signified by you, word for word, vnto all our fellow brethren: that they all may manifest, publish, and declare throughout all theyr cittyes and dioces, the maner and forme of this our proces, and also the sentence by vs geuen, and all other singular, the contentes in the same. And likewise cause it to be published by their Curates whiche are vnder them as touching the day of the receipt of these presents, & what you haue done in the premisses, how you and they haue executed this our commaundement. We will that you and they duety and distinctly certify vs the busines being done, by you and theyr letters patentes, according to this tenour.

Dated in our Manor of Maidstone, the 10. of October. an. 1413. and in the 18. yeare of our translation.

Thus haue you here the iudiciall proces of the bishops agaynst this most noble christen knight, described by their owne letters and stile.* After all this, the sentence of death being geuen, the Lord Cobham was sent away, Syr Robert Morley carying him agayne vnto the Tower, where as after he had remayned a certaine space, in the night season, (it is not known by what meanes) he escaped out and fled into Wales, where as he continued by the space of 4. yeaes.

A defence of the Lord Cobham, agaynst Nich. Harpsfield, set out vnder the name of Alanus Copus.

As I was entring into this story of the Lord Cobham, after the tractation of all the former historyes, hetherto passed,* hauing next to set vpon this present matter, luckely, and as God woulde, in such oportunity of season, as may seeme, God to worke himselfe for defence of his Sayntes: commeth to my handes a certayne booke of new found dialogues, compiled in latine by Nich. Harps field, set out by Alanus Copus, an english man, a persō to me vnknown, & obscure hetherto vnto y^t world, but now to purchase himselfe a name with Erostratus, or with the sonnes of Enachun, commeth out not with his fiue egges, but with his sixe rayling dialogues. In the which dialogues y^t sayd Alanus Copus Anglus (whether he vnder the armour of other,* or other vnder the title or his name, I knowe not, nor pa^e not) vncurteously behauing himselfe, intemperately abusing his time, study, and pen, forgetting himself, neglecting all respect of honesty, and milde modestly, neither dreading the stroke of God, nor passing for shame, neither fauoring the liuing, nor sparing the dead, who being aliue as they neuer offended him, so now cannot aunswere for thēselues being gone: thus prouoking both God and man agaynst him, alter an vnseemely sort, and with a foule mouth, and a stincking breath, rageth and fareth agaynst deade mens ashes, taking now y^t spoyle of theyr good name, after theyr bodyes lye slayne in the field. His gall and choler being so bitter agaynst them, that he cannot abide any memory after them to remayne vpon the earth. In so much that for the hatred of them, he spurneth also agaynst me, and fleeth in my face, for that in my Actes and Monumentes, describing the history of the Churche, I would say any thing in the fauour of them; whome the Romish Catholickes haue so vnmercifully put to death.* The answeere to whose book although it woulde require a seuerall tractation by it selfe (as if Christ graunt space and leysure, hereafter it shall not be forgotten) yet because such oportunitie of the booke is offered to me at this present comming now to the matter of the Lord Cobham; Sir Roger Acton & other, with whom he first beginneth to quarell, it shall be requisite a little by the way to cope with this Cope, whatsoever he be, so much as trueth shall geue me for theyr defence to say something. And here to cut of all the offalles of his raylinge talke and vnhonest rebukes, whiche I leaue to scoldes and men of his profession agaynst they liste to braule, let vs briefly and quietly consider the matter, for discussing of y^e truth.* Wherin first I shall desire the Reader with equality and indifferency to heare both the partes to speake, as well what the Martyrs hence gone and slayne could say for themselues, if they were present, as also what this man here doth object agaynst them now being gone. And so according to the same to iudge both vpon them as they deserue, and of me as they shall please.

Now to the scope of maister Copes matter,* which is this, whether this foresayd sir Iohn Oldcastle, L. Cobham (first to beginne with him) is rather to be commēded for a Martyr, or to be reprobued for a traytor. And whether that I in writing of him and of sir Roger Acton, wyth other moe in my former edition, haue belt fraudulently, and corruptly in cōmending thē in these Acts & Monumentes or no. Touching the discussion whereof, first I trust y^e gētle M. Cope my frend,* neither will, nor wel cā deny any part of all y^t hetherto, touching y^t story of y^t L. Cobham hath ben premised, who yet al this while was neither traitor to his country, nor rebell to his prince, as by the course of his hystory hetherto to the reader may well vnderstād. First in y^e time of king Henry the fourth, he was sent ouer to Fraūce to the Duke of Orlyance, he did obey. Afterward K. Henry the fift, cōming to the crowne, he was of him like wise well liked and fauored, vntill the time that Tho. Arundel with his clergy, cōplayning to the king, made bate betwene thē. Then the Lord Cobham being cited by the Archbyshoppe, at his citation, woulde not appeare. But sent for by the king, he obeied and came. Being come, what lowly subiection he shewed there to the king the pag. 558. declareth. After he yelded an obedient cōfessiō of his fayth, it would not be receiued. Then did he appeale to the bishoppe of Rome, for the which the king tooke great displeasure with him, & so was he repealed by the king to the Archb. and committed to the tower,* which also he did obey. Frō thēce he was brought to his examination once or twise: there like a constant martyr and witnesse of the trueth, he stood to his confession and that vnto the very sentence of death defined agaynst him. If this be not the effect of a true Martyr, let Alanus Copus say what he wil, or what he can. This I say, at least I doubt, whether the sayd Alanus Copus Anglus, put to the like triall himselfe, would venter so narrow a poynt of martirdome for his religion, as this christian knight did for his. Certes it hath not yet appeared.

To proceed after this deadly sentēce, was thus awarded agaynst him, the sayd Lord Cobhā was thē returneth agayne vnto the tower, which he with patience and meeknes did also obey: from the which tower if he afterward by the Lordes prouidēce did escape, whether hath Alanus Copus, herein more to prayse God for offring to him the benefite, or to blame the man for taking that which was offred. What Catholicke in all Louen hauing his house ouer hys head on fire, will not be glad to haue if he might, y^e dore set open to flee the peril? or els why did Alanus Copus flye hys Page 569 country hauing so litle need, if this mā, bleding almost vnder the butchers are, might not enioy so great an offer of so lucky deliuerance?

Thus hitherto I trust, the cause of the Lord Cobham, standeth firme and strong agaynst all daūger of iust reprehension. Who being (as ye haue heard) so faythfull and obedient to God: so submisse to his king: so soūd in hys doctrine: so constant in his cause: so afflicted for the trueth: so ready & prepared to death: * as we haue sufficiently declared not out of vncertayne & doubtful chronicles, but out of the true originals & instrumēt remaining in aūcient records: What lacketh now, or what should let to the contrary, but that he declaring himself such a martyr, that is a witnes to the verity (for the which also at last he suffred y^e fire) may therfore worthily be exorned with y^e title of a martir which is in Greek as much as a witnes bearer.

But here nowe steppeth in Dame 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, with her cosē scold Alecto. &c. who neither learning to hold her coūg nor yet to speak wel,  must needs find here a knot in a rush and beginning now to quarrell inferreth thus: But after (sayth he) that the Lord Cobham was escaped out of the tower, his felowes and confederates conuēted themselues together, seditously agaynst y^e king & against their coūtry: A great crime no doubt M. Cope, if it be true, so if it be not true, the greter blame returneth vnto your self, so to enter this action of such slaunder, vnles the ground wherupō ye stand,  be sure. First what felowes of y^e L. Cobhā were these you meane of? Sir Roger Acton ye say, maister Brown & Iohn Beuerley, with 36. other hanged and burned in the sayd field of S. Biles. A maruellous matter, y^e such a great multitude of 20000. specified in story, shoulde rise against y^e king, & yet but 3. persons only known and named. Thē to proceed further, I would aske of maister Cope what was the end of this conspiracy, to rebell against the king, to destroy their country, and to subuert the Christian fayth, for so purporteth the story. As like true the one as the other. For euen as it is like, that they being Turkes went about to destroy the fayth of Christ wherin they died, and to subuert their country wherin they were bred: euen so like it is that they went about to destroy the king, whom God and their conscience taught to obey.

Yet further proceedeth this fumish promoter in his accusation, & sayth moreouer: that these foresayd felowes and adherentes of the Lord Cobham, were in the field assēbled and there incamped in a great number agaynst the king & how is this proued?  by Robert Fabian which appeareth to be as true, as that which in the sayde Robert Fabian followeth, in the same place where he affirmeth that Io. Cledon, and Richard Turmin, were burnt in the same yere, being 1413. When in deede by the true Registers, they were not burnt before the yere of our lord,  1415. But what wil maister Cope say, if the originall copy of the inditemēt of these pretended conspirators doe testify, that they were not there assembled or present in the field as your accusation pretendeth? But they purposed (will you say) and intended to come. The purpose and intent of a mans mind is hard for you and me to iudge, where as no fact appereth. But geue their intēt was so to come: * yet might they not come to those thickets neare to the field of Saint Biles, hauing Beuerley theyr Preacher with them (as ye say, your self) as well to pray & to preach in that woody place, as wel as to fight? Is this such a straunge thing in y^e church of Christ, in time of persecution, for christians to resort into desolate woods, and secrete thickets, from the sight of enemies, when they would assemble in praying and hearing the word of God? In Queene Maryes tyme was not the same coulour of treason obiected agaynst George Egle and other moe, for frequenting and vsing into backsides and fields, * and suffered for that, whereof he was innocent & guiltlesse? Did not Adam Damlipe dye in like case of treason, for hauing a French crowne geuen him, at his departure out of Rome, by Cardinal Poole? What can not cankred calumnia inuēt, when she is disposed to cauill? It was not the Cardinals crowne that made him a traytour, but it was the hatred of his preaching, that styrred vp the accuser.

In Fraunce what assemblyes haue there beene in late yeares of good and innocent christiās, congregating together in backfieldes & couertes in great routes to heare the preaching of Gods holy word, & to pray: yea and not with out their weapon also, for their owne safegard, & yet neuer intēded nor minded any rebelliō against their king. Wherefore, in cases of Religion it may & doth happē many times that such congregations may meete without intent of any treason ment. But howsoeuer the intent and purpose was of these fore said cōfederats of the Lord Cobham, whether to come, or what to do (seing this is playne by recordes, as is aforesaid, that they were not yet come vnto y^e place (how will M. Cope now iustify his wordes, * so confidently affir^ming, that they were there assembled seditiously together in the field of S. Biles agaynst the king? And marke here I besech thee (gentle Reader) how vnlikely and vntidely the poynts of this tale are tide and hang together (I will not say without all substaunce or truth, but without all fashion of a cleanly lye) wherein these accusers in this matter seeme to me, to lacke some part of Siuons Arte, in conueiing their narration so vnartificiallye. First (say they) the king was come first with his garrison, vnto the field of S. Biles. And then after the king was there incamped, cōsequently the fellowes of the Lord Cobham (the Captayne being away) came & were assembled in the said field where the king was, * against the king: & yet not knowing of the king, to the number of xx. thousand: and yet neuer a stroak in that field geuen. And furthermore of all this xx. thousād aforesayd, neuer a mans name knowne, but onely three, to witte, sir Roger Acton, sir Iohn Browne, and Iohn Beuerley, a preacher. How this gear is clamped together let the reader iudge, and beleue as he seeth cause.

But geue all this to be true, although by no demōstration it can be proued, yet by the Popes dispensation (which in this earth is almost omnipotent) be it graunted: that after the king had take S. Biles field before, the cōpanions of the Lord Cobham afterward comming and assembling in the thickets neare to the sayd field, to fight seditiously agaynst the king, agaynst their country, & agaynst the fayth of Christ, to the nūber of xx. thousand, where no stroke being geuen, so many were takē, that al y^e prisons of London were full, and yet neuer a mans name knowen of all thys multitude, * but onely three: All this I say, being imagined to be true, the foloweth to be demaūded of M. Cope, whether the Lord Cobham was here present with this compaⁿy in the field, * or not? Not, in person (saith Cope) but with his mind and with his counsell he was present, and addeth this reason, saying: And therfore he being brought agayn, after his escape, was conuice both of treason and heresye, & therfore susteining a double punishmēt was both hanged and burnt for the same. &c. And how is al this proued? By Robert Fabian, he sayth, whereunto briefly I aunswere, that Rob. Fabian in that place maketh no such mention of the Lord Cobham assisting or consenting to them either in mind or in counsell. His wordes be these: That certaine adherentes of Sir Iohn Oldcastle assembled in the fielde neare to S. Biles, in great number: of whom was sir Roger Acton, sir Iohn Browne, and Iohn Beuerley. The which with 36. mo in number were after conuict of heresy and treason and for the same were hanged and burnt, w^ein the sayd field of S. Byles. &c. Thus much in Fabian touching the commotion & condemnation of these mē: but that the Lorde Cobham, was there present with thē in any parte,* either of consent or counsell, as Alanus Copus Anglus pretendeth, that is not found in Fabian, but is added of his liberall cornu copiae, wherof he is so copious and plentifull, that he may keep an open shop of such vnwrittē vntruethes, whiche he maye aforde verye good cheape I thinke, being such a plentifull artificer.

But here will bee obiected agaynst mee the wordes of the statute made the seconde yeare of king Henry the fifte wherupon this aduersary triumphing with no litle glory 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, thinketh himselfe to haue double vauntage against me:* first in prouinge these foresayd complices & adherents of the Lord Cobham, to haue made insurrection agaynst the king, and so to be traytors. Secondly, in conuicting that to be vntrue, where as in my former booke of Actes and Monumentes I doe reporte: how that after the death of sir Roger Acton of Browne, & Beuerley,* a Parliament was holden at Leicester, where a statute was made to this effect: that all and singular, suche as wer of Wickliffes learning, if they would not geue ouer (as in case of felony and other trespasses, loosing all theyr goodes to the king) shoulde suffer death in two manner of kinds, that is, they should first be hanged for treasō against the king, and then be burned for heresy agaynst God. &c.

Wherupon, remaineth now in examining this obiectiō and aunswering to the same, that I purge both them of treason, and my selfe of vntruth, so farre as truth and fidelity in Gods cause shal assist me herin. Albeit in beginning first my history of Ecclesiastical matters, wherin I hauing nothing to do with abatement of causes iudiciall, but onely folowing the simple narration of things done and executed: neuer suspected that euer any would be so captious with me, or so nise nosed, as to presse me with such narrow points of the law, in trying and discussing euery cause and matter so exactly, & straining (as ye woulde say) the bowels of the statute lawe so rigorously agaynst me. Yet for so much as I am therunto constrained now by this aduersary, Page 570 I wil first lay open all the whole statute made y^e second yeare of this foresayd Henry the fift, after the death of the foresayd sir Roger Acton and his fellowes, at the Parliament holden at Leycester. an. 1415. That done, I will note vpon the words therof, so as by the circumstaunces of the same may appeare what is to be cōcluded, either for the defence of theyr innocencye, or for the accusation of this aduersary. The tenour and purport of the statute here vnder ensueth.

The wordes and contentes of the statute made an. 2. Henrici. 5. cap. 7.

*FORasmuch as great (A) rumors, congregations, and insurrections here in England by diuers of y^t king his maⁱesties seege people haue bene made here of late, as well by those which were of the sect of heresy called Lolardy, as by others of their cōfederatiō, excitatiōs, & abetmēt: to y^e intēt (B) to adnulle & subuert y^e christian fayth & the law of God within the same Realme, as also to (C) destroy our soueraigne Lord the king himselfe and (D) all maner of estates of the same his Realme, as well spirituall as temporall (E) and also all maner pollicy, & the lawes of the land. Finally the same our Lord the king, to the honor of God, in conser'uation and fortification of the Christian fayth, & also in saluation of his royall estate, & of the estate of all his realme, willing to prouide a more open & more due punishmēt agaynst the malice of such heretickes & Lolardes, then hath bene had or vsed in that case heretofore, so that for the feare of the same lawes, and punishment, such heresydes and Lolardies may the rather cause in time to come:

* By the aduise and assēt aforesayd, & at the prayer of the sayd commons hath ordeined & established: that especially the Chaūcellor, the Treasurer, the Iustices of the one bēch and of the other, Iustices of Assise, Iustices of peace, Shiriffes, Maiors, and Bailiffes of Cityes and Townes, and all other officers hauing the gouernement of people either now present or which for the time shalbe, do make an othe in taking of their charge and offices, to extend their whole payne and diligence to put out,* to do to put out, cease & destroy, all maner of heresydes and errors commonly called Lolardies within the places in which they exercise their charges and offices, from time to time, with all their power: and that they assist, fauor, and maintaine the ordinaries and their commissaries so often as they or any of them shal be therunto required by the said ordinaries or their cōmissaries: So that the sayd officers and ministers, when they trauell or ride to arest any Lolard or to make any assistēce at the (F) instance and request of the ordinaries or their cōmissaries, by vertue of this statute: that y^e same ordinaries & commissaries do (G) pay for their costs reasonably. And that the seruices of the king (vnto whō the officers be first sworne) be preferred before al other statutes for the liberty of holy Church & the ministers of the same: And especially for the correction and punishment of hereticks & Lolards, made before these dayes & not repealed, but being in theyr force. And also that all persons conuict of heresy of whatsoever estate, condition or degree they be, by the sayd ordinaries or their cōmissaries left vnto the secular power according to the lawes of holy Church, shall leese & forfayte all theyr lands and tenements, which they haue in fee simple in maner and forme as followeth: That is to say, that the king shall haue all the landes & tenementes, which the sayd conuictes haue in fee simple & which be immediatlye holden of him, as forfayted: And that the other Lordes of whom the lands & tenements of such conuictes be holden immediatly, after that the king is therof seised & answered of the (H) yeare, day, & wast: shall haue lyuery therof out of the hands of the king of the landes & tenements aforesayde so of them holden, as hath bene vsed in case of attaynder of felonies, except the lands and tenements, which be holden of the ordinaries or their commissaries, before whom anye such empeached of heresyde be conuict,(I) which landes and tenements shall wholly remaine to the king as forfeit: And moreouer, that all the goodes and cattels of such conuicted, be forfayt to our right soueraigne Lord the king, so that no person conuict of heresyde & left vnto the secular power (according to the lawes of holy Church) do forfeit his landes before that he be dead. And if any such person so conuicted becuse offed, whether it be by fine, or by deede, or without deed, in landes and tenements, rentes, or seruices, in fee or otherwise in whatsoever maner, or haue any other possessions or cattels by gift or graunt of any person or persons, to the vse of any other then only to the vse of such conuicts: That the same landes, tenementes, rentes, nor seruices, nor other such possessions nor cattelles shall not be forfeite vnto our soueraigne Lord the king in no maner wise.

And moreouer, that the Iustices or the kinges bench, the Iustices of peace, & Iustices of Assise, haue full power to inquire of all such, which hold any errors or heresies, as Lolards and who be their mayntayners, receiuers, fautors, and susteiners, common writers of such bookes, as well of their sermons as scholes, conuenticles, congregations and confederacies, & that this clause be put in the cōmissions of the Iustices of peace. And if any persons be indited of any of the points aboue said, that the sayd Iustices haue power to award agaynst them a Capias, and that the Shriffe be bound to arest y^e person or persons so indited as soone as he can finde them, either by himselfe or by his officers. And for so much as the cognisance of heresies, errors, or Lolardies, appertain to the Iudges of holy church, and not vnto the secular Iudges, that such persons indited (K) be deliuered vnto the Ordinaries of the places, or to theyr Commissaries by Indentures betwene them to be made, within x. dayes after their arest, or sooner if it may be done, to be therof acquitted or conuict by the lawes of holy church in case such persōs be not indited of any other thing, the cognisaunce whereof appertayneth to the Iudges & secular officers, in which case after they shalbe acquitted or deliuered before y^e secular iudges of such thinges as apperteineth to y^e secular Iudges, they shalbe sent in safe custody vnto y^e said Ordinaries or their commissaries, & to thē to be deliuered by Indentures as is aforesayd, to be acquitted or cōuicted of the same heresy, errors and Lolardies, as is aforesaid, according to the lawes of holy church, & that with in the terme abouesayde. Prouided, that the saide indightments be not taken in euidence (L) but onely for information before the Iudges spirituall, agaynst such persons indighted: but that y^e Ordinaries begin their proces against such persōs indited, in the same maner, as though no such iudgement were, hauing no regard to such inditementes. And if any be indited of heresy, error, or Lolardy, and takē by y^e Shiriffe or any other officer of the king, he may be let to mayneprise within the sayde x. dayes, by good surety for whō the said Shriffes or other officers wil answer, so that the person so indighted be readye to be deliuered vnto the sayd Ordinaries, or to their Commissaries, before the end of the tenth day aboue recited, if he may be any meanes for sicknes. And that euery Ordinary haue sufficiēt Commissaries or Commissary, abiding in euery Countye in place notable, so that if any such person indited be taken, that the sayd Commissaries or Commissary may be warned in the notable place of his abiding, by the Shiriffe or any of hys officers to come vnto the Kinges Bayle within the sayd Countye, there to receiue the same person so indighted by Indenture as is aforesayd: And that in the Inquestes in this case takē, the Shriffes and other officers vnto whom it apperteineth, do impanell good and sufficient persōs not suspected nor procured, that is to say, suche as haue at the least euery one of thē that shal be so impanelled in such inquestes, within the Realme, a hundred shyllinges by the yere of lands, tenements, or of rent, vpon payne to leese to the kings vse xx. poūd. And that those which shalbe impanelled vpon such enquestes at sessions and gayles, haue euery one of them to the value of xi. shillings by the yere. And if any such person arested, whether it be by the Ordinaries or the officers of the king, (M) either escape or break prison before he be therof acquit before the Ordinary: that then all his goods and cattelles, which he had at the day of such arest, shall be forfeite to the king: And his landes and tenementes which he had the same day, be seised also into the kings handes, and that the king haue the profites therof from the same day vntill he render himselfe to the sayde prison from whence he escaped. And that the aforesaid Iustices haue full power to enquire of all suche escapes and breaking of prisons, and also of the lands tenements goods and cattels of such persons indighted. Prouided, that if any such person endighted, doe not returne vnto the sayde prison, and dyeth (not being conuict) that then it shall bee lawfull for his heyres, to enter into the landes and tenements of his or their aūcester without any other sute made vnto the king for this cause. And that all those which haue liberties or franchises royall in England, as the coūty of Chester, the county and liberty of Durham and other like: And also al the Lordes which haue iurisdiccions and franchises royall in Wales where the kings writs do not run, haue like power to execute and put in execution in al pointes, these articles by them or by their officers in like maner as doe the Iustices and other the kinges officers aboue declared.

Notes touching the statute prefixed.

Thus hauing recited the wordes of the statute, nowe Page 571 let vs consider the reasons & obiections of this aduersary, who grounding peraduenture vpon y^e preface or preamble of this foresaid statute: * will proue thereby the L. Cobham, and Sir Roger Acton, with the rest of their abettours, to haue bin traitors to their king and their countrey. Wherunto I answere, first in generall, that although the face or preface prefixed before the statute, may shew and declare y^e cause & occasion originall why the statute was made: yet the making of the statute importeth no necessary probatiō of the preface alwaies to be true that goeth before, which being but a colour to induce the making therof: geueth no force materiall therunto, nor is any necessary part of y^e body of the said statute. * But onely adhereth as a declaration of the circumstance therof, and sometime is cleane omitted and differeth much from the substance of the same. For as statutes in ciuile policie most commonly do tend to a publike end & are generall: so prefaces before statutes, which most commonly declare the cause or beginning therof, are priuate: and do stand only but vpō particular facts, which either of ill will & displeasure may be suggested, or by colour may be exaggerated, or forfeare may be beleueed, at least suspected, as many suspicious do oftimes rise in princes heads, through false surmises, & malicious cōplaints of certaine euill disposed about them, wherby many cruell lawes rising vpon a false ground, are promulgate to y^e ruine of much innocēt blood. Example wherof we haue not onely in this present statute, * an. 2. Reg. Hen. 5 but also in the like statute, commonly called the statute Ex officio vel de comburendo, made by this kings father and predecessour, an. 2. Henr. 4. cap. 5. In the preface of which bloody statute, is contained an other like cōplaint of the Prelates & clergie, not so hainous, as also most shamefully false & vntrue against the poore Lollards, as by the wordes of the complaint may appeare, * beginning: Excellentissimo & Gratosissimo. principi, &c. Wherin, most falsely they slaunders and misreport the true seruants of Christ to be Lollardes, heretiques, subuerterers of the common wealth, destroyers of the Christian faith, enemies to all good lawes, and to the Church of Christ. The words of which statute proceeding much after y^e like course as doth this present statute, may easely bewray the vntruth and false surmise therof, if thou please (gentle reader) to marke and conferre the wordes according as they are there to be read and seene, as followeth: * Conuenticulas & confederationes faciunt, scholas tenent & exercent, libros conficiunt atque scribunt, populum nequiter instruunt & informant, & ad seditionem seu insurrectionem excitant, quantum possunt, & magnas dissentiones in populo faciunt, & alia diuersa enormia auditui horrenda in dies perpetrant, in fidei cathol. & ecclesiae subuersionem, diuini cultus diminutionem, ac etiam destructionem status, iurium, & libertatum dictae ecclesiae Anglic. And after a few words: Ad omnem iuris, & rationis ordinem atque regimen, penitus destruendum, &c. He that is or shall be acquainted with old hystories, * and with the vsuall practises of Sathan the oldenemie of Chrst, from the first beginning of the primitiue Church vnto this present time, shall see this to be no newes, but a common and (as ye would say) a quotidian feuer among Christes children, to be vexed with false accusations, and cruell slaunders.

Nemesion the Egyptian and true Martyr of Christ, was he not first accused to be a felon? And when that could not be proued,* he was condēned at the same iudgemēt for a Christiā: and therefore being cast into bands, was scourged, by the commandement of the President double to the other felons: & at length was burned with y^e theeues, although he neuer was found thief nor felon vide page. 62.

Against Cyprian in like sort it was slaunderously obiected by Galenus Maximus proconsull: Quòd diu sacrilega mente vixerit, & nephariae sibi conspiracy homines adiunxerit.* That he had long continued with a minde full of sacrilege, and that he had gathered vnto him men of wicked conspiracie, page. 69.

So Iustinus martyr, what false and criminous accusations suffered he by Crescens? * Cornelius Byshop of Rome and Martyr, was accused of Decius, quòd ad Cyprianum literas daret contra remp i. That he wrote letters vnto Cyprian against the common wealth vide page. 65.

To consider the lawes and statutes, made by tyrauntes and Emperours in the first persecutions of the primatiue Church, against the innocent seruants of Christ, and to compare the same with the lawes and statutes in this latter persecution vnder Antichrist: * A man shall find, that as they agreed all in like crueltie, so was there no great difference in false forging of pretended causes and crimes deuised. For as then, the Christians were wrongfully accused of the Gentiles for insurrections & rebellions against the Emperours and Empire, for beeing enemies to all mankind, for murdering of infāts, for worshipping the sinne (because they praied toward the East) for worshipping also the head of an Asse,* & diuide pag. 54. 36. vpon the rumors wherof, diuers and sundry lawes and statutes were enacted, some engrauen in brasse, some otherwise wrote, against them: So in this foresaid statute. an. 2. Henr. cap. 5 also, an. 2. Henr. 4. cap. 15. and in such other statutes or inditements made and conceiued against the Lolards: the case is not so strange but it may ceedibly be supposed, that the making therof did rise rather vpō malice & hatred against their religion conceaued, then vpon any iust cause ministred of their partes, whome they did wrongfully charge & accuse. Like as in time of Domitianus, for feare of Dauids stocke,* all the nephewes of Iude the Lords brother in flesh, were accused to the Emperour, page 48. And also the like feare & hatred stirred vp other Emperours, and the Senate of Rome, to proceed with persecuting lawes against the Christian flocke of Christ. Euseb. Lib. 5. cap. 21. Whereupon, rose vp those malicious slaunders, false surmises, infamous lies, and wrongfull accusations against the Christians: so that what crimes soeuer either malice could inuent, or rash suspition could minister, that was imputed against them,* vide page 48.

Not vnlike also it may seeme, that the Pope with hys Prelates fearing and misdoubting least the proceeding of the Gospell preached by these persons should ouerthrowe the state of their maiestie: Did therefore by sinister accusatiuous, inflame the harts of Princes against them, and vnder some colour couert, to shadow their cloked hatred, deuised these and other like crimes which were not true, but which might cleanly serue their purpose.*

This hetherto haue I said as in a generall summe answering to the preamble of the foresayd statute, for the defence of Sir Iohn Oldcastle, and Sir Roger Acton, and other, not as de•ining precisely what was or was not (for here I may say with Haule, that as I was not present at the deed doing, so with him I may also leaue the same at large.) But as one by trasing the footesteps of the truth, as by all coniectures hunting out in this matter, what is most like, would but onely say my mynde sine strepitu (as Lawyers say) & sine figura iudicij.

Now consequently it followeth, that we descend to the speciall points and particulars of the foresaid preamble: to consider what thereof may be collected, or necessarily is to be iudged, either for prose or disprove, of this foresaide Sir Iohn Oldcastle and his felowes.

(A) And first, where the prohome of this statute beginneth with rumours,* congregatiōs, and insurrections, &c. As it is not like, that if these men had intended any forcible entrees or rebellio against y^e king, they would haue made any rumours therof before the deed done: so is it more credibly to be supposed, all these florishes of words to be but words of course, or of office, and to sauer rather of the rāknes of the inditers penne, who disposed either per amplificationem rhetoricam to shew his copy, or els per malitiam Papisticam, to aggrauate y^e crime. And to make mountains of mollhilles, first of rumours maketh congregations, & from congregations riseth vp to insurrections: where as in all these rumours, congregations, & insurrections, yet neuer a blow was geuen, neuer a stroke was stroken, no bloud spilt, no furniture nor instruments of war, no signe of battaile, yea no expresse signification either of any rebellious word, or malicious fact described, neither in records, nor yet in any Chronicle. Againe, if these rumours were words spoken against the king, as calling him a tirant, an vsurper of the crowne, the Prince of Priestes, &c. why then be none of these words expressed in their inditements, or left in records? Doth M. Cope thinke for a man to be called a traitour, to be enough, to make him a traytour, vnlesse some euident prose be brought for him to bee so in deed, as he is called? Rumours (sayth he) congregations, and insurrections were made. Rumours are vncertaine: Congregations haue bene and may bee among Christen men in dangerous times for good purposes, and no treason against their princes ment. The terme of insurrections may be added 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 by practise, or surmise of the Prelates and pen men, who to bring them the more in hatred of the king, might adde this rather of their owne gentlenes, then of the others deseruing. Certayne it is and vndoubted, that the Prelates in those dayes being so mightely inflamed against these Lollards, were not altogether behind for their parts, nor vtterly idle in this matter, but practised against them what they could, first to bring them into hatred, and then to death.

Examples of which kinde of practise among the Popish Cleargy, haue not lacked neither before, nor since. Moreouer, if these men had made such a rebellious insurrection Page 572 against the king, as is pretended in the preamble before this statute, which were a matter of high treason: How chaunceth then, that the whole body of the statute folowing after the said preface or preamble, runneth in all the parts and braunches thereof both in maner of arrest, of inditement, information, request, allowance of officers, cognisance of ordinaries, of the forefact, &c. vpon cases of heresie and not of treason, as by particular tractation shall be (Christ willing) declared.

*And for so much as these men be so greuously accused of Alanus Copus, for congregating & rising against their K. & the whole Realme, if I had so much laysure to defend, as he hath pleasure to diffame: Here might be demaunded of him, to keepe him some further pley (touching this mighty insurrection, where as they came in nūber of xx. thousand against the king) in what order of battaile ray they marched, what Captaines, vnder Captaines, and pety Captaines they had to guide the wyngs, and to lead the army▪ whether they were horsemen, or footemen. If they were horsemen (as is pretensed) what ment they then to resort to the Thicketes neare to S. Gyles field, which was no meet place for horses to stirre? If they were footemen: how standeth that with the author, which reporteth them to be horsemen? Moreouer, is to be demanded, what insignes or flagges, what shot, what powder, what armour, weapōs, and other furniture of war: also what treasure of money to wage so many, to y^e nūber of xx. thousand, what trumpets, drommes, & other noise necessary for y^e purpose they had. All these preparations for such an enterprise is requisite & necessary to be had. And peradventure, if truth were well sought, it would be found at lēgth, that in stead of armies and weapon, they were comming onely with theyr bookes, and with Beuerlay their preacher, into those thickets. But as I was not there present at the fact (as is before said) so haue I neither certeinly to define vpon theyr case, nor yet M. Cope to exclame against them, vnles peradventure he taking an occasion of the time, will thus argue against them: That because it was the hoate moneth of Ianuary, the 2. day after the Epiphany, therefore it is like, that Sir Iohn Oldcastle with xx. thousand Lollards. camped together in the fields in al the heate of the wether, to destroy the king and all the nobles, and to make hymselfe Regent of England. And why not as well the King, as regent of England, seeing all the nobles should haue bene destroyed, & he onely left alone to reigne by himselfe?

It followeth more in the preamble of y^e foresaid statute (B) to adnull, destroy, and subuert the Christen fayth, and the law of God, & holy Church, &c. He y^t was the forger & inuēter of this report (as it appeareth to proceed frō the Prelates) seemeth no cunning Daedalus,* nor halfe hys craftes maister in lying for the whetstone. Better he might haue learned of Sinō in Uirgill, more artificially to haue framed and conueied his narration. Which although in no case could sound like any truth, yet some colour of probabilitie should haue bene set vpon it, to giue it some countenance of a like tale. As if he had first declared the L. Cobham to haue bin before in secret cōfederacie with the great Turk, or if he had made him some termagāt or Mahound out of Babylonia, or some Herode of Iudea, or some Antichrist out of Rome, or some grandpanch Epicure of this world: and had shewed, that he had receiued letters from the great Souldan, to fight against the faith of Christ and law of God, then had it appeared somewhat more credible, that the said Sir Iohn Oldcastle with his sect of heresie, went about to adnull, destroye, and subuert the Christian faith, and law of God within the Realme of England, &c.

But now, where will either he or M. Cope finde men so mad to beleue, or so ingenious y^t can imagine this to be true: that the Lord Cobham (being a Christian) and so faithfull a Christiā, would or did euer cogitate in his mind to destroy and adnull the faith of Christ in the Realme of England? What soeuer the report of this pursuant or preface saith, I report me vnto the indifferent Reader, how standeth this with any face of truth? That he which before through the reading of Wickliffes works, had bene so earnestly cōuerted to the law of God, who had also approued himselfe such a faithfull seruant of Christ, that for the faith of Christ he being examined and tried before the Prelates, page. 553. not only ventred his life: but stood constant vnto the sentence of death,* defined against him: being a cōdemned and a dead man by law, Et qui, quantum ad eius deuotionem pertinet & timorem, passus sit, quicquid pati potuit, who had as much as to deuotion and feare appertained, suffered already what he might or could suffer, as Cyprian said by Cornelius. That he (I say) which a little before in the moneth of September, stode so constant in defence of Christes faith, would now in the moneth of Ianuary rise to destroy, adnull, & subuert Christes faith, and the law of God, and holy Church within the Realme of England?

How can it be not like only but possible to be true that he which neuer denied the faith: which euer confessed the faith so constantly, which was for the same faith condemned: yea and at last also burned for the faith, would euer fight against the faith, and law of God, to adnull and to subuert it? Let vs proceed yet further, and see when that he should haue to destroyed and adnulled the Christian faith and law of God in England, what faith or law then could he or did he entend to bring into the realme of England? The Turks faith? or the Iewes faith? or the Popes faith? or what faith else, I pray you? For he that will be an enemie to the faith of Christ, and will shew himselfe frend to no other faith beside, I accompt him not out of his right faith, but out of his right wits.

(C)And therefore euen as it is true,* that sir Iohn Oldcastle with his cōfederates & abertours were vp in armes to subuert, and extinguish the faith of Christ and law of God in y^e realme of England: so by the like truth it may be estemed, that y^e same persons rose also to destroy their soueraigne Lord the king and his brethren. First thanks be to God, that neither the king, nor any of his brethren had any hurt by him. But his intent, saith the preface, was to destroy his soueraigne Lord the king. Whereunto I aunswere, with this interrogatorie, whether his intent was priuily to haue destroyed him, or by op^e force of armes? If priuily, what needeth then such a great army of xx. thousand men to atcheue y^e secret feate? Rather I would think, that he needed more the help of such as were neare about the king: as some of the kinges priue chamber, or some of his secret counsaile: whereof, neither Chronicle nor record doth insinuate any mention.* If his intent was openly to inuade the kyng: You must vnderstand (M. Cope) that to withstand a king in his owne Realme, many thinges are required, long time, great preparation, many frendes, great assistance, and ayd of kindred, money, horse, men, armour, and all other things appertaining for the same.

Earle Godwin of Westfaxe,* who had married Canutus daughter being a man both ambitious, and as false a traitour, for al his sixe sonnes, and great alliance, yet durst not set vpon king Edward to inuade him within his Realme, although he sought manye occasions so to do, yet neuer durst enterprise openly, that which his ambition so greedely presumed vnto, page 163.

In the time of King Henry the third,* Symon Montford Earle of Glocester, Gilbert Clare Earle of Leicester, Humfrey Rone Earle of Ferrence, with a great number of Lords and Barons, thought themselves to haue great right on their sides, yet durst not for all their power openly assaile the King in his Realme, before great debatemēt and talke first had betweene, page 330.

Likewise what murmuring and grudging was in the realme against king Edward the second,* among the peres and nobles and also prelates (only Walter Bishop of Couentry except) first for Gaueston, then for the Spensers, at what time Thomas Earle of Lancaster, Guido Earle of Warwike, with the most part of al other Earles and Barons concordly consenting together to the displacing first of Gaueston, then of the Spensers, yet neither rashly, nor without great feare durst stirre vp warre in the land, or disquiet or vexe the king, but first by all meanes of moderate counsaile, and humble petition, thought rather to perswade, then to inuade the king, page 308.

In like maner,* and with like grudging mindes, in the reigne of King Richard. 2. Thomas Wodstocke Duke of Glocester the kings vncle, with the Earles of Arundell, of Warwike, and Darby, with the power almost of the whole commons, stood vp in armes against the king: And yet notwithstanding all their power ioined together, being so great, and their cause seming to them so reasonable, yet were they not so hardy, straightwayes to flee vpon the king, but by way of Parliament thought to accomlishe that which their purpose had conceiued, and so did, without any warre striking against the king, page. 513.

After King Richard. 2. was deposed,* and was in prison yet liuing, diuers noble men were greatly inflamed against K. Henry the fourth, as Sir Iohn Holland Earle of Huntington, Thomas Spenser Earle of Glocester, y^e Earles likewise of Kent, and of Salisbury, with sir Iohn Cheney & other mo, wherof diuers had beene Dukes before, & now deposed by King Henry. 4. although they had conceiued in their harts great grudge and malice against the said King Henry: yet had they neither hart nor power openly with mans force to assaile the king, but secretly were cōpelled to atchieue their conceiued intēt, which notwithstanding they could not accomplish, Ex hist. D. Alban.

Page 573 Thus, you see Maister Cope, or els maister Harpsfield, or whatsoeuer ye be,* to gainstand a king, and with open force to encounter with him in his owne land, and in his owne chamber of London, where he is so sure and strong, what a matter of how great cheuance it is, wherin so many and so great difficulties do lye, the attempt so dangerous, the chances so vncertaine, the furniture of so manie things required, that feare in any kings daies heretofore, any peeres or nobles of the Realme, were they neuer so strongly assisted with power, wit, or counsaile, yet either were able, or els well durst euer enterprise vpon the case so dangerous, notwithstanding were they neuer of themselues so far from all feare of God, and true obedience. And shal we then thinke, or cā we imagine (maister Cope) that Syr Iohn Oldcastle, a man so well instructed in the knowledge of Gods word, beyng but a poore Knight by his degree, hauing none of all the peeres and nobles in all the world to ioyne with him, being prisoner in the Tower of London a litle before in the moneth of December, could now in the moneth of Ianuary, so sodenly, in such an hoat season of the yeare, start vp an army of xx. thousand fightyng men to inuade the kyng, to kill two Dukes his brethren, to adnulle Christen fayth, to destroy Gods law, and to subuert holy Church <◇> why doth not he adde moreouer, to set also all London on fire, and to turne all England into a fishe poole? Belieue these men which geue out these •igmentes of Syr Iohn Oldcastle, dyd thinke him to be one of Deucations stocke, who castyng of stones ouer his shoulder, could by and by make men at his pleasure, or els that he had Cadmus teeth to sowe, to make so many harnest men to start vp at once.

But let vs consider yet further of these xx. M. souldiours so sodenly without wages,* without vitall, or other prouision cōgregated together, what they were, frō whēce out of what quarter, cuntry, or cōtreys they came. In an other kyngs dayes, whensoever any rebelliō is against the king, moued by the commons, as when Iacke Straw and wat Tyler of Kent, & Essex rose in the tyme of kyng Richard 2. When William Mandeuill of Abingdon, Iack Cade of Kent, in the tyme of kyng Henry the 6. In the tyme of kyng Henry the 8. when the cōmotion was of rebels in Lyncolnshyre, then in Yorkeshyre. When in kyng Edward the 6. tyme Humfrey Arundell in Deuonshyre, Captaine Kyte in Northfolke made styre against y^e king,* the cōtreys & partes from whence these rebels did spring, were both noted and also diffaimed. In this so trayterous cōmotion therfore let vs now learne, what mē these were, and from what cōtreys or countreys in all England they came. If they came out of any, let the Chroniclers declare what countreys they were. If they came out of none (as none is named) then let them come out of Outopia, where belike this pigment was first forged, and inuented. Wherefore seyng neither the countreys from whence they came, nor yet the names of any of all these xx. M. doe appeare what they were either in Chronicle or in recorde, but remaine altogether vnknownen, I leaue it (gentle reader) to thy iudgement, to thinke thereupō, as thy wisdomē shall lead thee.

(D) It foloweth more in the foresaid preface: And to destroy all other maner of estates,* of the same Realme of England, as well spirituall as temporall, &c. By y^e course of this preamble it appeareth, that the sayd sir Iohn Oldcastle, was a wonderfull cruell tirant and murderer, who being not yet satisfied with the bloud of the king, nor of the two Dukes his brethren, would also make hauoke and swepestake, of all maner of estates in the Realme of England. What, & leaue no maner of estate aliue? No, neither Lord spiritual nor temporall, but altogether should be destroyed. And what had all these estates done, thus so miserably to be destroyed? Although percase the moode of this mā might haue bene incensed & kindled against the king, and the Lords spiritual, by whom he had bene cōdemned, as is aforesaid: yet why should all other maner of other estates both spiritual and temporal be killed? If none of all the estates in Englād, neither Duke, Earle, Baron, Lord, Knight or other gentleman had bene his frend, but all his enemies, how then is it like, that he hauing all the estates, peeres, nobles, and gentlemen of the Realme against him, and none to stand with him, either could or durst attempt any commotiō against the whole power of the land, he being but one gentleman onely with sir Roger Acton, and maister Browne left alone? At least, good reasō yet would, that those hundreth Knightes should haue bin spared out of this bloody slaughter, whom he offred to produce vnto the king before, for his purgation, page. 159. And finally, if this was his purpose that all these estates both spiritual & temporall should haue bin cut down, what needed then that he should haue made himselfe a Regent, when hee might as well haue made himselfe a king, or what else he would, being left then Prince alone?

(E) The preamble as it began with vntruth, and continued in the same figure, heaping one vntruth vpon another: so now endeth with another misreport as vntrue as the rest, shewing & declaring, the intent of sir Iohn Oldcastle was also to destroy all maner of policie, & finally the lawes of y^e land, &c. We read of William Cōquerer,* otherwise named William Bastard: who being a puisant Duke in his countrey, whē that the crown of Englād was allotted to him, and he cōming ouer with all his peres, nobles, & barons of his whole land, into this Realme, & had with great difficulty obtained victorie against king Harold: yet to alter and destroy the policy and the lawes of the land: it passed his power. Insomuch that it had not bin permitted vnto him to haue proceded so far as he did, vnlesse he had first sworne to the nobles of this lande, to retaine still the lawes of King Edward, as he found them. And albeit he afterward forsware himselfe, breaking his othe in altering and changing many of the foresaid lawes, yet wild he, nild he, could not so destroy them all (for the which much war and great commotiōs endured long after in the Realme) but that he was constrained and also contented to allow and admit a great part of the said lawes of king Edward, page. 167. And if he being king and Conquerour with all his strength of Normands and Englishmen about him, was too weake and insufficient to destroy all maner of policie, and lawes of this land, which he had conquered: how much lesse then is it to be supposed, that Sir Iohn Oldcastle being put a priuate subiect, and a poore Knight, and a condemned prisoner, destitute and forsaken of al Lords, Earles, and Barons, who to saue his owne life, had more to do, then he could well compasse, would either take in hand, or conceiue in his head anye such exployt, after the subuersion of Christian faith, and law of God, after the slaughter of the king, and of all maner of estates, as well spirituall as temporall, in the Realme of England, after the desolation of holy Church, to destroy also all maner of policie, and finally the lawes of the land? Which monstrous and incredible figment, how true it may seeme to M. Cope, or to some other late Chroniclers of the like credulitie, I can not tell: Certaine to me, and as I thinke to all indifferent readers it appeareth as true, as is the Uerse of the Satyre, wherewith it may well be compared.

Nil intra est oleam,* nil extra est in nuce duri.

But heere will be sayd again perhaps, that the matter of such preambles and prefaces being but pursuantes of statutes, and containing but words of course, to aggreuate, and to geue a shew of a thing, which they would to seeme more odible to the people, is not so precisely to bee scande or exquisitely to be stand vpon, as for the ground of a necessary case of trouth.

This is it (M. Cope) that I saide before,* and now doo well grant & admit the same, that such preambles or forefaces lyned with a non sequitur, containyng in them matter but of surmise, and wordes of course (and rather monsters out of course) and many tymes rising vpon false informatiō, are not alwayes in themselues materiall, or necessary probatiōs in all pointes to be followed: as appeareth both by this statute, & also by the statute of this kynges father. an. 2. Heur. 4. chap. 15. beginnyng Excellentissimo. &c.* And yet notwithstanding out of these same preambles, & forefrontes of statutes, & other inditementes, which cōmonly rising vpō matter of informatiō,* runne onely vpō wordes of course of office, and not vpō simple truth, a great part of our Chroniclers do oftē take their matter, which they insert into their stories, hauyng no respect or examination of circumstaunces to be compared, but onely following bare rumours, or els such wordes as they see in such fablyng prefaces, or inditementes expressed. Whereby it commeth so to passe,* that the younger Chronicler followyng the elder, as the blind leadyng the blind, both together fall into the pit of errour. And you also (maister Cope) followyng the steppes of the same, do seeme likewise to erre together with them, for good felowshyp. And thus concernyng the face of this statute hetherto sufficiently.

Now let vs cōsider and discusse in like maner, first the coherence, then the particular contentes of the said statute. As touchyng the which coherence, if it be well examined, a mā shall finde almost a Chimera of it. In which neither the head accordeth with the body, nor yet the braunches of the statute well agree with themselues. Wherein he that was the drawer,* or first informer thereof, seemeth to haue forgot his Uerse and art Poeticall.

Atque ita mentitur, sic veris falsa remiscet,

Primum ne medio, medium ne discrepet imo.

Page 574For where as the preface of the statute standeth onely vpon matter of treason, conceiued by false suggestion and wrong information. The body of the sayd statute whiche should follow vpō the same, runneth onely vpō matter of heresie, pertaining to the Ordinaries, as by euery braūche therof may appeare.

(E)For first where he sayth, at the instaunce & request of the ordinaries or their cōmissaries,* &c. Hereby it appeareth, this to be no cause of treasō, nor felony. For that euery man of duety is boūd, and by the lawes of the Realme may arrest & apprehend a traitour, or a felō, if he cā: where otherwise by this statute an officer is not bound to arrest him which offēdeth in case of this statute, without request made by the ordinaries or their commissaries, and therefore this offence seemeth neither to be treason, nor felonie.

(G) Secondly, where it foloweth that the same ordinaries and commissaries doe pay for their costes, &c. This allowance of the officers charges in this sort, proueth this offence neither treason nor felonie.

(H) Thirdly, where the statute willeth the king to bee answered of the yeare, day, & wast, &c. By this also is proued the offence not to be treason. Or els in cases of treason, the whole inheritance (I trow, maister Cope, speaking as no great skilfull lawyer) is forfait to the prince.

(I) The fourth argument I take out of these words of the statute, where as such lands and tenements which be holden of the ordinaries, are willed wholly to remaine to the king as forfait, &c. wherby it is manifest, that the Prelates (for their matter of Lollardie onely) were the occasioners and procurers of this statute: and therefore were barred of the benefite of anye forfeitising thereby, as good reason was, they should. And thus it is notorius, that the preface running specially and principally vpon treason, and the statute running altogether vpon points of heresie, do not well cohere nor ioine together.

(K) Fiftly, In that such persons indited, shal be deliuered vnto the Ordinaries of the places, &c. It can not bee denied, but that this offence concerneth no maner of treason. For so much as Ordinaries can not be iudges in cases of treason, or felonie, by the lawes of our Realme, Bracton, in fine. 1. Libri.

(L) Sixtly, by the inditements prouided not to be taken in euidence, but onely for information, before the Iudges spirituall, &c. it is likewise to be noted: to what end these inditements were taken, to wit, only to informe the ordinaries, which can not be in cases of treason.

(M) Lastly, where it foloweth toward the end of y^t statute, touching escape or breaking of prison, &c. by this it may lightly be smelt, whereto all y^e purpose of this statute driueth, that is, to the speciall escape of the L. Cobham out of y^t Tower,* to this end to haue his lands & possessiōs forfait vnto the King. And yet the same escape of the Lord Cobham in this statute considered, is taken by Maister Iustice Stanford in Lib. primo of the plees of the crowne cap 33. to be an escape of one arrested for heresie, where he speaketh of the case of the Lord Cobham.

Moreouer as touching the partes of this foresaid statute, how will you ioine these two braunches together, where as in the former part is said, that the lands of such persons connict, shall be forfait to the king, not before they be dead: And afterward it foloweth, that their goodes and possessions shall be forfait at the day of their arrest, to that king. But heerein standeth no such great doubt nor matter to be weied. This is without all doubt, and notoriously, euidently, and most manifestly may appeare, by all the arguments and whole purport of the statute: that as well the preamble and preface thereof,* as the whole body of the said statute was made, framed, & procured onely by and through the instigation, information, and excitation of the Prelates, & the Popish Cleargie, not so much for any treason committed against the king: but only for feare and hatred of Lollardy, tending against their law, which they more dreded & abhorred, then euer any treasō against the Prince. And then to set the king & all the states against them, whereby the more readily to worke their dispatch, they thought it best and none so compendious a policie,* as pretely to ioine treason together with their Lollardry. Wherein the poore men beeing once intangled, coude no wayes escape destruction. Papae concilium callidum.

This M. Cope, haue I said, and say againe, not as one absolutely determining vpon the matter. At the dooyng wherof as I was not present my selfe, so with your owne Halle, I may and do leaue it at large, but as one leadyng the reader by all coniectures and arguments of probabilitie and of due circumstances, to consider with themselves, what is further to be thought in these old accustomed practises and proceedings of these prelates. Protesting moreouer (M. Cope) in this matter to you, that those Chroniclers which you so much ground vpon, I take them in this matter, neither as witnesses sufficient, nor as Iudges competent. Who as they were not themselves present at the deed done, no more then I, but onely folowing vncertaine rumours, and words of course and office, bringing with them no certaine triall of that which they do affirme, may therein both be deceiued themselves, and also deceiue you, and other which depend vpon them.

And hetherto concerning this statute enough. Out of which statute you see (M. Cope) that neither your Chroniclers, nor you can take any great aduantage, to proue any treason in the Lord Cobham or in his felowes, as hath bene hetherto abundantly declared in the premisses.*

It remaineth further, that for asmuch as you in your fixt Dialogue with your author Edward Halle, do alledge the records Et publica iudicij Acta, to dissame these men for traytours (although what records they be, you bring forth neuer a word) I therefore in their defence do answere for them, whiche can not now aunswere for themselves. And because you, to accuse them do mention a certaine recorde, and yet do not shew vs what record it is, and peraduenture can not, if ye would: I haue taken the paines therfore, for the loue of them whom you so hate, to search out such Recordes, whereby any occasion can be raised against them. And first will declare the commission granted, then the inditement commensed against them.

The which commission, and inditement, albeit in countenance of words will seeme to minister much suspition against them, to the simple Reader, before he be better acquainted with these subtile dealings and practises of Prelates: yet trusting vpon the goodnesse of the cause, which I see here so falsely and sleightly to be handled, I nothing feare nor doubt, to produce the same out of the Records in Latine as they stand: to the intent that when the craftie handling of the aduersaries shall be disclosed, the true simplicitie of the innocent, to the true harted Reader, shall the more better appeare. The words first of the Commission, here folow vnder written: which when thou shalt heare, let thē not trouble thy minde, gentle reader, I besech thee, before thou vnderstand further, what packing and subtile conueyance lieth couered and hid vnder the same.

In cuius &c. T.R. apud Westm. (B) x. die Ianuarij.*Peripsum Regem.

By these high and tragicall wordes in this commission sent downe against the Lord Cobham, Sir Roger Acton, and their felowes: It may peradventure seeme to the ignorant and simple reader, some hainous crime of treason Page 575 to rest in them, for conspiring against God, the Church, the kyng & their countrey. But what cannot the fetchyng practise o• the Romish Prelates bring about, where they haue once conceiued a malice? Wherefore maruel not (good trader) at this, nor iudge thou accordinge to the woordes which thou hearest. But suspēd thy iudgemēt a while, till the matter be more opened vnto thee. Exāples of like h•d̄ling be not so rare, but y^u maist soone iudge by other tymes the like also of these. George Egle, of whom mētion was made before, did but preach in time of Queene Mary, an• yet cōmissiō was directed against him, as in case of raising vp a cōmotion against y^e Queene. Adā Damlip in Cahce did but preach,* & y^e receiuing of one poore crowne 2. yeares before at Rome was inough to make him a traitor▪ In the time of K• Henry y^e 8• on• Singleton chaplein to Queene Anne, the Queenes maiesties mother that now is, did but preach 〈◇〉 Gospel, moued by zeale (as I haue credible witnes of his owne, scholer that heard him speake it being w^t him)▪ & ye•, by vertue of cōmission it was obiected to hym: for raysing vp commotion agaynst the kyng, yea and also for killing of Pakington, & suffered for the same as a traytor. So here, what matter or maruell is it, if the kyng •censed, or rather circumuented by the wrong information of the Prelates (whom he beleued) gaue out his cōmission, agaynst thynges neuer wrought nor thought.

Wherefore I exhort thee (Christian Reader) as I sayd before, iudge not by and by the truth, by the wordes of the Commissiō: but iudge the wordes rather of the Commission by the truth. Neither measure thou the lyne by the stone: But the stone rather by the line. At least yet differ thy sentence, till both the Commission and the Inditemēt beyng layd together, thou mayest afterward see and perceiue more, what is to be iudged in the case.

In the meane season marke well these wordes of the kyng in this Commission,^{}(A) Cum nos plenius informe•ur &c. By the which wordes it is easie to be vnderstand, that the kyng himselfe had no certaine knowledge thereof, but onely by information of others, (of Byshops no doubt & Prelates) & thereupon gaue forth his Commission aforesayd. And then how will this stand with our Chroniclers & other Epitomes and Summaries whō Maister Cope doth alledge. For if it be certaine that Robert Fabiā sayth, that the kyng himselfe beyng in the field tooke certayne of them, as Syr Roger Acton, Maister Browne, and Iohn Beuerlay,^{} & your owne Edw. Hall, also & your Epitome agreeth to the same, and sayth moreouer that they were brought before y^r kynges presence. Tho. Couper also whō you alledge, addeth further and sayth, that the kyng there by strength dyd take them.

I pray you (Maister Cope) what needed the kyng to write this by information, when as he both himselfe was present at the fact, was the taker of them, and a witnesse of the deede? The which and if it be true, that the kyng heard this but by way of information, how will you then defend your Chronicos and your Epitomas. But herein I will neither greatly sticke with you, nor contend with them: Desiring thee Reader this onely to beare in mynde the date of this present Commission when it was geuen,^(B) which soundeth to be the x. day of Ianuary, & afterward to compare the same with the date of Inditemēt here vnder followyng, whiche I will (the Lord willyng) also hereunto annexe, leauyng nothyng out: Yea rather ministryng to the aduersary all manner of helpes, whatsoeuer they can seeke or require for their most aduauntage in this matter, to be desired. So sure and confident I am in the innocent cause of these good men nor fearing whatsoeuer blind malice can cauill agaynst them.

Notes or considerations vpon the Inditement and Commission aboue prefixed.

(A) Die Mercurij proximo post festū Epiphaniae. &c.* First here is to be noted & considered (good reader) the day and date of geuing out the Commission, & then of the Verdict presented by the Iurers, which was both in one day, that is, on the Wednesday next after the Epiphanie, in the first yeare of the reigne of kyng Henry 5. which was the x. day of the moneth of Ianuary (as the date of the Commission sayth) an. 1413. after the vse of Englād, or after the Romish vse. an. 1414. So that after the vse euer we count whether it be an. 1413. or els an. 1414. the Dominicall letter begynning at the first day of Ianuary to chaūge, must needes be G. for the yeare: & so necessarily make Wednesday next after the Epyphanie, to be the x. day of the sayd moneth of Ianuary. Thus then this present Wednesday, which was the tenth day of the moneth, being well noted and borne in minde, on the which day both the Commission was directed, & also the Verdict presented, let vs now proceede further Page 576 in the foresayd Iuditement. It foloweth.

(B) Per Sacramētum xij. iuratorum extitit praesentatum. &c. If there had bin true dealing in this,* the Iurers should haue bene named. But it is not like, that there was euer any such Inditement found by any Iurers, and therefore they did best, not to name the Iurours, least they would haue denied this Iuditement to be their Acte: it foloweth more in proces of the Inditement.

(C) Et dictum Ioan. Oldcastel Regentem Eiusdem regni constituere.*&c. If there were no other argument, this were sufficient to disprove the manifest vntruth of this surmised Inditement. When as the king was not yet gone to Fraunce, nor determined to go, how could they conspire then to make a Regent? For the king went in Iuly folowing, vidz. the second yeare of his raigne, leauing behinde him the Queene his mother in law, for Regent, whereby it may be gathered, that this matter was vntruly entred and stolen into the Records with an antedate, or els at the least, there appeareth manifest vntruth, that they should conspire to make a Regent, when a Regent was not thought vpon, vnlesse it were all ready run into the heads of the Cleargie, who shortly after fearing their temporalities (as Caxton saith) perswaded the King to make warres in Fraunce. This word Regent therefore proceedeth of the secret spirit of the Cleargy, and maketh the whole matter very suspicious, to be grounded altogether vpon the malice of the Cleargie, and their vntrue surmises. It foloweth moreouer.

(D) Quasi gens sine capite in finalem destructionem. &c. Now doth this stand with that goeth before,* that they conspired to make a Regent, except you will say that to make a Regent is to be a people without an head? It foloweth.

(E) Cum quam pluribus rebellibus dicti regis ignotis ad numerum viginti millium hominum.*&c. A straunge matter that they should knowe of the conspiracie of twentie thousand, and yet knowe of no moe names of the rebels, but the Lord Cobham onely, or one or two mo. And all the rest were ignoti.

(F) Priuatim insurgentes. &c. This smelleth of the Cleargies owne penning,* without any great aduise of learned counsaile: for otherwise such as had bene herein skilfull, would neuer haue put in priuatim insurgentes.

(G) Die Mercurij proximo post festum Epiphaniae D. anno R.R. praedicto,*&c. This Wednesday next after the Epiphanie, was the x. day of the moneth of Ianuary, and the same day when both the conspiracie was put in execution, and the same day when the commission was giuen out to enquire, also when the fact was by enquirie presented. Whereby it may seeme a strange thing that so great a conspiracy knowne beforehand, was not suppressed nor enquired of by any commission, but ouely by a commission bearing date of the same day, vpon which day by the purport of the Inditement, the conspiracie should haue bene put in execution, by open rebellion, as it is aforesayd.

(H)Praedictum D. nostrum Regem fratres suos videl. Thomam Ducem Clarentiae, *Ioannem de Lancastre, & Humfredum de Lancastre, &c. If the kings learned counsaile had dealt in this Inditement, as in case of treason they should haue done, if it had bene a matter of truth, they would neuer haue handled it so slenderly, and wrongly, as to name the Dukes of Bedford, and of Gloucester: Iohn of Lancaster, and Dumfrey of Lancaster, who were made Dukes in the 13. yeare of the raigne of King Henry the fourth their father, as appeareth by Caxtones Chronicle.

(I)Et ibidem versus campum praedictum, modo guerrino arriati proditorie modo insurrectionis, *contra ligeantias suas equitaerunt ad rebellandum dictum D. nostrum regem, &c. This is falsified by plaine euidence of histories. And Cope hymselfe confesseth no lesse. For he so sayth and confesseth page line That Sir Iohn Oldcastle was not there in person, but onely, that his consent and good will was there.

*Againe, seeing this equitation or riding toward Saint Giles field was vpon the Wednesday next after the feast of Epiphany (as in this Inditement and processe of outlawry is aboue testified) which was the tenth daye of Ianuary, and commission also the same day was charged, and the Iewry moreouer impanelled the same daye, & yet no Iewrer named: Item, the verdict the same day presented, how all these can concurre together, and all in one day, let the reader after he haue well considered the matter, vse his iudgement therin, not only whether it be like, but also whether it be possible.

Ouer and beside all this it is to be noted, that if thys matter had bene truely and duly handled, * as touching the reason, then had it not bene needefull to haue brought sir Iohn Oldcastle into the Parliament house, * before the Lords to haue had his iudgement. For by the outlawrie (if it had bene true) he was <◇>, and without ame more adde should hau• had iudgement in the Kings Bench as a Traytor. But the chiefe Iustice knowing the handling of the matter, durst not belike enterprise so far. Wherefore i• was deuised, that he should certifie the record <◇> the <◇>, which he did together, with the Bishops <◇> filed to the •ecord, which was verie strange.

And thereupon the Lords gaue such a iudgement, as was not due for a Traytor. For that they gaue no iudgement, that he should be drawne, hanged, and set downe aliue, and then <◇> we•led and quar•ered, which is the iudgement of a Traytor. And albeit the Parliament might haue attainte• him without any more ado: And by the same Act of atteinder haue ordeined a speciall iudgement, as they should thinke good: yet when hee was before atteinted by the outlawrie, they could not lawfully varie from the common iudgemēt of •reason. At least how could or should the iudgement of Sir Roger Acton, Maister Browne, and Iohn Beuerley, who were iudged in the Buildhall before and without the Parliament, vary from the said common iudgement of Traytors, if they had truly committed, and bene conuicted of such high treason?

Adde this moreouer to the foresaid Notes: that if Sir Iohn Oldcastle after his escape out of prison, * had bene culpable and so atteinted of that high treason, wherby his lands had bene immediately forfait vnto the King by the processe of his outlawry: What needed the king then in the second yeare of his raigne, in the Parliament after holden at Leycester, haue made that prouiso to haue his lands forfaite to him by vertue of Parliament, vpon his escape on the day of his arest: when as the lands and cattaile of his had bene forfeite before, by the processe of the outlawry, as is before specified?

Thus you see (Maister Cope) how little aduantage you can wrast out of this Commission and inditement against the Lord Cobham and his fellowes to proue them traytors. And admit the said Lord Cobham was attainted of treason by the Acte, and that the King, the Lordes, and the Commons assented to the Act: yet it hindeth not in such sort (as if in deed he were no Traytour) that anye man may not by search of the truth vtter and set forth sincerely and iustly the very true cause whereby his death hapt and followed.

Thus then hauing sufficiently cleared the Lord Cobham and his parteners,* from all that you can object vnto them out of records and statutes: let vs now come to your English Chroniclers, wherwith you seeme to presse me, & to oppresse them whome ye name to be Robert Fabian, Edward Halle, Polydor Virgilius, Thomas Cooper, Richard Grafton, with other briefe Epitomes and Summaries, &c. Concerning which authors, as I haue not to say, but to their commendation in this place: so if that you had auouched the same, to the commendation rather then to the reproofe of other, I would better haue commēded your nature, and beleued your cause. But now like a spidercatcher sucking out of euery one, what is the worst, to make vp your leystall, you heape vp a donghill of dirtie Dialogues containing nothing in them but malicious railing, virulent slanders, manifest vntruths, opprobrious contumelies, & stinking blasphemies, able almost to corrupt & infect y^e aire. Such is the maladie & cacoethes of your pen, y^e it beginneth to barke, before it hath learned well to write. Which pen of yours notwithstanding I do not heere reproch nor contemne, as neither do I greatly feare y^e same. God of his mercy keepe y^e sword out of the Papists hand, it is not the pen of the papists I greatly passe vpō, though xx. Copes, and so many surplusses, were set against the booke of Monuments, were I so disu^sed (Maister Cope) to dally, or as the Breckes do say 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , and to repay againe as I am prouoked. But in despightful railing, and in this Satyricall sort of barking I geue you ouer, and suffer you therin to passe not only your selfe, but also Cerberus himself if ye will,* the great bandog of Pluto. Mildnes and humanitie rather beseemeth and is the grace of the Latine phrase. If ye could hit vpon the vaine therof, it would win you much more honestie, with all honest men. But the Lord hereafter may cal you, which I beseech him to do, and to forgiue you that you haue done.

In the meaue time seeing this your prating pen must nedes be walking, yet this you might haue lerned of these your own authors whom you aledge, more ciuilly to haue rēpered your fume, in exclaiming against thē, whose cause is to you not perfectly known. And now briefly to answer Page 577 to these your foresaide wryters, as witnesses produced against these men:* there be 2. things (as I take it) in these chronicle wryters to be cōsidered: First the groūds which they follow: secondly in what place they serue.

As touching the order and ground of wryting among these Chronicles, ye must consider, and cānot be ignorant that as none of all these by you forenamed,* was present at the deede, nor wnesse of the fact, so haue they nothyng of thēselues herein certainly to affirme, but either must follow publike rumor and hearesay for their autor, or els one of them must borrow of another. Whereof neither seemeth to me sufficient. For as publike rumor is neuer certain: so one author may soone deceiue an other.

By reason whereof it commeth oft to passe, that as these story wryters hit many times the truth, so againe al is not the gospell that they doe wryte.* Wherefore great respect is heere to be had, either not to credite rashly euery one that wryteth stories, or els to see what groundes they haue whome we doe followe.

Now to demaund (M. Cope) of you, what authoritye or foundation hath your Robert Fabian, hathe Polydore Uirgil, Edward Hal, and other of your authors to prooue these men to be traytors? What authority do they auouch? what actes, what registers, what recordes, or out of what court do they shewe? or what demōstration do they make? And do you thinke it sufficient, because these men doe only affirme it, wythout any further probation, wyth youre 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, therfore we are boūd to beleue it? Take me not so (M. Cope) that I do here diminish any thing or derogate from the credit of those wryters you alledge, whose labors haue deserued well, and serue to great vtilitie: but cōming now to triall of a matter lying in cōtrouersie betwene vs, we are now forced to seeke out the fountaine and bottome of the truthe, where it is not enough to say, so it is, but the cause is to be shewed, why it is so affirmed. And what though Robert Fabian, Polydore Uirgile, and Edward Hall,* should all together (as they do not) agree in the treason of sir Iohn Oldcastle and of the rest, yet neither is this any sufficient surety to prooue them traitors. Considering that wryters of stories for most part folowing either blind reporte: or els one taking of an other, vse commonly all to sound together after one tune, tanquam Dodonaei lebetes, so that as one sayth, all say, and if one erre, all do erre. Wherefore you see M. Cope, howe it is not sufficient nor sure to sticke onely to the names and authorities of Chronographers, vnlesse the ground be found substantial wherupon they stand themselues. Which yet in none of these whome you haue produced, doth appeare.

Secondly, in alleaging and wryting of Chronicles is to be considered to what place and effect they serue.* If yee would shew out of them the order & course of times, what yeres were of dearth and of plēty, where kings kept their Christenmasse, what condites were made, what Maiors and shirifes were in London, what battails were fought, what triumphs and great feasts were holdē, when kings began their raigne, and when they ended. &c. In such vulgare and popular affairs, the narration of the Chronicler serueth to good purpose, & may haue his credite, wherein the matter forceth not much, whether it be true or false, or whether any listeth to beleue them. But where as a thyng is denied, and in cases of iudgement, and in controuersies doubtfull, which are to be decided and bouted out by euidence of iust demonstration: I take them neither for Iudges of y^e bench, nor for arbiters of the cause, nor as witnesses of themselues sufficient necessarily to be sticked vnto. Albeit I deny not but hystories are takē many times, and so termed for witnesses of times, and glasses of antiquitie. &c. yet not such witnesses, as whose testimony beareth alwaies a necessary truth and bindeth beliefe.

The two witnesses whych came against Susanna, being seniours both of auncient yeares, bare a great countenance of a most euidēt testimony, wherby they almost both deceiued the people, & oppressed the innocent: had not yōg Daniel by the holy spirite of God, haue take thē aside, and seuerally examining them one from the other,* found them to be falsliers both, leauing to vs therby a lesson of wholsome circumspection, not rashly to beleue euery one that commeth: and also teaching vs, how to try thē out. Wherefore (M. Cope) following here the like example of Daniel in trying these your records whom ye inferre against these men we wil in like maner examine them, seuerally one frō an other,* and see how their testimonie agreeth: first beginning wyth your Robert Fabian. Which Robert Fabian being neither in the same age, nor at the deede doing, can of himselfe geue no credite herein, without due prooffe, and euidence conuenient.

Now thē doth Rob. Fabian proue this matter of treason true? what probation doeth he bring? what authoritie doth he alleage? And doth Rob. Fabian thinke, if he were not disposed to conceiue of the L. Cobham, and those men a better opinion but to be traitors, that men are bounde to beleue him only at his word, without any ground or cause declared, why they shuld so do, but only because he so saith and pleased him so to write? And if yee thinke (M. Cope) the word only of this witnes sufficient to make authority speaking against the Lord Cobham, and prouing nothing which followed so many yeres after him: * why may not I as well and much rather take the worde and testimonie of Richard Belward a Northfolke man, and of the towne of Crisam, who liuing both in his time, & possible knowing the party, & punished also for the like trueth, is not reported, but recorded also in the registers of the church of Norwich, * to geue this testimonie among other his articles, for the foresaid L. Cobham, that is, y^t sir Iohn Oldcastle was a true Catholike man and falsely condemned, and put to death wythout a reasonable cause. &c. Ex Regist. Noruic.

Agaynst this man if you take exception & say, that one hereticke will hold with an other: why may not I with y^e like exception reply to you agayne, & say as well, one Papist hold with an other, and both cōiure together, to make and say the worst agaynst a true Protestant.

Further, yet to examine this foresayd Fabian, witnes agaynst Sir Iohn Oldcastle, as Daniell examined y^t witnesses agaynst Susanna. I will not here aske vnder what tree these adherentes of sir I. Oldcastle conspired agaynst the king, & subuersion of y^t land, but in what time, in what yeare and moneth this conspiracie was wrought? Fabian witnesseth that it was in the moneth of Ianuary. * Cōtrary Edward Hall & other our Abridgementers followyng him, doe affirme that they were condemned in the Guild hall the xij. of December, and that their executiō vpon the same was in Ianuary followyng, so that by their sentence the fact was done either in the moneth of Decēber, or els before, & so Fabianus mentitus est in caput suum, vt cū Daniele dicam, or if it were in the moneth of Ianuary as Fabian sayth, then is Hall and his followers deceiued, testifying the fact to be done in the moneth of December.

And yet to object moreouer against the sayd Fabiā, * for so much as he is such a rash witnes agaynst these burned persons whom he calleth traytors: it would be demaūded further of him, or in his absence of Maister Cope, in what yeare this treason was conspired? If it were in the same yeare (as he cōfesseth himselfe) in which yeare Iohn Cleidon the Skinner, & Richard Turmine Baker were burned, then was it neither in the moneth of Ianuary, nor in the first yeare of kyng Henry the fift. For in the register of Cāterbury it appeareth playne, that Iohn Claydon was condemned neither in the tyme of Thom. Arundell Archbyshop nor yet in the first nor second yeare of kyng Henry the v. * but was cōdemned in the second yeare of the translation of Henry Chichesly, Archbyshop of Canterbury, the. 17. day of August, which was the yeare of our Lord. 1415. So that if this conspiracie was in the same yeare (after the witnesse of Fabiā) in which yeare I. Cleydon was burned, then doth the testimony of Fabian neither accord with other witnesses, nor w^t him selfe, nor yet with truth. And thus much concerning the witnes of Rob. Fabian.

Let vs next proceede to Polidore Uirgill, whose partiall and vntrue handling of our history in other places of of his bookes, * doth offer vnto vs sufficient exception not to admit his credite in this. And yet because we will rather examine him, then exclude him, let vs heare a little what he sayth, & how he fayleth, & in how many pointes, numbring the same vpon my fiue fingers.

First ending with the life of king Henry 4. hee sayeth,* that hee raigned 14. 14. yeares and 6. moneths and 2. dayes. Angl. hist. lib. 21. whyche is an vntruth, worthy to be punyshed wyth a whole yeares banishment (to speake after the maner of Apulenis) when as truth is, he raigned by the testimony of the story of S. Albones, of Fabian, of Hall, of our old English Chronicle, and of Scala mundi, but 13. & 6. moneths,* lacking as some say 5. dayes, Hal saieth he raigned but 12. yeares.

The second vntruth of Polydore is this,* where as hee speaking of this sedition of sir Iohn Oldcastle and his adherents, affirmeth the same to be done after the burning of Iohn Hus, and of Hierome of Prage, whych was sayeth he An. 1415. in which yere (sayth he) Thomas Arundell died. Hys wordes be these: In eodem concilio damnata est Ioh. Wicliffi haeresis, ac Ioan. Hus, & Hieronymus Pragensis in ea vrbe combusti sunt. Quod vbi reliquis consocijs, qui etiam tunc in Anglia erant, patefit, tanquam furijs agitati primùm coniurationes in omnes sacerdotes, deinde in regē. &c. In which words he not onely erreth, falsly assigning the cause and occasion Page 578 of this sedition to the death of Iohn Hus, and of Ierome, but also misseth as muche in the order and computation of the yeres. For neither was sir Roger Acton with his foresaid fellowes aliue at the time of the councell, neither doth hee agree therein with any of our English wryters, except onely with Hall, who also erreth therein as wide as he.

For the third and fourth vntruth I note this, where he addeth and sayth, that after this rebelliō raised against the king, the sayd sir Iohn Oldcastel being there present himselfe, was taken and prisoned in the tower, and afterward escaped out of the saide tower by night, wherein is contained a double vntruth. For neither was Sir Iohn Oldcastle there present himselfe, if we beleue Fabian and Cope, Dial. 6. pag. 833 lin 11. nether yet did he euer escape out of the Tower after that conspiracie, if euer any such conspiracie was.

*His v. but not the last vntruth in Polydore is this, that he sayth, Tho. Arundel to haue died in the same yeare, noting the yere to be An. 1415. where as by the true registers he died. An. 1413.

*To this vntruthe an other also may be ioyned, where he erring in the computation of the yeres of the said Thomas Arundel Archbishop of Canterbury, reporteth hym to sit 33. yeares. Who was there Archbishop but onely 18. yeres, as is to be sene in the recordes of Canterbury. The wordes of Polydore be these: Thomas Arundellius Cantuariensis antistes annum iam tunc sedēs tertium & trigesimum e vita excessit lib. 22. Ang. hist. All be it in thys I doe not greatly contend wyth Polydore, and peraduenture the aduersary will finde some easie shift for thys matter.

But let vs passe now from Polydore, not (as they say) out of the hal into the kitchine,* but out of the kitchine vnto the hall, examining and perpending what sayth Edward Hall an other witnes in this matter: vpon whom maister Cope bindeth so fast, that hee supposeth hys knot is neuer able to be losed. And moreouer so treadeth me downe vnder his feete in the dirt (as a man would thinke hym some dirtdaubers sonne) so that the spots thereof he sayeth, will neuer be gotten out while the world standeth, & a day longer. Notwythstanding I trust M. Cope that your dirtie penne with your cockish brags hath not so bedaubed and bespotted me, nor yet conuicted me to be such a deprauer of histories, but I hope to sponge it out. At least way, with a little asperges of the Popes holy water, I trust to come to a dealbabor, well enough.

But certes, M. Cope, your maistership must first vnderstand, that if yee thinke so to depresse me, and disprooue me of vntruth in my history, you must go more groūdly to worke, and bring against me other authors then Edward Hal: You must consider (M. Cope) if you will be a cōtroller in storie matters, it is not enoughe for you to bryng a railing spirit, or a minde disposed to carpe and cauil where any matter may be picked, diligence is required, and great searching out of bookes and authors not only of our time, but of all ages. And especially where matters of religion are touched pertaining to the church: it is not sufficient to see what Fabian, or what Hall sayth, but the records must be sought, the Registers must be turned ouer, letters also and ancient instruments ought to be perused, and authors wyth the same compared, finally the writers among them selues one to be conferred wyth another. And so wyth iudgement to be waied, wyth diligence to be labored, and wyth simplicitie pure from all addiction and partialitie to be vttered.

Thus did Auentinus, thus did Sleidanus wryte. These helpes also the eldest and best Historicians semed to haue, both Titus Liuius, Salustius, Quintus Curtius, and suche lyke, as by their letters and records inserted may wel appeare. The same helps likewise both in your Fabian and in your Edwarde Hall were to be required,* but especially in you (M. Cope) your selfe, whych take vppon you so cockishly (rather then wisely) to be a controller and maister moderatour of other mens matters. In which matters (to say the truth) you haue no great skil, and lesse experience, neyther haue you either suche plenty of authors meete for that purpose, nor yet euer trauailed to search out the origens & groundes of that whereof ye write. But onely contented with such as commeth next to hande, or peradventure receiuing such almose as some of your poore frends bestowe vpon you, think it sufficient if you can alledge Fabian and Hall for your purpose.

Now what purpose & affection herein doth lead you, rather doeth driue you to the carping and barking against the history of these good men, y^t be hence gone and had their punishment, all men may see it to be no simple sinceritie of a mind indifferent, but y^r zeale only of your sect of Popery, or rather of fury, which setteth your railing spirite on fire. But now out of the fiery kitchen, to come to the hal againe let vs see what matter lyeth in the testimony of Edward Hall, to proue these men to be traytors. And here for so much (Maister Cope) as you seeme neither sufficiently acquainted with this your owne maister and authour Master Hall,* nor yet well experienced in the searchyng out of histories, I wil take a litle paynes for you, in this behalfe, to certifie you concernyng the story of this author, wherof percase you your selfe are yet ignoraunt.

The truth whereof is this, that as the sayd Edwar• Hall, your great master & testis, was about the compiling of his story, certayne there were which resorted to hym of whom some were drawers of his petigree & vineat, some were grauers, the names of whom were Iohn Bets, and Tyrral, which be now both dead. And other there were of the same sodalitie, who ve yet aliue, & were then in y^e house of Richard Grafton, both the Printer of the sayd booke, & also (as is thought) a great helper of the pēning of y^e same. It so befell that as Hall was entring into the story of Syr Iohn Oldcastle, of Syr Roger Acton, & their felowes, the booke of Iohn Bale touching the story of the L. Cobham, was y^e same time newly come ouer. Which booke was priuely cōueied by one of his seruaūts into the study of Hall, so that in turnyng ouer his bookes, it must needes come to his handes. At the sight whereof, when he saw the groūd & reasons in that booke contained, he turned to the authors in the foresayd booke alledged, whereupon within two nightes after, moued by what cause I know not, but so it was, that hee taking his pen, rased and cancelled all that he had written before,* agaynst Syr Iohn Oldcastle & his fellowes, & was now ready to go to the Print, containyng neare to the quantitie of three pages. And least (M. Cope) you, or any other should thinke me to speake beside my booke, be it therefore knowen both to you and to all other, by these presentes, that the very selfe same first copy of Hall rased and crossed with his owne penne, remaineth in my handes to be shewed & seene, as need shall require. The matter which he cancelled out came to this effect. Wherein he following the narratiō of Polidore, began with like wordes, to declare how the Sacramētaries here in England, after the death of Iohn Husse, and Hierome of Prage, beyng pricked as he sayth, with a demoniacall sting, first conspired agaynst the Priestes, and after against the king, hauing to their Captaines sir Iohn Oldcastle the Lord Cobham, and Syr Roger Acton Knight, with many moe wordes to the like purpose and effect, as Polydore & other such like Chronicles doe write agaynst him. All which matter notwithstanding, the sayd Hall with his penne at the sight of Iohn Bales booke, did vtterly extinct and abolish. Addyng in the place thereof the wordes of M. Bales booke, touchyng the accusation and condemnation of the sayd Lord Cobham, before Thomas Arundell Archbyshop of Canterbury,* taken out of the letter of the sayd Archbyshop, as is in his owne story to be sene. In vita Henr. 5. pag. 2. lin. 30.

And thus Edward Hall your author, reuoking & calling backe all that he had deuised before agaynst the Lord Cobham (whereof I haue his owne hand to shew, & witnes substaūciall vpō the same) in his printed booke recordeth of him no more, but onely sheweth y^e proces betwene the Archbyshop of Cāterbury and him for matters of religion. And so ending with Sir Iohn Oldcastle, proceedeth further to the assemble of sir Roger Actō (whom he falsely calleth Robert Actō) Iohn Browne,* and Beuerley, the narration wherof he handleth in such sort, that he neither agreeth with y^e record of other writers, nor yet with truth it selfe. For where he excludeth the Lord Cobham out of that assemble, he discordeth therein from Polidore and other, And where he affirmeth the fact of that conspiracie to be wrought before, or at the xij. day of December: that is manifestly false, if the recordes before alledged be true. And where he reporteth this assemble to be after the burnyng of Iohn Hus, and of Hierome of Prage, therein he accordeth with Polydore, but not with truth. Moreouer, so doubtfull he is and ambiguous in declaration of this story, that no great certaintie can be gathered of him.

First, as touchyng the confession of them, he confesseth himselfe, that he saw it not, & therefore leaueth it at large▪ And as cōcernyng the causes of their death, he leaueth the matter in doubt,* not daring (as doth M. Cope) to define or pronōūce any thing therof, but onely reciteth the furmi|ses and myndes of diuers men diuersly, some thinkyng it was for cōueying the Lord Cobhā out of the tower, some that it was for treason and heresie, and here cōmeth in the mētiō onely of a record, but what record it is neither doth he vtter it, nor doth he examine it: other some againe a••irming (as he sayth) y^t it was for fayned causes surmised by Page 579 the spiritualitye, more of displeasure then trueth. And thus your autor Hall,* hauing recited y^r varietie of mens opinions, determineth himselfe no certaine thing thereof, but as one indifferent, neither boūd to the coniectures of al men, nor to the wrytings of all men, referreth the whole iudgement of the matter free vnto the reader. And so concluding his narratiō forsomuch as he was neither a witnes of the fact, nor present at the dede, he ouerpassest the story therof.

And what witnes then wil you, or can you (M. Cope) take of Edwarde Halle, which denieth himselfe to be a witnesse? Will you compell him to say that he sawe not? and to witnesse that he can not? Wherefore like as Susanna, in the storye of Daniel was quite by right iudgement in the case of adultery, because her accusers and testes being examined a sonder were found to vary and halt in their tale, and not to agree in the two trees: ^{*} So why may not in like case of treason, sir Roger Acton, sir Iohn Didcastle, Browne w^t the rest, claime the same priuiledge? seeing among the testes and witnesse produced agaynst them, such discorde is found, and such halting among them, that neyther do they agree in place, person, yeare, day, nor moneth.

1For first where Fabian and his fellowes say: that they were assembled together in a great company, in the fielde neare to S. Gyles, the forged inditement aboue alledged, sayth, they were but riding toward the fielde.

22. Secondly, where the foresaid inditement and Polydore, geue the Lorde Cobham to be present personally in that assemble, Halle, and Alanus Copus Anglus, doe exclude hys personal presence from thence: and so doth Fabian also seme to agree, speaking onely of the adherentes of Syr Iohn Oldcastle.

3Thirdly, where Halle and Polydorus report thys assemble to be after the burning of Iohn Hus, and of Hierome at the councel of Constance, which was An. 1415. that cannot be, but if there were any suche conspiracie in the first yeare of Henry 5. it must needes be An. 1413. And heere- by the way, why do certaine of your Epitome wryters speaking of the Lord Cobham committed first to the tower for heresie, referre the sayd his imprisonment to the yere 1412. where as, by their owne counte, reckoning the yeare from the Annunciation, it must nedes be an. 1413. being done in haruest time.

4Fourthly, where Halle with his followers affirme that syr Roger Acton, Brown and Beuerley were condemned the 12. day of December, the recorde is euident against it, which holdeth the fact to be in working the 10. day of Ian.

5Fiftly, where as the foresayde record of the Inditement geueth the Wednesday next after the Epiphany, whyche was the 10. day of Ian. that present yeare, both the facte to be commytted, the same day, the Commission also to be graunted and deliuered to the Cōmissioners the same day, The saide Commissioners to sit in Commission the same day: The Shriffes of Midlesex to returne a iurie out of the body of Midlesex the same day: and the Iurers to find the inditement the same day, and yet no iurer in the inditemēt named the same day.

Item, the L. Cobham, the same day, to be founde conspiring to make him selfe Regent, when as the king, that day and yeare, was not yet passed into Fraunce: howe all these can concurre and hang together and all in one day: I suppose it wil cost you two dayes, before you, with al your learned counsel wil study it out. And whē you in your vnlawfull assembles haue conspired and conferred together, all ye can, yet wil ye make it (as I thinke) iij. dayes, before you honestly dispatch your handes of the matter.

And where ye thinke, y^t you haue impressed in me such a foul note of lying, neuer to be clawed of while the world standeth, yet shal the posterity to come iudge betwene you & me, whether shall appeare more honest and true, my defence for that worthy lord, then your vncourteous and viperuns wrangling against him, mooued w^t no other cause, but onely with the peuish spirite of Poperie, whych can abide nothing, but that sauereth of your owne secte. For els how many loud lying legends,* yea what legion of lies are daily vsed and receiued in the popish church? What doltish dreames? what fained myracles? what blasphemous tales and frierly fables, and idle inuētions, fighting against the sincere religion, doctrine and crosse of Christ? And could you holde your penne from al these, and finde nothing els to set your idlenesse on worke, but onely to wryte agaynst the Lorde Cobham, Syr Roger Acton, Browne, Onley, Cowbrige, with a fewe other whome wyth much a doe, at length you haue sought out, not so much for any true zeale to rebuke iniquitye, as craftely seeking matter by these to deface and blemish the booke of Actes and Monumentes. Which seemeth belike to make you scratche there, where it itcheth not. And if I shoulde after the like dealing take in hand your Popish portues, and with like diligence excusse euery Popish martyr and Saint there canonised: thinke you maister Cope, I could not make you out halfe dosen as ranke traitours and rebels to their kings and princes, as euer were any of these of your picking out? What pope almost hath there bene these last 500. yeares, whych hathe not bene a traitour to his Emperour and Prince, and to his countrey?* either openly rebelling against them, or priuely conspiring their destruction, or proudly setting theyr feete vpon their necks, or spurning their crownes of from their heads, or making the sonne to fight against y^e father? How many haue they deposed, and set vp other in theyr seates? how many Emperours and kings haue they wrongfully cursed? What Consulles of Rome haue they resisted, deposed, and put to death? What warres haue they raised vp against theyr owne countrey of Rome? Yea the continuall holding of the City of Rome, from hys lawfull Emperour, what is it but a continuall poynt of treason?

What will you answer me (M. Cope) to the Pope, which conspired to let fall downe a stone vpon the Emperours head, kneeling at his prayers, pag. 177.

And though this treachery being as big as a milstone, seemed but a smal mote in your eye, that it could not be espied: yet what will you say by the Monke of Swinstede, that poysoned king Iohn,* who was both absolved by his abbot before his treason committed, and after hys treason had a perpetuall Masse songe for him, to helpe hym out of Purgatorie?

And what thinke ye in your conscience is to be sayde of Thomas Becket, who did inough, and more then became him, to set the French king, and the king of Englande together by the eares? Of Anselme likewise, and of Stephen Langhton, who departed both out of the Realme to complaine of their princes & soueraines? The like may be said also of Iohn Peckham. Iohn Stradford Archbyshop of the same sea notoriously resisted the Kinges commaundement, being sent for by king Edward 3. to come to the parliament at Yorke, through the default of whose comming, the present oportunitie of getting Scotland was the same time lost,

Richard Scrope Archb. of Yorke,* was opely in armes to rebell & fight against K. Henry 4. for the which he was condemned & put to death. And yet notw^tstanding Commission was sent downe from the pope shortly after, to excōmunicate them which put him to death, his treason notw^tstanding. Read y^t story sincerely of pope Benedict 12. and of pope Clement 6. And see howe the traiterous rebellion of these two popes against Ludouicus their rightful Emperour can be defended: * Which Emperour at last was also empoysoned, & that not without the practise of Pope Clement, as doth Hieronimus Marius credibly witnesse.

In the raigne of K. Edward the 2. mention was made before of Thomas Earle of Lancaster. Who with a great number of other nobles and Barons of the realme, * rose in armour against their prince, and therefore at length were put to death as traitours. And yet notwithstanding this treason committed (M. Cope) if you be so ignorant in our stories, that you know it not, set your setters on to search, and you shall finde it true, that certaine Noble men went vp to Rome, for the canonising of the sayde Thomas of Lancaster to be made a Saint, and obtained the same. In so much that in a certayne olde Calendre, the name of the sayd S. Thomas of Lancaster is yet extant to be seene.

In the former booke of these Actes and Monumentes aboue, * about the pag. 353. or 354. mention was made of Edmund of Abbeney Archb. of Cant. whom although I do not disproue, but rather commend in my history, for his bold and sage counsaile geuen vnto K. Henry the 3. and also for offering the censure of excommunication against the king in so necessary a cause: yet notwithstanding the same Edmund, afterward about his latter end, went vp wyth a rebelling minde to complaine of his king vnto the Pope, and in his iourney died, before his return: who afterward for the same, was canonised by the Pope, and now shineth among the Saints in the popes Calender.

Let vs come more neare to these dayes and times, and consider the doings of Tho. Arundell Archb. of Canterb. * Who being first deposed and exiled for his contemptuous deserts against the king, and afterward comming in, wyth Henry Bolynbroke Duke of Hereford, in open armes and with main force rose against his natural and lawful king: thinke you (M. Cope) this is not as greates a poynte of treason, as that which was done in Thetford fields? And though he be not placed among the portuous Saints, yet I thinke nothing contrary, but in your heart you will not greatly sticke to say, Sancte Thoma ora pro nobis.

All these thinges well considered, tell me (M. Cope) I Page 580 pray you, is treason suche a straunge and vnketh thyng in your pope catholike church, that your burning zeale of obedience to kings and princes, can not read the story of the L. Cobham & sir Roger Acton, but your pen must needs be inflamed to wryte against them, and yet so many traytors in your owne Calenders neither seene, nor once spoken of? And if the traitorous conspiracy and rebellion of so many your Calender Saintes committed against Emperours, Kings, and Princes, can not stirre your zeale, nor moue your pen: Nor if the treason of pope Gregory 9. raising warre against his owne city of Rome, and causing 30. thousande citizens in one battaile to be slaine, pag. 281. deserueth not to be espied, and accused as much as this treason of the Lorde Cobham: yet what will you or can you answer to me (M. Cope) as touching the horrible treason of pope Gregory the 7. committed not against Emperour nor king, nor any mortall man, but against the Lord hymselfe, euen against your God of your owne making, being therein as you say no substance of bread, but the very personall body, flesh, bloud, and bone of Christ himself, which body notwithstanding the foresayd Pope Gregory the 7. * tooke and cast with his owne hands into the burning fire, because he would not aunswere him to a certaine doubt or demaund Benn. Card. pag. 172. Southly, if sir Iohn Oldcastle had taken the body of king Henry the 5. and throwne him into the fire, the facte being so notoriously certaine as this is, I would neuer haue bestowed any worde in hys defence. And could thys, and so many other hainous treasons passe throughe your fingers (M. Cope) and no other to sticke in your pen but the Lord Cobham.

Finally and simply to conclude wyth you (M. Cope) and not to flatter you, what is y^e whole working, the proceedings, actions, & practises of your religion, or hath bene almost these 500. yeares, but a certaine perpetuall kinde of treason, to thrust downe your princes and magistrates, to derogate from their right and iurisdiction, and to aduance your owne maiesties and dominations: as hath bene sufficiently aboue proued and laid before your faces in a parliament holden in Fraunce by the Lord Peter de Cugnerijs. vide pag. 383.* Wherefore if the assemble of these forenamed persons, either within or wythout S. Giles field be such a great mote of treason in your eies, first loke vpō the great blocks and milstones of your owne traytors at home, and whē you haue well discussed the same, then after poure out your wallet of your trifeling Dialogues or Trialogues if ye lift against vs and spare vs not. Not that I so thincke thys to be a sufficient excuse to purge the treason of these men, if your popish Calenders and legeands be found ful of traytours. Multitudo enim peccatorum non parit errori patrociniū: But thys I thincke,* that the same cause whyche made them to suffer as traitors, hath made you also to rail against them for traitors, that is, mere hatred only against their Relygion, rather then any true affection you haue to your princes and gouernors. Who if they had bene as feruent in your Popery, and had suffred so much for the holy father of Rome, or for y^e liberties of the holy mother church of Rome, I doubt not, but they as holy children of Rome had bene rong into your Romish Calendare with a festum duplex, or at least with a festum simplex of 9. lessons, also w^t a vigil peraduenture before them.

Nowe because they were on the contrary profession, & enemies to your Magna Diana Ephesiorum, you playe wyth them as the Ephesian caruers dyd wyth Saint Paule and worse. Ye thrust them out as seditious rebels, not only out of life and body, but also can not abide them to haue any poore harbour in theyr owne friendes houses, among our Actes and Monuments to be remembred. In the whyche Actes and Monuments, and if gentle maister Ireneus, with hys fellow Critobulus in your clerkely Dialogues, will not suffer them to be numbred for martyrs: yet speake a good word for them (M. Cope) they may stande for testes or witnesse bearers of the trueth. And thus muche for defence of them.

Now to the other part of his accusation, wherein this Alanus Copus Anglus in hys 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉,* or sixfolde Dialogues contēdeth and chaseth against my former edition, to proue me in my history to be a lier, forger, impudent, a misreporter of trueth, a deprauer of stories, a seducer of the worlde, and what els not? Whose virulent words and contumelious termes, howe wel they become his popish persone, I knowe not. Certes for my part I neuer deserued thys at his handes wittingly, that I do know. Maister Cope is a man whome yet I neuer sawe, and lesse offended, nor euer heard of him before. And if hee had not in the fronte of hys booke intituled himself to be an English man, by his wryting I would haue iudged hym rather some wilde Irishman, lately crept out of S. Patrikes Purgatory, so wildely he wryteth, so fumishly he fareth.

But I cease here, and temper my selfe considering not what M. Cope deserueth to be sayd vnto, nor howe far the pen here could run if it had his scope, but cōsidering what the tractatiō rather of suche a serious cause requireth. And therefore seriously to say vnto you (M. Cope) in thys matter, wher you charge my history of Acts and Monuments so cruelly, to be full of vntruthes, false lies, impudent forgeries, dep rauations, fraudulent corruptions, and fayned tables, briefly and in one woord to answere you, not as the Lacones answered to the letters of their aduersary, wyth si, but with osi. would God (M. Cope) that in al the whole booke of Actes and Monumentes,* from the beginning to the latter end of the same, were neuer a true storie, but that all were false, all were lies, & all were fables. Would God the cruelty of your Catholikes had suffred all them to liue, of whose death ye say now that I doe lie. Although I deny not but in that booke of actes and monumentes containing such diuersity of matter, some thing might ouerscape me: yet haue I bestowed my poore diligence. My intent was to profit all men, to hurt none.

If you (maister Cope) or any other can better my rude doings, and finde things out more finely or truly, with al my hart, I shall reioyce with you and the commō wealth, taking profit by you. In perfectiō of wryting, of wit, cunning, dexterity, finenes or other induments required in a perfect writer, I contend neither with you, nor any other. I graunt that in a laboured story, such as you seeme to require, conteyning suche infinite varietie of matter, as thys doth, much more time would be required: but such time as I had, y^t I did bestow, if not so laboriously as other could, yet as diligently as I might.

But here partly I heare what you will say: I shoulde haue taken more leysure and done it better. I graunt and confesse my fault, such is my vice, I can not sitte all the day (M. Cope) fining and minsing my letters, and coming my head, and smoothing my selfe all the day at the glasse of Cicero. Yet notwythstanding doing what I can, and doing my good will, me thinkes I should not be reprehended, at least not so much be railed on at maister Copes hand. Who if he be so pregnant in finding faulte with other mens labours (which is an easy thing to do) it were to be wished, that hee had enterprised himselfe vppon the matter, and so should haue proued what faults might haue bene found in him. Not that I herein doe vtterly excuse my selfe, yea rather am ready to accuse my selfe, but yet notwythstanding thynke my selfe vngently dealt with all at Maister Copes hande: Who being mine owne countreyman, an English man as he sayeth, also of the same vniuersitye, yea colledge and schoole that I was of: knowing that the first edition of these Acts and monuments was begon in the farre parts of Germany, where few frendes, no conference, small information coulde be had. And the same edition afterwarde translated out of Latin into English by others, while I in the meane time was occupied about other Registers. And now the sayde Cope hearing moreouer and knowing that I was about a new edition of the same Actes and Monuments, at this present time, to be set foorth, for the amēding of diuers things therein to be reformed: if he had knowen any fault nedefull to be corrected, he might gently by letters admonished me therof. Gentlenes so would haue required it. Time would well haue suffred it. Neither was he so far off, but might sooner haue wrytten a letter to me, then a boke against me. Neither was I so ingratefull and inhumane, but wold haue thanked him for hys monition: neither yet so obstinate, but being admonished, wold haue corrected willingly where any fault had bene committed.

But herein your nature (M. Cope) doth right wel appeare.* First in the sayde booke of Actes and Monuments, where many other good things be conteyned, not vnfrutefull nor vnprofitable peraduētūre for y^e instruction of your cōscience, and wherin my labors perhaps might haue deserued your thanks, all that you dissemble and passe ouer, only excerpting those matters whych make for cauillation.* Thus the blacke spider out of pleasant flowres sucketh his poison. And what booke is so pleasant or frutefull, though it were the popes owne Portous, yea hys own decretals, yea hys owne very Masse booke, to the reading whereof if I brought the like minde so disposed to cauil, as you bring to the reading of my hystorie, but I coulde finde out twice as many mendacia, maculas, impudentias, dolos malos fabulas, fucos, as you haue done in these Actes and Monumentes. And yet you haue done pretely well.

Besides al this, yet better to marke the goodnes of your gentle nature: Be it so I had bene in some piece of my story deceiued, as I do not iustify my selfe in all poynts therin: yet you vnderstanding that I was about the correction Page 581 of my booke againe, might eyther haue taken the best, and left the worst: or els gently take the paines to haue aduertised me of suche notes as you had, wythout further exclamation, or at least might haue deferred your dialogues for a time, till the comming out of my booke, to see first what would in the latter edition be altered. But be like your gal was full, your hast could not tary, your venim must •edes brust out.

Et si non al•qua nocuisses mortuus esses.

Seeing therefore the order of your doings to be such, and disposition of your nature so farre from al humanity, dealing with me so extremely, if I thus prouoked wyth your extremity againe,* should now after thys your currish nature shape you a name accordingly, and in steade of Cope godfather you to be a perpetual sycophāt, could you much blame me? and doth not your sycophanticall booke wel deserue it? or thinke you I could not repay you againe wyth like extremitie as you bryng, and dresse your drousie or rather •ousie Dialogues in their right colours, if I were so disposed? But my purpose is wyth pacience to spare you, and rather to pray for you, God make you a good manne. Peraduenture he may hereafter call you. And rather had I to win you, then to sting you. Leauing therefore the consideratian of your ingrateful doings, I will nowe consider onely the poyntes wherein you charge me in your booke, answering briefly vnto the same. Briefly I say, because the greatnesse of thys volume, and aboundance of other more frutefull matter, geueth me little laisure at thys present to stand about brawling wordes.

First he seemeth highly to be greued with mee, for my Calendare prefixed before the boke of monuments. Wherin hee hath no cause eyther to be offended w^t me, or to chafe with himself. As touching which Calendare I haue sufficiently and expressely declared before so muche, as myghte quickly satisfy this scruple of M. Cope if he eyther woulde haue taken the paines, or els had had y^e laisure to reade the wordes contained in the Latine preface before the Booke prefixed, whych are thus: Quanquam a me quidem non aliter Calendarium hoc institutum est, nisi vt pro Indice duntaxat suum cuiusque Martyris mensem & annum designante, ad priuatum lectoris seruiet vsum &c. In whych woordes preuenting before the cauilling obiection of the aduersary, I forewarned the Reader afore hand, touching the Calendare, wherefore it was ordained and prefixed, for no other purpose, but to serue the vse only of the reader, in stead of a table, shewing the yere and moneth of euery Martyr, what time he suffered &c. What hurt I pray you is in this Calendar prefixed before the booke of Monumentes, more then in the Table of M. Copes booke, set after his Dialogues? But mayster Cope had no laisure to peruse thys place: it made not for hys humour.

But this greeueth him in the Calendare, and that very sore. For that I place in this Calendar, sir Iohn Oldcastle sir Roger Acton, Browne, Beuerley and other for Martyrs, and displace for them, other holy auncient Martyrs and Saints, as Antholius, Sother, Dorothe, Clarus, Lucianus, Seuerinus.&c. Answer: If M. Cope can not abide the Lord Cobham, sir Roger Acton, Browne, and Beuerley, which were hanged (as he sayeth for treason) to haue the name of martyrs, then let them beare the name of witnes bearers, or testes of the truth, because they were also burned for the testimony of their faith. Seing there is no difference in the sayd names, all is one to me by which they are called.

And where hee chargeth me for thrusting & shouldring out the olde and auncient holy Saintes aforenamed out of this Calendare,* and placing other new come Sayntes in their rowmes: this is not the first vntruth that M. Cope hath made in his dialogues, nor yet the least, vnto whome I might therefore fitly answere againe with his owne familiar phrase, or rather the phrase of Cicero, which he doth so much affectate: Quod nimirum hic ipse Alanus Copus Anglus, vnde me mendacij coarguit,* inde sibi ipsi sempiternam ac ineluibilem turpissimi mendacij, ac singularis impudentiae notam inurat. For why haue not Ias iust cause to say this to him, as he to me? For somuch as in the first beginning and preface of the sayde booke of Actes and Monuments, I so diligently and expressly do warne all men before, first that I make here no Calendare purposely of any Saintes, but a Table of good and godly men that suffered for the truth, to shew the day and moneth of their suffering.* My words be extant and euident, whyche are these: Neque vero ideo inter diuos a me referuntur isti, quòd inseruntur in Calendarium. &c. And declaring afterward how the sayde Calendare dothe stand but in stede of a table, my words do folow thus: Haud aliter Calendarium hoc institutum est, nisi vt pro Indice duntaxat zum cuiusque Martyris mensem & annum designante, Lectori ad vsum atque ad manum seruiat. &c.

Againe, neither did I receiue these men into that Kalendare, that holy Anathollus, Sother, Dorothea, wyth other ancient holy Saintes shoulde be remoued out, as you doe falsly & vntruly affirme, but because the course of that story reaching but 500. yeares, did not comprehend those former times of suche auncient Martyres, but onely of suche as suffered in these latter dayes: therefore requisite it was that in the table such should be placed chiefly, of whom y^e whole booke did then principally and onely entreat, to demōstrate thereby the time and day of their Martyrdome. Neither yet were the other excluded out of thys newe Kalendare, whyche were neuer inserted in the same before, but onely because both together coulde not there haue standing, necessity so required these in no case to be omitted, and yet no iniury meant to the other to be excluded out of theyr owne Kalēdars, wherto properly they did pertain. As for thys Kalendare or this table, because they were not pertinent vnto it, they could not therin, nether was it necessary, they should be included. And yet neither did I (M. Cope) w^tout due & solemne protestation omit the same in my foresayde Catalogue, to preuent and stop all cauilling mouthes: As by speciall words in the sayd proeme of my booke vnto the Reader doth appeare, folowing in this wise: Interim nullius ego boni sanctique viri (modo qui verè sanctus sit) causam laedo, nec memoriam extinguo, nec gloriam minuo. Et si cui hoc displiceat Calendarium, meminerit, non in templis à me collocari, sed domesticae tantum lectioni praeparari. &c. And wher is now (M. Cope) thys your reiecting, expelling, remoouing, expulsing, exempting,* deturbating and thrusting out of Anatholius, Sanct. Dorothea and other holye Saintes out of Catalogues, fastes, and Calenders? Or what man is that, or where dwelleth he, Qui veros Christi Martyres è Coelo ad Tar tara deturbat? That is. Which tumbleth downe true Martyrs from heauen,* into hell? Which if ye meane by me: In one worde I aunswere, ye falsely belie me maister Copus, I had almost called you maister Capus, so lyke a Capon ye speake. Neyther haue you nor any other euer heard me so say. Neither haue I euer heard of any so madde to play so the giants with their mountains to clime the heauens, to tumble downe Gods true & holy martyrs out of heauen, downe into hell, vnlesse it were your selfe (as yet ye are, ye may be better) and such other of your gilde and popish fraternity, which make of Gods true saintes,* stinking dunghils, (for so yee terme them in your bookes) and not onely thrust into heauen your Pseudosantos, saintes of your own making, whom God by his word doth not allow: but also depulse downe from heauen, and make dunghils of Gods welbeloued seruants, his faithful people, and blessed martyrs, which haue died for the word of god. And what maruel then, if in your blasphemous bokes, ye cast down from heauen to hell, the poore Saintes of Christ, when in effecte you deiecte also the bloude and crosse of the sonne of God Christ Iesus himselfe, setting vp in his office and place, ttu per Thomae sanguinem,quem pro te impendit, fac nos Christe scandere, quò Thomas ascendit. Say, master Cope, your conscience indifferently, set al Popish parcialitie a part, where as the Scripture teacheth vs simply. Quòd citra sanguinem nulla fit remissio .i. Wythout blud there is no remission: whether ye thinke, by this bloud of the new Testament is meant the bloud of Christ alone, or the bloud of other moe besides? If the bloud of one must stand alone, why doe yee then with the giants build vp your mountains, and make a ladder of Becketts popish bloud, for men to scale the heauens? Or in so doing, howe can you, but eyther wyth the Protestauntes wipe out of your Kalendare, Thomae sanguinem, or els demolish from heauen Sāguinem Christi with the papists?

And heere by the way, I cannot but muse, why you are so deuout in setting vp the crosse of Christ in your church, which are such enemies to the true crosse of Christ to stand in heanen. Looke vpon thys (master Cope) and tel me, vtra pars verius veros Christi Martyres è coelo in tartara detrudat? And therfore as you falsely belie me in thys, for detruding and tombling out of heauen Anatholius,*Iulianus, Clarus, Lucianus, Agatha, Dorothea and other, against whome I neuer yet spake any reproching woord, but rather in this my volume haue set forth their commendatiō: so is it vntrue like wise, where you affirm that in thys my Kalendar I make an 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, or Canonisation of false Martyrs. I tolde you before, when yee were in Englande, I tell you again, being nowe in your transmigration, in woordes as plaine as I coulede, Hane ego Apotheosin mihi nunquam sumpsit, quam sibi tam confidenter sumpsit Gregorius nonus. Were not these woordes of my Protestation manifest ynough? were they not sufficient to satisfie a reasonable Momus? And to make the matter more playne, dyd I not adde moreouer as followeth: Porrò neque eò spectat hoc Calendarium, vt Page 582 nouam aliquam festorum dierum legem praescribam ecclesiae. &c. And not contented wyth thys foreseeyng before suche wrangling spirites to come, as now I see in you: I shewed also the cause why I needed not so to doe, my woordes were these:*Festorum dierum iam plus satis erat in mundo. &c. And yet further, because no cauiller should take holde here of any iniurie done to the holy Saintes, eyther old or new in the Church, therefore in expresse woordes I remoued away all suspition of any iniurie, preuenting the obiection of the aduersary in these wordes. Habeat & Ecclesia suos sanctos, tum recentes, tum veteranos, modo probatos, modo interim ijdem ne adorentur, modo quàm sint vetusti, tam etiam verè sancti sint. &c.

These places of my booke, if ye did see: why do you dissemble them? If yee had not so much leisure to read them: howe had you so much laisure to wryte against any mans booke, not knowing what is in the booke contained? And howe stands it then wyth trueth, that so like a Mome yee cry out so in your booke, against these new made martyrs, qui non possunt nisi per aliorum iniuriam crescere. &c. And again, where you exclaime against me, and say that I thrust out the auncient Martyrs out from their seat and possession, and place new in their rowmes. &c.

Also where you continuing yet still in your common place of lying (out of which you cannot digresse) do charge me farther, that I do appoint out holy dayes and working daies by colours of red and blacke, in my foresayd Calendare to be obserued: these leude notes of yours, if they had bene picked out of my Calendare by you, wythout myne owne special declaration before made to the contrary, they might seeme to haue some blush of credite. Now what wil the reader say, or what may he iudge, cōsidering and conferring thys your cauilling, with the matter of my premonition made before, but that you are al together set to play the perpetuall Syc. I had almost called you by your right name master Cope. But God make you (as I said) a good man. Reading further in your boke I could not but smile and laugh at this your ridiculous and most loud lying Hyperbolismum: where as you cōparing my making of saints, with the Popes making, can finde (as ye say) in the Pope no such impudent arrogancie in presuming, as ye finde in me. &c. If the Pope had not abused hys arrogant iurisdiction in canonising and deifying his Saintes, more then I haue done: the yeare should not be combred wyth so many idle holy dayes, nor the Calendares wyth so many raskall Saintes, some of them as good, as euer were they that put Christ to death.

But where will you finde (M. Cope) any man to beleue thys your hyperbolical comparison to be true, whych seeth and knoweth the infinit and vnmeasurable excesse of the Popes arrogancie, not only in shrining such a rable of blind saintes of his owne creating: but also in prescribing the same to be receaued vniuersally in the whole worlde, and not to be receaued onely, but also to be inuocated for gifts and graces,* also to be worshipped for aduocates and mediatours. Wherin riseth a double abhomination of the pope, the one for his idolatrous making and worshipping of saintes: the other for his blasphemous iniurie and derogation to Christe, in repulsing him out of his office of mediation, & placing other mediatours of his owne making. And nowe to consider what Saintes these were, or what were the causes of their sancting: what S. almost among all the Popes Saintes shall you finde (M. Cope) made within these 500. yeres,* but commonly he was eithe some Pope, or some rich Bishop and Prelate, or some fat abbat, or some blind Frier, some Monke, or Nunne, some superstitious regulare, or some builder of monasteries, or some geuer and benefactour to the popish clergy, or maintainer agonising for the dignities and liberties of the Popyshe church? What poore lay man or lay womā, were their liues neuer so Christian, their faith and confession neuer so pure, their death neuer so agonising for the witnes of Christ, and truth of his word, shall finde any place or fauour in all the Popes 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, that is in the Popes Calendar, either in red colour, or els in blacke.

But heere (M. Cope) if yee had the wit, somuch to defend,* as yee haue to ouerwhart, you myght take mee wyth the maner, and replie againe for the defence of your great Saintmaker, or rather Godmaker of Rome: that he maketh mo martyrs & Saints of these foresayd poore laymen, & laywomen, then euer he did of any other. For he burneth them, he hangeth them, hee drowneth them, imprisoneth & famisheth them, & so maketh truer martyrs of Christ, then any other of his new shrined saints, whom he hath so dignified in his Calendar. For the one he doth rubricate, only w^t his red letters, the other he doth rubricate w^t their owne bloud. And therefore to aunswere you (M. Cope) to your comparison made betwene the pope and me, for making of holy Martyrs and Saintes: Briefly I say, and report me to al the world, y^e herein is no comparison. For if ye speake of true Martyrs, who doth make them, but the pope? if ye speake of fals martyrs, who doth make them, but the pope▪ And farthermore, to compare together the causes of these Martyred Saintes in my Calendare, wyth them whyche shine shrined in the Popes Calendare (taking the same proportion of time as I do, wythin these last 500. yeares) why may not I haue as good cause to celebrate these in my Calendar, which lost their liues and were slain, principally for the cause of Christ and of hys word: as the pope hath to celebrate his double and simple feasted saintes in hys Calendar, who in their doinges, doctrine, and life, as they seemed rather to serue the Pope, then Christ the Lord: so in their death appeared no such cause, why they shuld be sanctified in the church beyond all other. Let not the Church of Christ (M. Cope) be deluded with hypocritical names, nor fained apparitions, and fabulous miracles, neither be you deceiued your selfe, but let vs resort sincerely to the worde of God.* What was in S. Fraunces, looke vpon his superstitious life, & presumptuous testament, wrought no dout by Sathan, to diminish and obscure the Testament of Iesus Christ, why he should be made a Saint, and not an enemy rather of Christ?

What was likewise in Frier Dominicke, who before Fraunces x. yeares together persecuted the poore Waldenses to death and destruction, why should he stand a S. and a pillar of the church? * I pray you what see you in Thomas Becket, but that he died for the ambitious libertyes of the popishe church? * What in Aldelmus, and in Anselmus, but only that they chased away married priests from the churches, and planted in idle Monkes in their steade? The like also did Dunstanus, who was rubricated wyth a duplex festum.* Elizabeth who was the wife of the Marquesse of Thuring, when shee had with much perswasions got out her husbände to fight against the Turkes, and was there slaine, she afterward encloystered her selfe, and was made a Nunne. And doe you thinke these causes to be sufficient, why they shuld be made saintes, worshipped in churches, and set in Calendares? * Long it were to make rehearsal of all this riraffe, and almost infinite. One example may suffice for many. S. Gilbert of Sempringhā, was the sonne of Iocelin a knight, who for his deformitie of his body was set to learning, & afterward made Chanon, and was author of the Gilbertines, in the time of king Iohn.

This Gilbert after he had erected 13. monasteries of hys order of Sempringham, was afterwarde labored for vnto the Pope to be made a Saint: Who hearing of hys myracles, wrote hys letters to Hubert Archbishop of Canterbury, in the behalfe of the foresayd Gilbert, willing & commaundyng per Apostolica scripta,* that the feast of the sayde Gilbert shoulde be solemnised through all the prouince of Canterb. Vt meritis nimirum eius & precibus apud misericordissimum iudicem misericordiam consequamur. &c.

Whereuppon Hubert the Archb. directeth downe hys wrytings to all the bishops within hys prouince,* the contents of whych his wrytings do folow: Hubertus Dei gratia Cant. Archiepiscop. totius Angliae primas, dilectis in Christo frat. Episco. per prouinciam Cant. Sal grat. & benedictionem. D. Papa, sicut ex literis ipsius manifestè perpéditur, de conuersatione, meritis, & moribus b. Gilberti magistri ordinis de Sempringham, & miraculis a Deo per eum factis per testes & testimonia sufficienter instructus, de consilio fratrum Cardin. ipsum mag. Catalogo sanctorum decreuit ascribi, solemnitatem eius constituit & mandauit per Cant. prouinciam solemniter celebrari. Insuper & corpus eius cum requisiti fuerimus praecepit ad honorem Dei & gloriam eleuari. Vestra igitur vniuersitas huic mandato cum deuotione congaudeat, & secundum formam in ipso mandato praescriptam, praedicti confessoris Domini depositionem annuam faciatis cum reuerentia & solemniter obseruari: vt apud Dominum & ab illo vestra debeat & possit deuotio commēdari, necnon & ipsius sancti supplex intercessio vobis proficiat ad salutem. Valete.

The summe of the whiche wryting of the Archb. tendeth to thys effecte. That forsomuch as the Pope hearyng of the life and myracles of Gilbert, Maister of the order of Sempringham, by sufficiēt witnes and testimonies, hath in his letters commanded him by the aduise of hys Cardinals, that the sayde Gilbert should be canonised & ascribed in the Cataloge of saintes, and that his solemnity shoulde be celebrate solemnely throughout al the prouince of Canterb. And also hys body to be taken vp and shrined to the honour and glory of God: He therefore at the Popes commaundement wryting vnto them, wylleth all the Suffraganes within his prouince of Canterb. yearely to solemnise, and cause to be solemnized reuerētly the deposition of the sayd Saint Gilbert Confessor: to the entent that theyr Page 583 deuotion may be commended of the Lord,* and of him. And also, that the humble intercession of the sayd Saint may profite them to their saluation.

Furthermore, for the more full canonising (canuising I had almost sayd) of this new made saint, the saide Pope Innocent writing to Hubert aforesayd,* adioyneth withall a collect of his owne making, which is this: Plenam in nobis aeternae saluator tuae vertutis operare medelam, vt qui praeclara beati Gilberti confessoris tui merita veneramur, ipsius adiuti suffragijs a cunctis animarum nostrarum languoribus liberemur. Quiviuis & regnas. &c. That is: worke in vs O eternal sauior full remedy of thy vertue, that we which worship the worthy merites of blessed Gilbert thy confessor, being succoured by his suffrages, may be deliuered from all languors & diseases of our soules, who liuest and raignest. &c.

The cōsecration of this one Saint (who perhaps was not the worst) I thought here to cōmemorate,* to the intent that the reader measuring by this one the Canonisation of al the rest, may iudge the better vpō this cōparison of master Cope, whether of vs doth vendicate more impudent authoritie, the Pope in his Callender, or I in mine: or to make the comparison more fit, whether is more impudent the pope in his Callendar, or els maister Cope in his Dialogues more doltishe.

But briefly to make an end of this matter with you to canonise or to authorise any saintes, for man it is presump'tuous: to prescribe any thing here to be worshipped, beside God alone, it is idolatrous: to set vp any mediatours but Christ onely, it is blasphemous. And whatsoever the pope doth or hath done in his Calendar, my purpose in my Calendare, was neither to deface any old saint, or to solemnise any new. In my booke of Actes and Monuments entreating of matters passed in the church, these latter fiue hundreth yeares, I did regulate out a Callendar, not for any Canon to constitute Saintes, but onely for a table of them which within the same time did suffer for the testimony of the word, whom I did and doe take to be good and godly men. If any haue other iudgement of them, I binde no man to my opinion, as the pope doth to his. The day will come which shall iudge both them and you. In the meane season it shall be best for you (M. Cope) in my iudgement to keepe a good thing in your head, and to quiet your rayling mode.* A hard thinge it is to iudge before the Lord. Mans iudgement may faile and is vncertayne, the iudgement of God is alwayes sure. Best is therefore either to be sure by the word and iudgement of God before, what you do say, or els to say the best. Of such slaunderous, and intemperate rayling,* can come no good, neither to whome ye rayle vpon: nor to your selfe, whiche rayleth:

nor to the church of God that heareth you rayle. For them you can not hurt, they are gone. To your selfe, and though your matters be true, yet little honesty it will bring, to be counted a rayler, and if it be vncertayne, your state is daungerous, and if be false, most miserable: And as to the Church what great edification can proceede of suche contentions brawling and barking one against an other, I doe not greatly see. And if the zeale of the bishop of Romes church haue so much swallowed you vp, that ye cannot but stamp and stare at traytours when ye see them put in Calenders: (first M. Cope) be ye sure first that they be traytours, wisdom would, whome you call traytours. And if ye can so proue thē (as ye haue not yet) then let your Irenaeus or Critobulus tell me, why doth not this flagrant zeale of yours as hote as purgatory, burne out, and flame as wel against your owne traytors, hauing so many in your own Calendre and Church at home?

* And if there be such a Catholicke zeale in you, that hath set your gentle brest on such a pelting chase, why then is not this your Catholicke zeale equally indifferent? Why take ye on so fell on the one side agaynst sir Iohn Oldcastle, sir Roger Acton, M. Browne &c? A man wold think you played Hercules furens in Orchestra. On the other syde agayne ye are Oleo tranquillior. What indiffirencie (maister Cope) call you this? Or what zeale make you this to be? Albeit your zeale, I iudge not, as I know it not. Swifte iudgement shall not become me, which go about to correct the same in you. But this I exhorte you, to beware (maister Cope) that by your owne fruites and doinges euident ye do not bewray this zeale in you to be Non secundum scientiam, nor such a zeale as fighteth Pro Domo Dei, sed pro demo Pontificis. As I sayde I iudge you not. You haue your iudge to whome ye stand or fall. My counsaile is, that ye do not so zeale the Byshop of Rome, that for his sake ye lose your owne soule. Ye remember the olde vulgar voice it is not good Ludere cum sanctis, worse it is Illudere: worse of all it is Debauchari in immerentes: Because that Deus ipse vltionum Dominus Many times taketh theyr cause in hand according as it is written: Opprobria opprobantium tibi cecidersit in me. i. The rebukes of thy rebukers fell vpon me. And seldome haue I seene any suche blasphemous raylers agaynst the ende or punishment of Gods saintes and seruantes, without great repentaunce, to come to anye good •nd themselues.

And admit this (as graunted vnto you M. Cope) that these mē had bene traitors, which ye are not able to proue. Well, they had their punishment therefore, the worlde can go no further: & what would you haue more? Who and if they repented, why may they not haue as good part in Christes kingdome as your selfe? Now forsomuch as the sayd persons also suffering a double punishment were so constant in the way of trueth, and most principally for the same were persecuted, and chiefly therfore brought to them death: that part of example, because I sawe, it pertayne to the profite of the church, why might I not insert it with other church storyes in my booke? Let the churche take that which belongeth to the churche. Let the worlde take that, which to the world pertaineth and go no further. And if ye thinke it much, that I would exemplifie these whome you call traytors in the booke of martyrs is: first ye •hust vnderstand,* that I wrote no suche booke bearing the title of the booke of Martyrs, I wrote a booke called the Actes and Monumentes, of thinges passed in the church. &c. Wherin many other matters be containd beside the martyrs of Christ. But this peradventure moueth your 〈◇〉, that in the Callendar I name them for martyrs.* And why may I not in my Calēdar cal them by the name of martyrs, which were faythfull witnesses of Christes truth and Testament for the which they were also chiefly brought vnto that cud? Or why may I not call them holy shyntes, whome Christ hath sanctified with hys blessed bloud? And what if I shold also call the theefe and murderer hanging on the right side of the Lord, by the name of an holy saint, and confessor, for his witnessing of the Lord, what can master Cope say against it?

And as for colouring the names of certain Martirs in the sayd Calendre in red or scarlet letters (although that pertaineth nothing to me,* which was as pleased the Painter or Printer) yet if that be it that so much breaketh patience,* why rather doth he not expostulate in his behalfe with the great saynt maker of rome, who hath readed them much more then euer did I. For he did red and dyed them with their owne bloude, where as I did but onely colour them with redde letters. And thus for matter of my Calendar enough.

Proceeding now out of the Calendar vnto the booke, where hee chargeth me with so many lyes, impudencies, vanities, deprauations, and vntruthes, it remaineth likewise I cleare my self, answering first to those lyes and vntruthes, which to the story of sir Roger Acton, & sir Iohn Oldcastle do appertain.* And after to other particulars, as in order of my booke doe follow. And first where he layeth against me whole heapes, and cartloads, I cannot tel how many of lyes and falsities: I here briefly answer maister Cope agayne (or what English Harpesseld els soeuer lieth couered vnder this English Cope) that if a lye be (after the definition of S. Augustine) whatsoever thing is pronounced with the intent to deceaue an other: then I protest to you master Cope, and to all the world there is neuer a lie in all my booke. What the intent and custome is of the papistes to doe. I cannot tell: for mine owne, I will say, although many other vices I haue, yet frō this one I haue alwayes of nature abhorred, wittingly to deceaue any mā or childe, so neare as I could, much lesse the church of God whom I with all my hart do reuerence, and with feare obey. And therefore among diuers causes, that haue wythdrawne my minde from the Papistes faction, almost there is none greater then this, because I see them so little geuē to truth, so farre from all serious feeling and care of sincere religion, so full of false pretended hipocrisie and dissimulation, so litle regarding the church of Christ in their inward hartes, which they so much haue in their mouthes: so, as vnder the title thereof they may hold vp their own estate▪ Otherwise so little reuerence they yeld to the true & honorable church of Iesus the sonne of God, that with vnworthy and rascall ministers they take into it they passe not, what fictions, what lyes and fables, what false miracles and absurde forgeries they inuent to delude it, they care not. I speake not of all.

Some there be of that sect vnfayned in cōsciēces, and more religious, and better disposed natures, onely of simple ignoraunce deceaued. But such commonly haue bene & be the chiefe guides and leaders of the Papistes Church, that little true care and small zeale hath appeared in them, Page 584 toward the church of Christ, not much regarding what corruption encreased therein, so that there commodities might not decrease. Thus out of this fountayne haue gushed out so many prodigious lyes in Church Legendes, in Saintes liues,* in monkishe •ictions, in fabulous miracles, in false and forged Reliques, as in peeces of the holie crosse, in the blood of hailes, in our Ladies milke in y^e nails of Christ, which they make to a great number. Likewise in their false and blind errors, corrupt doctrines, absurd inuentions repugnant to y^e truth of the worde. Item in their bastard bookes, forged Epistles, their Apocripha, and Pseudopigrapha. Here commeth in their forged Canons, their foysting and cogging in ancient counsels & decrees, as in 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 in Canons of the Apostles (if those Canons were the Apostles) Excepta Romana •ede, foysted into the decrees by Gratianus, also the cogging in a false Canon to the councell of Nice for the mayntenaunce of the see of Rome, as appeareth in the 6. Synode of Carthage.

* Here commeth in also the Epistles of Clement, and other sondry epistles Decretall, which as they are no doubt falsly inserted b^o other, so are they the welhead of many superstitious traditions, oppressing this day the church of Christ.* To speake moreouer of the liturgies of S. Iames, of Chrisostome and other, of the first masse sayde by saint Peter at Rome, and that S. Peter •ate 25. yeares Byshop of Rome. To speake also of the works of Augustine, Ambrose,ierome, and Gregorye, what doctour or famous writer hath there bene in the church, vnder whose name some counterfayted bookes haue not falsely bene fathered, and yet stand still authorised vnder their patronage, to the great detriment of the church? What shoulde I speake of Abdias, Amphilochius, Dionysius Areopagita. The Dialoges of Gregory, which falsely to this day haue ben ascribed to Gregory the first, where in deede they were first written in Greeke, by Gregory the 3. and afterward translated out of Greeke into Latine,* by pope Zachary. vide supra. pag. 130. Likewise that worthy and Imperiall sermon i^o•tu^oed Eu^osebij pamphili Sermo ad Conuentum Sanctorum, hath to thys day wrongfully borne the name of Eusebius. Where as in very truth it was made by the good Emperour Constantinus himselfe in his owne heroicall stile in latine, and afterward translated out of Latine into Greeke by Eusebius, as he himselfe confesseth in hys worke De vita Constant. lib. 4. But as touching this sermon although the name be chaunged, so godly and fruitful it is, that it •attereth not much, vnder whose name it be read, yet worthy to be read vnder y^e name of none so much, as of the Emperour Cōstan^tine himselfe, who was the true author and owner therof.

* Briefly except it be the bookes onely of the new Testament, and of the olde, what is almost in the popes church, but either it is mingled or depraued, or altered, or corrupted,* either by some additions interlased, or by some diminutiō mangled and gelded, or by some glose adulterate, or with manifest lies contaminate. So that in theyr doctrine standeth little truth, in theyr Legendes, Portues, & massebookes lesse trueth, in their miracles and Reliques least truth of all.* Neyther yet doe theyr sacramentes remayne cleare and voyd of manifest lyes and corruption. And specially here commeth in the mayster bee, whiche bringeth in much sweet hony into Popes hiues, y^e maister lye, I mean of all lyes, where the P. leauing not one cromme of bread nor drop of wine in the reuerent communion, vntruly and idolatrously taketh away all substaunce of bread from it, turning the whole substaunce of bread into the substaunce of Christes owne body:* which substaunce of bread, if the Pope take from the sacrament, then muste he also take the breaking from it: for breaking and the body of Christ, can in no wise stand litterally together by the scripture. Thus then as this is proued by the word of God to be a manifest lye: so thinke not much (good Reader hereat, as though I passed the bondes of modestie in calling it the Archlye or maister lie of all lies. Because vppon this one, an infinite number of other lyes and erroures in the popes church, as handmaydes doe wayte and depend.

But forsomuch as I stand here not to charge other mē so muche, as to defende my selfe, ceasing therefore, or rather differing for a time to stir this stinking pudle of these wilfull and intended lyes and vntruthes whiche in the Popes Religion and in papistes bookes be innumerable I will now returne to those vntruthes and impudent lies which M. Cope hath hunted out in my history of Actes & Monuments, first beginning with those vntruthes which he carpeth in the storrye of the foresayde syr Iohn Oldcastle, and syr Roger Acton, Browne and the rest.

And first, where he layeth to my charge, that I cal them Martyrs, whiche were traytors and seditious rebels agaynst the king, and theyr Country: to this I haue aunswered before sufficiently.

Now here then must the reader needes stay a little at M. Copes request, to see my vanitie and impudencie yet more fully and amply repressed in refuting a certain place in my Latine story, concerning the kinges statute made at Leiceister, whiche place and wordes by him alledged, be these, pag. 1•7. Quocirca Rex indicto Lecestriae concilio (quòd fort•ssis Londini ob Cabhami fautores non erat tutum) proposito edicto immanem denunciat poenam his, quicun{que} deinceps hoc doctrinae genus sectarentur, vs{que} •deo in eos seuerus, vt non modo haereticos, sed perduelliones etiam haberi, a• p•o inde gemino eos supplicio, suspendio simul & incēdio afficiendos statueri•. &c. E• mox▪ Adeo ille vires, rationesque intendebat omnes aduersus Wicklenianos. Wicleuiani ad temporis decebantur, quicun{que} Scripturas Dei sua lingua lectirarent &.

Vpon these wordes out of my foresayd Latine booke alledged, maister Cope perswadeth himselfe, to haue great aduauntage agaynst me, to proue me a notorious lyer, in three sondry pointes.* First, in that, whereas I say, that the king did hold his parliament at Leicester, adding thys by the way of Parenthesis (quod fortassis Londini ob Cobhami fautores non erat tutum &c.) here he concludeth thereby simpliciter and precisely, that the Lord Cobham and syr Roger Acton with his fellowes, were traytors &c. Whereby a man may soone shape a cauiller,* by the shadowe of mayster Cope. For where as my Dialysis out of y^e texte speaketh doubtfully and vncertainely by this word (fortassis) meaning in deede, the king to be in feare of the Gospellers, that he durst not hold his Parliament at London, but went to Leiceister:* he argueth precisely therfore, that the Lord Cobham, sir Roger Acton, and his fellowes went about to kil the king. Secondly, where I affirme that the king in that Parliament made a grieuous law agaynst al such did hold the doctrine of Wickliffe, that they should be taken hereafter: not for heretiques, but also for fellons, or rebels, or traytors, and therefore should sustayne a double punishment, both to be hanged, and also to be burned &c. Here cōmeth in maister Momus, with his Cope on his backe, and prouing me to be a lyer, denyeth playnly y^t the king made any suche statute.*vid. pag. 835. line 6. where hys wordes be these: Atqui quod haeretici pro perduellionibus & deinceps geminatas poenas suspēdij & incendij luerent, vt nugarur Foxus, nullo modo illic traditur. &c.

First here woulde bee asked of maister Cope,* what hee calleth patriae hostes, et proditores? if he call these traytours, then let vs see whether they that followed the sect of wycliffe, were made traytours & heretiques by the kings law, or not. And first let vs heare what sayth Polydore Virgil, his owne witnes in this behalfe, whose words in his xxii. booke, pag. 441. be these: Quare publice edixit, vt si vspiam deinceps reperirentur, qui eam sequerentur sectam, patriae hostes haberentur, quò sine omni lenitate seuerius ac ocyus de illis supplicium sumeretur &c. That is, wherefore it was by publique statute decreed, that whosoeuer were founde hereafter to follow the sect of Wyckliffe, should be accounted for traytors, whereby without all lenitie, they shoulde be punished more seuerely and quickly. &c.

Thus haue you (maister Cope) the playne testimonie of Polydore with mee. And because ye shall further see your selfe more impudent in carping, then I am in deprauing of histories, you shall vnderstand moreouer and heare, what Thomas Walden, one of your owne catholique brotherhode, & who was also himselfe aliue, & a doer in the same Parliament, being the prouincial of the Carmelites, saith in this matter writing to Pope Martin, whose very wordes in Latine here follow,* written in his Prologue to the sayd Martine, in this wise: Nec mora longa processit, quin statutum publicum per omne regni concilium in publico emanauit edicto, quod omnes Wicleuistae sicut dei proditores essent, sic proditores regis, proscriptis bonis censerentur et regni, duplici poenae dandi, incendio propter deum, suspendio propter regem &c. That is. And it was not long after, but a publicke law and statute came out, by the common assent of the general parliamēt of the whole Realme, that al Wiclenistes, as they were traytours to God, so also should be counted traytors to the king and to the realme, hauing their goods lost and confiscate vnto the king. And therefore should suffer double punishment, as to be burnt for God, and to bee hanged for y^e king &c. And thus haue you (Maister Cope) not onely my sentence, but also the very wordes of my story confirmed by this author: because ye shall not think me to speake so lightly or impudently without my booke. And moreouer to confirme the said sentence of Tho. Walden, it followeth also in an other place of the foresayde author. Tomo. 1. lib. 2.De doctrinali fidei Ecclesie Cathol. Cap. 46. where he writeth in these wordes. Et tamen iam cum regnare coepisset Illustris rex Henricus 5. qui adhuc agit in sceptris, et de eorū Page 585 perfidia per catholicos bin doctos, legem statui fecit vt vbi{que} per regnum Wickliuista probatus, vt reus puniretur de crimine lesae maiestatis &c. That is. And yet, when the noble king Henry the v. who as yet doth liue and raigne, began first to raigne, began to set forth a law, by his learned catholickes which were about him, against the falsenes of these men, so that whosoever was proued to be a Wickleuist, through the whole Realme, should be punished for a traytour. &c. What wordes can you haue M. Cope, more playne then these? or what authoritie can you require of more credite, which liued in the same tyme, and both did see and heare of the same thinges done? who also writing to Pope Martine, was by the sayd pope Martine allowed, approued, & solemnly commended, as appeareth by the popes Epistle to him, wherein y^e pope declareth: how he caused his books, Per solennes viros videri,& examinari. That is, by sollemne persons to be seene and examined &c. So that you must needes graunt, either this to be true, that Walden writeth or els that the Pope (tanquam Papa) in allowing his writings may erre and be deceaued. Chuse ye (mayster Cope) of these two options whether you will take.

And if ye thinke this my assertion yet not sufficiently rescued with these authorities aboue sayd, I will also here vnto adioyne the testimony of an other writer named Roger Walle,* who writing De Gestis Henric 5. and speaking of the sayd statute of this parliament some thing more plainly then the rest, hath these wordes, In hoc etiam Parlamento nobilitas regia hostes Christi sibi reputans proditores, volens dare intelligere vniuersis, quòd ipse abs{que} cuiuscun{que} fluctuationis dubio, {quam} diu auras hauriret vitales, verus & perfectus Christianae fidei aemulator existeret: statuit & decreuit, vt quotquot Ipsius sectae, quae dicitur Lollordorum, inuenirentur aemuli & fautores eo facto rei proditorij criminis in maiestatem regiam haberétur &c. In English. Also in this parliament, the noble K. reputed Christes enemies, to be traytors to himselfe, to y^e intent that all men should know withall doubt, that so lōg as he liued, he woulde be a true and perfect follower of Christen faith: did enact & decree, that whosoever shoulde be found followers and mayntayners of this sect, whiche is called the Lollards sect, Ipso facto, should be counted and reputed giltie of treason against the kings maistie. &c.

By these hetherto alledged if M. Cope, will not be satisfied, yet let the reader indifferent iudge: V•rum in hac re magis nugatur Foxus, an Copus calumniatur. And yet moreouer to make the matter more certayne, marke the clamation of the sayd Roger Walle, added to y^e end of those words aboue recited, whereby we haue to vnderstand more clearly, both what were the proceedings of the king in the said Parliament & also what was the blinde affection of mōks and Priestes at that time towarde their kinge and Prince (which was then called princeps sacerdotum) in condemning and destroying the poore Lollardes.* The wordes of the monke be these, O verus amicus, qui amico illa tam iniuriam sibi inferri cōsimiliter arbitratur,*praeiudicium illi intentū reputat esse suum, & ad eius onera conferenda, auxiliationis humeros supponere non veretur. &c. That is: O true frend, who taketh and reckoneth that iniury no lesse done to him selfe which is done to his frend: and that preiudice whiche is intended against him, reputeth to bee as his owne. And to beare together the burdens of his friend, sticketh not to lay to his owne shoulders, for the easing and helping of him &c.

How can it now be denied (M. Cope) in reading these authors, and seeing theyr testimonies, but that Lollardery in this Parliament was made both treason. and heresie, & had therfore a double iudgement of punishment annexed, to be hanged for for the one, and to be burned for the other according as in my former Latin story I recorded, and yet I trust, I trifled not?

* But you will say agayne (as ye doe) that there is no mention made for heresie to be made treason, nor of anye double punishment to be inflicted for the same: In the body of the statute (I graunt) there is no expresse mention in wordes of heresie to be made treason,* expresly signified in rigour of wordes: but inclusiuely it is so inferred, that it can not be denied. For first where landes, goodes and cattell of the sayd Lollardes were lost and forfeit to the kyng,* what doth this importe els, but treason or felonie?

And where the Lorde Cobham (for whose cause specially this statute seemed to be made) did sustaine afterward both hanging and burning by the vigor of the same statute what is here contained: but a double penalty? Again wher'in the beginning of the statute mention is made of rumors and congregations, and after vpon the same followeth the seruices of the king, whereunto the officers be first worne should first be preferred for libertie of holy Church, & punishment of hereticks, made before these dayes and not repealed, vt supra,* pag. 000. what meaneth this, but to make these congregations of the Lollardes, to be forcible entres riotes, great ridings, vnlawful assembles, affrayres of the people, armour, routes, & insurrections, & so sendeth them to the former statutes not repealed, that is, to the statute. an. 13. Henr. 4. chap. 7? Where the punishment is left to the discretion of the king? or els to the statute. an. 15. Richard chap. 2. Where the penalty is made fine and raunsome: Or els to the statute. an. 5. Richar. 2. chap. 6. where suche assembles be made playne treason, in fine statuti.

And as here is matter of treason sufficiently contained so for heresie likewise the same statute referreth them to y^e ordinaries,* and to the lawes, properly to heresie appertayning, and to the statute. an. 2. Henr. 4. chap. 15. where the penaltie is burning. Also to the statute. an. 5. Richard 2. chap.

5. So that in this present statute here mention is conteined, as ye see although not in expresse words, yet inclusiuely (by referring to other statutes not repealed) bothe Lollardery which is punished with burning, and forcible entrees which is punished at the kinges pleasure. And thus much concerning the secōd vntruth, which M. Cope vntruely noted in me.

3. The third vntruth which he noteth in me concerning this matter,* is this, wherein he reporteth mee, that I say, there was no other cause of deuising this sharp law & punishment against these mē,* but onely for hauing the scripture bookes. And therefore here is noted in the margent Foxi dolus malus, but let M. Cope take heede, hee deceiue not himself and other. For my part I remember no such place in this my Latine story where I so say. Onely my wordes be these, added in the latter ende of the place aboue recited: Wicleuiani verò dicebantur quicun{que} id temporis Scripturas Dei sua lingua lectitarent. &c. That is. They were called Wicleuistes, whosoeuer at that time read the Scripture in english or vulgare tongue. &c. I say not, that for the scriptures being read in y^e english tongue, therefore the law was enacted, but so is M. Cope disposed to construe it. What law & statuts were made against writing or reading of any booke in English or in any other tonge cōtrary to y^e Catholick (that is y^e Romish) sayth,* or to the determinatiō of the holy Church (that is of Rome) read I beseech thee the bloudy statute made. an. 2. Hen. 4. chap. 15. aboue specified pag. 523, Also read the constitution prouinciall of Thomas Arundell aboue mentioned, pag. 524. lin. 9. Where it was decreed, that the text of holy scripture should not be had or read in the vulgare tongue frō the time of M. Iohn Wickliffe, for euer after, vnlesse the sayd translation be approued first by the ordinary or by prouinciall councell, vnder pain and punishment of heresy. Now let the reader iudge whether y^e reading of scripture bookes in the english tongue, by the making or translating of Wickliffe, or from the tyme of Wicliffe downward, be couēted heresy or not. As for the approuing of the ordinary or of the prouincial councell added in the end of the sayd constitution, maketh more for a shew or pretence, then for any iust exception, or any true intention. For what man hauing those Scriptures translated in English, would either present them to their ordinaries being so set against the reading of such bookes? or what ordinarie would or did euer yet since Arundels tyme approoue any such translation, presented vnto them? Or els why did the good Martyrs of Amersam suffer death, in the begynning of kyng Henry the viii. for hauing and reading certaine bookes of Scripture, which were (as is saide) onely foure Epistles of S. Paule, with certaine other prayers.* And the other which heard them but onely reade, did beare fagottes, and the same tyme, the children compelled to set fagots vnto their fathers, at which time Longlande being then Byshop of Lincolne, & preaching to them at y^e stake, sayde: that whatsoeuer they were, that did but moue hys lippes in reading those chapters, were damned foreuer: as when we come to that tyme,* by the grace of Christ, shall hereafter more amply and notoriously appear. And where thē is this Dolus malus Foxi, margined against me, for craftie dealing in my story?

Moreouer where M. Cope proceeding farther in this matter, asketh me: how was the Lorde Cobham obedient to the king,* whē as for the feare of him, the king durst not then keepe his parliament at London? To whom I aunswere agayne, asking likewise of M. Cope, howe was the king then afrayd to hold his parliament at London for the Lord Cobham, when the Lord Cobham at that time was in Wales: And here M. Cope, thinking to haue me at a narrow straight, and to holde me fast, biddeth me tell him, howe it coude be otherwise, but the Lorde Cobham must needes haue fautours. And who should these fautours be (sayth he) but syr Roger Acton, Browne & their fellowes. Page 586 The which mighty question of M. Cope, I answer agayn howe can sir Roger Acton, Browne and their fellowes be then fautors of the Lord Cobham, for whome the King durst not hold his parliament at Londō, when as the sayd Roger Acton, Browne, and the rest were put to death, a whole yeare almost before the Parliament at Leycester began?

And now as I haue hitherto briefly, and truely aunswered your askinges (M. Cope) let me be so bolde w^t you agayne, to propounde to you likewise an other question, For so much as you haue put me to the searching of y^e statutes in this matter, wherewith before I was not much acquainted: now out of the same statutes riseth a doubtfull scruple or questiō, worthy to be solued. The cause is this, y^t for asmuch as so many good martyrs and Saints of God hetherto in this realme of England, haue bene burned frō the time of king Henry 4. Hen. 5. Hen. 6. Hen. 8. to y^e time and in the time of Queene Mary, my question is that you w^t all your learned councell about you wil tel me, by what law or statute of the realme were these men brent? I know the auncient custome hath bene, that heretickes conuicted by a prouinciall councell were wont to be left to the secular power. But how wil ye proue me, these hereticks were either conuict by such prouinciall councell, or that these secular men ought to be your butchers in burning them, whō ye haue committed to them? If ye alledge the vi. Articles made in the reigne of king Henry the 8.* those articles neither did serue before the time of king Hēry the viii. neither yet were they reuiued after his time. If ye alledge to y^r statute made. an. 5. Richar. 2. cap. 5. In that statute (I aunswere) is contained no matter of burning, but onely of arrest to be done at the certificatiōs of the prelates, w^tout any further punishmēt there mentioned. To conclude, if ye alledge the statute made. an. 2. Henr. 4. chap. 15. and reuiued in the reigne of Queene Mary, mentioned before pag. 523 To that statute I answere, that although y^t pretended statute appeareth in forme of wordes in the Printed book to geue vnto the temporall officers authoritie to bring them to the stake, and to burne them, whom the Bishop deliuereth: Yet is it not to be proued, either by you, or any other, that statute to be law or warrant sufficient to burne anye person or persons committed to the secular power by the Clergy. And that I proue thus, for although the same statute of king Henry the fourth in the bookes printed, appeare to ba•e law and authority sufficient, by the ful assent both of the king, of the Lordes, and of the cōmons: yet being occasioned by M. Cope to search further in y^e statutes, I haue found that in the Rolles and first originals of that Parliament, there is no such mention either of any petitiō or els of any assent of the commons annexed or contained in that statute, according as in the printed bookes vsual in the Lawyers handes to craftely and falsely foysted in, as by the playne wordes thereof may well appeare.

For where the said statute. an. 2. Henry. 4. chap. 15. beyng thus intituled in the Rolles: Petitio cleri contra haereticos, and assented vnto in this forme: hath these wordes.

Statut. an. 2. Henri. 4. cap. 15. Intituled in the Rolle thus: Petitio Cleri contra heteticos, and assented vnto in this forme.

QVas quidem petitiones praelatorum & cleri superius expressatas do. noster Rex, de consensu magnatum & aliorum procerum regni sui, in praesenti Parlamento existentium concessit, & in omnibus & singulis iuxta formam & effectum eorundē ordinauit & statuit de caerero firmiter obseruari

, and so forth according to the petition: and moe wordes, are there not in y^e statute Rolle. Wherefore wher as the statute booke printed hath thus:

Super quibus quidem nouitatibus & excessibus supereus recitatis (videlicet in the petition of the Prelates & clergy) praelati & clerus supradicti ac etiam communitates dicti Regⁱ ni in eodem Parlamento existen.

dicto Domino Regi supplicarunt. &c. Qui quidem Dominus Rex. &c. ex assensu magnatum & aliorum procerum eiusdem Regni &c. concessit ordinavit. &c.

These wordes

Ac etiam communitates dicti Regni. &c.

are put in further then the Rolle doth warrant, and seemeth to be the practise of the clergie, to make that as an Acte of Parliament, and to seeme to haue the force of a law, which was neuer assented vnto by the commons.

* And thus you see howe this foresayd statute, Printed both in English and in Latine among y^e Prouincial counsels of Oxford (by the vertue whereof so many good men haue bene burned so long in England) doth vtterly ouerthrow it selfe, for that it swerueth from the recorde bothe in forme and in matter, and lacketh the assent of the commons Which doubt I thought at this present to propound vnto you (mayster Cope) for that you haue so vrged me to the searching out of the statutes, by your declayming agaynst the Lord Cobham.

Moreouer vnto this statute aforesayd, ioyned also with all an other Memorandum of like practise done. an. 5. Rich. 2. In the which yeare,* where as a statute was concluded y^r parliament. an. 5. Rich. 2. chap. 5. agaynst certayne preachers specified in y^e same statute, which going about in certayne habites from place to place, did drawe the people to sermons. And commissions were made and directed in the sayd parliament to the shrines, to arrest all such preachers and to imprison the same, at the certifications of the Prelates. Here is then to be noted, that the same statute an. 5. Rich. 2. cap. 5. was reuoked by the king in the parliament. an. 6. Rich. 2 vpon the wordes of the commons being these videl. Forasmuch as the same statute was neuer assented, ne graunted by the commons, but that which therein was done, was done without their assent, and now ought to be vndone, for that it was neuer their meaning to be iustified and to bind themselues and their successors to the prelates no more,* then their auncetours had done before them. Ex Rotul. And yet thys foresayd reuocation notwithstanding in Queene Maryes tyme, they inquired vppon that statute.

In searching of these statutes,* as you haue accasioned me to find out these scruples: so being foūd out, I thought here not to dissemble them, for so muche as I see and heare many now a dayes so boldly to beare themselues vpō this statute, and thinking so to excuse themselues do say, y^t they haue done nothing but the law the law: to the intent that these men seeing now how inexcusable they be both before God and man hauing no law to beare them out, may y^e soner repent their bloudy and vnlawfull tyranny, exercised so long agaynst Gods true seruauntes, yet in time before that the iust law of God shall finde out their vniust dealinges, which partly he beginneth already to do, and more no doubt will doe hereafter.

In the meane tyme this my petition I put vp to the Commous,* and to all other which shall hereafter put vp aⁿy petition to the Parliamēt: that they being admonished by this abuse, wil shew thēselues heare after more wise & circumspect: both what they agree vnto in Parliamētes, & also what commeth out in their name. And as these good Commons in this time of king Henry 4. would not consent nor agree to this bloudy statute, nor to anye other like For so we read that the Commons in that bloody time of king Henry 4. when an other like cruell byll was put vp by the Prelates in an. 8. Hen. 4. against the Lollards, they neither consented to this, and also ouerthrow the other: so in like maner it is to be wished, that the commons in this our time, or such other that shall haue to do in parliaments hereafter following the steppes of these former times, will take vigilant heede to such cruell billes of the Popes prelacy, being put vp, that neither their consent do passe rashly: nor that their names in any condition be so abused, Cōsidering with themselues that a thing once being passed in the parliament, cannot afterward be called back: And a litle inconuenience once admitted, may grow afterward to mischiefes that cannot be stopped. And sometime it may so happen that through rashe consent of voices, the ende of thinges being not well aduised, such a thing being graunted in one day, that afterward many dayes may cause the whole realme to rue. But I trust men are bitten enough with suche blacke parlamentes to beware of afterclaps. The Lord Iesus onely protector of his church, stop al crafty deuises of subtile enemies, and with his wisdom direct our Parliamentes, as may be most to the aduauntage of his word, and comfort of hys people. Amen. Amen.

And thus much hauing sayd for the defence of the Lord Cobbā, of syr Roger Acton knight, maister Iohn Browne Esquier, Iohn Beuerly preacher, and of other their fellowes agaynst Alanus Copus Anglus, here I make an ende with this presēt Interim, till furthur leysure serue me here after (Christ willing) to pay him the whole Interest which I owe vnto him. Adding this in the meane time, and by the way: that if mayster Cope had bene a Momus anye thing reasonable, he had no great cause so to wrangle with me in this matter, who as I did commend the Lord Cobham & that worthyly, for hys valiaūt standing by y^e truth, of his doctrine before Thomas Arundell the Archbishop so touching the matter of this conspiracie, I did not affirm or define any thing therof in my former historie so precisely that he could well take any vantage of agaynst me,* who in writing of this conspiracy layd agaynst syr Roger Acton, And syr Iohn Oldcastle, do but disiūctiue or doubtfully speake thereof, not concluding certainly this conspiracie eyther to be true or not true, but only prouing y^e same Page 587 not to be true at that time, as Polydore Virgill. and Edward▪ Hall in their histories doe affirme: which say that this conspiracie began after the burning of Iohn Husse and Hierome of Prage. Which could not be. And thereto tendeth my assertion.* My wordes are playne, and are these. pag. 174. col. 2. line. 13. Wherefore it is euident that there was eyther no conspiracie at all agaynst the king: or els that it was at some other tyme, or done by other Captaynes. &c.

These be my wordes with other moe, pag. col. and line aboue noted. In the which proposition disiunctiue, if eyther part be true, it is enough for me. His part it was to refell both, which he hath not done. But onely standing fast vpon the one part, dissimuleth the other. And this is Alanus Copus Anglus, who by that he shall come frō Rome (whether he is nowe gone as I heare say) I trust he will returne a better Logician home agayne in suam Angliam.

But to the truth of our matter, as I sayde before, so I say agayne, whatsoever this worthy, noble and vertuous knight syr Roger Acton was otherwise,* this is certaine y^t he was alwaies of contrary minde, and opinion to the bishop of Rome, & to that kind of people, for the which cause he had great enuy and hatred at their hands: and could as litle beare it: neither do I greatly dissent from them, which do suspect or iudge that the Lord Cobham, by his friendly helpe escaped out of the Tower, and that peradventure was the cause why he was apprehended and brought to trouble, and in the end came to his death. Other causes also theyr might be, that these good men percase did frequent among themselves, some cōuenticles (which conuenticles was made treason by the statute aforesayd) either in those Thickets or in some place els: for the hearing of Gods word, and for publike prayer, and therefore had they thys Beuerly theyr preacher with them.

But to conclude whatsoeuer this sir Roger Acton was this is y^e truth, which I may boldly record, as one writing the Actes and thinges done in the Church, that he was at length apprehended, condemned and put to death or martirdome. 3. yeares and more before the Lord Cobham died Likewise M. Iohn Browne, and Iohn Beuerly the preacher, suffered with him the same kinde of death (as some say) in the field of S. Giles with other moe, to the number of 36. if the storyes be true. Whiche was in the month of Ianuary. an. 1413. after the computation of our English stories,* counting the yeare from the annunciation, but after the Latine writers counting from Christes natiuitie. an. 1414. according as this picture is specified.

These men as is said, suffered before the Lord Cobham about 3. yeares, of whose death diuers do write diuersly. Some say they were hanged and burnt in S. Gyles field, of whom is Fabian,* with such as follow him. Other there be which say that some of them were hanged & burnt. Polydorus speaking onely of their burning maketh no mētiō of hanging.* An other certain english Chronicle I haue in my handes borrowed of one M. Bowyer, who somewhat differing frō the rest, recordeth thus of sir Roger Acton, that hys iudgement before the iustice was thus, to be drawne through London to Tyborne, and there to be hanged, and so he was naked saue certayne partes of him couered with a clothe. &c. And when certayn dayes were past (sayth the author) a Trumpeter of the kinges called Thomas Cliffe gat graunt of the king to take hym downe, and to burye hym, and so he did &c. And thus haue you the storye of syr Roger Acton, and hys fellow brethren. As touching theyr cause whether it were true or els by error mistaken of the king, or by the fetch of the bishops surmised, I referre it to the iudgement of him which shal iudge both the quick and dead,* & seculum per ignem. To whō also I commit you M. Cope, God speed your iorny well to Rome, whether I heare say you are going, and make you a good man.

After the decease or martyrdom of these aboue mentioned,* who are executed in the month of Ianuary an. 1414. in the next month following, and in the same yere, y^e 20. day of February, God tooke away y^e great enemy of his word, and rebell to his king Thom. Arundell Archb. of Cant. Whose death following after the execution of these good men aboue recited, by the merueilous stroke of God so sodenly, may seeme somewhat to declare their innocēcy, and that he was also some great procurer of theyr death, in that God woulde not suffer him longer to liue, striking hym with death incontinently vppon the same. But as I dyd the other before, so this also I do refer, to the secret iudgement of the Lord, who once shal iudge all secrets openly.

In the mean time this may seeme strange, that the same Tho. Arundell, who a litle before sitting vpon iudgement

The picture of the burning and hanging of diuers persons counted for Lollardes, in the first yeare of the raigne of king Henry the fift.

Page 588 agaynst y^e Lord Cobham, and pronounced sentēce of death vpon him,* and did himselfe fele the stroke of death, & the sētece of God executed vpō him before the other. Who wold haue thought that the Lord Cobham being so cast and cōdemned diffinitiuely by the archbishops sentence, but y^t he should haue died long before the archbishop? But such be the works of gods almighty hand, who so turned y^r whele y^t this condēned Lord suruiued his condēner 3. or 4. yeres.

In the death of this Archb. first Polydor Virgil is deceiued, who in his 22. booke, pag. 441. affirmed hys death to be an. 1415. and in the second yeare of king Henr. 5. also after the beginning of the Councell of Constāce who in dede neuer reached the beginning therof, nor euer saw the secōd yeare of that king (vnles ye count the first day for a yeare) but dyed before, an. 1414. Feb. 20. Ex hist. S. Albani & multis. Furthermore concerning the death of this Arundell, and the maner therof, who had not bene so heauy a troubler of Christes saints in his time, because the thing semeth worthy of noting, to behold the punishment of God vpon hys enemies, this is to report, as I haue found it alledged out of Thomas Gascoin in Dictionario Theologico: Whose playne wordes be these: *Anno. 1414. Tho. Arundel Cant. Archiepiscop. sic lingua percussus erat: vt nec deglutire, nec loqui per aliquot dies ante mortem suam potuerit, diuitis epulonis exemplo: & sic tantum obiit. Atque multi tunc fieri putabant, quia verbum alligasset, ne suo tempore praedicaretur. &c.

That is, Thomas Arundel archbishop of Cant. was so strikē in his tongue that neither he could swallow, nor speake for a certayne space before hys death, much lyke after the example of the rich glotton,* and so dyed vpon the same. And thys was thought of many to come vpon him, for that he so bound the word of the Lord, that it should not be preached in hys dayes &c. whiche if it be true, as it doth well here appeare, these and such other horrible exāples of gods wrath, may be terrible spectacles for such as occupy theyr tongues and braynes so busily to stop y^e course of gods wrath, striuing but against y^e streame against the force whereof,* neither they are able to resiste, & many times in resisting are ouerturned thēselues & drowned therin. And thus much for the death of Tho. Arundel, who cōtinued archb. in y^r see of Cant. the space of 18. yeres.

* After this Arundel, succeeded next in the said see of Cāterb. Henry Chichelsly made archb. an. 1414. and sate xxv. yeares. This Henry following likewise the steps of hys predecessour, shewed himselfe no small aduersary against y^e fauourers of the truth. In whose time was much trouble and great afflictio in the church. For as the preaching and teaching of the word did multiply and spread abroad daily more and more, so on the contrary side, more vigilant care and straight inquisition followed and increased against the people of God, by reason wherof diuers did suffer, & were burned, some for feare fled y^e country. Many were brought to examinatio, and by infirmitie constrained to abiure. Of whome hereafter (Christ willing) particularly in order of theyr times we will entreat.

As true pietie, and sincere preaching of Christes worde began at this time to decay: So idle mōkery and vaine superstitio in place therof begā to encrease.* For about y^e same yere the king began the foundation of 2. monasteries, one of the one side of Thames of Friers obseruaunt, y^e other on the other side Thames called Shene and Syon, dedicated to Charter house monkes, with certaine Brigit nonnes or recluses, to the nūber of 60. dwelling within the same precinct, so that the whole number of these with priestes, mōkes, deacons and nonnes shoulde equall the number of 13. Apostles and 72. disciples. The order of these was according to the discription of S. Paule the Apostle, Col. 1. Eat not, tast not, touch not, &c. to eat no fleshe, to weare no linnen, to touch no mony. &c.

About Michaelmas, the same yeare the king began his Parliament at Leicester, aboue mentioned. In the whiche Parliament the commons put vp theyr bill agayn, which they had put vp before, an. 11. Henr. 4. the tēpporalties disorderly wasted by men of the church, might be conuerted & employed to the vse of the king, of his Earls and knights and to the reliefe of y^e poore people, as is before recited, pag. 557.* In feare of which bill least the king woulde geue therunto any comfortable audience (as testifieth Rob. Fabian and other writers) certayne of the Prelates & other headmen of the church put the king in mind to clayme his right in Fraunce.* Whereupon •en. Chichesly Archbish. of Caunterbury made a long and solemne oration before the king to perswade him to the same, offering to the king in the •ehalfe of the Clergie great and notable summes.* By reason wherof (sayth Fabian) the bill was agayne put of, and the king set his minde for the recouery of the same: so that soone after he sent his letters and messengers to the French king concerning that matter, and receiued from him againe answere of derision, w^t a pype of tennis balles (as some recorde) sent from the Dolphin, for him to playe with at home. Whereby the kinges minde was incensed y^r more toward that viage, who then furnishing hymselfe w^t strength and armour, with powder & shot, and gunstones to play with in Fraunce, and with other artillarye for that purpose conuenient, so set ouer into France, where he got Dareflew with diuers other townes and castles in Normandy and Picardy, and at Agyncourt had a great victory ouer the french army, they benig counted but 7. thousand. by pricking sharp stakes before them. &c. After that he wa• Cane, Towke, Kowan with other •ownes moe, as Meldune, or Melione, and maryed with Katherine the french kinges daughter. And yet notwithstanding the third time he made hys viage agayne into Fraunce, where at length at Bloys he fell sicke and dyed, Concerning all which viages, because they are sufficientlye discoursed in Fabian, •alle, and other Chronographers, referring therfore the reader vnto them, I will return my story to other matters of the Church more effectuall.

The entry of the story of the Bohemians.

I Declared a little before howe by the occasion of Queene Anne,* which was a Bohemian and married to king Richard 2. the Bohemians cōming therby to the knowledge of Wickliffes bookes here in England, began first to taste and sauor Christes gossell,* til at length by the preaching of Iohn Husse, they increased more and more in knowledge. In so much that pope Alexander the v. hearing thereof, began at last to styrre coales, and directeth his Bu• to y^r archbishop of Suinco, requiring hym to looke to the matter, & to prouide that no person in Churches, Schooles or other places should mayntayne that doctrine, citing also I. Hus to appeare before him.* To whom the sayd Iohn aunswering againe, declared that mandate or Bull of the pope vtterly to repugne agaynst the manifest examples & doinges both of Christ and of hys Apostles, and to be preiudiciall to the liberty of the Gossell, in binding y^e word of God not to haue free recourse. And therefore from this mandate of the P. he appealed to the same Pope better aduised. But while he was prosecuting hys appeale, Pope Alexander died, as is aforesayd, pag. •53. Ex Cochleo, in hist. Hussit.

After whome succeeded Pope Iohn the xxiii. who also playing hys part here in this matter like a Pope, sought by all meanes possible how to repress and keep vnder the Bohemians, first beginning to worke his malice vpō the foresayd Iohn Husse theyr preacher. Who at the same tyme preaching at Prage in the temple of Bethleem, because he seemed rather willing to teach the Gospell of Christ, then the traditions of Bishops, was therefore accused of certayn to the forenamed P. Iohn the 23. for an heretick. The Bishop committed the whole matter vnto Cardinall de Collumna,* who when he had heard the accusation, he appoynted a day to Iohn Husse, that he shold appeare in the court of Rome: whiche thing once done, Wenceslaus king of the Romaines & of Boheme, at the request specially of his wife Sophia, and of the whole nobility of Boheme, as also at the earnest sute and desire of the towne and vniuersitie of Prage: He sent his Embassadours to Rome, to desire the byshop to quit & clearely deliuer Iohn Husse from that sentence and iudgement, and that if the byshop did suspect the kingdome of Boheme to be infected with anye heretical or false doctrine, that he shold send his ambassadors the which might correct and amēd the same, if there be any error or fault in them. And that all this should be done at the onely costes and charges of the king of Boheme, and to promise in his name that he would ayde and assiste the Bishops Legates with all hys power and authoritie, to punishe all such as shoulde be taken or found in any erroneous doctrine. In the meane season also Iohn Husse before his day appointed, sent his lawfull and meete procurators vnto the court of Rome, and with most firme and stronge reasons, dyd proue hys innocency, whereupon he trusted so, that he thought he shoulde haue easely obtayned that he should not haue bene compelled, by reason of the great dāger, to appeare the day appoynted. But when as the Cardinall de Collumna, (vnto whose will and iudgement the whole matter was committed) would not admit no defēce or excuse:* Iohn Husse his procurators, appealed vnto the high Bishop: yet notwithstanding, this last refuge did not so much preuaile with Cardinall de Collumna, but that he would opely excommunicate Iohn Husse as an obstinate hereticke, because he came not at hys day appoynted vnto Rome.

Nothwithstanding for so much as his procurators had Page 589 appealed vnto the high bishop, they had other iudges appointed vnto them, as cardinal Aquileianus and cardinal •enetus with certayne others. The which iudges after they had prolonged and differred the matter by the space of one yere and a halfe, at the last they returned to the sentēce and iudgement of cardinall de Columna, and confirming y^e same, commaunded Iohn Hus his Procurators that they should leaue of to defend him any more, for they would suffer it no longer. Wherupon when his Procurators would not cease theyr instant sute, certayne of them were cast into prisō, and greuously punished, the other leauing theyr busines vndone, returned into Boheme.

* The Bohemians notwithstandinge little cared for all this, but continuing stil as they grew more in knowledge, so the lesse they regarded the Pope, complayning dayly agaynst him and the Archb. for stopping the word of God, and the gospel of Christ to be preached, saying that by their indulgences and other practises of the court of Rome, and of the bishops Consistory, they sought their owne profit, & not of Iesus Christ: that they pluckt from the sheepe of Christ the wool and milke, and did not feed them, neyther with the word of God nor with good examples. Teaching moreouer and affirming, that the commaūdements of the Pope and Prelates are not to be obeyed, but so far as they follow the doctrine and life of Christ and of his Apostles, and that lay men ought to iudge the workes of the prelates as Paule iudged the workes of Peter in correcting him. Gal. 2. Furthermore, they had amongst thē certayne notes and obseruations, whereby they might discerne how far & wherein they might obey theyr prelates: they derided also & scorned the Popes iurisdiction, because of the schisme that was then in the church, whē there were 3. popes together one striuing agaynst another for the papacy.

* Ouer and besides this, at the same time Iohn Hus did propoūd publickly, and by the Notaries caused to be written. 3. doubtfull questions, the tenor wherof foloweth here word for word & is this: Forasmuch sayth he as it is good for men being in doubt to aske counsell, whereby all dubitatiō remoued, they may be able the more firmly to adhere the truth. 3. doubtes here arise to be solued. The first doubt is whither we ought to beleue in the Pope. The second, whither it be possible for any man to be saued, which confesseth not with his mouth vnto a mortal priest. The third doute is, whither any of the doctors doe holde or say that some of Pharaos host being drowned in the red sea, and of the Sodomites being subuerted, besaued.

As concerning the first, he did hold negatiuely, alleading the saying of •ede vpon this place of the Apostle: To him that beleueeth vpon him which iustifieth the wicked, his fayth is imputed to righteousness.* Rom. 4. Vpon thys place sayth •ede: Aliud est credere in deum, aliud credere deo, aliud credere deum. &c. The second doubt sayth he, the maister of the sentence doth answere. lib. 4. dist. 17. cap. 11. in these wordes: What is then to be holden or sayd herein? Certes, that without the confession of the mouth, and assoyling of the outward payne, sinnes be forgeuen through contrition and humility of the hart. &c. For the third doubt he brought in the wordes of S. Ierome vpon the Prophet Nahum, speaking of the Egiptians destroyed in the sea, and of the Sodomites destroyd with fire, & of the Israelites destroyed in the desert. Know you (sayth Ierome) that God therfore punished them for their sinnes here temporally, because they should not be punished hereafter perpetually, & therfore because they were here punished, they shall not be punished hereafter for els the scripture should lie, which is not to be graunted. These 3. questiōs belike Iohn Hus did bring in to declare howe the doctors doe not agree in all things neither with the church of Rome, neither are to be followed in all poyntes of all men.

* It foloweth moreouer after the death of the Archbish. Swinco aboue mentioned, that one named Cōradus was placed by y^e pope there to be chief general, which Cōradus conferring with the diuines and doctors of the vniuersity of Prage, required their aduises and counselles, what way they might best take to asswage the dissensions & discordes betwene the clergy and the people. Whereupon a certayne councell was deuised to be holden after this sort and maner as foloweth.

1. First, that all doctors and maisters of the vniuersity of Prage should be assēbled in the court of the Archb. and in his presence that euery doctor and maister shoulde sweare, not to holde or mayntayne any of the 45. articles of Iohn Wickliffe before condemned.

2. Item, concerning the 7. sacraments of the Church, the keyes & censures of the church, the maners, rites, ceremonies, customes, and liberties of the church, concerning also the worshipping of reliques and indulgēses, the orders & religions of the church, that euery one shall sweare that he doth hold, beleue & mayntayn, and will maintayn as doth the church of Rome and no otherwise, of the which church of Rome the Pope is the head, & the colledge of Cardinals is the body: who are the true and manifest successours of blessed S. Peter prince of the Apostles, and of the colledge of the other Apostles of Christ.

3. Item, that euery one shall sweare, that in euery catholicke matter belonging to the Church that he will stand to the determination of the Apostolicall sea, and that he wyll obey the prelates in all maner of thinges wheresoeuer,* the thing which is pure good is not forbidden: or that which is mere ill, is not commaunded: but is meane or indifferēt be'twene both. Which mean or indifferent thing, yet notwithstanding by circumstances of time, place or person, may be either good or euill.

4. Item, that euery one shall sweare & confesse by his oth, that the opinions of Wickliffe and others, touching the 7. sacraments of the church and other things aboue notified, being contrary to the sayd church of Rome be false.

5. Item, that an othe be required of them all, that none of them shall hold, defend or maintaine any of the 45. articles of Iohn Wickliffe aforesayd; or in any other matter catholicke, and especially of the 7. Sacraments and other articles aboue specified, but only as doth the Church of Rome, and no otherwise.

6. Item, that euery ordinary in his dioces shall cause the sayd premisses contained in the 1.2.3.4. articles aforesayde to be published in his Sinodes, and by his preachers to be declared to the people in the kingdome of Boheme.

7. Item, that if any Clerke, student, or lay man shal with stād any of the premisses, that the ordinary haue authority if he be conuicted therof to correct him, according to the old lawes and Canons, and that no man shal d••end such one by any meanes, for none but the ordinary hath power to correct such a man, because the Archbishop is chauncellour both of the kingdome and vniuersity of Prage.

8. Item, that the songes lately forbidden, being odious, •aūderous and offensiue to others fame, be not long neyther in streetes, tauernes, nor any other place.

9. Item, that maister Iohn Hus shall not preach so long as he shall haue no absolution of the court, neither shal hin'der the preaching in Prage by his presence, that by this, his obedience to the Apostolicall sea may be knowne.

10. Item, that this Councell doth appeare to be good and reasonable for the putting away of ill report and dissentiō that is in the kingdome of Boheme.

11. Item, if maister Iohn Hus, with his complices will performe this, which is conteined in the 4. former Articles, then we will be ready to say as they woulde wishe vs and haue vs, whensoever need shall require, that we do agree with them in matter of fayth, otherwise if they wyll not so doe, we in geuing this testimony should lye greatly vnto our Lord the King & to the whole world. And moreouer, we will be content to write for them to the Court of Rome, and do the best we can for them, our honors saued. This counsell and deuise being considered amongst the head of the vniuersity of Prage, the foresayd administrator named Conradus, presented to the king and to the barons of the realme, and also to the Senate of Prage. Whereof as soone as word came to Iohn Hus and his adherents, they likewise drew out other Articles in maner and forme of a councell as foloweth.

For the honor of God & the true preaching of hys gospell, for the health of the people, and to auoyd the sinister & false infamy of the kingdome of Boheme, and of the Marquiship of Morauia, & of the city and vniuersity of Prage, and for the reforming of peace & vnity betweene the clergy and the scholers of the vniuersity.

1. First, let the right and iust decrement of the princes and of the kinges councell, be holden and stand in force, which betwene the L. Archbi. Suinco on the one party, and betwene the rector & maister Iohn Hus on the other party, was made, proclaimed, s[•]aled, and solemnly on both parts receiued and allowed in the court of our soueraigne Lord the king.

2. Item, that the kingdome of Boheme remain in his former rites, liberties & common customes, so as other kingdomes & landes do enioy, that is, in all approbations, condemnations, and other actes concerning the holy mother vniuersall church.

3. Item, that maister I. Hus, agaynst whom the foresayd Lord Suinco, could obiect no crime before the coūcell, that the sayd Iohn Hus may be present in the congregation of the Clergy and there whosoever will obiect to him either heresy or error, let him obiect, binding himself to suffer the like payne, if he do not proue it.

Page 5904. Item, if no man will set himselfe on y^e contrary part against him, then let the cōmaundement be made by our soueraigne Lord the king through all his Cittyes; and likewise let it be ordeined and proclaimed through all villages and townes, that maister Iohn Hus, is ready to render ac^tcount of his fayth, and therefore if any will obiect vnto him any heresy or errour, let him write his name in the chauncery of the Lord Archbishop, and to bring forth his probations openly before both the parties.

5. Item, if no such shalbe founde to obiect, or which will write his name, then let them be called for, which caused to be noised & rumored in the Popes Court, that in the kingdome of Boheme, in the City of Prage, and in the Marquesdome of Morauia, many there be whose harts be infe^cted with heresy and error, that they may proue who they be: and if they be not able to proue it, let them be punished.

6. Item, that commaundement be directed to Doctors of Diuinity and of the Canon law, and to the Chapter of Ca^thedrall churches, and that it be required of them all and of euery one particularly, that they wil bring forth his name, if they know any such to be an heretick or erroneous. And if they deny to know any such, then let them make recogni^tion therof, before the publike Notary, confirming y^e same with their seales.

7. Item, these things thus done & premised, then that our soueraigne Lord the king, & also that the Archb. will geue commaundement vnder payne that no man shall call one another hereticke or erroneous, vnles he will stand to the probation of that heresy or error, as it becommeth him.

8. Item, after these thinges obtained that our soueraigne lord the king, with the consent of his Barons, will thē leuy a subsidy, or collect of the clergy, & direct an honest ambassy to the Popes court, with the which ambassadors, let thē also go vpō theyr owne proper charges or expenses for theyr purgation, which haue caused this kingdome falsly & greuously to be infamed in the Apostolicall court.

9. Item, in the meane season for the presence of master I. Hus no Interdict ought to be made, as it was made of late contrary to the order and determination of our holye mother church. &c.

As this matter was thus in altercatiō betwene y^e two parts, y^e one obiecting, y^e other answering in articles, as is aforsayd: In the meane time it happened by the occasiō of Ladislaus king of Naples, who had besieged the Popes townes and territories, that Pope Iohn raising vp warr agaynst the sayd Ladislaus, gaue ful remission of sinnes to all them which would warre of his side to defēd y^e church. When this Bul of y^e popes indulgēce was come to Prage,* and there published, the king Wenslaus, who thē fauored that pope, gaue cōmaundement that no man should attēpt any thing against the sayd Popes indulgēces. But Hus w^t his folowers, not able to abide y^e impiety of those pardōs. began manifestly to speake agaynst them, of the which cōpany were 3. certayn artificers, who hearing y^e priest preaching of these iudulgences, did opēly speak against them, & called the pope Antichrist, which would set vp the crosse to fight agaynst his euenchristened. Wherefore they were brought before the Senate, and committed to warde. But the people ioyning thēselues together in armes: came to y^e magistrates, requiring thē to be let loose. The magistrates with gētle wordes and fayre promises satisfied the people, so that euery man returning home to his own house, y^e tumult was asswaged. But the captiues being in prison, notwithstanding were there beheaded, whose names were Iohn,* Martin, and Stascon. The death and martirdome of these three being knowne vnto the people, they took the bodies of them that were slaine, and with great solemnitye brought them vnto the church of Bethlem. At whose funerall diuers priestes fauoring that side, did sing in this wise These be the Sayntes whiche for the testament of God gaue their bodies. &c. And so their bodyes were sumptuously interred in the church of Bethlem, I. Hus preaching at the same funerall, much commending them for theyr constancye, and blessing God the father of our Lord Iesus Christ, whyche had hidde the way of his verity so from the prudent of this world, and had reuealed it to the simple lay people and inferior priestes, which chose rather to please God then men.

Thus this City of Prage was deuided. The prelates with the greatest part of the clergy, & most of the Barons, which had any thing to lose, did hold w^t the pope, especially Steuen Paletz,* being the chieffest doer on that side. On the contrary part the commons, with part of the clergy & studentes of the vniuersity went with Iohn Hus. Wenslaus the king fearing least this would grow to a tumult,* being moued by the doctors and prelates and counsell of his barons thought best to remoue Iohn Husse out of the Citty, who had bene excommunicated before by the Pope: And further to cease this dissention risen in the church, committed the matter to the disposition of the doctors and the clergy. They cōsulting together among thēselues, did set forth a decree, ratified and confirmed by the sentēce of the king, contayning the summe of 18. articles for the maynteynance of the Pope and the see of Rome, agaynst the doctrine of Wickeliffe and Iohn Husse. The names of the Doctors of Diuinity were these: Steuen Paletz: Stanislaus de Znoyma: Petrus de Ikoyma: Ioannes Heliae: Andreas Broda: Iohannes Hildesen: Mattheus Monachus: Hermannus Heremita: Georgius Bota: Simon Wenda. &c. Iohn Hus thus departing out of Prage, went to his cōuntry, where he being protected by the Lord of the Soile, continued there preaching, to whom resorted a great concourse of people, neither yet was he so expelled out of Prage, but that sometimes he resorted to his church of Bethleem, and there also preached vnto the people.

Moreouer agaynst the sayde decree of the doctours, I. Hus with his companye replied agayne, and aunswered to their articles, with cōtrary articles agayn as foloweth.

The obiections of Iohn Hus and of his part, agaynst the decree of the Doctors.

First, the fōudatiō of the Doctors wherupon they fōūd all their writings and counsels, is false, which fōūdatiō is this, where as they say that part of the clergy in y^e kingdome of Boheme is pestilent and erroneous, and holdeth falsely of the Sacramentes,

2. The Doctors hereby do defame the kingdome of Boheme, and do rayse vp new discordes.

3. Let them shew therefore those persons of the Clergye, whom they call pestilent, & so let them verify theyr report, binding themselues to suffer the like paine, if they be not able to proue it.

4. False it is y^t they say, the Pope & the cardinals to be the true & manifest successors of Peter & of the Apostles, neyther that any other successors of Peter or the Apostles, can be fōūd vpon earth besides thē. Whē as no man knoweth whether he be worthy of hatred or of fauour. And all Byshops and priests be successors of Peter & of the Apostles.

5. Not the pope, but Christ onely is the head: and not the Cardinals, but all Christes faythfull people be the body of the Catholick church, as all holy Scripture and decrees of the holy fathers do testify and affirme.

6. And as touching y^e pope, if he be a reprobate, it is plain that he is no head, no nor member also of y^e holy Church of God, but of the deuill, and of his sinagogue.

7. The clergy of the gospellers agreeing with the saying of S. Austen which they alledge, and according to the sanctions of the fathers, and determinations of the holy mother church, do say and affirme laudably: that the condēnation and prohibition of the 45. articles is vnlawful, and vniust, and rashly done: for that not onely because the doctors, but also all Bishops and Archbishops, in suche great causes, namely, touching faith (as these articles doe) haue no authority at all, as appeareth. De baptismo et eius effectu cap. Maiores. Et in Can. 17. dist. cap. Hinc sedi. &c.

8. The second cause of the discord which they alledge, also is most false: seing the fayth of whole Christendome cōcerning the church of Rome, is deuided in 3. parts by the rea'son of 3. popes, which now together do raigne: And the 4. part is newtrall. Neither is it true, that we ought to stand in all things to the determination of the pope, & of the cardinals, but so farr forth as they do agree with y^e holy scripture of the old and new Testament, from whence the sanctions of the fathers, did first spring as is euident. De accusationibus cap. qualiter. &c.

9. In the 4. Article they brast out into a certayne dotage, & are contrary to themselues. By reason that they doitishly haue reprehēded the gospellers, who in all their doings receiue the holy scripture (whith is the law of God, y^e way of trueth and life) for their iudge and measure: and afterward they themselues doe alleadge the scripture. Deut. 17. where all iudges both popes and Cardinals are taught to iudge & discern betwene leaper & leaper, & in euery ecclesiasticall cause, only after y^e rule of gods law. And so are they cōtrary vnto their secōd article, wherin they say: y^t in euery catholicke matter we must runne to the pope: which is cōtrary to the foolish condemnation of the Articles aforesaid. 10 Consequently, like idiots they doe most fasly alledge for their purpose the Canon, vnder the name and authority of Ierome written 24. q. 1. Haec est fides papa. &c. where they do apply the wordes of Ierome most impertinentlye to the pope of Rome,* which he writeth to S. Austen, calling him a most blessed Pope.

11. By the whiche place of Ierome,* it is manifest that the first article of those doctors is false. Forasmuch as by these Page 591 wordes appeareth that other besides the bishop of Rome and his Cardinals, are called blessed Popes, holding the fayth and seat of Peter, and are successours of the Apostles as was Austen and other holy byshops moe.

12. Wherof it followeth moreouer, that y^e church of Rome is not that place, where the Lord did appoint y^e principall sea of his whole Church. For Christ, which was the head priest of all, did first sit in Ierusalem, and Peter did sit first in Antioch, and afterward in Rome. Also other popes dyd sit some in Bonony, some at Perusium, some at Auinion.

13. Item, the foresayde Prelates are falsifiers of the holy Scriptures and Canons, & therefore are worthy to be punished: Which affirme and say, that we must obey the pope in all thinges. For why it is knowne that many Popes haue erred, and one Pope was also a woman. To whome not onely it was not lawful to geue obediēce,* but also vnlawfull to communicate with them. As all Rubrices, and infinite Canons do declare.

14. Item, their 6.7.8.9.10.11. Articles doe stand and are grounded vpon vntrue and false persuasions. And therefore are to be reiected and detested like the other before: Seyng they doe induce not to peace and veritye, but to dissention and falsity.

15. It is manifest also to the laitye, that this dissention among the clergy riseth for no other cause, but onely for the preaching of the Gospell, which reprehendeth such Simoniacks. and such hereticks in the church of God, as namely haunt the court of Rome, spreading out theyr braunches abroad into all the world. Who deserue to be remoued & ex'tirpate not onely of the clergy gospellers, but also of the secular power. And so these three vices, to witte, Symonye, Luxury,* & Auarice (which is Idoll worship) be the causes of all this dissention amonge the Clergye in the kingdome of Boheme, and not the other, which they falsely ascribe to the Gospellers of Prage. These three vices beyng remoued, peace and vnity woulde soone be reformed in the Clergy.

16. Moreouer, their last article is to much grosse, and not onely is without all law, but also w^tout all coulour of law: whereas they fondly and childishly doe argue thus: that the processes made agaynst M. Iohn Hus ought to be obeyed, because forsooth the common sort of the Clergye of Prage, hath receiued them: By the same reason they may argue also, that we must obey the deuil, for our first parēts Adam and Eue obeyed him. Also our fore auncetours before vs were Paganes, wherfore we must obey them, and also the Paganes.

17. But let this friuolous opiniō go, this is certain truth, that the said processes made against maister Iohn Hus, by law are none. Forsomuch as they were obteyned, drawne, wrought, and executed contrary to the commission of the Pope, against the determinatiō of the holy mother church, as appeareth Cap. Sacro de Sententia excom. and a thousand other lawes besides.

18. Finally, whosoever wittingly & obstinately do defend and execute (the sayd processes made) or consenteth vnto thē, are all to be counted as blasphemers, excommunicate, and heretickes, as hath bene afore written and exhibited to y^r Lord generall bishop Olomucense. And more shalbe declared and proued, if audience may be geuen openly before all the Doctors. Ex Aenea Sylui. & Chocleo.

Vnto these obiections of I. Hus & his part, the Catholique Doctors agayn did answer in a long tedious pro'ces: The scope wherof principally tended to defend y^e principallity of the Pope, & to mayntayne his obedience aboue all other potentates in y^e world: affirming & cōtēding, that although Christ is the head alone of the whole multitude of them that are sleeping in Purgatory, and whiche are labouring in the Church militant, and which are resting in heauen: yet this letteth not, but the Pope is heade of the church here militant, that is, of all the faithfull, which here in this world liue vnder his office. Like as Christ is kyng of all kings, and yet Charles may be the king of Fraunce: So say they,* Christ may be the vniuersall head, and yet the Pope may be head vnder him of the whole Church. And thus concluded they that the pope is the head, and that the Colledge of Cardinals is the body of the Romish church, which church of Rome is placed in the ecclesiasticall office here ouer the earth, to know and define vpō euery ecclesiasticall and catholicke matter, to correct errors, and to purge them, and to haue care vpon all such vniuersall matters, & cure vpon all vniuersall churches, and vpon the vniuersal flocke of faythfull christians. Forasmuch as in the regimēt of the church through y^e vniuersal world, there must nedes remayne in such office alwayes some suche manifest & true successors of Peter, prince of the Apostles & of the colledge of the other Apostles of Christ: neither can there be found or geuen vpon earth any other successors,* but only y^e Pope which is the head, and the colledge of Cardinals, which is the body of the foresayd church of Rome. And although the whole vniuersall multitude of the faythfull do make y^e body of Christ, yet the same body of Christ is not placed here in office to exercise such authority vpon earth. Because that vniuersal multitude was neuer yet, nor euer can be cōgregate together.

And therefore necessary it is,* that some such true and manifest successors & iudges be appoynted, to whom recourse must be had, in all such catholick and ecclesiastical matters determinable. For like as in earthly regiments, euery case of discord is brought before his iudge, & hath his place assigned where to be decided: So like reason would requyre, that in principall matters and controuersies of fayth, some such presidents & places be limited for the purpose to haue such doubtres resolued. And this being graunted, then the doctors proceed, & here must needes cōclude (say they) that there cannot be geuen in all the world any other place, but onely the church of Rome: the head wherof is the Pope, & the body is the colledge of Cardinals. For like as Christ departing out of this world in his corporal presēce, le•t his body here with vs, vnder the Sacramēt in another forme, whereby he remayneth with vs (according to his promise Mat. vlt.) vnto the consummation of the worlde: Euen so while Christ walked here on earth in his bodily presēce, he was Pope himselfe & chiefe bishop, & so head of the church here militant in earth, corporally cōioyned with the same, as y^e head is to his body. But after that he departed out of y^r world because his body which is the church militant,* vp on the earth, should not be headlesse, therefore he left Peter, & his successors to his church, for an head in his place, vnto the consummation of the world, saying to him: Thou art Peter, & vpon this rocke I will build my church. &c. Mat. 16. And agayne he sayth, feede my sheepe. Ioan. vlt. That is to say, be thou Peter the head ouer thy brethren.

Tedious it were to recite all the bibblebabble of these doctors in this their long responsall.* Who so listh to see y^e bottome of their profounde writing & knowledge, may resort either to the history of Siluius, or els to M. Cochleus, in his first booke De hist Hussit.

Thus then M. Iohn Hus being driuen out of Prage (as is afore touched) by the motion of these Doctours, and moreouer being so excōmunicate, that no Masse nor other must be sayd there where he was present. The people begā mightily to grudge and to cry out agaynst the Prelates & other popish priests, which were the workers therof, accu|sing thē to be Simoniacks, couetous, whoremaisters, adulterers, proud, sparing not to lay opē their vices to their great ignominy and shame. And much crauing a reformation to be had of the clergy.

The king seing the inclination of the people, being also not ignorant of the wickednes of the clergy, vnder pretence to reforme the church, began to require greater exactions vpon such Priestes and men of the Clergy, as were knowne and accused to be wicked liuers. Whereupon they on the other part, that fauored Iohn Hus, taking that occasion present, complayned of all, accused many, and spared none, Whomsoeuer they knew to be of the Catholicke faction, or enemies to Iohn Hus. By reason wherof y^e priests of the popish Clergy were brought,* such as were faultye, into great distresse, and such as were not faulty, into great feare. In so much that they were glad to fall in, at least not to fall out with the Protestantes, being afrayd to displease them. By this meanes maister Hus beganne to take some more liberty vnto him, & to preach in his church at Bethleem, & none to controll him: by the same meanes the people also receiued some comfort, and the king much gayne & mony by the reason.

And thus the popish Clergy, while they went about to persecute Iohn Hus, were in wrapped thēselues in great tribulation, and afflicted on euery side, as wel of lay mē, as of learned men of the clergy. In so much that womē also & children were agaynst thē. And by y^t same reasō, wherwith they thought to entangle him, they were ouerthrown thēselues. For the Doctors which before condemned this doctrine in Iohn Hus, for an intollerable heresy, & cried out so much agaynst him, for teaching y^e tēporall Lords might take away tēporall liuings frō y^e clergy sinning habitualiter that is, lying and continuing still in the custome of iniquity: now when the king and the Lords temporall began to mearse them and berieue them of their tēporalties for their transgressions,* the sayd Doctors did keepe silence & durst speake neuer a word. Agayne where the foresayd doctors, before could not abide in Iohn Hus, that tithes wer to be coūted for pure almes, now comming to y^e Guildhal, were faine to entreat for theyr temporall goodes, not to be taken Page 592 from them, pleading the same temporalties to be mere almose and deuotion of good men, geuen vnto the church. Ex Cochleo.

And thus now did they themselues graunt the thing, which before they did condemne. The more that the popes clergy was pinched, the more grudge & hatred redounded to Iohn Hus, although he was in no cause therof, but onely their owne wicked deseruinges, for the which cause Stephen Paletz,* and Andraeas de Broda, being the chiefe champions of that faction, though they could not remedy the case, yet to ease theyr mindes, wrote sharpe and cruell letters to Maister Hus.

And to helpe the matter forward, the Pope also here must helpe at a pinche, who likewise writeth hys letters to Wenceslaus king of Bohemia, which was brother to Sigismund Emperour, for the suppressing of Iohn Hus & of his doctrine. Which was in the fifth and last yere of his Popedome. an. 1414. The tenour of whose letters to king Wenceslaus in this wise proceedeth.

The letter of Pope Iohn to K. Wenceslaus.

Iohn Bishoppe seruauant of Gods seruantes, to his welbeloued sonne in Christ Wenceslaus,^{*}King of Romaines and of Boheme, greeting and apostolicall benediction.

Among other desires and delightes of our hart: who although vnworthy to represent the roome of Christ here in earth: this doth chiefly redounde to our singular comfort fo often as we do heare of the brotherly entreaty of peace and of concord (by which concord kingdoms do encrease, as contrary by discorde they are deminished) which is betweene your honour, and our welbeloued in the Lord Sigismund your brother germane & cosin, for the noble king of the Romans &c. And furthermore it foloweth in these words. And as we haue cause to ioy at the premisses: so likewise agayne the heauy rumors which are here, do trouble and dampe our mindes. For we heare that in diuers places vnder your dominiō, there be certain which do folow and leane to the errors of that archhereticke Wickliffe, whose bookes haue bene long since condemned in the generall Romain councell to bee erroneous, hereticall, and swaruing from the catholicke fayth. And furthermore whiche is worst of all, the sayd persons cleauing to the opinions of the heretickes (least they should be corrected of their superior powers for their excès, to couer theyr naughtines and stubbernesse in despising the commaundements of the Apostolicall seat) do openly teach disobedience and contempt of the keies and ecclesiasticall censure, to the subuersion of the Apostolicall dignity, setting at nought the decrees of the holy fathers & canons. Wherefore we do exhort your worship for the mercy of our God, as hartely as we may or cā, that it would please you as we desire & hope you will (so effectuously) to shew forth your regall power, both for the glory of God, & defence of the catholicke fayth (which you go about to defend) and for the conseruation of your kingly name, state and honor, for the prosperous safe gouernement of your kingdome and dominions, as it becommeth a catholicke prince, whereby this blot of heresye (which doth so lamentably and miserablie spring and creepe in those partes and doth so infect the mindes of mortall men, to the destruction of their soules, and doth sequester them from the congregation of the pure and catholick fayth and truth) may be rooted out. &c.

Geuen at Bononia in the Ides of Iune, in the v. yeare of our popedome. &c.

In this epistle of Pope Iohn aboue prefixed, forsomuch as mention is made of a certaine councell before holden at Rome (which was 4. yeares before) agaynst the articles & books of Iohn

Wickliffe: it shall not be impertinēt nor out of purpose to repeat a certayn mery history & worthy otherwise to be noted at, written by Nicholas Clemangis o• a certayne spirite, which ruled the Popish Councelles, hys worde are these.

The same pope called a Coūcell at Rome about foure yeares before,* at the earnest sute of diuers men. And a mas of the holy Ghost being sayd at the entraunce into the sayd Councell (according to the accustomed maner) the Councell being set, and the sayde Iohn sitting highest in a chayre prepared for him for that purpose: Behold a ougly & dread full Owle, or as the common prouerbe is, the euill signe of some mischaunce of death to followe, comming out of the backe halfe of him, flew to and fro, with her euill fauoured voyce, and standing vpon the middle beame of the church, cast her staring eyes vpon the Pope sitting, the whole cōpany began to maruell, to see the night Crowe, whiche is wont to abide no light, how she should in y^e midday come in the face of such a multitude, & iudged (not without cause) that it was an illfaured token. For beholde sayde they, (whispering one in on others eare) the spirite appereth in the shape of an Owle. And as the stode beholding one an other, and aduising the pope, scarcely could keep their coūtenaunce from laughter, Iohn himselfe, vpon whom the Owle stedfastly looked, blushing at the matter, beganne to sweate and to fret and fume with himselfe, and not finding by what other meanes he might salue the matter, being so confused dissoluing the Councell, rose vp and departed. After that there followed an other session. In the whiche the Owle again, after the maner aforesayd, although, as I beleue, Page 593 not called, was present looking s•edfastly vpon the bi'shop, whom he beholding to become agayne, was more ashamed then he was before (and iustly) saying he could no longer abide the sight of her, & commaūded that she should be driuen away with bates and shottinges: but she being a•rayde neither with their noyse, neither of any thing els, would not away, vntill that with the strokes of the sticks, which were throwne at her, she fell downe dead before thē all. This I learned of a faythfull frend, who at the same time came to Rome, the which thing I scarsely crediting for the rarenes of the matter, he affirmed by his othe, that it was most certayn & true: adding moreouer that all there present were much offēded, & did greatly deride that Coūcell called for such a purpose, and by little and litle the Coūcel was dissolued, nothing done ther as he saith. Although it hath not bene alwayes seene that such spirituall Doues haue bene present with Popes and their Councels, & gouerned thē: yet their euill doctrine declareth no lesse. Read gentle reader the booke of Clemangis, and thou shalt not thinke thy labor euill bestowed. For he hath both learnedly, truely, freely, and godly, bewayled the filthines of Antichrist, and his ministers, their wickednes, impiety and cruēlty, and the miserable state and face of the Church. &c. And thus much for Pope Iohn.

The Councell of Constance.

HEre by the way is to be noted and vnderstand, that duꝛing all this time of Pope Iohn, there were 3. Popes raigning together,* neither was yet the the schisme ceased, which so long time had continued, the space (as I sayde) of 29. yeares. By the reason wherof a generall Council was ordeined & holden at Constance in the same yeare. an. 1414. being called by Sigismund the Emperour, and Pope Iohn the 23. for the pacifiyng of the foresayd schisme, which was then betweene three Popes, striuing for the Popedome. The first whereof was Iohn, whom the Italians set vp. The second was Gregory,* whom the Frenchmen set vp. The third was Benedict, whom the Spaniardes placed. In this schismaticall ambitious conflict, euery one defended his Pope, to the great disturbans of christian nations. This councell endured foure yeares long, wherin all their matters were decided most by foure natiōs, to say the English, Germaine, French, & Italian nation. Out of which •oure nations were apoynted & chosen foure Presidentes to iudge and determine the matters of the Councell. The names of which Presidentes were these, Iohn the Patriarke of Antioche for Fraunce, Anthony Archbishop of Rigen for Italy, Nicholas Archbishoppe of Genesuensis for Germany,* and Nicholas Bishop of Bathe for England by whom many great and profitable things to the glory of God, and publike profit, might haue bene concluded, if the rotten flesh of the churchmen could haue bidden the salt of the Gospell, and if they had loued the truth: but as Gregogorius Nazienzenus writeth, there lightly come few generall Councels, but they end more with disturbance, then tranquility. So it happened in this councell, for wheras Iohn the 13. in the first Session exhorteth them by these wordes taken out of the 8. of Zachary. Viritatem diligite, that is to say: Lone the truth, further, monishing them, and specially the Deuines euery man to do his endeouour for the vnitye of the Church, and to speake their minde freely: but howe soone this his exhortation was forgottē, it appeared shortly after by the despising of the Prophetes, and persecuting of Christ in his mēbers, as by the grace of Christ shall appeare hereafter in the processe of this story. First this Iohn did resigne his Papacy, the Emperor geuing him thankes kissed his feet.

Afterward the sayd Iohn repenting him that he had so done, sought meanes to flee, whereunto Fredericke Duke of Austrich did assist him, for he chaunging his garments, fled by night with a small cōpany.* And when he was now come vnto Schaffe house to goe into Italy, the Emperour pursuing, tooke him, and proclaymed Fredericke traytour, & for that cause tooke away certayne Cittyes from him. At the last the matter was appeased vnder this cōdition, that Fredericke should require grace of the Emperour, and resigne all his possessions vnto him. Wherupō the Emperour receiued him againe into fauor, & restored him to his dukedome. This pope being thus deposed,* was committed vnto the County Pallatine, and by him caried to the Castle of Manheime, where he was kept prisoner by the space of 3. yeares. Afterward he was agayne by Pope Martine, admitted to the number of Cardinals.*

This Pope Iohn was deposed by the decree of y^e coūcell, more then 40. most greuous and haynous crimes being obiected and proued agaynst him: as that he had hyred Marculus Permensis a Ph•sition, to poyson Alexander his predecessour. Further, that he was an heretick, a simoniake, a lyer, an hipocrite, a murderer, an inchaūter, a diceplayer, an adulterer, and a sodomite, & finally what crime is it, that he was not infected withall?

And now to returne vnto the councell, first we wil declare the order of their Sessions, with things therin concluded, in generall: then we will (Christ willing) adioyne the speciall tractation of such matters, as perteyne to the story of the Bohemians, and Iohn Hus, and Hierome of Prage, who in the same vngodlye councell were condemned and burned.

This councell therfore of Constance, which was summoned by the Emperour Sigismund, and Pope Iohn 23. about the natiuity of our Lord Iesus, an. 1414. began the same yeare to be assembled about the latter end of the yere. Which first beginning as the maner is,* with a Mas•e of the holy Ghost, as they were singing according to their custōe the Himne, Veni sancte spiritus, there was at the same time a certayne Bill set vp in the Church by some well disposed man, as it seemed, wherein was conteyned these wordes folowing: Alijs rebus occupati nunc adesse vobis nō possumus. That is to say. We are otherwise occupied at this tyme, we can not intend to come to you. Here is also to be remēbred the worthye saying of the Emperour Sigismund, when talke was ministred as touching the reformation of the spiritualtye, and some sayde quod oporteat incipere a minoritis, that is, that reformation ought first to beginne at the Minorites.* The Emperour aunswering againe: Non a minoritis, sed a maioritis, that is, not with the Minorites sayth he, but with the Maiorites. Meaning the reformation ought first to begin with the Pope, Cardinals, & Byshops and other superior states of the church, and so to discend after to the inferiors. This much by the way, & now to the purpose and order of the Sessions as we promised. The which counsell continued as is aforesayd by the space of iiij. yeares, and had in it 45. Sessions, wherein many things were concluded, the which altogether were to long to be recited in this place: as the deposition of three seuerall Popes, whiche were before spoken of, the hearing of certaine Legates. Yet I minde to make some brieve recapitulation of the most principall matters there done in the sessions orderly ensuing. [unspec 1] 1.

In the first Session chiefly was cōcluded,* first that this Councell was lawfully congregate.

2. Item, that the going away of the pope should be no let or stay, but the Councell might proceed.

Wherein note (gentle Reader) that the authority of the generall Councell is aboue the Pope, contrary to their owne doctrine. [unspec 2]

3. Item, this Councell should not be dissolved before the Church were reformed, as well in the superiours, as inferiours. [unspec 3]

In the 4. Session amongst other things, this was first concluded: That a Synode congregate in the holy [unspec 4] Ghost, making a generall council, representing the whole Catholicke Church here militant, hath power of Christ immediately, to the which power euery person, of what state or dignity so euer he be:* yea being the pope himselfe, ought to be obedient in all such things as concerne the generall reformation of the Church, aswell in the heades, as in the subiectes.

Item, the sayd Pope should not translate the Court of Rome, and the officers of the same from the Citty of Constance. And that all his censures, doinges and workinges after the time of his departure, whatsoever he shoulde enterprise to do to the preiudice of this Councell, should be of no effect. [unspec 5]

In the 5. Session the same Articles were repeated and concluded agayne. [unspec 6]

In the 6. Session procuration and citation was sent out agaynst the Pope.*

Item, commissioners were appointed out of the foure nations for the hearing of Iohn Hus, which shalbe hereafter mentioned in his story folowing.

Item, the memory of Iohn Wickliffe was condemned and the sentence geuen in the Councel holden at Rome vpon the condemnation and burning of Wickliffes bookes, was there confirmed.*

Item, in the same Session, Citation was sent out agaynst Ierome of Prage. The tenor whereof foloweth after in the story of the sayd Ierome.

Item, in this Session, was decreed agaynst libelles of infamy. [unspec 7]

In the 7. Session nothing was handled, but that the tenour of the citation agaynst Pope Iohn was recited. [unspec 8]

In the 8. Session, the sentence and condemnation of Page 594 Iohn Wickliffe, and his 45. Articles was recited, and sentence geuē agaynst his memory & bones to be burned.* The tenor wherof is rehearsed in the history of Iohn Wickli•fes before passed. fol. 449.

[unspec 9] In the 9. Session, The matter & cause of Pope Iohn was agayn intreated, and commissioners appoynted to enquire vpon his cause, and iudges for the same.

[unspec 10] In the 10. Session, Suspension was geuen out & reade agaynst the sayd Pope.

In the 11. and 12. Sessions,* Notaries were assigned & definitiue sentence geuen agaynst the said Pope, where also was decreed that none of them that contended before for the Papacy, should be chosen Pope.

[unspec 13] In the 13. Session was decreed, Quod nullus praes biter sub pena excommunicationis comunicet populo sub vtraque spe'cie panis & vini.* This is, that no Priest vnder payne of excommunication shall communicate vnto the people vnder both kindes of bread and wine.

[unspec 14] In the 14. Session, came in y^t resignation of pope Gregory the 12. which was one of the 3. before mentioned, striuing for the Papacy, with certayne other Articles concerning the election of the Bishop of Rome, and the ratification of their resigning, which gaue ouer the Papacy.

[unspec 15] Then ensueth the 15. Session, in the which silence was commanded on all partes vnder pain of excommunicatiō, and the great curse that no persō or persons high or low of what estate or degree so euer he were,* Emperour, Kyng, Cardinall, or other should disturbe the sayd Session wyth any maner of noise, either by hand, foot, or voyce. This being done, the sentence & condemnation against Iohn Hus was read and pulished, whiche after in the story of Iohn Hus, foloweth to be sene more at large.

[unspec 16] In the 16. Session, Ambassadors were assigned by the Councill to go into Arragon to Benedictus the 13. to entreat with him for the resignation of his Papacy, as the other two had done before.

Item, power was geuen to iudges, to cite vnder pain of depriuation, all such as priuily departed away from the Councill, in the whiche Session also the sentence agaynst Iohn Hus was confirmed and ratified.

[unspec 17] In the 17. Session, the Emperour tooke vpon him a iourney to the king of Arragon,* to entreat with pope Benedictus. An excommunication denounced agaynst al such as should go about to empeche the Emperours iourney about that matter. &c.

Item, pray•rs and processions were determined to be made by the Councell, euery Sunday for the same cause, with an hundred dayes of pardon geuen to thē that would be present thereat, and that all Prelats should be present at euery of these sayd Masses and processions in theyr Pontificalibus. Graunting besides to euery Priest that sayd one Masse,* for the same a 100. dayes of pardon. And to all other that once a day should say one Pater noster, and one Aue, for the safety of the Emperour xl. dayes of pardon.

[unspec 18] In the 18. Session, certayne iudges were assigned for the hearing of matters, which the Councell had no leasure to heare.

It was there also decreed that suche letters and Buls as were written in the name of that councell, should be receiued with no lesse credite and authority, then the Bulles proceeding from the Sea Apostolicall, and that the falsifyers of the same should incurre no lesse penalty then the falsifyers of the other. Legates also and Ambassadors were sent into Italy.

[unspec 19] In the 19. Session which was y^t same yeare in the moneth of September, Ierome of Prage who was cited as is before sayd, was accused of heresy & cast in prison by the sayd councell, & constrayned to abiure. The which his abiuration hereafter foloweth to be seene in his history.

Item, it was decreed: Quod non obstantibus saluis cōductibus Imperatoris Regum. &c. possit per iudicem competentem de haeretica prauitate inquiri. &c. That is, notwithstanding y^e safe conduct geuen by the Emperour and kinges.* &c. Inquiry may be made agaynst a man for heresy by a sufficient iudge and processe, to be made according to the law.

The causes of heresies were committed to certain iudges and deputyes.

*Item, the Chart called Carolina, and diuers other Chartes and constitutions concerning the libertyes of the Church of Rome, being brought forth were approued and confirmed,

In the 20. Session, letters & instrumentes were made [unspec 20] and set vpon Church dores to require and admonish duke Fredericke to restore agayne vnto George Bishop of Austriche,* such landes, rentes, and reuenues as he deteyned & withheld, vnder payne of interditement, suspending and excommunication.

During the time of this Session, the Ambassadors returned out of Arragon from the Pope Benedict and were heard with great audience, whereas certayne Articles and conditions betwene the Pope & the councell were brought forth and agreed vpon to the number of 12.

In the yeare of our Lord 1416. was the 21. Session beginning [unspec 21] after theyr maner with a Masse of the holy ghost with processions and such other rites, in the time of which Masse,* James Bishop of Londy made a Sermon, taking for his Theame these wordes. Ex probrauit Deus incredulitatem eorum & duritiam: That is, the Lord rebuked theyr misbeliefe and hardnes. &c. This sermon being ended, Ierome of Prage which had abiured,* as is sayd the yeare before, being present thereat, stode vp vpon a certayne bench or fourme. Replying agaynst the foresayd Iames and hys Sermon, alleading and preaching diuers and sundrye thinges, whereupon the Patriarch of Constantinople, one of the commissioners proceeded agaynst him, pronouncing the sentence definitiue, which he had in writing agaynst the sayd Ierome, which sentence being red and approued by the councell (the tenor whereof insueth in his historye) the sayd Ierome was deliuered vnto the secular power, & burned.

The 22. and 23. Sessions contayne no worthy matter, but* onely the placing of the Ambassadors of Alphansus K. of Arragon, & graunting them voyces in the Councell.

In the 24. Session, citatiō was geuen out agaynst Benedict, [unspec 24] keeping with Alphonsus, king of Arragon.

The 25. [unspec 25] Session conteineth nothing but a certayne Comendam geuen to the Church of Olemucensis.*

The 26. Sessiō,* there was nothing els handled, but the vniting and incorporating of the Ambassadors of the king of Nauarre into the Councell, and also concerning the derogation of the priority of voyces.

After this folowed the 27. and 28. sessions,* which were in the yeare 1417. Wherein was intreated the relation and declaratiō,* concerning the cause betwixt Duke Frederick, and the bishop of Trident, and processe geuen out agaynst the sayd Duke, accusing him of sacriledge, and also excommunicating him, for not obeying the admonitiō of the coūcell concerning the vsurpation and deteyning of the city of Tridēt and other possessions from Bishop George, as is afore specified.

In the 29. and 30. Sessions,* Proctors and Notaryes were geuen out in the cause agaynst Pope Benedict, and order decreed vpon his obstinacye, wherein also the withdrawing of the king of Arragon from the same Pope, was recited and approued by the Councell.

In the 31. Session, certayne instrumentes, and speciall [unspec 31] letters monitory were directed from the Councell to a certaine Earle of Italy named Comes virtutum, for laying violent handes vpon Albert, Bishop of Asce, and for bringing him to prison, requiring the sayd Earle vnder paine of interdiction, and excommunication to set the sayd Byshop at liberty. Also an other decree was set forth for the restoring agayne the liberties of the Church of Baron.

In the 32. and 33. Sessions,* the accusation of pope Benedict was renued,* and his obstinacy accused, and witnes brought in, at which thing doing, the Emperour Sigismund was present.

In the 34. Session, the cause of the foresayd Pope was [unspec 34] heard, and processe geuen out agaynst him.

In the 35. Session,* the Ambassadors of the king of Castile were brought in, and vnted to the Councel, and instruments thereof made and read. Also that notwithstanding the othes made to the foresayd Pope, mē might lawfully forsake his obedience.

In the 36. Session, a certayne citation was made and [unspec 36] read against the Pope,* conteyning his depriuation and the sentence agaynst him, & instruments made vpon the same. And whereas this Pope had thundred out his curses, depriuations and excommunicatiōs agaynst them: The sayd Sinode did adnihilate all his doinges.

The 37. Session did renue agayne the accusation of the [unspec 37] foresaid pope, and the sentence definitiue agaynst him was published.

In the 38. Sessiō certaine decrees were made touching [unspec 38] the adnihilating of the penalties of the Ambassadors of king Henry sonne of Alphonsus king of Arragon.* Also an other decree was made touching the reuocatiō of y^e voyces graunted to the Ambassadors of the king of Arragon.

Thus Pope Benedict being deposed and excommunicated [unspec 39] as is aforesayd,39 in the next Sessions following, they addressed themselues to the election of a new Pope, beginning first in the Session to geue out decrees concerning generall Councils, & prouision, for the auoyding of suche like schismes hereafter.* Decreeing euery x. yeare to haue a Page 595 generall Councell, after the two Councils that should folow immediatly after this, of the which the one should be kept within fiue yeares, then next folowing, and the second within seauen yeares after that.

Item, in the same Session was drawn out a forme touching such thing as the Pope should professe and bind himselfe, to obserue at time of his election, of the which forme the order and tenour is this.

I N. elected for Pope, professe with hart and mouth vnto almighty God,* whose Church I take vpon me to gouerne, by his helpe, and to blessed S. Peter the Prince of the Apostles, so long as I shall endure in this fraile and brittle life, firmly to beleue and hold the holy Catholick faith after the traditions of the Apostles, of generall Councils, and of other holy fathers, and namely of the eight generall Councils. Nicene the first, the second of Constantinople, Ephesine the third, Calcedone y^e fourth, the fift and sixe of them in Constantinople, the seauenth of Nice, the eight of Constantinople. And also of the generall Councils of Laterane, Lyons, and Uienne, willing to obserue the same faith vnuiolate euen to the vttermost, and to preach and defend the same, euen to the spending of my life and bloud, and also by all meanes possible to prosecute and obserue the rite of the Sacraments canonically deliuered to the Catholike Church. And this my profession and confession by my commandement, being written out by the Notary of the Arches of the holy Church of Rome, I haue subscribed with mine owne hand, and sincerely with a pure mind and deuout conscience, I offer it vnto thee almighty God vpon such an aulter, &c. In the presence of such witnes. &c. Yeuen. &c.

It was also decided in this Session, that no Prelates should be translated against their wils.

The third of the same moneth, and the same yeare followed the [unspec 40] 40. Session,* wherein certaine decrees were constitute and read, as touching reformatiōs to be made thorough the whole church by the Pope, that next should be, with the Councell, before this Synode should breake vp.

Item, that they should so proceed to the election of the Byshop of Rome, notwithstanding the absence of those Cardinals which were wyth Pope Benedict in Spaine. This done, the order and maner was decreed for the election of the Pope.

After these things thus decreed, in the next Session, which was fourty one, the constitution of Clement the [unspec 41] sixt was read, concerning the order and diet of the Cardinals being in the Conclaue about y^e chusing of the Pope, and vpon the same othes were ministred vnto the Cardinals and other Electours, binding them to obserue and keepe all such things as they should be bound to, during the time of the election.

First, that they should enter into the Conclaue within ten daies after the fourty Session,* which was this present day after sunne set.

Secondly, that euery Cardinall should haue but two seruitours attending vpon him at the most, either of the Laity or Cleargie, as they would themselues.

Thirdly, that they should remaine together in the sayd Cōclaue, without any wal betwixt thē, or any other couer, saue only bare Curtains, if any were disposed to sleepe.

Fourthly, that the Conclaue should so be shut vp, and the entry to the priue chamber to be kept so straightly, that none of them should come in or out, nor any to haue recourse vnto them to talke with them priuely or apertly, nor they to admit any man to come to them, except by the consent of them all, certaine should be called about matters concerning the election.

Fifthly, that no man should send to them either messenger or writings.

Sixtly, that a competent windowe should be assigned vnto them to receiue in their victuals, but that no person might come in thereat.

Seuenthly, that no day after their first ingresse into the Conclaue, beside bread, wine and water, they should haue any more dishes but one of one onely kinde, either of flesh or fish, egges, pottage, made of fish or flesh, not after the deintiest sort, besides salades, cheese, frute, and conserues, whereof there shall be no principall messe made but for sauce and taste.

Eightly, that not one should be compelled to go into the Conclaue: But if they did all refuse to go in, then they should be compelled thereunto.

Ninthly, that such as would go out, might, but if they would all go out before y^e Pope were elect, they should be compelled to go in againe, except such whome infirmitie did excuse, but without the excuse of infirmitie, if anye went out, he should no more be admitted, except they went all out together.

Tenthly, that such as went out by reason of infirmitie, for to be absent, and returne before the election be determined: may be admitted againe into the Conclaue in the same state wherein they shall finde the election to stand.

Further and besides the keepers of the Cōclaue, should also be sworne to see all these premises obserued and kept without fraude or guile, and that they should not streighten the Cardinals and other Electours about the order here taken.

And if the King be there himselfe sitting in his throne of estate, he should receiue the same othe of the Cardinale.

Upon this such as should be electours beside the Cardinals, were chosen.

Furthermore,* for as much as the goods and substance of such as were elect, were accustomed to be geuen & granted vnto such as could catch them: whereupon vnder the pretence of the same, many did inuade the goods of the Cardinals, and others which were in the Conclaue, falsely faining them to be elected which were not to be elected. To stop the greedy rauening of such, a decree also was published in the same Session.

These things thus prepared and set in order, the Patriarch of Constantinople, with the Cardinals and other Archbishops, Bishops, Abbots, Priours, Deanes, Archdeacons, Doctours, with other electours entring into the Conclaue vpō Monday, on Thursday after they had hatched out a Pope, being S. Martins euen, wherupon they named him Martin: This Martin thus being elected, was straight foorth brought in by the Emperour and the Councel, into the Church of Constance, and there inthronised for Pope,* not without great solemnitie & triumph. The xxi. day of the said moneth, this foresaid Martin according to their accustomed pompe was honourably brought in to bee crowned with sumptuous procession from the high Church of Constance vnto the Monasterie of S. Austen. The Emperour on foote, leading his horse by the bridle on the right hand: And the Marques of Bradenburge Prince Electour, likewise leading his horse on the left hand, the Pope himselfe riding in the midst vppon his palfrey.

And thus being brought into the Monastery aforesaid, and so reduced round about againe from thence to the high Church of Constance, was there crowned with all magnificence.

Notwithstanding all this, yet all the trifling and fond vanitie of this Councell more great then wise, did not end thus, for in the next Session which was the xlii. came out [unspec 42] a decree in the name of the Pope and the Councell, discharging the bound of the Emperour and the County Palatine, touching the safe custody of Pope Iohn, who was by bond committed vnto them to be kept in safetie.

In the xliii. Session, certaine other decrees and statutes [unspec 43] were made by Pope Martin in the said Synod.* Annullying and reproouing all the actes and proceedings of the other Popes before during the time of the schisme from the time of Gregory the xi. As in matters concerning exemptions, vnions, frutes and profites of the Church, benefices, simonie, dispensations, tithes and other burdens of the Church. Also concerning the apparell of the Cleargy and such other things.

In the xliiij. Session, the sage fathers of this Councell [unspec 44] were occupied about the determining in what place the next Councell should be kept in, the xlv. Session brake vp and dissolued this Synode.

Now to finish our tedious rehearsall of this Synode. [unspec 45] The Cardinall Umbald by the cōmandement of the Pope and the Councell, with a high and loud voice pronounced these words Domini ite in pace, which is, Lords depart in peace, whereunto the standers by answered, Amen.

Thus the councell being dissolued, Frier Iohn Bishop of Cathan by the consent and commandement of the Pope and the Councell, went vp into the Pulpit to make a Sermon, taking for his theame: Vos autem tristitiam habetis: iterum autem videbo vos, & gaudebit cor vestrū. You are now in sadnes: I will see you againe, and then your harts shall reioice. The which collation being ended, an other Cardinall named Anthony, was sent vp by the Pope and the Councell,* with this proclamation, first to dismisse the Synode, and to geue euery man leaue to depart home. Also to declare the Popes indulgence vnto them, who by the authoritie of God almighty, had granted to them all and euery one pre•ent at that Councell, full absolution once in their life, so that euery one within two moneths after the hearing of this indulgence, should procure the same in forme of writing. Also another indulgence was graunted in like maner of plenary remission at the hour of death, Page 596 and that was vnderstand as well of the houshold, as of the maisters themselues. But vnder this condition, that from the time of notification of the same, they should fast by the space of one whole yeare euery Friday, for the absolution in their life time. And for the absolution at the houre of death, to fast the same Friday another yeare, except they had some lawfull impediment to the contrary, so that after the second yeare,* they should fast vnto their liues end, or else to do some other good worke. The which beeing in this maner proclaimed, the Synode brake vp, and euery man departed home.

*The number of the foriners resorting to this Counsell both spirituall and temporall, was 60500. whereof, the number of Archbishops and Bishops was 346.

Abbots and Doctours 564.

Secular men

- Princes.
- Dukes.
- Earles.
- Knightes.
- Esquiers.

16000.

Besides common women, belonging to the same Councell 450.*

Barbers 600. Minstrels, Cookes, and Iesters 320.

So that the whole multitude which were vewed to be in the Towne of Constance betweene Easter and Whitsontide, were numbred to be 60500. strangers and forreners at that Councell.

Here is to be noted that in this Councell of Constance, nothing was decreed or enacted worthy of memorie,* but this only, that the Popes authoritie is vnder the Councell, and that the Councell ought to iudge the Pope.

*And as touching the Communion in both kindes, although the Councell did not denie, but that it was vsed by Christ and his Apostles, yet notwithstanding by the same Councell it was decreed to the contrary.

Hetherto wee haue comprehended the order and discourse of this Councell, with the actes and Sessions concerning the same: which Councell although it was principally thought to be assembled, for quieting of the schisme betweene the three Popes: yet notwithstanding, a great part thereof was for the cause of the Bohemians, and especially for Iohn Hus: As appeared by their preparation before the Councell. For before the Councell began, the Emperour Sigismund aforesaid, sent certain Gentlemen Bohemians, which were of his owne houshold, giuing them in charge to bring Iohn Hus Bachelor of Diuinitie, vnto the saide Councell, and that vnder his safe conduct, the meaning and intent thereof was, that Iohn Hus should purge and cleare himselfe of the blame which they had laid against him: and for the more better assurance, the Emperour did not only promise him safe conduct that he might come freely vnto Constance: but also to returne againe into Boheme without fraud or interruption, he promised also to receiue him vnder his protection and vnder sauegard of the whole Empire. For the same onely cause the Emperour sent him afterwards the said safeconducts double written, both in Latine and Almaine, the forme whereof doth heereafter ensue.

Sigismund by the grace of God King of the Romaines, of Hungary and Denmarke, Croatia, &c. To all Princes as well Ecclesiasticall as Seculer, Dukes, Marqueses, and Earles, Barrons, Captaynes,* Borovvmaisters, Iudges, and Gouvernours, officers of townes, burgages and villages, and vnto all rulers of the comminalty, and generally to all the subiects of our Empire, to whome these letters shall come, grace and all goodnes.

Wee charge and commaund you all, that you haue respect vnto Iohn Hus, the which is departed out of Boheme, to come vnto the generall Councell, the which shall be celebrate and holden very shortly at the towne of Constance. The which Iohn Hus we haue receiued vnder our protection and sauegard of the whole Empire, desiring you that you will chearefully receyue hym when he shall come towards you, and that you intreat and handle hym gently, shewing hym fauour and good will, and shew hym pleasure in all thyngs, as touchyng the forwardnes, ease, and assurance of hys iourney, as well by land as by water.

Moreouer, we will that he and all his company with hys carriage and necessities, shall passe throughout all places, passages, portes, bridges, lands, gouernances, Lordships, liberties, cities, townes, bourgages, castels and villages, and all other your dominions, wythout payeng of anye manner of imposition or dane money, peage, tribute, or anye other manner of tolle whatsoever it be: we will also that you suffer hym to passe, rest, tarie, and to sojourne at libertie, without dooing vnto hym anye maner of impeachment, or vexation, or trouble, and that if neede shall so require, you do prouide a faythfull company to conduct hym withall, for the honour and reuerence which you owe vnto our imperiall maiesty. Yeuen at Spire the xviiij. of October, in the yeare of our Lord GOD 1414.

By this it may appeare that this safe conduct was graunted not in the time of the Councell by the Bishops, but before the Councell by the Emperour: who was or ought to be the principall ordeiner and directer of the Councell vnder God. Now whether the Bishops in breaking and adnulling this promise of the Emperour, against the Emperours mind,* because the discussion therof belongeth Ad materiam iuris, non facti, being a matter rather or lawe then of story, I will differ to reason this case with maister Cope, to such time, as may be more conuenient to the full tractation thereof.

Notwithstanding,* briefly to touch and passe, let vs consider part of the reasons of the saide Cope, how friuolous and false they be, and easie to be refelled. What (saith he) if he preached by the way comming vp? First that is false, vide infra page. What (saith he) if he stood obstinate in his heresie? What if he sought to escape away after hys comming vp? To this the Lords of Boheme doo aunswere, that his safeconduct was broken, and he imprisoned, not onely before he attempted to escape, or before hee was condemned for an hereticke, but also before he was heard of the Councell what he was. Vide infr. page. Further, where Cope sayth that the generall Councell was aboue the Emperour, and hath power in case of heresie to breake publique leagues and graunts: to that I say, that this safeconduct stood not only vpon the Emperour, but also vpon the consent of the Pope himselfe, vide infr. page. And admit that to be true, that the councell had power to make this decree, to breake promise wyth hereticks: yet this can not be denied, but that Iohn Hus was condemned and iudged before that decree in the xix. Session was made. Finally, when Cope hath prooued by what scripture the councils haue power to defeat the authoritie of their Emperours in such secular causes touching safeconductes, and outward safetie: then will I answere him more fully heerein. But to the purpose againe of the story.

Iohn Hus seeing so many faire promises,* and the assurance which the Emperour had geuen vnto him, sent answere vnto the Emperour that he would come vnto the Councell: But before hee departed out of the Realme of Boheme, and specially out of the towne of Prage, he did write certaine billes long inough afore, as well in Latine as in the Bohemian language, and Almaine, and caused them to be set and fastened vpon the gates of the Cathedrall Churches and parish Churches, Cloysters and Abbayes, signifieng vnto them all, that he would go to the generall Councell at Constance, wherof if any man haue any suspition of his doctrine, that he should declare it before the Lord Conrade, or Bishop of Prage, or if he had rather, at the generall Councell, for there he would render and giue vp vnto euery one, and before them all, an accompt and reason of his fayth. The example of his letters and intimations set vp were these, the copie where of here followeth.

The Letters of Iohn Hus, set vp in common places of the Citie of Prage.

MAister Iohn Hus,* Bachelor of Diuinitie, will appeare before the most reuerend father the Lord Conrade, Archbyshop of Prage, and Legate of the Apostolicke seate in the next conuocation of all the Prelates and Cleargy of the kyngdome of Boheme, being ready alwayes to satisfie all men which shall require him to giue a reason of hys fayth and hope that he holdeth. And to heare and see all such as will lay vnto his charge either any stubburnes of errour or heresie, that they should write in their names there, as is required both by Gods law and mans. And if so be that they could not lawfully prooue any stubburnes of errour or heresie against him, that then they should suffer the like punishmentes that he should haue had, vnto whome altogether he will aunswer at the next generall Councell at Constance, before the Archbyshop and the Prelates, and according to the decrees and Canons of the holy Fathers, shew foorth his innocencie in the name of Christ.

Dated the Sonday next after the feast of Sainct Bartholomew.

The Intimations folowing, were drawne out of the Bohemian tongue.

I Maister Iohn Husnerz,* do signifie vnto all men, that I am ready to come and stand before the face of my Lorde the Archbishop, and to aunswere to all things whereof I am falsely accused in the next conuocation of Bachelers, Page 597 and chefly to this point, that in many places they doo report me an hereticke, not hauing respect vnto iustice or to law, neither yet to my merits or deserts. Therefore since that you which do neuer cease to selaunder and backebite me with your words, doo vnderstand and knowe these things, come foorth openly before the face and presence of the Lord Archbyshop, and with an open mouth, declare and shew foorth what false doctrine or other things you haue heard me teach contrary to Catholicke fayth, and if that I shall be found faultie in neuer so small a matter, contrary or against the faith of Christ, or in any false doctrine, and that I do choose that or other things contrary to the faith of Christ,* then I will hold my peace, and suffer punishment as an hereticke. And if there be no man that will resist against me, or accuse me in this point, once againe I say vnto you, that I am ready to appeare at Constance in the famous congregation, to the end that I may stand in the company of the Diuines, euen before the face of the Pope. Therefore whosoeuer knoweth any false doctrine contrary to the faith of Christ in me, let him come thether and shew it forth boldly, if he haue any thing to lay against me, and for my part I will not be slacke, if I may vnderstand or knowe it, to answere as well to small as great, as touching the truth which I haue receiued of God, and desire to be defended. All you good men therefore which loue the truth, say now whether by these my words I do thinke or go about any thing, either contrary to the law of God or man. If I be not admitted then to be heard, be it knowne and manifest vnto all men, that it hapneth not thorough my fault the same day.

This Epistle which followeth, was set vpon the gates of the Kings Palace, translated into Latin, out of the Bohemian tongue.

* VNto the Kings maiestie, the Queene, and to all such as are of his Councell, and to all other Rulers and Magistrates, which now are in the Kings Court, I Iohn Hus, doo signifie and publish; that I haue vnderstand, not by any vayne rumor or tale, that there be letters brought from the Pope to the Kings Maiestie, the contents whereof, is this: That the Kyngs Maiestie shoulde bring to passe, that the heretickes which were now lately sprong vp in hys kyngdome and dominions, should not take any firme or strong roote. For so much as without any desert, as I trust by Gods grace, the fame or noise is sproong and blowne abroad: it shall bee our part to foresee and take heed, that neyther the Kyngs Maiestie, neyther the noble Kyngdome of Boheme, should bee driuen to beare or suffer anye reproche on slaunder for mee. Wherefore now of late I haue sent my letters too and fro, whych I haue with great labour and diligence, caused to be openly set vp, to thys intent, that I myght thereby cause the Archbyshop to be carefull and diligent about the matter, signifyeng openly, that if there were any man in all Boheme, which did knowe mee to be a follower of anye false or corrupt doctrine, that he should professe hys name in the Archbyshop hys Court, and there to shew foorth and declare what he thought. And for asmuch as there would none be found or come foorth, which would accuse me, the Archbyshop commaunded me and my procurers to depart in peace. Wherefore I require and desire the Kings Maiestie, which is the defender of the truth, also the Queene and theyr Counsellers, and all other Rulers and Magistrates, that they woud geue me a faithfull testimoniall of this matter. For somuch as I haue oftentimes willed and attempted this, and no man hath eyther accused mee or troubled mee. I doo it moreouer to bee knowne vnto all Boheme, and to all nations, that I wil bee present euen at the first time before the Councell of Constance, in the most famous place, in the presence of the Pope, the Pope beeyng president. And finally, in the presence of all others which will come to that most famous place, and that whosoever hath any suspition of me, that I haue eyther taught or defended anye thyng contrarye vnto the fayth of Christ, let hym come thether also, let hym declare there before or in the presence of the Pope, and all the Doctors of Diuinitie, what erroneous or false doctrine I haue at any tyme followed or holden. More, if hee shall conuince me of any error, or prooue that I haue taught anye thing contrarie vnto the Christian fayth, I will not refuse to suffer whatsoever punishment shall be due for an hereticke. But I hope and trust euen from the bottome of my hart, that God wyll not geue the victory to vnfaithfull and vnbeleueing men, the which do willingly kicke and spurne against the truth.

The same time Iohn Hus sente his procurers to the Lorde Byshop of Nazareth, ordeyned by the Apostolicke Sea Inquisitour of heresie of the Citie and Dioces of Prage, requiring hym, that if he had found any error in him, he would declare it openly. But the sayd Bishop before the sayd procurour, and the publike Notary, wyth many other credible witnesses aunswered, that he had often talked with Iohn Hus, and that he neuer knew anye thing in him, but as becommeth a godly and faithful man, and this his testimonie of Iohn Hus, he approoued by his letters, the copie whereof is heere vnder written.

The Byshop of Nazareth hys testimoniall.

WE Nicholas by the grace of God Byshop of Nazareth,* and Inquisitor, specially deputed by the Apostolicke seate for heresies both of the Citie and Dioces of Prage, by these presents we do it to be knowne vnto all men, that wee in times past haue often communed and talked with that honorable man, mayster Iohn Hus, Bachelor of Diuinitie, of the famous vniuersitie of Prage, and haue had diuers and sondry conferences with hym, both of the Scriptures and diuers other matters, and in all hys sayings, doyngs, and behauour, we haue prooued and found him to be a faithfull and a Catholicke man, finding no maner of euill, sinister, or by any meanes, erroneous doings in him vnto thys present.* We doo witnesse and protest moreouer, how the sayd Iohn Hus, of late, in the Cathedrall Church of Prage, and in other both Collegiate and Parish Churches, and in the Colledges of the Vniuersitie of Prage, and in the gates and porches of the most noble Prince and Lord, the Lord Wenceslaus King of Romaines and of Boheme. Also in the gates of the reuerend father the Lord Conrade Archbyshop of Prage, Legate of the Apostolicke Sea, and Chauncelour of the Vniuersitie of Prage, and of other Princes and Barons, then being in the Citie of Prage, hath set vp his letters written both in Latine, and in the Bohemian tongue, containing sententially in effect, how the foresayd Mayster Iohn Hus, would appeare before the reuerend father the Lord Conrade, the foresayd Archbyshop of Prage, and all the Prelates and Cleargy of the kingdome of Boheme, that shall bee congregated and called together by the sayd Archbyshop, at the day appoynted in the sayd Citie of Prage, readie alwayes to satisfie euery man that shall desire and require him to shew a reason of his fayth and hope that he holdeth, and to see and heare all and euery one which could prooue any obstinacie of error or heresie, lawfully against him, vnder the payne to receyue the like punishment: vnto whome altogether he would by Gods helpe, aunswere in the Councell of Constance, which was now at hand, before the sayd Lord Archbyshop and vs, with all other Prelates, and there in Christes name, according to the decrees and Canons of the holy Fathers, to declare and shew foorth his innocencie. After the which letters as is aforesayd by the sayd maister Iohn Hus openly set vp, there did no man appeare before vs, the which would accuse the sayd Maister Iohn Hus, of any error, eyther of any heresie. For the euident witnesse of all whyche things, we haue commaunded these present letters to be made, and confirmed the same with the setting too of our seale.

Dated in Prage xxx of August, an. M. iiij. C. xiiij.

Vpon which matter also, a publicke instrument was drawne, testified with the hand and seale of the publicke Notary, named Michel Pruthatietz. The copie of whych instrument heere vnder followeth.

An Instrument of Recognition, or protestation of the Lord inquisitor of Heresies.

IN the name of God, Amen. In the yeare of hys natiuitie 1414. the thirtith of August, in the fift yeare of the Byshoprike of the most holy Father in Christ Iohn by the grace of GOD Pope, the three and twentieth of that name, in the vppermost parlor of the house of the famous man the Lord Peter of Zwogsta, called Znirglits, maister of the mynte, of the most famous Prince and Lord, the Lord Wenceslaus, Kyng of Romaines and of Boheme, in the greater Citie of Prage, about the Abbey of Sainct Iames the Apostle, in the presence of me the publique Notary heere vnder written, and certayne witnesses heere within written, specially called for that purpose. There was personally present Mayster Iohn Iessenitz, mayster of Art, procuror in the name of the honourable man, Mayster Iohn Hus, Bachelor, formed in Diuinitie of the Vniuersitie of Prage. He most humblie and earnestly requyred the reuerende father in Christ and Lord, Nicholas Byshop of Nazareth, Inquisitour of Heresies for the Citie and diocese of Prage, specially appoynted by the Apostolike Sea, beeing there also present, sayeng: Reuerend father, doe you knowe any error or heresie in Mayster Iohn Husnetz, otherwise called Hus. The which sayd Lord Nicholas, not compelled or constrained but of his owne will and accord, freely and openly did there recognise, sayeng these or the like words in the Bohemian tongue.

I haue often and many times bene conuersant with Mayster Iohn Hus, and haue eaten and dronke with him: also I haue bene Page 598 often present at his Sermons, and diuers of his collations which he hath made vpon diuers places of the scripture, and I neuer found or perceiued in him any error or heresie, but in all his words and deedes I haue found him alwaies a true and a Catholike man, neither haue I found any thing that doth sauour of any error or heresie.

Againe, the said maister Iohn his procurer, in the behalfe as aboue, required and asked the said Lord Nicholas Byshop and inquisitour, whether any man haue accused the said maister Iohn Hus of any heresie before him, being inquisitour for heresie, and hath conuicted him of heresie. He aunswered, that since the time he knew Iohn Hus, and that he was made inquisitour for heresie in the Citie and diocese of Prage (as is afore saide) neuer anie man accused, either conuincing the said maister Iohn Hus of any heresie before him vnto this present time. Adding moreouer, that he the said maister Iohn Hus did openly set vp his letters patents this present yeare afore said, in the said moneth of August, vpon the porches of the Cathedrall Church of Prage, and other Collegiate and parish Churches of the Citie of Prage, and vpon the gates of our saide Lord, our Lord the King, and the Archbyshop of Prage, containing in them this effect, how that he would appeare before Conrade Archbishop of Prage, and all the Prelates and Cleargy of the kingdome of Boheme, which should be congregated and called together at a certaine day of the moneth aforesaid, ready alwaies to satisfie all men as touching the faith and hope which he helde, and to see and heare all and singuler that woulde laye anye obstinacie of error or heresie vnto him, that they should determine themselues there, to suffer the like punishment, according to the extremitie both of Gods lawe and mans lawe, vnto whome altogether he would answere in his owne right before the saide Archbishop of Prage, and the sayd Lord Nicholas, Bishop and inquisitour aforesaide, and the Prelates, euen in the next generall Councell of Constance, and there according vnto the Canons and decrees of the holy Fathers, declare and shewe foorth his vprightness and innocencie, vpon all and singuler, which proceedings, maister Iohn de Iesenitz procurer, and in the procurours name or behalfe as afore, required and desired, that he might haue one or many publique instruments made vnto him by me the publique Notary heere vnder written. These things were done the yeare, indiction, day, monthe, houre, place, and byshopricke, as is afore saide, in the presence of these noble and famous men, the Lords William de Zwirgelitz, Baron of the Kingdome of Boheme, Peter his sonne, the Lord Hlawaczion de Renow, likewise Barron, Wenceslaus de Lunarx, Vnssone de Miekoniz, Burgrau of the Castell of Liechtenburg, Cztiborius de Bodanetz Esquier, and William de Dupore Knight of the saide diocese of Prage, with manye other woorthy and credible witnesses, which were specially desired and required vnto the premisses. And I Michaell, sometimes the sonne of Nicholas de Prachatitz, of the diocese of Prage, and by the Imperiall authoritie, publique Notary, was present, with the witnesses afore named, at the affaires afore said, at the request, demaund, aunswere, and petition, and all and singuler the dooings within written, and did see and heare all these things to be done in foresayd maner and fourme. But being busied with other matters, I haue caused this to be faithfully drawne and written, and subscribing the same with mine owne hand, haue published and reduced it into this forme, and haue signed it with my seale and name, accustomed being called and required to beare witnes of all and singuler the premisses.

After this, as all the Barons of Boheme were assembled in the Abbay of Saint Iames, about the affayres of the Realme, where as the Archbyshop of Prage was also present: There the sayde Iohn Hus presented supplications: by the whiche he most humbly desired the Barons, that they woulde shewe hym thys fauour towards the sayde Archbyshop, that if the sayd Archbyshop did suspect him of any errour or heresie, that he woulde declare it openly, and that he was ready to endure and suffer correction for the same at hys hands. And if that he had founde or perceiued no such thing in hym, that hee would then gyue hym a testimoniall thereof, through the which he being as it were armed, he might the more freely go vnto Constance. The sayde Archbishop confessed openly before all the assembly of Barons,* that he knew not that the sayd Iohn Hus was culpable or faulty in anye crime or offence, and thys was hys onely counsell, that the sayd Iohn Hus should purge himselfe of the excommunication he had incurred: this report, which the Archbishop had giuen of Iohn Hus, doth appeare by the letters which the Barons of Boheme sent vnto the Emperour Sigismund by the said Hus in the towne of Constance.

Finally, all the Prelates and Cleargie assembled together in the Towne of Prage, in the Archbishop hys Court, where as appeared personally the worshipfull maister Iohn Iesenitz, Doctour of decretals and procurer, in the name and behalfe of the honourable man maister Iohn Hus, requiring that either the sayde mayster Iohn Hus,* or that hee in the name and behalfe of hym, might bee suffered to come into the sayde Archbishops Court, to the presence of the Archbishop, and the Prelates which were there congregated together, for so much as maister Iohn Hus is readye to satisfie all men which shall require hym to shew any reason of his faith or hope, which he holdeth, and to see and heare all and singular, whych were there gathered together, that is to saye, the Lord Archbyshop and Prelates, or any of them, whych would lay any maner of obstinacie, or errour, or heresie vnto hym, that they should there write in their names, and according both vnto Gods lawe and mans, and the Canon law, prepare themselues to suffer lyke punishment, if they could not lawfully prooue any obstinacie of errour or heresie against him: vnto whome altogether he would, by Gods helpe, aunswere before the sayd Archbyshop and the Prelates in the next generall Councell holden at Constance, and stand vnto the law, and according to the Canons and Decretals of the holy Fathers, shewe foorth and declare hys innocencie in the name of Christ: Vnto the which maister Iohn of Iessenetz Doctour, one called Ulricus Swabe of Swabenitz, Marshall of the sayde Archbyshop, comming foorth of the sayd Court, did vtterly deny vnto the sayd maister Doctour and his partie all manner of ingresse and entrance into the Court, and to the presence of the Archbishop aforesayd, and of the Prelates there gathered together. Pretending that the Archbyshop, with the Prelates aforesayd, were occupied about the Kings affaires, requiring the sayde maister Doctour, that hee woulde tary in some place without the sayd Court, that when the Archbyshop and the Prelates had finished the Kings affaires, hee might then returne, and haue libertie to come into the Court there. The said maister Iohn Hus, and the Doctour of lawe tarried a while, intreating to bee admitted into the Archbishops Courte. But seeing hee coulde preuayle nothyng, he made there a solemne protestation of hys request, that both hee and also maister Iohn Hus and his part, could not be suffered to come into the Archbishops Court, to the presence of the Archbyshop and the Prelates. Requiring of the foresayde Notarie, publicke instruments to be made of the same, which also was done.

And these were the things which were done, before Iohn Hus tooke hys iourney to the generall Councell of Constance, the which I minded briefly to rebarse, whereunto I will also annexe somewhat, as touching his iourney thetherwards.

About the Ides of October 14.14. Iohn Hus being accompanied with two noble Gentlemen, that is to wit, Wencelat of Duba, and Iohn of Clum, he parted from Prage,* and tooke hys iourney towards Constance. And in euery place as hee passed, he notified hys presence by hys letters which he sent abroade, and especially in euery good towne or citie of name, the tenour whereof ensueth.

The copy of the letters which Iohn Hus set vp in the common places of the Cities which he passed thorough going to the Councill.

MAister Iohn Hus goeth now vnto Constance,*there to declare his fayth which he hath hitherto holden, and euen at this present doth hold, and by Gods helpe will defend and keepe euen vnto death. Therefore euen as he hath manifested throughout all the kingdome of Boheme by his letters and intimations, willing before his departure to haue satisfied and giuen an accompt of his fayth vnto euery man which should object or lay anie thing against him in the generall conuocation holden in the Archbishop of Prages Court: So likewise he doth manifest and signifie, that if there be any man in this noble and Imperiall Citie, the which will impute or lay any error or heresie vnto him, that he should prepare himselfe to come vnto the Councill, for so much as the sayd maister Iohn Hus is ready to satisfie euery man at the sayd Councill, which shall lay any thing vnto hys charge as touching his faith.

In all Cities as he passed by,* and principally when he was parted out of Boheme, and entred into Almaine, a great number of people did come vnto him, and he was very gently receiued and entertained of hys hostes thorough all the townes of Germany, and specially of the Citizens and burgeses, and oftentimes of the Curates. Page 599 Insomuch, as the sayd Hus did confesse in a certayne Epis•le, that hee founde in no place so great enimies as in Boheme. And if it happened that there were any brute or noise before of his comming, the streetes were alwayes full of people, which were desirous to see Iohn Husse and gratifie him:* and amongst all other specially at Nurremberge, where as certaine Merchaunts which went before, certified the Citizens of his comming. In the same Citie there were many Curates which came vnto hym, desiring that they might talke with him secretly aparte, vnto whome he aunswered, that he loued much rather to pronounce and shew foorth his mind and opinion openly before all men, than in huggermugger, for he would kepe nothing close nor hidden. So after dinner vntill it was night,* he spake before the Priests and Senatours, and diuers other Citizens, insomuch that they all had hym in great estimation and reuerence one onely doctor except, which was a Charterhouse Monke, and the Curate of Sainct Sebaulde, which did improue all that he had said.

*The twentieth day after that, he parted out of the towne of Prage, which was the third day of Nouember, he came vnto Constance, and lodged at an honest matrons house being a widow named Faith, in saint Galles streete.

The morrow after, the Gentleman maister Iohn de Clum, and maister Henry Latzemboge, went to speake with the Pope, and certified him, that Iohn Husse was come,* whome they had brought to Constance to the generall Counsell, vnder the Emperour his safe conduct, desiring him also that he on his part would graunt the sayd Iohn Husse libertie to remaine in Constance, without a•ue trouble, vexation, or interruption: vnto whome, the Pope aunswered, that albeit that Iohn Husse had killed his brother, yet would he go about as much as in him lay, that no outrage or hurt should be done vnto him, during his abode in the towne of Constance.

In this meane time, the greatest aduersary that Iohn Husse had, named maister Steuen Palletz, the which was also a Bohemian,* was come vnto Constance. But hys companion maister Stanislaus Znoma, was not yet passed the borders of Boheme, when he was stricken with an impostume, whereof he died. As soone as the said Palletz was come to Constance, he did associate vnto him one Michael de Causis, the which had before falsly accused and blamed the saide Iohn Husse. And this may not be forgotten, that the said Palletz had bene familiarly conuersant and acquainted with the said Iohn Husse from hys youth vpward,* but after that there was a bull brought vnto Prage from Pope Iohn the 23. against the king of Apulia, named Ladislaus, the sayd Iohn Hus withstood it openly, for so much as he saw that it was wicked and nought.

And as touching the said Palletz, albeit that he had cōfessed at a certaine banquet in the presence of the said Iohn Hus that the said Gull was contrary to al equity & right:,* yet notwithstanding forsomuch as he was obliged & boūd vnto the Pope by meanes of certain benefices receiued at his hand, he mainteined and defended the said bull against Iohn Hus.* And this was the cause of the discord and falling out betwene thē. As for Michaell de Caulis the companion of maister Palletz, he was sometime the Curate of new Prage, but he not being content therewith, but seking after a further pray, dreamed and imagined out a new denise how to attayne vnto it, for he made a semblaunce that he had found out a new inuention or meane, whereby the mines of gold in Gilory, which were perished and lost, might be renued and set on worke againe. By this means he did so much with the king wenceslaus, that he did put a great summe of mony into his hands, to do that withall which he had promised.

This honest man after he had laboured and trauelled certaine daies about it,* and perceiuing that he brought nothing to passe, and that by that meanes he was vtterly in despaire of his purpose, hee conueied himselfe priuily out of the Realme of Boheme with the rest of the money, and withdrewe himselfe as a worthy bird for such a nest, into the court of Rome. Such a man of such conditions was easily corrupt with mony, and that by the aduersaries of the said Hus, & promised thē to do what he coulde for them, the which hee did shortly after. The two •olly roisters Steuen Palletz, & Michaell de Causis drew out certaine articles against y^e said Husse, sayeng that they had gathered them out of his own writings, and specially out of his treatise, which he had written of the Church. They troited vp & downe, hither & thither, taking great paines to shewe the saide articles vnto the Cardinals,* Bishops, Monks, and such others of that sort, doing them also to vnderstand, that there were other matters of greater importance which the said I. Hus had committed and done against the holy constitutions and other ordinances of the Pope and the Church: which if neede were, they said they would propound before y^e Councell. Through y^e kindling of this their fire, they did so incense the Cardinals & all the Priests, that all they with one mind and consent thought to cause the good man to be taken and laid hands on.

The 26. day after the said Hus was come to Constāce, during all which tune, he was occupied in reading, writing, and familiar talke with his friends, the Cardinals which through the instigation and motion of Palletz and Michael de Causis, sent two Bishops, to wit, the Bishop of Augusta, and of Trident, and with them the Borowmaister of the towne of Constance, and a certaine knight, to the place where Iohn Hus lodged about dinner time, which should make report vnto him, that they were sent by the Pope and his Cardinals, to aduertise him that hee should come to render some knowledge or witnes of hys doctrine before them, as he had oftentimes desired, and that they were readie for to heare him.

Unto whome Iohn Husse aunswered, I am not come for no such intent,* as to defend my cause particularly before the Pope & his Cardinals: protesting y^t I neuer desired no such thing, but that I would willingly appeare before the whole assemble of the Councell, and there answer for my defence openly, without any feare or doubt, vnto all such things as should be demanded or required of me. Notwithstanding said he, forasmuch as you require me so to do, I will not refuse to go with you before the Cardinals. And if it happen that they euill entreate or handle me: yet neuertheles I trust in my Lord Iesus, that he wil so comfort and strengthen me, that I shall desire much rather to die for his glory sake, then to denie the veritie and truth which I haue learned by his holy scriptures. Wherefore it came to passe that the Bishops being instant vpon him, and not shewing any outward semblance, that they bare any malice or hatred against him in their harts, albeit they had priuily laid garrisons both in the house, where they were assembled, and also in other houses: Iohn Hus tooke his horse which he had at his lodging, and went vnto the Court of the Pope and the Cardinals.

When he was come thither and had saluted the Cardinals, they began to speake to him in this sorte:* we haue heard many reports of you, the which if they be true, are in no case to be suffered. For mē say that you haue taught great and manifest errors, and contrary and against the doctrine of the true Church, and that you haue sowed your errors abroad through all the Realme of Boheme,* by a long space or time, wherefore we haue caused you to bee called hether before vs, that we might vnderstande and know how the matter standeth.

Unto whom Iohn Hus answered in few words: Reuerend fathers,* you shall vnderstand y^t I am thus minded and affectioned, that I would rather choose to die, then I should be found culpable of one only error, much lesse of many & great errors: for this cause I am the more willingly come vnto the generall Councell which is here appointed, to shewe my selfe ready euen with all my hart to receiue correctiō, if any man can proue any errors in me. The Cardinals aunswered him againe, that his sayengs pleased them very well, and vpon that they went theyr way, leauing the said Iohn Hus with maister Iohn de Clum, vnder the gard and keeping of the armed men.

In the meane season, they did suborne and furnish out a certaine diuine,* a Frier Franciscane, a subtile and craftie man, and a malicious hypocrite, for to question with the said Iohn Hus, which was compassed round about with armed men.* This man drawing neare, in his monkishe gesture, sayd: Reuerend maister, I a simple and rude ideot am come vnto you for to learne, for I haue hard many strange and contrary things against y^e catholike fayth, to be ascribed vnto you, the which doo diuersly mooue my mind, being wholly inclined to the truth. Wherefore I do desire you, euen for the loue which you heare vnto y^e truth, and to all good and godly men, that you woulde teache me most simple and miserable mā, some certaintie and truth. And first men say that you hold opinion after the cōsecration and pronuntiation of the words in the Sacrament of the altar,* there remaineth only materiall bread. I. Husse aunswered, that it was falsly attributed and imputed to him. Then said he: I pray you is not this your opinion? No verely said Iohn Hus, I do not so thinke of it. When the Monke asked this question the thirde time, Maister Iohn de Clum being somewhat mooued with him, sayde: why art thou so importunate vpon him? Uerely if anye man had affirmed or denied any thing vnto me but once, I woulde haue beleueed him. And thou, albeit hee hath Page 600 shewed thee his mind so often, yet ceasest not to trouble him. Then saide the Monke: gentle maister I pray you pardon me a poore idiot and simple Frier, surely I did it of a good mind & intēt, being willing & desirous to learne. This Frier put forth another question vnto him, protesting his simplicitie and ignorance, what maner of vntie of the Godhead & manhood was in the person of Christ? When I. Husse had heard this questiō, he turned himselfe vnto Maister Iohn de Clum in the Bohemian language said: * truly this Frier is not simple as he doth pretend, for he hath propoūded vnto me a very hard question. And afterward turning himselfe to y^c frier, he said vnto him: brother, you say that you are simple, but as I haue heard of you, I perceiue very well, that you are double and craftie, & not simple. It is not so verely said the frier. Well, sayde Iohn Hus, I will cause you well to vnderstand that it is so: For as touching the simplicitie of a man, it is required in things that concerne ciulitie & maners, that the spirite, the vnderstāding, the hart, the words, & the mouth should agree together, and I do not perceiue that this is in you. There is in your mouth a certaine semblance of simplicitie, the which would very well declare you to be an ideot and simple, but your deedes shew plainly and euidently a great subtiltie and craft in you, with a great quicknes and liuelines of wit, in that you haue proponed vnto me so hard and difficult a question.

Notwithstanding I will not feare to shew you my mind in this question. And when he had made an end, the Monke gaue him great thanks for his gentlenes and so departed. After that, the Popes garrison which were about the said Iohn Hus, told him, that this frier was called Maister Didace,  who was esteemed and counted the greatest and most subtile diuine in all Lumbardy. Oh said Hus that I had knowne that afore, I would haue handled him after another sort and fashion,  but I would to God they were all such, then through the help and aide of the holy Scriptures, I would feare none of them. In this maner the said Hus and maister Iohn de Clum, were left vnder the keeping of these men of Armes, vntill foure of the clocke at after noone. After which time the Cardinals assembled againe in the Popes Court, to deuise and take counsaile what they should do with Iohn Hus. Then Steuen Palletz & Michaell de Causis, with diuers other of their adherents, made earnest sute that he should not be let go at libertie againe, and hauing the fauor of the iudges on their part, they bragged vp and downe in a maner as they had bin mad men, * and mocked the said Iohn Husse: sayeng, now we will hold thee well enough, thou art vnder our power and iurisdiction, and shalt not depart, vntill such time as thou hast paid the vttermost farthing.

A little afore night, they sent f Prouost of the Romain court vnto M. Iohn de Clum, to shew him that he might returne to his lodging, for as for I. Hus, they had otherwise prouided for him, whē M. Iohn de Clum hard these newes, he was wonderfully displeased, forsomuch as through their crafts, subtilties & glosing words, they had so trained this good man into their snares, whereupon he went vnto t Pope, declaring vnto him all that was done, most humbly beseeching him, that he would call to remembrance the promise which he had made vnto him and maister Henry Latzembog, * and that he would not so lightly falsifie and breake his faith and promise. The Pope aunswered that all these things were done without his cōsent or commandement, and saide further to maister Clum apart, what reason is it that you should impute this deede vnto mee, seeing that you knowe well inough that I my selfe am in the hands of these Cardinals and Bishops?

In mine opiniō, for so much as Pope Iohn feared that, which in deed did after follow, that he should be depriued of his dignitie, he thought to win the fauour of these Herodian Cardinals and Bishops,* by betraieng this good man vnto thē. So the said M. Clum returned very pensifull & sory: he complained very fore both priuely & openly, of the iniury and outrage that the Pope had done, but all profited nothing. After this, the saide I. Hus was led by the officers to the chapter house of the great Church of Constance, where hee was kept prisoner by the space of right daies, frō thence he was caried vnto the Iacobines, hard by the riuer of Rhine, and was shut vp in the prison of the Abbey, the which was hard by the Bogardes.

After he had bene inclosed there a certaine time, he fell sore sicke of an agew,* by meanes of the stench of the place, and became so weake, that they despaired of his life. And for feare least this good mā should die in prison, as others are wont to do, the Pope sente vnto him certaine of hys Phisitions for to cure and helpe him. In the midst of his sicknes his accusers made importunate sute to the principals of the Councell, that the sayde Iohn Hus might bee condemned, and presented vnto the Pope, these Articles heere vnderwritten.

Articles presented against Iohn Husse.

First he doth erre about the Sacraments of the church,* and specially about the Sacramet of the body of Christ, for so much as he hath openly preached, that it ought to be ministred openly vnto the people vnder both kinds, that is to say, the body and bloud. This article is euident, for somuch as his disciples at this instant in Prage, do minister the same in both kinds.* Moreouer, it is affirmed by diuers, that he hath taught both in the schooles and in the Church, or at the least that he doth hold this opinion, that after the words of consecration pronounced vpon the aulter, there remaineth still materiall bread in the Sacrament, this article shall be knowne by his examination.

Secondly, he doth erre, as touching the ministers of the church, forsomuch as he saith that they cannot cōsecrate or minister the Sacraments when they are in mortall sinne. This article shall likewise be known by his examination. Notwithstanding all that, which is here conteined, may be gathered by his writings De ecclesia, the which if he denie, let there then be some deuines and others appointed, to peruse and looke ouer his said writings of the Church. Moreouer he saith, that other men beside priests may minister the Sacraments, this article is euident, for so much as his disciples do the same at Prage, the which of themselues do violently take the Sacrament out of y^e treasurie, and communicate among themselues,* whē the holy communion is denied vnto them: by this and other things, also it is sufficiently euident, that he hath taught that euerie man being without mortall sinne, hath y^e power of orders or priesthood, for so much as such only as hath taken orders, ought to minister the sacraments vnto themselues. And because he proceedeth from small matters vnto great and waightier, it doth consequently appeare and followe, that those which be in state of grace, can binde and loose.

Thirdly he doth erre as touching the Church, and specially for that he doth not allow & admit that the Church signifieth the Pope,* Cardinals, Archbishops, and y^e Clergie vnderneath them, but saith that this signification was drawne out from the schoolemen. And in no case to be holden or allowed, this article is manifest by his said treatise vpon the Church.

Moreouer he doth erre concerning the Church, in that he saith,* that the Church ought not to haue any temporall possessions. And that the temporall Lords may take them away from the Church & the clergy without any offence: this errour is euident, forsomuch as through his doctrine and intisements many churches in y^e kingdom of Boheme & in the cite of Prage, are already spoiled and robbed of a great part of their temporalities and goods. He saith also that Constantinus & other secular princes erred by enriching and enduing churches & monasteries. This article is manifest by that which goeth next before.

Fourthly,* he erreth as touching the Church, in that hee sayth, that all priests are of like power, and therfore affirmeth that the reseruations of the Popes casualties, the ordering of Bishops, and the consecration of the Priestes were inuented only for couetousnes. This Article doth somewhat appeare by those afore going, but by his examination shall be more euident.

Fiftly,* he erreth concerning the church, in that he sayth, that the church being in sinne, hath no power of the keies, when as the Pope, Cardinals, and all other of the priests and cleargie are in deadly sinne, the which he sayth is possible enough, this also doth appeare in his treatise vpon the Church, in his first errour as touching the ministers of the Church.

Sixtly he erreth touching the Church,* for as much as through contempt he doth not feare excommunication. This doth notoriously appeare by his owne doings, in that he did contemne and despise the Apostolike and ordinary censure, and in all the Apostolike excommunications & iniunctions he hath borne himselfe vpon the diuine commandements, and in contempt of the keyes to the setting out of his hypocrisie, he hath said masse all the wayes betweene this and the cite of Prage, and therby hath prophanate the processe and authoritie of the Church.

Seuenthly he erreth againe,* as touching the Church, because he kepeth not the institutions & inuestitures therof, but holdeth opinion that euery man hath authority to inuest & appoint any man to the cure of soules. This is euident by his owne doings. For so much as many in the kingdome of Boheme, by their defenders and fauourers. Page 601 or rather by himselfe were appoynted and put into parish churches, the which they haue long ruled and kept, not being appoynted by the Apostolike sea, neither yet by the ordinarie of the cite of Prage.

*Eightly, he erreth as touching the Churche, in that he holdeth opinion, that a man being once ordained a Priest or a deacon cannot be forbidden or kept backe from the office of preaching, this is likewise manifest by his own doings, for somuch as he himselfe could neuer be letted from preaching, neither by the Apostolick sea, neither yet by the Archbishop of Prage.

And to the intent that the sayd Iohn Hus, who is dothed in sheepes clothing, & inwardly a rauing wolfe, may be the better knowen by his fruits, for the better information of you most reuerend fathers, I say, that from the first time y^t he tooke in hand or went about to sow hys errorrs and heresies, y^e which afterward he did in deede, he vnderstanding and perceiuing himself to be stande and gainsayde by the Germaines, which were in the vniuersitie of Prage, for somuch as he coulde conclude nothing, because they had 3. voyces, and he on hys parre, had but one onely voyce: he went about and brought to passe, and that by the secular power, that the Germaines shoulde haue but one voyce, and he and his partes 3. voyces, the which thing, when y^e Germanes once perceiued, rather then they wold loose or forsake any parte of their right, whych they had in voyces, or be in danger in theyr persons, the which would then haue ensued vppon it, to saue themselues, they wholly with one consent agreed together to depart out of Prage, and by this meanes this solemne & famous vniuersitie of Prage was made desolate that had brought forth so many notable mē in diuers sciences.* Beholde this his first fruits which deuied that so famous vniuersitie, for so muche as grapes are not gathered of thornes, neyther figs of brambles.

*Moreouer, when there were questiōs moned amongst the deuines of the vniuersitie of Prage vppon the 45. articles of Iohn Wickliffe, and that they had called a conuocation, and all the deuines of Boheme, for the Germaines were all ready departed, they concluded that euery one of those Articles were either heretical, seditious, or els erroneous. He alone held the cōtrary opinion, y^e none of those articles were either hereticall, seditious, or erroneous, as afterward he did dispute, holde, and teache in the common schooles of Prage, where by it is euidētly inough foresene, that he doeth affirme those articles of Wickliffe, the whych are not onely condemned in England, but also by y^e whole church, because they were first inuented and set forth by the members of Antichrist.

Moreouer, he being complained of to the Archbyshop of Prage, y^e he preached & set foorth certaine articles which were heretical, false and seditious, he was forbidden by the sayd Archbishop to preach any more, and proceded against him, according to the canonicall sanctions, the whych processe is confirmed by the Apostolike sea, and published as well in the courte of Rome, as wythout: the whych Iohn Hus and his adherents haue diuers and manifold wayes violate & prophanate.* And whosoever did speake against him, they were depriued of their benefices, and others placed in, which haue ruled, and yet do rule the said churches, & the flockes pertaining to the same, not hauing any cure or charge of the soules cōmitted vnto them, neyther by the Apostolike sea, neither yet by the ordinary of the place.

Also as many, as well priests as lay men in the citie of Prage & kingdom of Boheme, which haue spoken against the doctrine of Hus, and the prophanation of the processe aforesaid, or at the least not alowing the same, haue suffred most mortall hatred and persecutions, and yet to thys day do suffer. But that at this present it is dissimuled vntil the ende of the processe against Iohn Hus. Wherefore if he be nowe let goe againe, without doubt they shall suffer great persecution both in body and goodes, and throughout all the realm of Boheme, house shalbe against house, and this mischief will creepe, yea sodeinly spring vp throughout al Germany, and innumerable soules shalbe infected, so that there shall be such persecution of the cleargie and faithfull, as hath not bene since the time of the Emperour Constantine to this present day,* for he ceaseth not to mooue and stir vp the laity, against the clergy and faithfull christians. And when any of the clergie would draw him away, or cal him from his heresie, & for that cause doth forbid him to preach, that he doe not teach no heresies: Then sayeth he, and teacheth that the clergie doth that of enuie and malice, because he rebuketh their vices and faultes: that is to say, their simonie and pride, and conetousnesse.

Moreouer, hee stirreth vp the seculare princes against the prelates of churches, monasteries, & vniuersities, and generally against the whole clergy. Going about by thys meanes, he preacheth and teacheth that prelates and other men of the church ought not to haue any temporal goodes or possessions, but only to liue vppon almes. And by thys meanes he hath done already very much hurt, and annoyed diuers and many Prelates, clearkes and Churches in the kingdome of Boheme and cite of Prage. For so much as thereby they are already spoiled and robbed of their possessions. Yea, hee teacheth also that it is lawfull for the lay people wythout sinne, to wythholde and keepe backe the tithes and oblations, or to geue the Church goodes to any other minister: all the seculare princes are greatly inclined hereunto, but specially the laitie, who foloweth euery mā his owne will.

He hath generally to lay for himself all those heretikes which do but very finally regard the ecclesiastical censures and hate the authority of the Romaine church, yea doe vtterly detest & abhorre the same, the which thing will more and more encrease, except it be effectually and manfully w^tstand, and if he do by any meanes escape from the council, he and his fauourers will say that hys doctrine is iust and true,* and that it is allowed by the authority of the vniuersall sacred Councell, and that all hys aduersaries are wicked and noughty men, so that he would do more mischief, then euer any hereticke did since the tyme of Constantinus Magnus.

Wherefore most holy fathers prouide and take heede to your selues,* and to the whole flocke, amongst whome the holy Ghost hath placed you to rule the Church of Christ, the whych he hath purchased wyth his owne bloude, and whilest the disease is new and fresh, helpe and remedye it, as well touching him which doth so infect and trouble the Church of God, as also concerning the occasions, through the which he hath presumed, & might doe the same: because the Prelates do abuse the ecclesiasticall censures, & as well the Prelates as those that are vnder them dee not keepe and obserue the order of the church whych is appoynted them by God, whereby it commeth to passe, that whylest they themselues do walke the broken & vnknowne paths, their flocke falleth headlong into the ditch.

Wherefore let our soueraigne Lord the Pope, and this most sacred Council ordaine and depute Commissioners, the which may examine the sayd Iohn Hus vpon all afore wrytten, and other thyngs in the presence of them whych knowe the matter. Let there be also certayne Doctors and Maisters appoynted to reade ouer and peruse hys bookes which he hath written, whereof some are here present, that the church may be speedily purged and cleansed from these errors.

Upon this hys accusation, they ordeined and appoynted 3. commissioners or iudges, that is to say, the patriark of Constantinople, and the byshop of Castle, & the byshop of Lybusse. The which prelates being thus deputed, hard the accusation & the witnes which was brought in by certayne babling priestes of Prage,* confirmed by theyr othes, & afterward recited the sayd accusation vnto the sayd Hus in the prisone, at suche time as hys ague was feruent and extremely vpō him.*

Uppon thys Iohn Hus required to haue an aduocate to answer for hym, the whych was plainly and vtterly denied him. And the reason that the masters Commissioners brought against it was this, that the plain canon doth forbid that any man should be a defender of any cause of hys, which is suspect of any kind of heresy: The vanity and foly of the witnesses was suche, that if in case they had not bene both the accusers and iudges themselues, there shuld haue needed no distinct confutation. I would haue rehersed the testimonies in thys place but that I knew them to be such, as the prudent and wise reader coulde not haue red without great tediousnes. Nowheit some of them shal be declared, when we come to the processe of hys iudgement.

Afterwarde, when Iohn Husse had recouered lyttle strength or health by the commandement of the three commissioners there was presented vnto hym certaine Articles, many in number, which they sayd they had gathered out of his booke which he made of the Churche: of whych articles some were forged and inuented by maister Palletz, & other some were gathered onely by halues, as shall be more plainly declared hereafter whē we come to speake of the iudgement pronounced and geuen against the sayde Hus.

Thus Iohn Hus remained in the prison of the couent of the Franciscanes,* vntill the Wednesday before Palme Sondag, and certaine appoynted to keepe hym, and in the meane season to employ and spende his time wythall, he wrote certaine bookes: That is to say, of the ten commandements, Page 602 of the loue and knowledge of God, of Matrimony, of Penance, of the three enemies of mankinde, of the prayer of our Lord, and of the Supper of our Lord.

*The same day Pope Iohn the 23, chaūged his apparell & conuoyed himselfe secretly out of Constance, fearing the iudgemēt by the which afterward he was depriued of his Papall dignitie, by meanes of most execrable & abhominable forfaites and doynge. This was the cause that Iohn Hus was trāsported and caried vnto an other prison: for the Popes seruantes which had the charge and keeping of Iohn Hus, vnderstanding that their Maister was fled & gone, deliuered vp the keyes of the prison vnto the Emperour Sigismund, and to the Cardinals, and followed their Maister the Pope. Then by the whole cōsent of the Councell, the sayd Iohn Hus was put into the handes of the Byshop of Constance, who sent him to a Castle on the other side of the Riuer of Rhine, not very farre from Cōstance, whereas he was shut vp in a Tower, with fetters on his legges, that he could scarce walke in the day tyme, and at night hee was fastened vp to a racke agaynst the wall hard by his bed.

*In the meane season certaine noble men and Gentlemen of Pole & Boheme, did al their indeuour to purchase his deliuerance, hauing respect to the good renowne of all the Realme, the which was wonderfully defamed and slaundered by certaine naughty persons. The matter was growne vnto this point, that all they which were in the towne of Constance, that seemed to beare any fauour vnto I. Hus, were made as mockyng stocks, and derided of all men, yea euen of the slaues and base people. Wherefore they tooke counsell and cōcluded together to present their request in writing vnto the whole Coūcell, or at the least vnto the foure nations of Almaine, Italie, Fraunce, and England: this request was presented the 14. day of May. an. 1415. The tenour here ensueth.

The first schedule or Bill, whiche the nobles of Boheme deliuered vp to the Councell for the deliuerance of Iohn Hus, the 14. day of May. Anno. 1415.

MOst reuerēd Fathers and Lordes. The Nobles and Lordes of Boheme and Pole here present, by this their present writynges doe shew and declare vnto your Fatherly reuerences how that the most noble Kyng and Lord, the Lord Sigismund kyng of Romaines, alwayes Augustus kyng of Hungary, Croatia, Dasmatia, &c. hearyng of the great dissention that was in the kyngdome of Boheme as heyre, Kyng and Lord successour, willyng & mynding to foresee and prouide for his owne honour, he sent these Noble men Maister Wenceslate de Duba and Iohn de Clum here present,* that they would bryng and assure Maister Iohn Hus vnder the kyng his name and safe conduct. So that he would come to the sacred generall Councell of Constance, vnder the safe conduct of the sayd kyng, and the protection of the sacred Empire, openly geuen and graunted vnto the sayd Maister Iohn Hus, that hee might purge himselfe and the kyngdome of Boheme from the slaunder that was raysed vpon them, and there to make an open declaration of his Fayth to euery man that would lay any thyng to his charge. The which the sayd Nobles with the forenamed Maister Iohn Hus haue performed and done, accordyng to the kynges commaundement.

When as the sayd Maister Iohn Hus was freely of his owne accorde come vnto Constance, vnder the sayd safe conduct, & greuously imprisoned before he was heard, and at this present is tormented both with fetters and also with hunger and thirst. Albeit that in tymes past at the Councell holden at Paysan. 1410. yeare of our Lord, the heretickes whiche were condemned, were suffered to remayne there at libertie, and to depart home freely: Notwithstandyng this Maister Iohn Husse, neither beyng conuicted nor condemned, no not so much as once heard, is taken and imprisoned, when as neither any kyng or any Prince Elector, either any Embassadour of any Uniuersitie was yet come or present. And albeit the Lord the Kyng, together with the Nobles and Lordes here present most instantly required and desired, that as touchyng his safe conduct they would foresee and haue respect vnto his honour. And that the sayd Maister Iohn Hus might be openly heard, for so much as he would render and shew a reason of his fayth, and if he were found or conuicted obstinately to affirme or maintayne any thyng agaynst the truth or holy Scripture, that then he ought to correct and amend the same, according to the instruction and determination of the Councell: yet could hee neuer obtayne this. But the sayd Maister Iohn Husse,* notwithstandyng all this, is most greuously oppressed with fetters and yrons, and so weakened with thinne and slender diete, that it is to be feared least that his power and strength beyng hereby consumed and wasted, hee should be put in daunger of his witte or reason.

And although the Lordes of Boheme here present are greatly slaundered, because they seyng the sayd Maister Iohn Hus, so to be tormēted and troubled contrary to the kyngs safe conduct, haue not by their letters put the kyng in mynde of his sayd safe conduct, that the sayd Lord and kyng should not any more suffer any such matters, for so much as they tend to the contempt and disregard of the kingdome of Boheme, which frō the first originall and begynnyng, since it receaued the Catholicke fayth, it neuer departed or went away frō the obedience of y^t holy Church of Rome: yet notwithstandyng they haue suffered & borne all these thynges patiently hetherto, least by any meanes occasion of trouble or vexation of this sacred Councell might arise or spryng therof.

Wherefore most reuerend fathers & Lordes: The Nobles and Lordes before named do wholly & most earnestly desire & require your reuerences here present, that both for the honour of the safe conduct of our sayd Lord the kyng, & also for the preseruacion and encrease of the worthy fame and renowne both of the foresayd kyngdome of Boheme, & your own also, that you will make a short end about the affayres of M. Iohn Hus: for so much as by the meanes of his straite handling he is in great daunger by any lōger delay, cuē as they do most specially trust vpō the most vpright consciences & iudgementes of your fatherly reuerēces. But forasmuch as most reuerēd fathers and Lordes, it is now come to the knowledge and vnderstāding of the Nobles & Lordes of Boheme here present, how that certaine backbiters and slaūderers of the most famous kingdom of Boheme aforesayd, haue declared & told vnto your reuerences how that the Sacrament of the most precious bloud of our Lord is caried vp & downe through Boheme in vessels not cōsecrated or halowed, and that Coblers do now heare confessions & minister the most blessed body of our Lord vnto others: The Nobles therfore of Boheme here present require and desire you that you will geue no credit vnto false promoters & tale tellers,* for that as most wicked and naughty slaundersers & backbiters of y^e kingdome aforesaid, they do report & tel vntruthes: requiring also your reuerences, that such slanderous persons of the kingdome aforesaid, may be named & knowne. And y^e lord the king together with your reuerēces, shal well perceiue and see that the Lordes of Boheme will go about in such maner to refell and put away the false & f•uolous slaunders of those naughty persons, that they shall be ashamed to appeare hereafter before the lord the kyng and your reuerences.

As soone as this their supplication was red, y^t byshop of Luthonis rising vp said.* Most reuerend fathers I well perceiue and vnderstand that the last part of this writing doth touch me, my familiars & frends, as though y^e kingdom of Boheme were slaundersed by vs. Wherefore I desire to haue time & space of deliberation that I may purge my selfe from this crime that is laid against me. The principal of the counsel appointed him y^e 17. day of May, at y^e which day the lords of Boheme should be present again, to heare both the aunswer of the councell, and also the excuse of the bishop of Luthonis, y^t which thing in dede was afterward performed: for the 17. day of May, which was the 4. day before the whitsontide they met there againe, where first of all a certaine bishop in y^e name of the whole council answered by worde to the nobles of Boheme, the contentes of whose aunswer may easely be known by the secōd supplication, which the Bohemians put vp to y^e council. But first I haue here in these few wordes following, shewed how the bishop Luthonis defended himselfe agaynst that which is before written.

The aunswer of the Bishop of Luthonis, to the last part of the supplication, which the nobles of Boheme presented vnto the Councell.

MOst reuerend fathers and noble Lordes,* as Peter de Mladoneywitz bachelor of Arte: in y^e name of certain of the nobles of y^e kingdome of Boheme in his writings, amongst other thyngs did propounde how that certaine slaundersers and backbiters of the sayd kyngdome haue brought to the eares of your reuerēces, that the most precious bloud of Christ is caried vp and downe in Boheme in bottels, & that Coblers do heare confessions, and minister Page 603 the body of Christ vnto others, wherupon most reuerend fathers and Lordes: Albeit that I together wyth the other prelates, doctors, maisters and other innumerable catholikes of the sayde kingdome, the whych doe desire as much as in them lieth to defend the faith of Christ, haue laboured for the extirpation & rooting out of that most wicked and detestable sect of Wickliffes, which now (alas for sorow) beginneth to spring and rise in the sayd kingdome, as it is well knowne. Notwythstanding, here in thys my oration, not for any shame or reproofe, but for the honour of the kingdome aforesayd, I haue propounded, and declared a certaine new sect, whych is now lately sprong vp in the sayd kingdome, the folowers whereof do minister & communicate the sacraments in many cities, townes, & places of the said kingdom, vnder both kindes both of breade and wine, and doe constantly teache the common people bothe men and women that it is so to be cōmunicated, obstinaty affirming the same, and that the clergy which do repugn or say nay vnto it, are to be counted church robbers, as by the wrytings of their assertions being directed and presented hether, shall openly appeare.

Moreouer by the report and fame whych goeth here abroade, & by the wrytings which were sent ouer vnto me, I haue propounded that it came to my knowledge, that the bloud of Christ is caryed about in vess•ls. Is not consecrated, approuing the foresaide erroneous assertion of the Wicleuists, that affirme it necessary for saluation, that the people shuld communicate vnder both kindes of bread and wine, and that it is necessary, as the body of Christ is caryed in the pixe or boxe, so the bloude of Christ should be caryed in bottles, or other necessary vessels from place to place, and specially about the ministration of the sick. Also I declared not of my selfe, but I hearde it to be declared by others, both great and credible persons, that there was a certaine woman a folower of that secte, the which taking by violence the body of Christe out of a priests handes, did communicate vnto her selfe, and affirmed that all men oughte to doe so, if the Priests would denye them the Communion. And the same woman amongst many other errors, of the whych shee was conuicted, did affirme that a good lay woman myght better consecrate and geue absolution, then an euill priest: affirming that an euill priest can neyther consecrate nor absolue. But I know that neyther I, neither any of my assistance in this matter haue broughte thys at any time into your cares, that coblers in the sayde kingdome doe heare confession, or minister the sacrament of the body of Christ, as is alleaged by the sayde Peter, in the behalfe of the sayde supplicantes. Notwythstanding, that we did feare if meanes were not founde to recounter or stoppe the offences before named, that thys would immediatly folow vpon it. Wherefore most reuerend fathers, least that the kingdome mighte hee defamed any more by such pestiferous sectes, and that the Christian faith myght happen to be indaungered: with all reuerence and charity I do desire you, euen by the bowels of mercy, of our Lord Iesus Christe, that thys most sacred Councel, would prouide some speedy remedy for this kingdome, as touchyng the premisses.

Moreouer, whether be they backbiters and slanderers or wicked and false enuiers of the kingdome of Boheme, the which do let the errors aforesaid, & many others more, which are sown by the Wicleuists in the sayd kingdome, and also els where, whych also both do labor and haue laboured for the extirpation and roting out of those errors out of the kingdome aforesayd, and as catholicke men, for the zeale of their faith haue manfully put forth themselves against the maintainers of the sayd errors or such as doe maintaine and defend the teachers of those errors. This answer I haue here presented before your reuerences alwaies, wholly submitting my self and assistance vnto your iudgement, and to the definition of this most sacred councill of Constance.

The answer of the nobles of Boheme.

*The day before whitsontide, the nobles of Boheme dyd confute this theyr aunswer made 2. dayes before in the Councel to their former wryting, as here foloweth: Most reuerend fathers and Lordes, for so much as vpon thursday it was answered in the behalfe of your reuerences to the requests of the nobles and Lords of Boheme, that the sayde Lordes were misinformed of diuers poynts contained in the declaration of their said vil: therfore the foresayd Lords haue now determined and decreed to declare their former propounded requests more at large vnto your reuerences, not mineding hereby to argue or reprooue your fatherly wisdomes and circumspections, but that youre reuerences (theyr desires being partly on thys behalf fulfilled) might the more effectuously & distinctly discerne and iudge as touching thys matter.

And first of all, where as the Lordes alleaged and sayd how that maister Iohn Hus was come hether vnto Constance, freely of his owne good will, vnder the safe conduct of the Lorde the king,* and the protection of the sacred Empire: It is aunswere on the behalfe of your reuerences, how that the said Lords are misinformed, as touching the safe conduict, and that you haue vnderstand by such as are worthy credit, that the frends and fauorers of the sayd M. Iohn Hus, did first procure and get his safe conduite 15. dayes after hys imprisonment.

The Lords of Boheme, and specially the Lorde Iohn de Clum heere present,* whome thys matter doeth chiefly touche, doeth aunswere, that not onely the 15. day after, but euen the very same day that Iohn Hus was apprehended and taken, when as our reuerende father the Pope, in the presence of all his Cardinals, demaunded of M. Iohn de Clum, whether M. Iohn Hus had any safeconduict from the king hys sonne: he answered, most holy father & Cardinals, knowe ye that he hath a safe conduict, and when he was asked the question againe the second time, he answered in like maner.

Yet notwithstanding none of them required to haue the safeconduict shewed vnto them: and againe the thirde day following, the Lord Iohn de Clum complained vnto our Lord the Pope, how notwithstanding the safe conduict of oure soueraigne Lorde the king, he detained and kept M. Iohn Hus as prisoner, shewing the said safeconduict vnto many. And for a further truth herein, he referreth hymself vnto the testimonies and witnesses of diuers Earles, Byshops, knightes, gentlemen, and famous Citizens of the city of Constance, the whych altogether at this present did see the said safe conduict, and heard it read, whereupon the sayde Iohn de Clum is ready to binde hymselfe vnder what penalty shalbe required, euidently to proue and cōfirme that which hee hath promised, who soeuer say to the contrary.

Moreouer, the Lordes of Boheme referre themselues vnto the knowledge of certaine Princes electors & other Princes, Byshops, & many other noblemen, which were present before the kings maiestie, where and when as the said safe conduct was graunted and geuen out by the speciall commaundement of our sayd Lord the king.

Hereby your fatherly reuerences may vnderstand and perceiue that the sayd Lordes of Boheme are not euill informed as touching the saide safe conduict: But rather they which by such reportes haue falsly and vntruely informed your reuerēces. And first of al they haue offended agaynst the Lord our king,* and hys chauncellours. Secundarely, against the Lords and nobles of Boheme, as though we had priuely & by stealth, purchased the sayde safe conduict. Wherefore the Lords aforesaid most humbly require & desire your reuerēces that you wil not so lightly beleue such as be not worthy of credit, but rather hearing the contrary part, to labour and discusse that the trueth may the more euidently appeare.

Secondly,* where as the Lordes aforesayde, alleaging how M. Iohn Hus, cōming vnto Constance, of his owne free will, being neither condemned nor heard, was imprisoned, your reuerences haue made aunswer therunto, that he the sayd M. Iohn Hus in the time of Alexander 5. was infamed and slandered vppon certaine heresies, and thereupon cited personally to apeare in the court of Rome, and there was heard by hys procurers.

And for somuch as he refused obstinatly to appeare, he was excommunicated, in the which excommunication he continued (as you affirme) by the space of fiue yeares, for the whych he was iudged, and counted not onely a simple and plaine hereticke, but an heresiarke, that is to say, an inuenter and sower of newe and straunge heresies, and that he comming towarde Constance, did preache by the way openly.* To this the Lordes aforesayd do aunswere, that as touching hys slaunder and citation, they can affirme nothing, but by report. But as touching that he dyd not personally appeare, they say they haue heard both him'selfe, and diuers other credible persones say: yea euen the most famous Prince Wenceslaus king of Boheme, and almost all the whole nobilitie is witnes, that he would willingly haue appeared at Rome, or els where, if he myghte safely haue commen thether,* and that deadly enmitie had not letted: and moreouer his procurers, which he sent vnto the court of Rome, alleaging reasonable causes for hys non apparance, some of them were cast into pryson, and others very euill intreated.

Page 604As for the excommunication which he hath so long sustained, they haue heard him often say, that he hath not resisted against the same by contumacye, or stubbernesse, but vnder euidēt appellation, and therupon reterreth himself vnto the Actes of his causes, whyche were pleaded in the court of Rome, wherm all this is more largely contained, the which your reuerences may euidently perceiue and see in this our present publike transumpt, which wee haue offred vnto you vpon certaine poynts aforesayd.

As cōcerning his preaching, wherwithal his enemies do report and charge,* that M. Iohn Hus did preach openly in the Citie of Constance: The Lordes aforesaide, and specially the Lord Iohn de Clum here present do answere that hee hath continually lodged wyth the sayde M. Iohn Hus here in Constance, and that whosoouer they be, that haue bene so bolde, or dare be so bolde to say & affirme that M. Iohn Hus had preached (as is premised) or y^t whyche lesse is,* since the time of his comming vnto thys citie, euen vnto the very day & time of hys captiuitie and imprysonment, that he went but one step out of the house of his lodging, that the said Lord Iohn de Clum, will and is contēt to binde himselfe with any suche, as shall affirme the same, vnder what penalty so euer it be, of money or otherwyse, that which hee hath falsly reported vnto your reuerences, he shal neuer be able iustly & truely to affirme and prooue.

Thirdly, whereas your reuerences do say, that you do not vnderstād or know, what the Lords do meane, by the heretickes condemned, at the councel holden at Pisa, whether the mocking or deriding y^e Pope, whose ambassadors came thither for vnitie or concorde, the which were suffered and gently entreated, as theyr Lordes were most enclined vnto vnitie and peace, or els that they did vnderstande or meane y^e perticuler heretickes, which were there condemned adioyning therunto: that the heretickes also comming vnto the councell, vnder the pretence of that vnitie, should be gently handled and entreated. &c. Reuerēd fathers and Lordes, whether they be counted the firste, or that they be thought the second or last, y^e Lordes aforesaid require none other thing, but that the said M. Iohn Hus may vse suche liberty as they vsed: forsomuch as he came willingly vnto this most sacred coūcel, not for any other purpose, but onely publikely to recognise his faith. And in what poynt soeuer he shall seeme to vary from the worde of God, and the vnion of the holy mother the church, that in that poynte he will willingly be vnited and reconciled againe thereunto, and not only himself, but also his fauorers and adherents, he would moue and prouoke therunto: * of whom the greater number are in the kingdō of Boheme. Also he is come hether that he might purge and cleare the noble kingdome of Boheme, from the sinister and euil slaunder which was raised vpon it.

Last of all most reuerend fathers & Lordes, for so much as your reuerences haue most fauourably answered vnto the principal request made by the Lords aforesayd, that the processe of M. Iohn Hus through Gods helpe shoulde be determined and ended w^tal expedition and gentlenes: The Lordes aforesayd do render most hartly thanks vnto your reuerences, and when soeuer they desire by Gods helpe shall come to the ende or effecte long wished or looked for, they wil not onely here, but also before the whole kingdome of Boheme, and in all other places wheresoeuer they come render most immortall thanks vnto your reuerences for euer.

Thys declaration of the nobles of Boheme aboue prefixed, may serue not only to the cōfutation of the bishop Luthonius thys Bohemian, but also against the cauillacious of Alanus Copus Anglus. Dial. 6. pag. 929. touching the safe conduct of Iohn Hus, wherof sufficiently before hath ben sayd, vide supra, pag. 596.

When as the noble men of Boheme by lōg time could receiue no answer of those supplications, whych they had alredy put vp, they determined y^e last day of May following by an other supplication being put vp vnto the principals of the councell, to entreat that Iohn Hus myght be deliuered out of prison, and defend his owne cause openly: they also put the testimonial of the bishop of Nazareth, as touching Iohn Hus. * The copy wherof is expressed in the beginning of this hystorie, word by word.

Another supplication of the nobles of Boheme.

*MOst reuerend fathers and Lordes in Christ, of late there was a supplication put vp vnto your reuerences on the behalfe of the Lordes & nobles of Boheme, and the nation of Pole, wherin they most humbly desired your reuerences to consider how the informations which were put vp vnto your reuerences, by the enemies of M. Iohn Hus, * were insufficient. And with reuerence be it spoken, in many poynts vntrue, as in the safeconduict graunted by the kings maiestie, and also in other articles, as more plainely appeareth in the Scedule, which was then offred vnto you: vppon the whych sayde Scedule and other things at that presence being put vppe, they coulde not as yet receiue no aunswere. Wherefore the Lordes aforesayde, moste humbly require your fatherly reuerences, that it would please you to consider the said supplication, and to geue some answere to the Lordes aforesayd, therupon and specially hauing respect vnto the great iniuries and griefs which are done vnto the sayd M. Iohn Hus, the which may be vnderstād and knowen by the Scedule aforesayde, that you will mercifully consider and foresee, that all those griefes and euils so farre different from all brotherly loue and charitie are done vnto hym by his enemies euen for very malice and hatred.

To the intent therefore that the rancour and malice may be confounded and ouerthrowne, and the plaine and euident truth appeare, it may please your fatherly reuerēces to vnderstand that it is notified and knowen vnto the Barones, Nobles, Citizens, Clergie and Laitie of the kingdome of Boheme, that M. Iohn Hus in all his actes and doings as well Scholasticall as Ecclesiasticall, and specially in all his publike and open sermons, he hathe made and hathe accustomed to make these maner of protestations, the which without any thing to the contrary, hee hath alwaies endeouored to haue them strong and firme, as by this his protestation here folowing, which he made about the determination of a certaine question, it may most euidently and plainly appeare vnto euery man which would beholde and looke vpon the same: the forme and tenour wherof here followeth, and is such.

The protestation of Iohn Hus.

FOR so much as aboue all things I doe desire the honor of God,* the profite of the holy Church, and that I my selfe may be a faithfull member of our Lorde Iesu Christ, which is the heade and husband of the holy Church whych hee hath redemed: Therefore as heretofore oftentimes I haue done, euen so now againe I make this protestation, that I neuer obstinately sayd, or heereafter will say any thing that shall be contrary vnto the truth and verity: and moreouer that I haue alwayes holden, do hold, and firmly desire for to holde the very true and infallible trueth and veritie, so that before that I would defende and maintaine any erreure contrary therunto, I would rather chuse by the hope and help of the Lorde to suffer extreeme punishment, euen vnto death: yea, and thorowe the helpe of God I am ready, euen to offer this my miserable lyfe vnto death for the law of Christ,* the which I do beleue euery part and parcell thereof to be geuen and promulgate for the saluation of mankind, by the counsaile and determination of the most holy Trinitie, and the saintes of God. &c.

By the whiche his protestation, and also other protestations by the sayde M. Iohn Hus, being well obserued and noted, it may be easily gathered and known that his whole intent and purpose was and is, that hee neither would nor will haue spoken or written any thing in hys bookes, treatises, doctrines, or publike sermones, or els to haue affirmed any articles, the whyche willingly and wittingly he did vnderstand or know to be either erroneous, offenseiue, seditious, hereticall, or offending the godly eare. All beit that these and suche like things are falsely imputed vnto hym by hys enemies. But it hath alwayes bene his chiefe intent and purpose, and so is, that euery poynt, conclusion or article contained in his bookes or articles, to haue put and affirmed them to thys ende, according to the truth of the Gospell, the holy Doctors and wryters vpon the holy Scriptures, and to that end and purpose, as is before expressed in his protestations: and if in any poynt, he shoulde be founde to varie or goe astray, or that he were not well vnderstanded of others by like information to be informed, vnderstanded, corrected and amended, and that he wil by no meanes sustaine or defend any maner of article against the holy Church of Rome, or the Catholicke faith.

Wherefore most reuerende fathers, the premisses notwithstanding, his ennemies,* through the extreeme hatred whych they beare vnto him, hath picked and taken out by piece meale certain articles out of the booke of M. Iohn Hus, reiecting and not looking vpon the allegations and reasons, neither hauing any relation vnto the distinction of their equiuocations, haue compounded and made thereof certaine false and fained articles againste him, to thys ende, that all charitie and loue being sette aparte, they might the better ouerthrow hym, and bryng hym vnto death contrary vnto the safe conducte vpon good and iust occasion openly assigned, and geuen vnto the sayde maister Iohn Hus, by the most noble Prince the Lorde Sigismund king of the Romanes and of Hungarie, for his iust defence, against all the friuolous accusations and assaults of the ennemies, not onely of the sayd M. Iohn Hus, but also of the famous kingdome of Boheme, and for Page 605 the quiete appeasing of all such tumultes and rumours, rising and springing in the sayde kingdome of Boheme, or else where: the auoiding of which most perillous vprours, the saide king of Romaines doth greatly desire and wish, as the right heire and successour of the sayd kingdome.

Whereuppon the Barons and Nobles aforesayde, most humbly desire and require, the premisses being considered, and respect had vnto the great infamie and slaunder which may happen by the premisses vnto the sayde kingdome and inhabitants thereof, that you will put to your handes, and take some order & meane, that maister Iohn Hus may be distinctly hearde by some famous men, deuines already deputed, or otherwise to be appoynted vpon all and singulare such articles as shall be laide vnto him to declare his owne minde and intent, and also the minde of the doctours alleadged for his purpose, with the manifolde distinctions and equiuocations: in the which the drawers out of the most part of his articles haue also made equiuocations, that so according vnto the disposition of witnesses, of the which a great number of them are and haue a long time bene his mortall ennemies, that at the friuolous instigation of his enemies, when hee was miserably detained prisoner, that he should not be condemned vnheard. For so much as by the sayde declarations your fatherly reuerences might be the more better informed of the trueth, hee hymselfe is ready alwaies to submit himselfe vnder the determination of thys most sacred councell.* For your reuerences, by the craftie and fained perswasions of his ennemies, are thus informed, that M Iohn Hus hath bene vncurably obstinate by a long time in most perillous articles, the which your reuerences may nowe plainely perceiue to be vntrue, and for the more euidence heerein to be shewed, there is presented vnto your reuerences an instrumente of publike recognition of the moste reuerend father in Christe, the Lorde Nicholas Bishop of Nazareth and Inquisitour of heresies, specially appoynted by the Apostolike see in the dioces of Prage, the which by your reuerences is more diligently to be hearkened vnto.

Wherefore it may please your fatherly reuerences to commaund the sayd M Iohn Hus neither conuicted nor condemned, to be taken and brought out of his bondes and chaines, in the which he is nowe most greeuously detained and kept, and to put him into the hands of some reuerend Lordes, Byshops, or commissioners appoynted or to be appoynted by this present councell. That the sayd M. Iohn Husse may somewhat be releued and recouer againe his health, and be the more diligently and commodiously examined by the Commissioners: and for the more assurance, the Barons and Nobles aforesayd of the kingdome of Boheme, will prouide most sure and good sureties, the which wil not breake their fidelity and faith for any thing in the worlde. Which also shall promise in his behalfe, that hee shall not flee or departe out of their handes, vntill suche time as the matter be fully determined by the sayd Commissioners. In the execution of the which promises wee haue determined to prouide and foresee vnto the fame and honour of the said kingdome of Boheme, and also to the safeconducte of the moste worthy Prince, the king of Romaines, least that the enemies and detractours of the honoure and fame of the kingdome aforesayd, might not a little slander and reprove the said Lordes, pretending and shewing forth hereafter, that they had made vnreasonable or vnlawfull requests: for the withstāding of which mischief, we require your fatherly reuerences, that you will decree, & most graciously consent that this our petition and supplication may be drawen out againe by your Notarie, and reduced into a publicke forme and order.

After this supplication was read before the deputies of the 4. nations, the Patriarche of Antioch answered in the name of them all vnto euery article of the sayd supplication, but it was done in few wordes.

*First, as touching the protestation of Iohn Hus, whether it be true or false, it shalbe made euident in the processe of his cause. Moreouer, wheras they say that the aduersaries of Iohn Hus hath peruersly drawen certaine thinges out of his bookes, that also the matter it selfe shall declare in the end. Where as if it shalbe found & decreed that Iohn Hus is vniustly & vntruly accused, that thē it shal come to passe, y^t his aduersaries shall incurre perpetuall ignominy and slaunder.*But as touching sureties, albeit there might be a thousand put in or boūd, yet can it not by any meanes be, that the deputies of the Councell with a safe conscience may receiue or take them in this mans cause, vnto whome there is no faith or credite to be geuē. Howbeit thus much they wil do, vpon the 5. day of Iune next, Iohn Hus shall be brought againe vnto Constance,*and there haue free libertie to speake his minde before the Councell, & that they wold louingly and gently heare him: but the matter in the ende fell out farre contrary to thys promise.

*The same day the saide Barons and Lordes presented a supplication of thys tenour vnto the Emperor:

Vnto the most highe and mighty Prince, the Lorde Sigismund king of the Romaines, alwaies Augustus king of Hungarie, Croatia, and Dalmatia, our most gracious Lord faithful & true seruice in al things, and at all times. Most noble Prince and gracious Lord, we signifie vnto your worthinesse, that we all together with one minde, consent and accord haue deliuered vp vnto the reuerend fathers and Lordes, the deputies of the 4 nations, and to the whole sacred Councell of Constance, this our supplication here vnder wrytten. as reasonable, iust, and worthy of consideration, the tenour wherof here followeth word by word, and is this.

The copie of the supplication, which was presented vnto the deputies of the councel, is before written, whereunto this which followeth was annexed.

WHerefore we most humbly require and desire your princely maiestie,* that both for the loue of iustice, and also of the fame and renowme of that moste famous kingdome of Boheme, whereof wee acknowledge you vndoubtedly the true Lorde and heire successour, and also foreseeing vnto the liberty of your safeconduct, that you wil with your fauourable countenance, beholding these most reasonable and iust supplications, which we haue put vp to the Lordes aforesayd, put to your helping hand toward the sayd most reuerend fathers and Lordes, that they will effectually heare vs, in this our most iust petition, which we haue offered vp to them, as is aforesaide: least that the enemye of the renowme and honour of the famous kingdome of Boheme, and such as oure slaundersers also hereafter may detracte and slaunder vs, that wee should make vnreasonable and vnlawfull requests vnto the sayde reuerend fathers and Lordes, and therefore we required and desired of them that it would please them to decre by setting to their publicke hand & seale to authorise our said supplication. Likewise we do most hartily require your highnes, that you would vouchsafe in like maner to geue vs your testimonie of the premises.

But what answer the Emperour made heereunto, we could neuer vnderstand or know, but by the processe of the matter a man may easily iudge,* that thys good Emperour was brought and lead euen vnto thys poynt, through the obstinate mischiefe of the cardinals and bishops, to breake and falsify his promise and faith, whych hee had made and promised, and this was their reason, whereby he was driuenthereunto: that no defence coulde or might be geuen either by safe conduct, or by any other meane vnto hym, whych was suspected or iudged to be an hereticke. But by the Epistles and letters of Iohn Hus, a man may easily iudge: what the kings minde was. Now we will procede in the historie.*

The 5. day of Iune, the Cardinals, Byshops, and the rest of the priests, al that were almost in Constance, assembled to a great number, at the Couent of the Franciscanes in Constance, and there it was commaunded, that before Iohn Hus shoulde be brought foorth, in hys absence they should rehearse the witnesses and articles, which they had slaunderously gathered out of his bookes: the whych articles with Iohn Husses answer we will hereafter repeate. By chance there was then present a certaine. Notary, named Peter Mladoniewitz, the whych bare great loue and amity vnto the said Hus, who assoone as he perceiued that the Bishops and cardinals were already determined and appoynted to condemne the sayde articles in the absence of Iohn Hus, hee went withall speede vnto maister Wencelate de Duba, and Iohn of Clum, & tolde them al the matter: who incontinent made report therof to the Emperour. Who vnderstanding their intent, sent Lewes the Countie Palantine of Heydelberge, and the Lord Frederick, Burgraue of Nuremberge, to signify vnto them, whych ruled the councel, that nothing should be resolued or done in the case of Iohn Hus, before that it wer first heard with equity: and that they should send him all such articles as were said against the sayd Hus, which were either false or hereticall, & he would do so much,* that the said articles shoulde be examined by good and learned men. Then according to the Emperours will, the iudgement of the principals of the Councell was suspended, vntill suche time as Iohn Hus were present.

In the meane season these gentlemen, master of Dube and of Clum, did geue vnto the two Princes whych the Emperour had sent, certaine smal treatises which the sayde Hus had made, out of y^e which they had drawn certain articles to present vnto them which ruled the councel, vnder this condition, that they would render them againe, when they should demand them. The intent & meaning of these Barons was, y^t by thys meanes the aduersaries of Iohn Hus might y^e more easily be reproofed, y^e which of a naughty and corrupt conscience, had picked out corrupt sentēces out of the said bookes of Iohn Hus. The bookes were deliuered vnto the Cardinals and Byshops, and that done, Page 606 Iohn Hus was brought forth, and the Princes whiche were sent by the Emperour, departed backe agayne. After they shewed the bookes vnto Iohn Hus, and he cōfessed openly before the whole assembly that hee had made them, & that he was ready, if there were any fault in thē, to amend the same.

Now harken a litle to the holy proceedynges of these reuerēd fathers, for here happened a straunge & shamefull matter. With much a do they had scarsly read one article, & brought forth a few witnesses vpō the same agaynst him, but as hee was about to apen his mouth to aunswere, all this mad heard or flocke begā so to cry out vpon him, that he had not leasure to speake one onely worde. The noyse & trouble was so great and so vehemēt, that a man might well haue called it a brute or noyse of wild beasts, and not of men, much lesse was it to be iudged a cōgregatiō of men gathered together, to iudge and determine so graue and waightie matters. And if it happened that the noyse and cry did neuer so litle cease, that hee might aunswere any^thyng at all, out of the holy Scriptures or Ecclesiasticall Doctours, by and by he shoulde here these goodly replyes vpon him: That maketh nothyng to the purpose.

*Beside all this, some did outrage in wordes agaynst him, & other some spitefully mocked him: so y^t he seing him selfe ouerwhelmed with this rude and barbarous noyses & cryes, & that it profited nothing to speake, he determined finally with himselfe to hold his peace & keepe silence. Frō that tyme forward all the whole route of his aduersaries, thought that they had wonne y^e battaile of him, and cryed out altogether, now he is dūme, now he is dumme. This is a certaine signe and token, that he doth consent & agree vnto these his errorrs. Finally, the matter came to this poynt, that certaine of the most moderate & honest among thē, seing this disorder, determined to proceede no further, but that all should be deferred & put of vntil an other time. Through their aduise the Prelates & others departed frō the Councell for that present, & appointed to meet there agayne the morrow after to proceede in iudgement.

The next day, which was the vii. of Iune, on whiche day the sunne was almost wholly eclipsed, somewhat after about vii. of the clocke, this same flocke assembled agayne in the cloister of the Friers Minors, and by their appointment Iohn Hus was brought before them, accompanied w^t a great number of armed men. Thether went also the Emperor, whom the gentlemen, master of Dube, & Clum, and the Notarie named Peter, which were great friendes of the sayd Hus, did folow to see what the end woulde be. When they were come thether, they heard that in the accusation of Michael de Causis, they reade these wordes folowing: Iohn Hus hath taught the people diuers and many errorrs both in the chapell of Bethleem,* and also in many other places of the Citie of Prage, of the which errorrs some of them he hath drawen out of Wicklefes bookes, and the rest he hath forged and inuented of his owne head, and doth maintaine the same very obstinately and stifly.

First, that after the consecration and pronuntiatiō of the words, in the supper of the Lord, there remaineth materiall bread, and this is prooued by the witnesse of Iohn Protiwate parishe Priest of s. Clements in Prage, Iohn Pecklow preacher at s. Giles in Prage, Benise preacher in the castle of Prage, Andrew Brod, Chanon of Prage, and diuers other Priestes.* Unto thys Iohn Hus takyng a solemne othe, answered that he neuer spake any such worde, but thus much he did graunt, that at what time the Archbishop of Prage forbad hym to vse any more that terme or word bread,* he could not allow the bishops commaundement: for so much as Christ in the 6. chapter of Iohn doth oftentimes name himselfe the bread of angels, which came downe from heauē, to geue life vnto the whole world. But as touching materiall bread, hee neuer spake any thing at all. Then the Cardinall of Cambray taking a certaine bill in hys hand, which he sayd he receiued the day before, sayd vnto Iohn Hus, will you put any vniversalities a parte rei.i.* as touching the thing? When Iohn Hus aunswered, that he wold, because S. Anselme, and diuers other had so done, the Cardinall did proceed to gather his argument in this maner.

It followeth then, sayde he, that after the consecration is made, there remaineth the substance of materiall bread, & that I do thus proue: That the consecration being done, whiles the bread is chaunged & transubstanciatiō into the body of Christ, as you say, either there doeth remaine the common substaunce of materiall bread, or contrariwise. If the substance do remaine, then is our purpose at an end. If contrariwise, then doth it folow, that by the decision of the singularitie, the vniversall ceaseth any more to be, Iohn Hus answered, truely it ceaseth to be in this singular materiall bread, by meanes of this trāsubstantiatiō, whē as it is changed & transubstanciated into the body of Christ: but notwithstanding in other singularities, it is made subiect.

Then a certaine English man by y^t argument woulde proue out of the first positiō,* that there remained materiall bread. Then sayd Iohn Hus, that is a childish argument, which euery boy in the schooles knoweth, and thereuppon gaue a solution. Then an other English man wold proue, that there remained materiall bread in the sacrament, because the breade after the consecration was not anihilate. Unto whom Iohn Hus answered: Although, said he, that the breade be not anihilate or consumed, yet singularly it ceaseth there to be by meanes of the alteration of hys substance into the body of Christ.* Here an other English mā, stepping forth, sayd: Iohn Hus semeth vnto me, to vse the same kinde of crafty speach, which Wickleffe vsed, for hee graunted all these things, which this man hath done, & yet in very deede was fully perswaded that material bread remained in the sacrament after the cōsecration. The whych when Iohn Hus had denied, saying that he spake nothing but only sincerely & vprightly, according to his conscience, the English man proceeded to demaunde of hym againe, whether the body of Christe be totally and really in the sacrament of the altar.* Wherunto Iohn Hus answered: verely, I do thincke that the body of Christ is really and totally in the sacrament of the alter, the which was borne of the virgine Mary, suffered, died, & rose againe, and sitteth on the right hande of God the father almighty. When they had disputed a good while to and froe, as touching vniuersalities, the English man whych before would proue that material bread remained in the sacrament, because that the bread was not anihilate, interrupting and breaking theyr talke, sayd: to what purpose is this disputation vpon vniuersalities, the which maketh nothing to the purpose, as touching faith: for as farre as I can perceiue or here, this man holdeth a good opinion, as touching the Sacrament of the aultare.

Then an other English man, named Sto•kes, sayd: I haue seene at Prage (sayd he) a certaine treatise, the whych was ascribed vnto thys man Iohn Hus,* wherein it was plainly set foorth, that after the consecration, there remained materiall bread in in the Sacramēt. Uerely said Iohn Hus, sauing your reuerence, that is not true.

Then they returned againe vnto the witnesses of them which were spoken of a litle before,* who euery mā for himselfe affirmed with an othe, that which he had said. Amongst whom Iohn Protyway parishe priest of S. Clemēt in Prage,* whē he should come to confirme his testimony, added more, that Iohn Hus should say, that S. Gregory was but a rimer, whē he did alleadge his athoritie against him. Unto whō Iohn Hus answered, that in this point they did him great iniury, for somuch as he alwaies esteemed and reputed S. Gregory for a most holy doctor of the Church.

These contentions and disputations being somewhat appeased,* the Cardinall of Florence turned himselfe toward Iohn Hus, & said: Maister, you know well enough that it is written that in the mouth of two or three witnesses all witnes is firme and stable:* and heere you see nowe almost 20. witnesses against you, men of authority & worthy of credite, amongst the whych some haue hearde you teach these things themselues, the other by report & common brute or voice, do testify of your doctrine, and altogether generally bring firme reasons & proofes of theyr wnesse, vnto the which wee are forced & constrained to geue credite, and for my part I see not howe you can maintaine & defend your cause against so many notable & wel learned men. Unto whom

John Hus answered in this maner: I take God and my conscience to witnes, y^t I neuer taught any thing, neither was it euer in my minde or fantasie to teach in such sort or maner, as these men here haue not feared to witnesse against me, that which they neuer hearde. And albeit they were as many more in nūber as they are, for all that, I do much more esteme, yea and w^tout comparison regard the witnes of my Lord God,* before the wytnes and iudgement of al mine aduersaries, vpon whom I do in no poynt stay my selfe. Then sayde the Cardinall againe vnto him, it is not lawfull for vs to iudge according to your conscience, for we can not chuse, but that wee must nedes stay our selues vpon the firme & euident witnes of these men heere. For it is not for any displeasure or hatred that these men do witnes thys against you (as you doe alleadge) for they alleadge and bring foorth suche reasons of their witnesse, that there is no man that can perceyue any hatred in them, or that we can in any case be in dout thereof. And as touching M. Steuen Paletz, whereas you say, you do suspect him that he hath craftly & deceitfully drawen Page 607 out certayne poyntes or articles out of your books for to betray them afterward: It semeth that in this point you do hym great wrong, for in myne aduise he hath vsed and shewed a great fidelitie and amitie towarde you, in y^t he hath alleuiated and moderated many of your articles much more then they are in your owne bookes. I vnderstand also that you haue like opinion of diuers other notable men, and specially you haue sayd, that you do suspect M. Chauncellour of Paris,* then whome there is no more excellent and Christian man in all the whole world.

Then was there read a certayne article of accusation in y^e which it was alledged that Iohn Hus had taught & obstinately defended certayne erroneous Articles of Wickliffes in Boheme. Whereunto Hus answered, that he neuer taught any erroures of Iohn Wickliffes, or of anye other mans. Wherefore if it be so that Wickliffe: haue sowed any erroours in England, let the English men look to y^e themselues. But to confirme theyr article, there was alleaged that Iohn Husse did withstande the condemnation of Wickliffes articles, the which was first condemned at Rome, & afterward also, whē the Archb. Swinco with other learned men, held a conuocation at Prague for y^e same matter, when as they should haue bene there condemned for this cause, that none of them were agreeing to the Catholicke faith or doctrine, but were either hereticall, erroneous or offensiue: he aunswered that he durst not agree thereunto, for offending hys conscience, and specially for these Articles: that Silvester the pope and Cōstantine dyd erre in bestowing those gret gifts & rewards vpō y^e church Also that the pope or Priest being in mortall sinne, can not consecrate nor baptise. This article said he, I haue thus de'termined, as if I should say that he doth vnworthely consecrate or Baptise, when as he is in deadly sinne, and that he is an vnworthy minister of the Sacramentes of God. Here his accusers, with their witnesses, were earnest and instant, that the article of Wickliffe was written by the very same wordes in the treatise which Iohn Husse made agaynst Stephen Paletz.* Uerely said Iohn Husse I feare not to submit my selfe, euen vnder the daunger of death, if you shall not find it so, as I haue sayd. When the book was brought forth, they founde it written as Iohn Husse had sayd. He added also moreouer that he durst not agree vnto them which had condemned Wickliffes articles, for this Article: the tenthes were pure almes.

*Here the Cardinal of Florence objected vnto him this argument, as touching y^e almes: it is required that it shold be geuē freely without bond or duety. But tenthes are not geuen freely without bond or duety: therefore are they no almes. Iohn Hus denying the Maior of this Sillogismus brought this reason agaynst him. For somuch as rich men are bounden vnder the payne of eternall damnation, vnto the fulfilling of y^e 6. workes of mercy, which Christ repeteth in the 25. chap. of Mathew: * and these workes are pure almes: Ergo, almes is also geuen by bond & duety. Then an Archbishop of Englād stepping vp, sayd, if we all be boūd vnto those 6. workes of mercy, it doth followe that poore men, which haue nothing at al to geue, should be damned. I answere, sayd Husse, vnto your antecedent, that I spake distinctly of rich men, and of those which had where withall to doe those workes: they I say were bound to geue almes vnder payne of damnation.

He answered moreouer vnto the Minor of the first argument, that tenthes were at first geuen freely, and afterward made a bond and duetie. And when as he woulde haue declared it more at large, he could not be suffered. He declared also diuers other causes, why he coulde not with safe conscience, consent vnto the condemnatiō of Wickliffes articles. But how soeuer the matter went he did affirme & say, that he did neuer obstinately confirme any Articles of Wickleffes, but only that he did not alow and consent that Wickliffes Articles should be condemned before that sufficient reasons were alleadged out of the holy Scripture for theyr condemnation, * & of the same minde, saith Iohn Hus are a great many other Doctors and maysters of the Uniuersitie of Prage. For when as Swinco the archbishop commanded all Wickliffes bookes to be gathered together in the whole City of Prage, and to be brought vnto him, I my self brought also certayn books of Wickliffes, which I gaue vnto y^t Archbishop desiring him y^t if he found any error or heresie in them that he would note and mark thē, and I myselfe would publish them openly. * But the archbishop, albeit that he shewed me no errour nor heresie in them, burned my bookes together with those that were brought vnto him, notw^tstanding that he had no such commaundement from Pope Alexander the fifth of that name. But notwithstanding by a certaine pollicie he obtayned a Bull from the sayd Pope by meanes of Iaroslaus Bishop of Sarepte of the order of Franciscanes, that all Wickleff•s books for the manifold errours, contayned in them (wherof there was none named) should be taken out of all mens handes.

The archb. vsing the authoritie of this Bull, * thought he should bring to passe that the king of Boheme and the Nobles shold consent to the condemnation of Wickliffes bookes, but therein he was deceiued. Yet neuerthesse he calling together certayn deuines, gaue them in cōmissiō to sit vpon Wickliffes bookes and to proceede agaynst them by a diffinitive sentence in the Canon law. These men by a generall sentence iudged all those books worthy to be burned. The which when the Doctors, Maysters and Shollers of the vniuersitie heard report of, they altogether with one consent & accord (none excepted but onely they, which before were chosen by the Archbishop to sit in iudgement) determined to make supplication vnto the king to stay the matter. * The king graunting their request, sent by and by certain vnto the Archbishop to examine the matter. There he denyed that he woulde decree anye thing as touchinge Wickleffes bookes contrary vnto the kinges will & pleasure. Wherupon, albeit that he had determined to burn thē the next day after, yet for feare of the king, the matter was passed ouer.

In the meane tyme Pope Alexander the fifth beyng dead, * the Archbishop fearing least the Bull whiche he had receiued of the pope, would be no longer of any force or effect, priuily calling vnto him hys adherentes, and shutting the gates of hys Court round about him, being garded w^t a number of armed souldiors, he consumed and burned all Wickliffes bookes. Beside this great iniurie the Archbyshop by meanes of his Bull aforesayd, committed an other lesse tollerable. For he gaue out commaundement that no man after that time vnder payne of excōmunication shold teach any more in Chappels.* Wherunto I did appeale vnto the Pope, who being dead, and the cause of my matter remayning vndetermined, I appealed likewise vnto his successor Iohn 23. Before whom when as by the space of 2. yeres, I could not be admitted by my aduocates to defend my cause, I appealed vnto the high Iudge Christ. When I. Hus had spoken these wordes, it was demaunded of hym whether he had receiued absolution of the pope or no he aunswered,* no. Then agayne whether it were lawfull for him to appeale vnto Christ or no. Whereunto Iohn Hus answered: Uerely I doe affirme here afore you all that there is no more iust or effectuall appeale, then that appeale which is made vnto Christ, for asmuch as the law doth determine that to appeale is no other thinge then in a cause of griefe or wrong done by an inferior iudge, to implore and require ayde and remedy at a higher Iudges hand. Who is then an higher Iudge then Christ? Who I say cā know or iudge the matter more iustly or with more equitie? when as in him there is found no deceit, neyther can he be deceiued:* or who can better helpe the miserable & oppressed thē he? While Iohn Hus with a deuout and sober countenance was speaking and pronouncing those words, he was derided and mocked of all the whole councell.

Then was there rehearsed an other Article of his accusation in this maner: that Iohn Hus for to confirme the heresie which he had taught the common and simple people out of Wickleffes bookes, sayd openly these wordes, that at what time a great number of Monkes and Friars and other learned men, were gathered together in Englād in a certayne Church, to dispute agaynst Iohn Wickliffe, & could by no meanes vanquishe him or geue him the foyle, sodenly the church doore was broken open with lightning so that with much a doe Wickleffes enemies hardly scaped without hurt. He added moreouer that he wished his soule to be in the same place where Iohn Wickleffes soule was. Whereunto Iohn Hus answered:* that a douscine yeares before that any bookes of Diuinitie of Iohn Wickleffes were in Boheme, he did see certayne workes of Philosophie of hys, the which, he sayd, did merueilous delite and please hym. And when he vnderstoode the good and godly life of the sayd Wickleffe, he spake these wordes: I trust sayde he that Wickleffe is saued, and albeit that I doubt whether he be damned or no, yet with a good hope I wish that my soule were in the same place where Iohn Wickleffes is. Then agayne did all the company iest and laugh at hym.

It is also in hys accusation that Iohn Hus did counsaile the people according to the example of Moyses,* to resist with the sword agaynst all such as did gaynsay his doctrine. And the next day after he had preached the same, there were found openly in diuers places certaine intimations that euery man being armed with hys sword about Page 608 him, should stoutly proceede: and that brother shoulde not spare brother, neyther one neighbor an other. Iohn Husse aunswered that all these thinges were falsly layd vnto hys charge by his aduersaries, for he at all times when he prea'ched did dilligently admonishe, and warne the people, that they should all arme themselues to defend the truth of the Gospell, according to the saying of the Apostle, with the helmet and sworde of saluation, and that he neuer spake of any material sword, but of that which is the word of God. And as touching intimations or Moyses sword, he neuer had nothing to doe withall.

It is moreouer affirmed in hys accusation and witnes that many offences are sprong vp by the doctrine of Hus. For first of all he sowed discord betweene the Ecclesiastical and the politick state: whereupon folowed the persecution, spoiling; and robbery of the Clergie & Bishops. And more ouer that he through his dissention, dissolved the vniuersitie of Prage. Hereunto Iohn Hus briefly aunswered that these thinges had not happened by hys meanes or default. For the first dissention that was betweene the Ecclesiasticall and politicke state, sprang and grew vpon this cause, that pope Gregory the 12. of that name, promised at his election that at all times at the wil and pleasure of the Cardinals: he would depart from, and geue ouer hys seate agayne: for vnder that condition he was electe and chosen. This man contrary and against Wincelate king of Boheme, who was then also king of the Romaynes, made Lewes Duke of Bauaria Emperour.

A few yeares after it happened that when as P. Gregory would not refuse and geue ouer his seate and office at the request of the Cardinalles, that the whole Colledge of Cardinalles sent letters to the king of Boheme requiring him, that together with them he would renounce & forsake his obedience vnto pope Gregory, and so it shoulde come to passe that by y^e authoritie of a new Byshop he should recouer againe his imperial dignity. For this cause the king cōsēted to the wil of y^t Cardinals as touching a neutrality that is to say, that he would neyther take part with Pope Gregory,* neyther yet with Benedict the xii. Byshop of Auinion, whiche was then named Pope as it doth appeare by Chronicles. In this cause then, for somuch as the archbishop Swinco with the Clergy, were agaynst the kyng, and abstayning from the deuine seruice many of them departed out of the Citty, and the archbishop hymselfe breaking down the tombe of the Lord Wincelate contrary and agaynst the kinges will, did also take Wickliffes bookes & burned them: therupon the king without any gaynsaying suffered that certayne goodes of theyrs, which of their own wils were fled away, should be spoyled, because they shold not consent or accord with the bishop. Wherupon it is easie to be vnderstanded and knowne, that Iohn Husse was falsely accused for that matter.* Howbeit a certayn man one Naso rising vp, sayd, the Clergy (sayd he) did not abstayne from the deuine seruice because they woulde not sweare to consent vnto the king, but because that they were spoyled and robbed of theyr goodes and substaunce. And the Cardinall of Cambray, who was one of the Iudges sayd: here I must say somewhat, which is come into my minde.

When as I came from Rome, the same yeare that these thinges were done, by chaunce I met on the way certayne Prelates of Boheme. Whome when I demaunded what newes they had brought out of Boheme, they aunswered that there was happened a wonderfull cruel and haynous fact, for all the Clergy were spoyled of all theyr substaunce and very ill intreated and handled.* Then Iohn Hus alledging the same cause which he did before, went forward vnto the secōd part of the Article which was objected against him, denying also that it happened thorough his fault, that the Germaynes departed from the Uniuersitie of Prage. But when as the king of Boheme, according to the foundation of Charles the fourth, his father granted three voices vnto the Bohemes, & the fourth vnto the Germaynes whereat the Germaynes grudging, that they shoulde be exemted from theyr voices,* of theyr owne accorde departed & went theyr wayes: binding themselues with a great oth and vnder a great penalty, both of their fame and also money, that none of them should returne agayne vnto Prage Notwithstanding: I am not ashamed to confesse that I did approue and allow the doinges of the king, vnto whom of only I ow obedience for the commoditie and profite of my country. And because you shal not thinke that I haue spoken any vntrueth, here is present Albert Warren Tranius, whiche was deacon of the faculties, who hadde sworne to depart with the rest of the Germaynes: he, if that he wil say the truth, shal easly clere me of this suspitiō.

But when as Albert would haue spoken, he could not be heard. But the foresayd Naso, of whome before is made mention, after he had asked leaue to speak, sayd, this matter do I vnderstand wel inough,* for I was in the Kinges court, when these thyngs were done in Boheme, when as I sawe the maysters of the 3. nations of the Germaynes, Bauarians, Saxons, and Silesians, amongst whome the Pollonians were also numbred, most humbly come vnto the king, requiring y^t he would not suffer the right of their voyces to be takē from them. Then the kyng promised thē that he would forsee and prouide for theyr requestes. But Iohn Hus and Ierome of Prage with diuers others, per'swaded the king that he should not so do. Wherat the king at the first being not a little moued, gaue him a sore checke that he and Hierom of Prage did somuch intermedie them'selues, and moued such open controuersies, in somuch that he threatned them, that except they would forsee and take heede, hee would bring it to passe that the matter shoulde be determined and decreed by fire. Wherefore most reuerēd fathers, you shall vnderstand that the king of Boheme did neuer fauour with his hart, these men whose vnshamefastnes is such,* that they feared not euen of late, to entreat me euill, being so much in the kinges fauour and credite. After hym stepped forth Paletz, saying: verely most reuerend fathers, not onely the learned men of other nations, but also of Boheme it selfe: are through the Councell of Iohn Hus and his adherentes, banished out of Boheme, of the which number some remayne yet in exile in Morauia. Hereunto Iohn Hus answered, how can thys be true, sayd he, sithēs I was not at Prage at that tyme, when as these men you speake of, departed and went away from thence? These thynges were thus debated the day aforesayd as touching Iohn Hus.

This done, the sayd Iohn Hus was committed to the custody of the bishop of Rigen,* vnder whome Ierome of Prage was also prisoner. But before that he was led away y^e Cardinall of Cambray, calling him backe agayne in the presence of the Emperour, sayd Iohn Hus, I haue heard you say, that if you had not ben willing of your own mind to come vnto Constance, neyther the Emperour himselfe, neither the king of Boheme coulde haue compelled you to do it. Unto whom Iohn Hus answered, vnder your licēce most reuerend father, I neuer vsed any such kinde of talke or wordes. But this I did say, that there was in Boheme a great number of gentle mē and noble men, which did fauour and loue me, the whiche also might easely haue kepte me in some sure and secret place, that I shoulde not haue bene constrayned to come vnto thys towne of Constance neyther at the will of the Emperour,* neyther of the king of Boheme. With that the Cardinall of Cambray, euen for very anger began to chaunge hys colour, and despiteously said do you not see the vnshamefastnes of y^e man here? And as they were murmuring and whispering on all partes,* the L. Ioh. de Clum, ratifying and confirming that which Iohn Hus had spoken, sayd: that Iohn Hus had spoken very well, for on my part (sayd he) which in comparison of a great many others am but of small force in the realme of Boheme, yet alwayes if I would haue taken it in hand, I could haue defended hym easely by the space of one yeare, euen agaynst all the force & power of both these great and mighty kinges. How much better might they haue done it which are of more force or puissance then I am? and haue stronger castles and places then I haue? After that the L. de Clum had spoken, the Cardinal of Cambray sayd, let vs leaue thys talke. And I tell you Iohn Hus, and counsaile you, that you submit your selfe vnto the sentence and mind of the Councel, as you did promise in the prison, and if that you wyll do so, it shall be greatly both for your profite and honour.

And the Emperour hymselfe began to tell hym y^e same tale,* saying: Albeit that there be some which say that the 15 day after you were committed to prison, you obtayned of vs our letters of safe conducte, notwithstanding I can well proue by the witnes of many Princes and noble men, that the sayd sase conducte was obtayned and gotten of vs by my Lord de Dube and de Clum, before you were parted out of Prage, vnder whose garde we haue sent for you, to to the end that none shold do you any outrage or hurt, but y^t you shold haue full liberty to speake freely before all the Councell, and to answere as touching your fayth and doctrine, and as you see my Lords the Cardinales and Byshops, haue so dealt with you, that we doe very well perceauē theyr good will towardes you, for y^e whych we haue great cause to thanke thē. And for somuche as diuers haue told vs, y^t we may not or ought not of right, to defend anye man which is an hereticke or suspecte of heresie: therefore now we geue you euen the same Councell, which the Cardinal of Cambray hath geuen you already, that you be not obstinate to mayntayne any opinion, but y^t you do submit•Page 609 your selfe vnder such obedience as you owe vnto the authoritie of the holy Councell in all thinges, that shall be laid against you and confirmed by credible witnesses. The which thing if you do according to our Counsaile, we will geue order that for the loue of vs and of our brother y^e whol realme of Boheme, the Councell shall suffer you to depart in peace, with an easie and tollerable penance & satisfactiō. The which thing if you do contrariwise refuse to do, y^e presidentes of y^e Councell, shall haue sufficient wherewithal to proceede agaynst you. And for our part be ye well assured, that we will sooner prepare and make the fire w^t our own handes to burne you withall, then we wil endure or suffer any longer that you shal maintayn or vse this stifnes of opinions, which you haue hitherto mayntayned and vsed. Wherefore our aduise and councell is, that you submit your self wholly vnto y^e iudgement of the coucell. Vnto whome I.* Hus answered in this sort: O most noble Emperour, I render vnto your highnes most immortall thanks for your letters of safeconduct. Uppon this L. Iohn de Clum did break him of his purpose, and admonished him, that he did in no poynt excuse himselfe of the blame of obstinacie.

Then said I. Hus, O most gentle lord, I do take God to my witnes, that I was neuer minded to mayntain any opinion euer obstinately, and that for this same intent and purpose, I did come hether of myne owne good will, that if any man could lay before me any better or more holy doctrine then mine, that then I would chaunge myne opinion without anye further doubt. After he had spoken and sayde these thinges, he was sent awaye with the Sergeantes.

The morow after, which was the viii. day of Iune, the uery same company which was assembled the day before, assembled now againe at the Couent of the Franciscaues. And in this assembly were also I. Husse, hys friends Lord de Dube, and Lord de Clum, and Peter the Notary. Thether was Iohn Hus also brought: & in his presence there were reade about 39. Articles, the which they sayde, were drawne out of his bookes. Hus acknowledged all those that were faythfully and truly collected and gathered to be his, of the which sort there were but very few. The residue were counterfayted and forged by his aduersaryes: & specially by Stephen Palletz, the principall authour of this mischief for they could finde no such thinge in the bookes out of the which they sayde they had drawne and gathered them, or at the least, if they were: they were corrupted by flanders, as a man may easely perceiue by the number of Articles.

These be the same Articles in a matter whiche were shewed before in the prison to Iohn Hus, and are rehearsed here in an other order. Howbeit, there were more Articles added vnto thē and other some corrected & enlarged. But now we will shew them one with an other, and declare what the sayde Hus did aunswere both openly before them all, as also in the prison, for he left his aunsweres in the prison briefly written with hys owne hand in these wordes.

I Iohn Hus, unworthy minister of Iesus Christ, master of Arte and Bachelour of Diuinitie do confesse that I haue written a certayne small treatise intituled of y^e church,* the copy whereof was shewed me by the Notaryes of the three Presidentes of the Councell, that is to saye, the Patriarche of Constantinople, the Byshop of Castle, and the Byshop of Libusse: the whiche deputies or presidentes in repose of the sayd treatise, deliuered vnto me certayne articles, saying, that they were drawne out of the sayd treatise, and were written in the same.

The first Article. There is but one holy uniuersall or Catholicke Church, which is the vniversall company of al the predestinate. I doe confesse that thys proposition is mine and is confirmed by the saying of S. Augustin vpon S. Iohn.

The second article. S. Paule was neuer any member of the deuill:* albeit that he committed, and did certayne actes like vnto the actes of the malignant Church. And likewise S. Peter which fell into an horrible sinne of periurie and deniall of his mayster, it was by the permission of God that he might the more firmly and stedfastly rise a gayne and be confirmed. I aunswere, according to Saint Augustine, that it is expedient that the elect and predestinate should sinne and offend.

Hereby it appeareth, that there is two maner of seperations from the holy church.* The first is, not to perdition as all the elect are deuided from the Church. The second is to perdition, by the which certayne heretickes are through theyr deadly sinne, deuided from the Church. Yet notwithstanding, by the grace of God they may returne agayne vnto the flocke and be of the sold of our Lord Iesus Christ of whome he speaketh himselfe saying, I haue other sheep which are not of thys fold. Iohn. xx.

The third article. No part or member of the Church doth depart or fall away at any time from the bodye, for so much as the charitie of predestination,* whiche is the bond and chayne of the same, doth neuer fall. Thys proposition is thus placed in my booke: As the reprobate of the church proceed out of the same, & yet are not as partes or mēbers of the same, for so much as no part or member of the same doth finally fall away, because that the charitie of predestination, which is the bond and chayne of the same, doth neuer fall away. This is proued by the 13. chapter of the first to the Corinthians and to the Romaines the 8. chapter: All thinges turne to good to them whiche loue God. Also I am certayne that neyther death nor life can separte vs from the charitie and loue of God, as it is more at large in the booke.

The fourth Article.* The predestinate although he be not in the state of grace according to present iustice, yet is he alwayes a member of the vniuersall Church. Thys is an errour, if it be vnderstand of all such as be predestinate, for thus it is in the booke about the beginning of the fift chapter where it is declared that there be diuers maners and fortes of being in the Church, for there are some in the Church according to a misshappen fayth, and other some according to predestination, as Christians predestinate now in sinne, but shall returne agayne vnto grace.

The fift article: There is no degree of honor or dignitie neyther any humain election,* or any sensible signe, that can make any man a member of the vniuersall Church. I aunswere this article is after this maner in my book. And such subtilties are vnderstanded & knowne by considering what it is to be in the Church, and what it is to be a part or member of the Church,* & that predestination doth make a man a member of the vniuersall Church, the whiche is a preparation of grace, for the present, and of glory to come: & not degree of dignitie, neyther election of man, neyther any sensible signe. For the acuser Iudas Iscarioth notw^tstanding Christes election, & the temporall graces which were geuen him for his office of Apostleship, and y^t he was reputed and counted of men a true Apostle of Iesus Christ yet was he no true Disciple but a wolf couered in a sheps skinne,* as sainet Augustine sayth.

The vi. Article: A reprobate man is neuer no member of the holy Church. I answere, it is in my booke with sufficient long probation out of the 26. Psalme, and out of the v. chapter to the Ephesians, & also by S. Barnarde saying the Church of Iesus Christ is more playnly and euidently his body, then the body which he deliuered for vnto death I haue also written in the v. chap. of my booke, that the holy church is the barne of the Lord, in the whiche are bothe good and euill, predestinate and reprobate, the good being as the good corne or grayne, and the ciuill as the chaffe, & thereunto is added the exposition of S. Augustine.

The seuenth article: Iudas was neuer no true Disciple of Iesus Christ. I answere and I do confesse the same. This appeareth by the fift article, which is passed afore, & by S. Augustine in his booke of penance, where he doth expound the meaning of S. Iohn in hys first Epistle and second chapter, where he sayd: They come out frō amōgst vs, but they were none of vs. He knewe from the beginning all them whiche should beleue, and him also whiche should betray him and sayd: And therefore I say vnto you that none commeth vnto me, except it be geuen hym of my father. From that tune many of the Disciples parted from him, and were not those also called Disciples accordyng the wordes of the Gospell? And yet notwithstanding they were no true Disciples, because they did not remayne and continue in the word of the sonne of God, according as it is said: If you remayne in my word, you be my Disciples. For so much then as they did not continue with Christ as hys true Disciples, so likewise are they not the true sonns of God: although they seeme so, vnto him they are not so, vnto whom it is known what they shall be: That is to say of good, euill. Thus much writeth S. Augustine. It is also euident that Iudas could not be the true Disciple of Christ, by meanes of hys couetousnesse for Christ himselfe sayd in the presence of Iudas, as I suppose, except a man forsake all that he hath, he can not be my Disciple. For somuch then as Iudas did not forsake all thinges, according to the Lordes will, and follow him he was a theefe as it is sayd, Iohn the 12. and a deuill, Iohn the 6. whereby it is euident by the worde of the Lord, that Iudas was not hys true, but sayned Disciple. Whereupon S. Augustine writing vpon Iohn, declaring how the sheepe heare the voice of Christ, sayth, what maner of hearers, thinke we, hys sheepe were? Truely Iudas heard him and was a wolfe, Page 610 yet followed he the shepherd, but being clothed in a sheeps skinne he lay in wayt for the shepheard.

The eight article: The congregatiō of the predestinate whether they be in the state of grace or no, according vnto present iustice, is the holy vniuersall Church, and therefore it is an article of fayth, and it is the same Churche, whiche hath neither wrinkle neyther spot in it, but is holy & vndefiled,* the which the sonne of God doth cal his own. The answere. The wordes of the booke out of the which thys Article was drawne are these: Thirdly, the Church is vnderstand and taken for the congregation and assembly of y^e faythfull, whether they be in the state of grace, according to present iustice or not. And in this sort it is an Article of our fayth, of the whiche S. Paule maketh mention in the fifth chapter to the Ephesians: Christ so loued his Church that he deliuered and offered himself for the same &c. I pray you then, is there any faythful man, the which doth doubt that the Church doth not signifie all the elect and predestinate the which we ought to beleue to be the vniuersall Church the glorious spouse of Iesus christ holy and without spot? wherefore this Article is an article of fayth, the whiche we ought firmly to beleue according to our Creede. I beleue the holy Catholicke Church, and of this Church doth S. Augustine, S. Gregory, S. Ierome, and diuers other make mention.

The ix. article: Peter neuer was, neither is the head of the holy vniuersall Church. The aunswere. This Article was drawne out of these wordes of my booke: All men do agree in this poynt, that Peter had receiued of the rocke of the church (which is Christ) humilitie, pouertie, stedfastnes of fayth, and consequently blessednes. Not as though the meaning of our Lord Iesus Christ was, when he said vpon this rocke I will build my Church, that he woulde build euery Militant Church vppon the person of Peter, for Christ should buyld hys Church vpon the rocke which is Christ himselfe, from whence Peter receiued hys steadfastnes of fayth, for somuche as Iesus Christ is the onely head and foundation of euery Church, and not Peter.

[unspec 10] The tenth Article: If he that is called the vicar of Iesus Christ, do followe Christ in his life, then he is his true vicare.* But if so be it, he do walke in contrary pathes and wayes, then is he the messenger of Antichrist, & the enemy and aduersary of S. Peter, & of our Lorde Iesus Christe, and also the vicare of Iudas Iscarioth. I aunswere the wordes of my book are these: If he which is called the vicare of S. Peter walke in the wayes of Christian vertues aforesayd, we do beleue verely that he is the true vicar and true Byshop of the Church whiche ruleth: but if he walke in contrary pathes and wayes, then is he the messenger of Antechrist cōtrary both to S. Peter,* and our Lord Iesus Christ. And therfore S. Bernard in hys 4. book did write in this sort vnto pope Eugenie: Thou delitest & walkest in great pride and arrogancie, being gorgeously and sump'tuously arayd, what fruit or profite do thy flocke or sheepe receiue by thee? If I durst say it, these be rather the pastures and feedinges of deuils, then of sheepe. S. Peter & S. Paul did not so, wherefore thou seemest by these thy doings to succede Constantine, & not S. Peter. These be the very wordes of S. Bernard. It followeth after in my booke that if the maner and fashion of his life and liuing, be contrary to that which S. Peter vsed, or that he be geuen to auarice and couetousnes, then is he the vicar of Iudas Iscarioth, which loued and chose the reward of iniquitie, & dyd set out to sale the Lord Iesus Christ. As soone as they had read the same, those which ruled and gouerned the cou|cell, beheld one an other, making mockes and moes, they nodded theyr heades at hym.

[unspec 11] The xi. article: Al such as doe vse Symmony, & priests liuing dissolutely and wantonly, do hold an vntrue opinion of y^e 7. Sacramentes, as vnbeleuing bastardes, and not as Children, not knowing what is the office & duety of the keyes or censures, rites, and ceremonies, neither of the diuine seruice of the Church, or of veneration or worshipping of reliques, neither of y^r orders constituted and ordeined in the Church, neither yet of indulgences or pardons. I answere, y^t it is placed in this maner in my book. Thys abuse of authoritie or power is committed by such as doe sell & make marchandise of holy orders,* and get and gather together riches by Symonie, making fayres and markets of the holy Sacramentes, and liuing in all kynd of voluptuousnes and dissolute maners, or in any other filthy or vi|lanous kind of liuing. They do polute and defile the holye ecclesiasticall state. And albeit that they professe in wordes that they do know God, yet doe they deny it again by their deeds, and consequently beleue not in God: But as vnbeleueing bastardes they holde a contrarye and vntrue opinion of the 7. Sacramentes of the Church. And this appeareth most euidently, for somuch as all suche doe vtterly contemne and despise the name of God, according to the saying of Malachy, the first chapter: Unto you O Priestes be it spoken, which doe despise and contemne my name.

The xii. Article: The papall dignitie hath hys original [unspec 12] from the Emperours of Rome.* I answere, and mark wel what my wordes are. The preeminence and institution of the Pope is sprong and come of the Emperours power & authoritie. And this is proued by the 96. distinction, for Constantine graunted thys priuiledge vnto the Bishop of Rome, and other after hym confirmed the same: That like as Augustus for the outward and temporal goodes bestowed vpon the Church, is counted alwayes the most high king aboue al others: so the bysh. of Rome shold be called y^e principal father aboue all other bishops. This notwithstanding the papall dignitie hath hys original immediately from Christ, as touching hys spirituall administration and office, to rule the Church. Then the Cardinall of Cabray sayd: in the tyme of Constantine there was a generall Councell holden at Nice, in the whiche, albeit the highest rowme and place in the Church was geuen to the Bishop of Rome, for honours cause, it is ascribed vnto the Emperour: wherefore then do you not aswell affirme and saye y^t the Papall dignitie tooke hys originall rather from that councel, then by the Emperours authoritie and power?

The 13. article: No man would reasonably affirme (w^out [unspec 13] reuelation) neyther of hymselfe nor of any other,* that hee is the heade of any particular Church. I aunswere I confesse it to be written in my booke, and it followeth straight after: Albeit that through hys good liuing he ought to hope and trust that he is a member of the holy vniuersal Church, the spouse of Iesus Christ, according to the saying of the Preacher: No man knoweth whether he be worthy and haue deserued grace and fauour, or hatred. And Luke the 17. when ye haue done all that ye can, say that you are vnprofitable seruantes.

The 14. Article: It ought not to be beleueed that the [unspec 14] pope, whatsoeuer he be, may be the head of any particular Church, vnles he be predestinate or ordayned of God. I aunswere, that I doe acknowledge thys preposition to be myne, and thys is easie to proue, forsomuche as it is necessary that the Christian faith shuld be depraued, for somuch as the Church was deceiued by N. as it appeareth by S. Augustine.

The 15. article. The popes power as Uicare, is but [unspec 15] vayne and nothing worth,* if he do not confirme & addresse hys lyfe accordyng to Iesus Christ, and not followe the maners of S. Peter. I answere that it is thus in my book that it is meet and expedient that he which is ordayned vicar should addresse and frame himselfe in maners and conditions, to y^e authoritie of hym,* which did put him in place. And Iohn Hus sayd. Moreouer before the whole councell I vnderstand that the power and authoritie in such a pope as doth not represent the maners of Christ, is frustrate and voyd as touching the merite and rewarde, which he shold obtayne and get therby, and doth not get the same: but not as concerning hys office. Then certayne others standing by asked of hym saying, where is that glose in your book? I. Hus answered, you shall finde it in my treatise agaynst M. Palletz, wherat all the assistaunce (looking one vpon an other) began for to smile and laugh.

The 16. Article. The pope is most holy, not because hee [unspec 16] doth supply and hold the rowme and place of S. Peter,* but because he hath great reuenues. I answere that my words are mutilate, for thus it is written: He is not most holy because he is called the vicar of S. Peter, or because he hath great and large possessions: But if he be the follower of Ie|sus Christ in humilitie, gentlenes, paciēce, labour and trauayle, [unspec 17] and in perfect loue and charitie.

The 17. Article.* The Cardinals are not the manifest and true successours of the other Apostles of Iesus Christ if they liue not according to the fashion of the Apostles keping the commaundementes and ordinaunces of the Lord Iesus, I answere, that it is thus written in my booke, and it proueth it selfe sufficiently. For if they enter in by an other way then by the dore whiche is the Lord Iesus, they be murtheres and theeues.

Then sayde the Cardinall of Cambray, beholde both this and all other articles before rehearsed, he hath written much more detestable thinges in his booke, then is presented in hys articles. Truely Iohn Hus yⁿ hast kept no order in thy sermons and writings. Had it not ben your part to haue applyed your sermons according to your audiēce? For to what purpose was it, or what did it profite you before the people to preach agaynst the Cardinals, when as none of them were present? It had bene meeter for you to haue told them theyr faults before them all, then before the Page 611 laity. Then aunswered Iohn Hus, reuerend father, for so much as I did see many prieste & other learned men present at my sermons, for their sakes I spake those wordes. Then sayd the Cardinal thou hast done very ill, for by such kinde of talke thou hast disturbed and troubled the whole state of the Church.

The 18. Article.* An hereticke ought not to be committed to the secular powers to be put to death, for it is sufficient onely that he abide and suffer the ecclesiasticall censure. These are my wordes.* That they might be ashamed of their cruel sentence and iudgement, specially for somuch as Iesus Christ byshop both of the old and newe Testament would not iudge such as were disobedient by ciuill iudgement, neither condemne them to bodily death. As touching the first poynt. It may be euidently seene in the 12. Chapter of S. Luke. And for the second it appeareth also by the woman which was taken in adultery, of who it is spoken in the 8. chapter of Sainct Iohn. And it is sayde in the 18. Chapter of Sainct Mathew: If thy brother haue offended thee. &c. Marke therfore what I do say: That an hereticke whatsoever he be, ought first to be instructed and taught with Christian loue, and gentlenes by the holy scriptures and by the reasons dra•ne and taken out of the same, as S. Augustine and others haue done, disputing agaynst the heretickes. But if there were any which after al these gentle and louing admonitions and instructions, would not cease from, or leaue of their stiffnes of opinions, but obstinately resist agaynst the truth, suche I say ought to suffer corporall or bodily punishment.

As soone as Iohn Hus had spoken those thinges, the iudges red in hys booke a certayne clause, wherein he seeined greeuously to enuey agaynst them which deliuered an hereticke vnto the secular power, not being confuted or constricted of heresie, and compared thē vnto the high priestes, Scribes, and Phariseis, which sayd vnto Pilate, it is not lawfull for vs to put any man to death, and deliuered Christ vnto him:.* And yet notwithstanding according vnto Christes owne witnesse, they were greater murtherers then Pilate: for he, said Christ: which hath deliuered me vn'to thee, hath committed the greatest offence. Then y^e Cardinals and Bishops,* made a great noyse and demaunded of I. Hus, saying, who are they y^t thou dost compare or assimule vnto the Phariseis? Then he sayd, all those whiche deliuered vp anye innocent vnto the ciuill sworde, as the Scribes and Phariseis deliuered Iesus Christ vnto Pilate. No, no, sayd they agayne, for all that, you spake here of doctors. And the Cardinall of Cambray, according to his accustomed maner sayd: Truly, they which haue made and gathered these articles, haue vsed great lenitie and getlenes, for his writings are much more detestable & horrible

The 19. article.* The Nobles of the world ought to cōstrayne and compel the ministers of the Church to obserue and keepe the law of Iesus Christ. I answere, that it standeth thus word for word in my booke.* Those which be on our part do preach and affirme that the church militant, according to the partes, which the Lord hath ordayned, is de'uided and consisteth in these partes. That is to say: Ministers of the Church, which should keepe purely and sincely the ordinaunces and commaundementes of the sonne of God, and the Nobles of the world that should compel and driue them to keepe the commaundementes of Iesus Christ, and of the common people, seruing to both these partes and endes according to the institution and ordinaunce of Iesus Christ.

The 20. Article.* The ecclesiasticall obedience, is a kynd of obedience, which the priestes and monks haue inuented w^tout any expresse authority of y^e holy scriptures. I answer and confes, that those words are thus written in my book. I say,* that there be three kindes of obedience, spirituall, secular and ecclesiasticall. The spirituall obedience is that which is onely due according to the lawe and ordinance of God, vnder the whiche the Apostles of Iesus Christ dyd lyue, and all Christians ought for to liue. The secular obedience, is that which is due according to the Ciuill lawes and ordinances. The ecclesiastical obedience is such as the Priestes haue inuented without any expresse authoritie of Scripture. The first kinde of obedience doth vtterly exclude from it all euill, as well on his part which geueth the commandement, as on his also which doth obey the same. And of this obedience it is spoken in the 24.* chap. of Deut. Thou shalt do all that which the priestes of the kindred of Leuy shall teach and instruct thee, according as I haue cōmaunded them.

The 21. Article.* He that is excōmunicated by the pope, if he refuse and forsake the iudgement of the Pope, and the generall Councell, and appealeth vnto Iesus Christ, after he hath made hys appellation all the excommunications and curses of the Pope cannot annoy or hurt hym. I aunswere, that I do not acknowledge this proposition, but in deede I did make my complaynt in my booke, that they had both done me and such as fauoured me great wrong, & that they refuse to heare me in the popes court. For alter the death of one pope I dyd appeale to hys successor, and all that did profite me nothing. And to appeale from the P. to the Councell,* it were to long, & that were euen as much as if a man in trouble should seeke an vncertayne remedy. And therfore last of all I haue appealed to the head of the Church my Lord Iesus Christ, for he is much more excellent and better, then any pope to discusse and determine matters and causes, for somuch as he cannot erre, neyther yet deny iustice to him that doth aske or require it in a iust cause, neither can he condemne the innocent. Then spake y^e Cardinall of Cambray vnto hym and sayd:* wilt thou presume aboue S. Paule, who appealed vnto the Emperour and not vnto Iesus Christ? Iohn Hus answered: for somuch then as I am the first y^e do it, am I therfore to be reputed & counted an hereticke? And yet notwithstanding S. Paule did not appeale vnto the Emperoure of hys owne motion or will, but by the will of Christ, which spake vnto hym by reuelation and sayd: be firme and constant for y^u must go vnto Rome. And as he was about to rehearse his appeale agayne, they mocked hym.

For so much as mention here is made of the appeale of the sayd Hus, it seemeth good here to shewe the manner and forme therof.

The copy and tenour of the appeale of Iohn Hus.

FORasmuch as the most mighty Lorde one in essence. 3. in person, is both the chiefe and first,* &c also the last and vttermost refuge of al those which are oppressed, and that he is the God which defendeth verety and truth throughout all generations, doyng iustice to such as be wronged, being ready and at hand to al those whiche call vpon him in veritie and truth, and bindyng those that are bond: and fulfilleth the desires of all those which honour and feare hym: defending and keeping al those that loue him, and vtterly destroyeth and bringeth to ruine the stiffnecked and vnpenitent sinner,* and that the Lorde Iesus Christ very God and man, being in great anguish compassed in with the priestes, Scribes and Phariseis, wicked iudges and witnesses, willing by the most bitter and ignominious death, to redeme the chosen children of God, before the foundation of the world, from euerlasting damnation, hath left behinde him this godly example for a memory vnto them which should come after hym, to the intent they should commit al their causes into the handes of God, who can doe all thinges, and knoweth and seeth all thinges, saying in this maner: O Lorde, beholde my affliction, for my enemy hath prepared hymselfe against me, and thou art my protector and defendor. O Lorde thou hast geuē me vnderstanding and I haue acknowledged thee: thou hast opened vnto me all their enterprises, and for mine owne parte I haue bene as a meeke lambe, which is led vnto sacrifice, and haue not resisted agaynst them. They haue wrought their enterprises vpon me, saying: Let vs put wood in hys bread, and let vs banysh him out of the land of the liuing that hys name be no more spokē of, nor had in memory. But thou O Lord of hostes whiche iudgeth lustly and seest the deuises and imaginations of theyr hartes, hasten thee to take vengeance vpon them, for I haue manifested my cause vnto thee, for so much as the number of those which trouble me is great, and haue counsayled together, saying: the Lorde hath forsaken hym, pursue hym and catch hym. O Lord my God, behold their doinges, for thou art my pacience, deliuer me from myne enemies, for thou art my God: doe not separte thy selfe fan from me: for so much as tribulation is at hand, and there is no mā which will succour me. My God my God looke downe vpon me wherefore hast thou forsaken me? So many doggs haue compassed me in,* and the company of the wicked haue besieged me round about, for they haue spoken agaynst me with the deceitfull tonges, and haue compassed me in with wordes, full of despite, and haue inforced me without cause. In stead of loue towards me, they haue slandered me and haue recompensed me wyth euill for good, and in place of charitie, they haue conceaued hatred agaynst me.

Wherefore behold I staying my selfe vpon this most holy and fruitfull example of my sauour and redeemer,* do appeale before God for this my grief and hard oppressiō from thys most wicked sentence, and iudgement, and the excommunication determined by the Byshop,* Scribes, Phariseis, and Iudges, which sit in Moyses seate, and resigne my cause wholly vnto hym, so as the holy Patriarke of Constantinople Iohn Chrisostome appealed twice from the Councell of the Byshops and Clergy. And Andrew Byshop of Prage, and Robert Byshop of Lincolne, appealed vnto the soueraign and most iust iudge, the which is not defiled with crueltye, neyther canne he be corrupted with gifres and rewardes, neyther yet be deceiued, by false wnesse. Also I desire greatly Page 612 that all the faythfull seruauntes of Iesus Christ,* and especially the Princes, Barons, Knightes, Esquires and all other whiche inhabite our Country of Boheme, should vnderstand & know these things and haue compassion vpon me which am so greeuously oppressed by the excommunication whiche is out agaynst me, the whiche was obtayned and gotten by the instigation and procurement of Michaell de Causis my great enemy,* and by the consent and furtheraunce of the Canons of the Cathedrall Church of Prage, and geuen and graunted out by Peter of Saint Angelles Deane of the Church of Rome, and Cardinall and also ordayned iudge by Pope Iohn the xxiiij. who hath continued almost these two yeares and would geue no audience vnto my Aduocates and Procurators (which they ought not to deny: no not to a Iew or Pagan, or to any hereticke, whatsoeuer he were) neyther yet woulde he receiue any reasonable excuse for that I did not appeare personally neyther would he accept the testimonials of the whole Vniuersity of Prage with the seale hāging at it, or the witnes of the sworn Notaries, and such as were called vnto witnesse. By thys all men may euidently perceiue that I haue not incurred any fault or crym of contumacie or disobedience, for somuche as that I did not appeare in the Court of Rome, was not for any contempte, but for reasonable causes.

And moreouer, for somuch as they had layd embushmentes for me on euery side by wayes where I shoulde passe, and also because the perils & dangers of others, haue made me the more circumspect and aduised, and for somuche as my procurours were willing and contented to bind themselves euen to abide the punishment of the fire,* to answeare to all such as would appose or lay any thing agaynst me in the Court of Rome, as also because they dyd imprison my lawfull procuratour in the sayd Court, without any cause, demerite or faulte as I suppose. For somuch then as the order and disposition of all auncient lawes, as well deuine of the old and new testament, as also of the Canon lawes is this, that the Iudges should resorte vnto the place where the crime or faulte is committed or done, and there to enquire of al such crimes as shal be objected and layd agaynst hym which is accused, or slandered and that of such men as by conuersation haue some knowledge or vnderstanding of the party so accused (the whiche may not be the euill willers or enemies of hym which is so accused or slaundered but must be men of an honest conuersation,* no common quarrell pickers or accusers, but feruent louers of the law of God) and finally that there shold be a fit and meete place appoynted whether as the accused party might without daunger or perill, resorte or come, and that the Iudge and witnesses should not be enemies vn to hym that is accused. And also forsomuche as it is manifest that all these conditions were wanting and lacking, as touching my appearaunce for the safegard of my life, I am excused before God from the friuolous pretended obstinacie and excommunication. Whereupon I I. Hus do present, & offer this my appeale vnto my Lord Iesu Christ, my iust iudge, who knoweth defendeth, and iustly iudgeth euery mans iust and true cause.

The 22. Article.* A vicious and naughty man liueth viciously and naughtly:* but a vertuous and godly man lyueth vertuously and godly. I answer: my words are these That the deuision of all humaine works is in two parties that is, that they be eyther vertuous or vicious: For somuch as it doth appeare that if any man be vertuous and godly, and that he do any thing, he doth it then vertuously and godly. And contrariwise if a man be vicious & naught that whiche hee doth is vicious and naught. For as vice which is called crime or offence, and thereby vnderstande deadly sinne, doth vniuersally infect or depraue all the acts and doinges of the subiect, that is of the man whiche doth them: so likewise vertue and godlines doth quicken all the actes and doyngs of the vertuous & godly man: in somuch that he being in the state of grace, is layd to praye and doe good works euen sleping, as it were by a certayn meanes working.* As S. Augustine, S. Gregory and diuers other affirme. And it appeareth in the sixt chapter of Luke: If thine eye that is to say, the minde or intention be simple, not depraued with the peruersenes of any sinne or offence all the whole body, that is to say, all the actes and doinges shall be cleare and shyning, that is, acceptable and grateful vnto God. But if thine eye be euil, the whole body is dark'ned And in the second to the Corin.* x. Chapter. All thinges that you do, do them to the glory of God. And lykewise in the first Epistle to the Corinthians, and last chapter it is sayd:* Let all your doinges be done with charitie. Wherefore all kinde of lyfe and liuing according vnto charitie, is vertuous and godly: and if it be without charitie, it is vicious and euill. This saying may well be prooued out of the 23. chapter of Deuteronomy, where God speaketh vnto y^e people that hee that keepeth hys commaundementes, is blessed in the house and in the field, out goyng and in comming, sleeping and waking:* but he that doth not keepe his commaundementes is accursed in the house and in y^e fields in goyng out and comming in, sleeping, and waking &c. The same also is euident by S. Augustine vpon the Psal. where he writeth, that a good man in all hys doinges doth prayse the Lord. And Gregory saith that the sleep of saints and holy men doth not lack their merite. How much more then hys doinges which proceede of good zeale, be not w^eout reward and consequently be vertuous and good? And contrariwise it is vnderstanded of hym, which is in deadly sinne, of whome it is spoken in the law, that whatsoever the vncleane man doth touch, is made vncleane.

To this end doth that also appertayne which is before repeated out of the first of Malachie. And Gregorie in the first booke and first question, sayth: we doe defile the bread, which is the body of Christ, when as we come vnworthely to the table, and when we being defiled, doe drinke hys bloud. And S. Augustine vpon the 146. Psalme, sayth: if thou doest exceed the due measure of nature, & doest not ab'stayne from glottony, but gorge thy selfe vp w[•] dronkennes whatsoever laude or prayse thy tongue doth speake, of the grace and fauour of God,* thy life doth blaspheme the same when he had made an end of this article, the Cardinall of Cambray sayd: The scripture sayth that we be all sinners. And agayne, if we say we haue nosinne, we deceiue our selues, and so we should alwayes liue in deadly sinne.* Iohn Hus aunswered, the Scripture, speaketh in that place of veniall sinnes, the whiche doe not rtterly expell or put away the habite of vertue from a man, but do associate thēselues together. And a certayne English man whose name was w. sayd: but those sinnes do nor associate themselues with anye acte morally good. Iohn Hus alledged agayne S. Augustines place vpon 146. Psalme the whiche when he rehearsed, they all with one mouth sayd, what makes this to the purpose?

The 13. article. The minister of Christ liuing according [unspec 23] to his law, and hauing the knowledge and vnderstanding of the scriptures,* and an earnest desire to edifie the people, ought to preach, notwithstanding the pretended excommunication of the pope. And moreouer if the pope or anye other ruler, doe forbid any priestes or minister so disposed, not to preach, that he ought not to obey him. I aunswere, that these were my wordes. That albeit the excommunication were eyther threatned or come out agaynst hym, in such sort that a Christian ought not to doe the commandementes of Christ, it appeareth by the wordes of S. Peter, and the other Apostles, that we ought rather to obey God, then man. whereupon it followeth that the minister of Christ lyuing according vnto this lawe. &c. ought to preach notwithstanding any pretended excommunication For it is euident that it is commanded vnto the ministers of the Church to preach the word of God.* Actes 5. GOD hath commaunded vs to preach and testifie vnto the people, as by diuers other places of the scripture, and the holy fathers, rehearsed in my treatise it doth appeare more at large. The second part of this article foloweth in my treatise in this maner.

By this it appeareth that for a minister to preache,* and a rich man to geue almes, are not indifferent workes, but duties and commaundementes. Wherby it is further euident, y^t if the pope or any other ruler of the Church do commaund any minister disposed for to preach, not to preach, or a rich man disposed for to geue almes, not to geue, that they ought not to obey hym. And he added moreouer, to the intent that you may vnderstand me the better. I call that a pretended excommunication, the whiche is vniustly disordered and geuen forth contrary to the order of the law and Gods commaundements. For the which the meere Minister appointed therunto ought not to cease from preaching neyther yet to feare damnation.

Then they objected vnto him, that he had sayd y^t suche kinde of excommunications were rather blessinges. Uerely said Hus, euē so do I now say again, that euery excommunication, by the whiche a man is vniustly excommunicate: is vnto him a blessing afore God, according to y^t saying of the Prophet: I will curse where as you blesse: and contrariwise, they shal curse, but thou O Lord shalt blesse. Then the Cardinal of florence,* which had alwayes a Notary ready at his hand to write such thinges as he cōmanded him, said: The law is, that euery excommunication, be it neuer so vniust, ought to be feared. It is true sayd Iohn Hus, for I do remember eight causes, for the whiche excōmunication ought to be feared. Then sayd the Cardinall, is there no more but eight? It may be, said Iohn Hus, that there be more.

The xxiiii. Article.* Euery man which is admitted vnto [unspec 24] y^e ministry of the Church, receiueth also by speciall cōmaundement, the office of a preacher, and ought to execute and fulfil that commaundement, notwithstanding any excommunication Page 613 pretendeth to the contrary. The aunswere. My wordes are these: For so muche as it doth appeare by that which is aforesayd, that whosoeuer commeth, or is admitted vnto the ministry, receiueth also by especiall commaundement, the office of preaching he ought to fulfill that commaundement, any excommunication to the contrary pretended notwithstanding. Also no Christian ought to doubt but that a man sufficientlye instructed in learning,* is more bound to counsel and instruct the ignoraunt, to teach those which are in doubt, to chastise those which are vnruely, and to remitte and forgeue those that do him iniury, then for to to any other works of mercy. For so much then as he that is rich and hath sufficient, is bounden vnder the payne of damnation to minister and geue comporall and bodely almes, as appeareth in the 25. chapter of Mathew: how much more is he bound to doe spirituall almes?

[unspec 25] The 25. Article. The Ecclesiasticall censures are Antichristian, such as the clergy hath inuented for theyr owne preferment, and for the bondage and seuitude of the common people. whereby if the Laity be not obedient vnto the Clergy at theyr will and pleasure, it doth multiplye theyr couetousnesse, defendeth theyr malice, and prepareth a way for Antichrist.* whereby it is an euident signe and token, that such censures proceede from Antichrist, the which censures in theyr processes they do call Fulminations or lightnings, whereby the Clergy doth chiefly proceede agaynst such as doe manifest and open the wickednesse of Antichrist, which thrust themselues into the office of the Clergye. These thinges are contained in the last chapter of his treatise of the Church. I aunswere, and I deny that it is in that forme. But the matter thereof is large'ly handled in the 23. chapter. And in the examination of the audience, they haue gathered certayne clauses most contrary thereunto. The which when they had reade, the Cardinall of Cambray renewed his old song, saying: truly these are much more greeuous and offensiue, then the Articles which are gathered.

[unspec 26] The 26. Article. There ought no interditement to be appoynted vnto the people, for so much as Christ the high Byshoppe, neither for Iohn Baptist, neither for any iniury that was done vnto him did make any interditement. My wordes are these: when as I complayned, that for one Ministers sake, an Interditement was geuen out, and thereby all good men ceased from the laude and prayse of God. And Christ the high Byshoppe, notwithstanding that the Prophette was taken and kept in prison,* then whome there was no greater amongst the children of men, did not geue out any curse or interditement, no not when as Decode beheaded him, neither when he himselfe was spoyled, beaten, and blasphemed of the Souldiours, Scribes and Pharisies, he did not then curse them, but prayed for them, and taught his Disciples to doe the same, as it appeareth in the fift chapter of Saynt Mathew. And Christes first Uicare following the same doctrine and learning, sayth in his first Epistie of Saynt Peter and the second chapter:* Hereunto are ye called: For Christ hath suffered for vs, leauing vs an example that we should follow his footsteppes, who when he was cursed and euill spoken of did not curse agayne.* And Saynt Paule following the same order and way in the xij. chapter of the Romaines, sayth: blesse them that persecute you. There were besides these many other places of scripture recited in that booke, but they being omitted, these were onely rehearsed, whiche did helpe or preuayle to styrrer vppe or, mooue the iudges mindes.

And these are the Articles which were alledged out of I. Hus his booke intituled Of the Church.

Other Articles moreouer out of other his bookes were collected, & forced agaynst him, first out of his treatise written agaynst Steuen Paletz, to the number of 7. Articles. Also 6. other Articles strayned out of his treatise agaynst Stanislaus Znoyma. whereunto his aunsweres likewise be adioyned, not vnfruitfull to be read.

Here followeth seuen Articles, which are sayde to be drawn out of hys Treatise which he wrote agaynst Stephen Pallets.

The first Article.* If the Pope, Byshop, or Prelate, be in deadly sinne,. he is then no Pope, Byshoppe, nor Prelate. The aunswere, I graunt thereunto, and I send you vnto Saynt Augustine, Ierome, Chrisostome, Gregory, Cyprian, and Bernarde, the which doe say, moreouer that whosoeuer is in deadly sinne, is no true Christian, howe much lesse then is he Pope, or Byshop, of whom it is spoken by the Prophet Amos in his 8. chapter. They haue raigned and ruled and not through me, they became Princes, and I knew them not. &c. But afterward I doe graūt that a wicked Pope, Byshop, or Priest, is an vnworthye minister of the Sacrament, by whom God doth baptise, consecrate, or otherwise worke to the profit of his Church, and this is largely handled in the text of the booke by the authorities of the holy Doctours, for euen he which is in deadly sinne is not worthely a kyng before God, as it appeareth in the first booke of kynges 15. chapter. where as God sayth vnto Saule by the Prophet Samuel, sayinge: for so muche as thou hast refused and cast of my worde, I will also refuse and cast thee off, that thou shalt be no more King.* whiles these thinges were thus intrating, the Emperour looking out at a certayne window of the cloyster, accompanied with the Countye Palentine, and the Burgraue of Norenberg, conferring and talking much of Iohn Hus. At lēgth he sayd, that there was neuer a worse or more pernicious hereticke then he. In the meane while when Iohn Hus had spoken these wordes,* as touchinge the vnworthy king, by and by the Emperour was called, and he was commaunded to repeat those wordes agayne, which after that he had done, his duety therein being considered, the Emperour aunswered, no man sayth he, doth liue without faulte, then the Cardinall of Cambray, being in a great fury sayd, is it not enough for thee that thou doest contemne and despise the Ecclesiastical state, and goest about by the writings and doctrine to perturbe and trouble the same, but that now also thou wilt attempte to throw kinges out of theyr state and dignity? Thē Paletz began to alleadge the lawes whereby he would proue that Saule was king, euen when those words were spoken by Samuel, and therefore that Daudid did forbidde that Saul should not be slayne, not for the holynesse of his life, the which there was none in him, but for the holynesse of hys annoynting. And when as Iohn Hus repeated out of S. Cyprian, that he did take vpon him the name of Christianity in vayne which did not followe Christ in his liuing, Paletz aunswered, beholde and see what a folly is in thys man which alleadgeth those thinges which make nothing for the purpose, for albeit anyman be not a true Christian, is he not therefore true Pope, Byshop, or Kyng? when as these are names of office and to be a Christian is a name of merite and desert, and so may any man be a true Pope, Byshoppe, or King, although he be no true Christian. Then sayd Iohn Hus, if Pope Iohn the xxiiij. were a true Pope, wherefore haue ye depriued him of hys office? The Emperour aunswered, the Lordes of the Councell haue now lately agreed thereupon that he was true Pope, but for his notorious and manifest euill doinges wherewithall, he did offend and trouble the Church of God, and dyd spoyle and bring to ruine the power thereof, he is reiected and cast out of his office.

[unspec 2] The second Article. The grace of predestination is the bond whereby the body of the Church and euery parte and member thereof is firmly knitte and ioyned vnto the head. The aunswere. I acknowledge this Article to be mine, and it is proued in the text out of the eight chapiter to the Romaynes, who shall separte vs from the charity and loue of Christ. &c. And in the tenth chapter of Iohn, My sheepe heare my voyce, and I know them, and they followe me, and I geue them eternall life, neyther shall they perish eternally, neither is there any man which shal take them out of my handes. This is the knotte of the body of the Church, and of our spirituall head Christ, vnderstanding the Church to be the congregation of the predestinate.

[unspec 3] The third Article. If the Pope be a wicked man, and specially a reprobate, then euen as Iudas the Apostle, he is a Deuill, a Theefe, and the Sonne of perdition, and not the head of the holy mylytant Church, for so muche as he is no parte or member thereof. The aunswere. My wordes are thus, if the Pope be an euill or wicked man, and specially if he be a Reprobate, then euen as Iudas, so is he a Deuill, a Theefe, and the Sonne of perdition. How then is he the head of the holy militant Church? where as he is not truely no member or part thereof, for if he were a member of the holy Church, then shoulde he be also a member of Christ, and if he were a member of Christ, then shoulde he cleaue and sticke vnto Chryste by the grace of Predestination and present iustice, and shoulde be one spirite with God, as the Apostle sayth in the first Epistle to the Corinthians, the sixt Chapter: knowe ye not that your bodyes are the members of Christ?

Page 614 [unspec 4] The 4. Article. An euill Pope or Prelate, or reprobate is no true pastour, but a theefe and a robber. The answeare. The text of my booke is thus. If he be euill or wicked, thē is he an hireling, of whom Christ speaketh, he is no sheepe heard, neither are the sheepe his owne. Therefore when he seeth the wolfe comming he runneth away, and forsaketh the sheepe, and so finally doth euery wicked and reprobate man. Therefore euery such reprobate or wicked Pope or Prelate is no true Pastour. But a very theefe and a robber, as is more at large proued in my booke.

Thē sayd Iohn Hus, I doe so limitte all thinges, that such as touching theyr desert, are not truely and worthely Popes and shepheardes before God, but as touching their office and reputation of men, they are Popes, Pastors, and Priestes.

Then a certayne man rising vp behinde Iohn Husse clothed all in silke, sayd: my Lordes take heede least that Iohn Hus deceiue both you, and himselfe with these hys gloses, and looke whether these thinges be in his booke or not, for of late I had disputation with him, vpon these Articles, in the which I sayd, that a wicked Pope, &c. was no Pope, as touching merite and desert, but as touchyng his office, he was truely Pope. Whereupon he vsed these gloses which he had heard of me, and did not take them out of his booke. Then Iohn Hus turning himselfe vnto him, sayd: did you not heare that it was so readde out of my booke, and this did easily appeare in Iohn xxiiij. Whether he were true Pope or a very theefe and robber. Then the Bishoppes and Cardinals looking one vpon another, sayd: that he was true Pope, and laughed Iohn Hus to scorne.

[unspec 5] The 5. The Pope is not, neither ought to be called according vnto his office most holy. For then the king ought also to be called most holy, according to his office. Also the tormentors, lictors and deuilles, ought also to bee called holy. The aunswere: My wordes are otherwise placed in this maner, so ought a fayner say, that if any man be a most holy Father, then he doth most holyly obserue and keepe hys Fatherlynesse. And if he be a naughty and wicked Father, then doth he most wickedly keepe the same. Likewise if the Byshoppe be most holiest, then is he also most good, and when as he sayth that he is Pope, it is the name of his office.

Wherupon it foloweth that the man which is Pope be'ing an euill and reprobate man, is a most holy man. And consequently by that hys office, he is most good. And for so much as no man can be good by hys office, except he do exercise & vse the same, his office very well, it followeth that if the Pope be an euill & reprobate man, he cannot exercise or vse his office wel. Forsomuch as he cannot vse the office wel, except he be morally good. Mat. 12. How cā you speak good things, when you your selues are euil, & immediatly af•er it foloweth. If y^e Pope by reasō of his office be called most holy, wherefore should not the King of Romaines be called most holy by reason of his office and dignity? When as the Kyng, according vnto Saynt Augustines minde, representeth the Deitye and Godhead of Christ, and the Priest representeth onely hys humanity. Wherefore also should not iudges: yea, euen tormentours be called holy, forsomnth as they haue theyr office by ministring vnto the Church of Christ. These thinges are more at large discoursed in my booke, but I cannot finde or knowe sayth Iohn Husse any foundation whereby I shoulde call the Pope most holy, when as thys is onely spoken of Christ. Thou onely art most holy. Thou onely art the Lord. &c. Shoulde I then truely call the Pope moste holy?

[unspec 6] The 6. Article. If the Pope liue contrary vnto Christ. Albeit he be lawfully and Canonically elect and chosen, according to humayne election, yet doth he ascende and come in another way then by Christ. The aunswere. The text is thus, if the Pope liue contrary vnto Christ in pride and auarice, how then doth he not ascend and come another way into the sheepe folde, then by the lowlye and meeke doore our Lord Iesus Christ? But admitte as you say, that he dyd ascend by lawfull election, the which I call an election principally made of God, and not according vnto the common and vulgare constitution and ordinaunce of men, yet for all that, it is affirmed and proued that he shoulde ascende and come in another way, for Iudas Iscariot was truely and lawfully chosen of the Lorde Iesus Christ vnto his Bishopricke, as Christe sayth in the sixt of Iohn, and yet he came in an other way into the sheepe folde, and was a thefe and a Deuill, and the sonne of perdition. Did he not come in another way? when as our Sauour spake thus of him, he that eateth breade with me, shall lift vp his heele agaynst me.

The same also is proued by Saynte Bernarde vnto Pope Eugenius. Then sayde Paletz: beholde the error and maddenesse of this man, for what more furious or madde thing canne there be then to say, Iudas is chosen by Christ, and notwithstanding he did ascende an other way, and not by Christ. Iohn Husse aunswered, verely both partes are true, that he was electe and chosen by Christ, and also that he did ascende, and come in another way, for he was a Theefe, a Deuill, and the sonne of perdition. Then sayde Palettez, cannot a manne be truely and lawefully chosen Pope or Byshoppe, and afterwarde liue contrarye vnto Christe? and that notwithstanding he doth not ascende any other wayes. But I, sayde Iohn Husse doe saye that whosoouer doth enter into anye Byshoppricke or like office by Simonye, not to the intent to labour and trauell in the Church of God, but rather to liue delicately, voluptuouslye and vnrighteously, and to the intent to aduaunce hymselfe with all kinde of pride, euery suche man ascendeth and commeth vppe by an other way, and according vnto the Gospell, he is a theefe and a robber.

[unspec 7] The 7. Article. The condemnation of the forty fyue Articles of Wickliffe made by the Doctours is vnreasonable and wicked, and the cause by them alleadged is fayned and vntrue: That is to say, that none of those Articles are Catholicke, but that euery of them be either hereticall, erronious or offenciue. The aunswere: I haue wrytten it thus in my treatise. the forty fyue Articles are condemned for this cause, that none of those forty fyue, is a Catholicke Article, but eache of them is either hereticall, erronious or offenciue.*

O Mayster Doctour, where is your prooffe, you fayne a cause which you doe not poue, &c. As it appeareth more at large in my Treatise. Then sayd the Cardinall of Cambraye, Iohn Husse, thou diddest saye that thou wouldest not defend any error of Iohn Wickliffes. And now it appeareth in your bookes, that you haue openly defended his Articles. Iohn Hus aunswered. Reuerend Father, euen as I sayde before, so doe I now say agayne, that I will not defende any errors of Iohn Wickliffes, neyther of anye other mannes, but for so muche as it seemed vnto me to be agaynst conscience, simply to consent vnto the condemnation of them, no Scripture beyng alleadged or brought contrary and agaynst them, thereupon I woulde not consent or agree vnto the condemnation of them, And for so much as the reason whiche is copulatiue can not be verified in euery poynt, according to euery part thereof.*

Nowe there remayneth sixe Articles of 39. These are sayd to be drawen out of an other treatise which he wrote agaynst Stanislaus de Znoyma.

The first Article. No man is lawfully elect or chosen, [unspec 1] in that the Electours or the greater part of them haue consented with a liuely voyce according to the custome of men to elect and choose any person, or that he is thereby the manifest and true Successour of Christ, or Uicare of Peter in the Ecclesiasticall office, but in that that any man doth most abundantlye worke meritoriouslye to the profite of the Church, he hath thereby more abundant power geuen him of God thereunto. The answere. These things which follow are also written in my booke. It standeth in the power and handes of wicked Electours to choose a woman into the Ecclesiasticall office, as it appeareth by the election of Agnes, whiche was called Iohn, who held and occupied the Popes place & dignitie by the space of two yeares and more.

It may also be that they doe choose a Theefe, a Murderer, or a Deuil, and consequently they may also elect and choose Antichrist.

It may also be, that for loue, couetousnesse, or hatred, they doe choose some person whom God doth not allowe. And it appeareth that that person is not lawfully elect and chosen: In so much as the Electours or the greater part of them haue consented and agreed together, according to the custome of men vpon any person, or that he is thereby the manifest Successour or Uicare of Peter, the Apostle or any other in the Ecclesiasticall office.

Therefore they which most accordingly vnto the scripture doe elect and choose, reuelation being sette a parte, doe onelye pronounce and determine by some probable reason vppon hym they doe electe and choose, wherevppon whether the Electours doe so choose good or euill, we ought to geue creditte vnto the workes of hym that is chosen, for in that poynt that any manne doth moste Page 615 aboundantly worke meritoriously to the profite of the Church, he hath thereby more aboundant power geuen [unspec 2] him of God thereunto. And hereupon sayth Christ in the 10. of Iohn, geue credit vnto workes.

The 2. Article. The Pope being a reprobate, is not the head of the holy Church of God. The aunswere. I wrote it thus in my Treatise, that I woulde willinglye receiue a probable and effectuall reason of the Doctour, howe thys question is contrary vnto the fayth, to say, that if the Pope be a reprobate, how is he the head of the holy church. Beholde the trueth cannot decay or fayle in disputation, for did Christ dispute agaynst the fayth, when he demaunded of the Scribes and Pharisyes. Math. 12. Ye stocke and ofspring of Uypers, how can ye speake good thinges, when you your selues are wicked and euill? and beholde I demaunde of the Scribes if the Pope be a reprobate, and the stocke of Uipers, how is he the head of the holy Church of GOD, that the Scribes and Pharisyes which were in the Councell house of Prage make aunswere hereunto? For it is more possible that a reprobate man shoulde speake good thinges, for so much as he may be in state of grace according vnto present iustice, then to be the head of the holy Church of God.

Also in the 5. of Iohn, our Sauour complayneth vppon the Iewes, saying. How can you beleue which doe seeke for glory amongst your selues, and doe not seeke for the glory that commeth onely of God. And I likewise doe complayne how that if the Pope be a reprobate, can he be the head of the Church of God, which receiueth hys glory of the world, and seketh not for the glory of GOD? For it is more possible that the Pope being a Reprobate should beleue, then that he should be the head of the Church [unspec 3] of God. For so much as he taketh his glory of the world.

The 3. Article. There is no sparke of apparance, that there ought to be one head in the spiritualtye, to rule the Church, the which shoulde be alwayes conuersant with the militant Church. The aunswere. I do graunt it. For what consequent is this. The king of Boheme is head of the kingdome of Boheme. Ergo, the Pope is head of the whole militant Church. Christ is the head of the spiritualtye, ruling and gouerning the militant Church by much more and greater necessity then Cesar ought to rule the tēporalty. For so much as Christ which sitteth on the ryght hand of God the Father doth necessarily rule the militant Church as head. And there is no sparke of apparance that there should be one head in y^e spiritualty ruling the church, that should alwaies be conuersant with the militant church, except some infidell would heretically affirme, that the militant Church should haue here a permanent and continuall Citty or dwelling place, and not to enquire and seeke after that which is to come. It is also further euident in my booke, how vnconsequent the proportion of the similitude is for a reprobate Pope to be the head of the militant church, and a reprobate king to be the head of y^e kingdome of Boheme.

The 4. Article.* Christ would better rule his Church by his true Apostles dispersed through out the whole world without such monstrous heades: I aunswere, that it is in my booke, as here foloweth, that albeit that y^e doctor doth say, that the body of the militant Church, is oftentimes without a head: yet notwithstanding we do verely beleue that Christ Iesus is the head ouer euery Church, ruling the same without lacke or default, pouring vpō the same a continuall motion and sence, euen vnto the latter day, neither can the doctor geue a reason why the Church in the time of Agnes, by the space of 2. yeares and 5. monethes, liuing according to many members of christ in grace and fauour, but that by the same reason the Church might be without a head, by y^e space of many yeares. For so much as Christ should better rule his Church by his true disciples dispersed throughout the whole world, without suche monstrous heads. Then sayd they all together: Beholde now he prophecieth, and Iohn Hus prosecuting his former talke sayd, but I say that the Church in the time of the Apostles was farre better ruled and gouerned then now is. And what doth let or hinder that christ should not now also rule the same better by his true Disciples without such monstrous heades, as haue bene now a late? For beholde euen at this present we haue no such head. And yet Christ [unspec 5] ceaseth not to rule his Church, when he had spoken these wordes, he was derided and mocked.

The 5. Article. Peter was no vniuersall Pastour or shepheard of the sheepe of Christ, much lesse is the Byshop of Rome. The answere. These words are not in my book, but those which do follow. Secondly it appeareth by the wordes of Christ, y^f he did not limit vnto Peter for his iurisdiction, the whole world, no not one onely prouince. So likewise neither vnto any other of the Apostles. Notwithstanding certayne of them walked through many regions and other some fewer, preaching and teaching the kingdome of God, as Paule which laboured & trauelled more then all the rest did corporally visite and conuert most prouinces, whereby it is lawfull for any Apostle or his vicar to conuert and confirme as much people, or as many prouinces in the fayth of Christ, as they are able, neither is there any restraynt of their liberty or iurisdiction. But only by disability or insufficiency.

The 6. Article. The Apostles and other faythfull priestes [unspec 6] of the Lord haue stoutly ruled the Church in al things necessary vnto saluation before the office of the Pope was brought in to the Church, and so would they very possibly doe still, if there were no Pope euen vnto y^e latter day. Then they all cryed out agayne and sayd: Behold the prophet, but Iohn Hus sayde verely it is true that the Apostles did rule the Church stoutly, before the office of the Pope was brought into the Church. And certaynely a great deale better then it is now ruled. And likewise may other faythfull men which doe follow their steppes doe the same, for as now we haue no Pope, and so peraduenture it may continue and endure a yeare or more. Besides this were brought agaynst him other 19. articles objected vnto him being in prison which with his answeres to the same here likewise follow. Of the whiche Articles, the first is thys.

The first Article.* Paule according vnto present iustice was a blasphemer and none of the Church, and therewithall was in grace, according vnto predestination of life euer lasting. The aunswere. This proposition is not in the booke, but this which foloweth: whereby it doth seme probable, that as Paule was both a blasphemer accordyng to present iustice, and therewithall also was a faythfull childe of our holy mother the Church, and in grace accordyng to predestination of life euerlasting. So Iscariot was both in grace according vnto present iustice, and was neuer of our holy mother the Church, according to the predestination of life euerlasting, for so much as he lacked that predestination. And so Iscariot albeit he was an Apostle, and a Byshop of Christ, which is the name of his office, yet was he neuer no part of the vniuersall Church.

The 2. Article.* Christ doth more loue a predestinate man being sinnefull, then any reprobate in what grace possible soeuer he be. The aunswere. My wordes are in the 4. chapter of my booke intituled of the Church, and it is euident that God doth more loue any predestinate beyng sinnefull, then any reprobate, in what grace so euer he be for the time: for so much as he will, that the predestinate shall haue perpetuall blessednesse, and the reprobate to haue eternall fire. Wherefore God partly infinitely louing them both as his creatures, yet he doth more loue the predestinate because he geueth him greater grace, or a greater gift: that is to say, life euerlasting, which is greater & more excellent then onely grace, according vnto present iustice. And the third Article of those Articles before, soundeth much neare vnto this, that the predestinate cannot fall frō grace, for they haue a certayne radicall grace rooted in thē, although they be depriued of the abundant grace for a time. These thinges are true in the compound sence.

The 3. Article.* All the sinnefull according vnto present iniustice, are not faythfull, but doe swerue from the true Catholicke fayth, for so much as it is impossible that any man can committe any deadly sinne but in that point,* that he doe swerue from the fayth. The aunswere. I acknowledge that sentence to be mine, and it appeareth, that if they did thinke vpon the punishment which is to be laid vpon sinners, and did fully beleue, and had the fayth of the diuine knowledge and vnderstanding. &c. then vndoubtedly they would not so offend and sinne. This proposition is verified by the sayinge of the Prophette Esay. Thy rulers are vnfayth•ll, misbeleuers, fellowes and companions of theeues, they all loue bribes, and followe after rewardes. Beholde the Prophet calieth the rulers of the Church infidels for their offences, for all such as do not keep theyr fayth inuiolate vnto theyr principall Lorde, are vnfaythfull seruauntes, and they also are vnfaythfull children wich keepe not theyr obedience, feare, and loue vnto God their father.

Item, this proposition is verified, by the saying of the Apostle,* the 1. chap. to Titus: They doe confesse that they know God, but by their works they do deny him. And for so much as they which are sinnefull, do swerue away from y^r meritorious work of blessednes, therfore they do swerue from the true fayth grounded vpon charity, for so much as Page 616 fayth without workes is dead. To this end doth also pertaine, that which the Lord speaketh Math. 23. of the faythfull and vnfaythfull seruaunt.

The 4. Article.* These wordes of Iohn in his 22. chap. Receiue the holy Ghost: And whatsoever you sholl binde vpon earth. &c. And Mathew 16. and 18. chapter for lack of vnderstanding shall terrifye many Christians, and they shalbe wonderfully afayrd, and others shalbe deceiued by them, presuming vpon the fulnes of theyr power and authority. The answere. This sentence I do approue and allow, and therefore I say in the same place,* that it is first of all to be supposed that the saying of our Sauour is necessary, as touching the vertue of the word, forasmuch as it is not possible for a Priest to binde and loose, except that binding and loosing be in heauen. But for the lacke of the true vnderstanding of those wordes, many simple Christians shalbe made arrayd, thinking with themselues that whether they be iust or vniust, the Priestes may at their pleasures, whensoever they will, binde them. And the ignorant Priestes do also presume and do take vpon thē to haue power to binde and loose whensoever they wil. For many foo'lish and ignorant priestes do say that they haue power and authority to absolue euery man confessing himself, of what sinne or offence soeuer it be, not knowing that in many sin'nes it is forbidden them, and that it may happen that an hy'pocrite do confesse himselfe, or such one as is not cōtrite for his sinne, wherof prooffe hath oftentimes bene founde and it is euident for so much as the letter doth kill, but the spirite doth quicken.

The v. Article,* The binding and loosing of God, is sim'ply & playnly the chiefe and principal.* The answer. This is euident, forsomuch as it were blasphemous presumption to affirme, that a man may remit and forgeue an euill fact or offence done agaynst such a Lord, the Lord himselfe not approuing or allowing the same. For by the vniuersall power of the Lord, it is necessary that he doe first absolue and forgeue, before that his vicare doe the same, neyther is there one Article of our fayth, which ought to be more cōmon or knowne vnto vs, then that it should be impossible for any man of the militant Church to absolue or binde, except in suche case as it be conformable vnto the head of the Church Iesu Christ. Wherefore euery faythfull Christian ought to take heed of that saying: if the Pope or any other pretend by any maner of signe to binde or loose, that he is thereby bound or loosed, for he that doth graunt or confesse that, must also consequently graunt and confesse that the Pope is without sinne, and so that he is a God, for otherwise he must needes erre, and doe contrary vnto the keyes of Christ. This saying proueth the fact of the Pope, who alwayes in his absolution presupposeth contrition and cōfession. Yea moreouer, if any letter of absolution be geuen vnto any offender, which doth not declare the circumstances of the offence which ought to be declared, it is sayd that thereby the letter of absolution is of no force and effect. It is also hereby euident, that many Priestes do not absolue those which are cōfessed, because that either through shamfastnes they do cloke or hide greater offences, or els y^t they haue not due contrition or repentance,* for vnto true absolu'tion there is first required contritiō. Secondly a purpose & intent to sinne no more. Thirdly, true cōfessiō. And fourthly stedfast hope of forgeuenes, The j. appeareth by Ezech. if the wicked do repent him. &c. The ij. in the v. & 8. of Iohn do thou not sinne any more. The third party by this place of Luke: shew your selues vnto the Priestes. And the fourth is confirmed by the saying of Christ: My sonne beleue, and thy sinnes are forgeuen thee. I also added many other probations in my treatise out of the holy fathers, Augustine, Ierome, and the maister of the sentences.

The 6. Article.* The Priestes do gather and heape vppe out of the Scriptures those things which serue for the belly but such as pertayne to the true imitation and folowing of Christ, that they reiect and refuse as impertinent vnto saluation. The aunswere. This Saynt Gregory doth sufficiently proue in his 17.* Homely, alledging the sayinge of Christ:* The haruest is great, the workemen are few, speaking also that which we cannot say without grieve or sorrow, that albeit there be a great number which willingly heare good things, yet there lacketh such as should declare the same vnto them, for behold the world is full of priests, but notwithstanding there is a scarcitey of workemen in the haruest of the Lord. We take vpon vs willingly priesthood, but we do not fulfil & do the workes & office of priesthood. And immediately after he sayth, we are fallen vnto outward affayres & busines, for we take vpō vs one office for honour sake, and we do exhibite & geue an other to ease our selues of labour. We leaue preaching and as farre as I can perceiue we are called Bishops to our paine, which do retayne the name of honour, but not the verity.

And immediatly after he sayth, we take no care for our flocke, we dayly call vpon for our stipend & wages, we couet and desire earthly thinges with a gredy mind, we gape after worldly glory, we leaue the cause of God vndone, and make haste about our worldly affayres & busines, we take vpō vs the place of sanctity and holines, and we are wholly wrapped in worldly cares & troubles. &c. This writeth saynt Gregory with many other thinges more in the same place. Also in his Pastorall, in his Morals, in his register. Also Saynt Bernard with many other places. Likewise in his xxxiiij. Sermon vpon the Canonicales, he sayth, all frendes, and all enemies: all kinsfolkes and aduersaryes, all of one householde, and no peace makers: they are the Ministers of Christ, and serue Antichrist: they goe honourably honoured with the goodes of the Lord, and yet they do honour. &c.

The 7. Article.* The power of the pope, which doth not folow Christ, is not to be feared. The answeare. It is not so in my treatise, but contrariwise, that the subiects are boūd willingly & gladly to obey the vertuous and good rulers, and also those which are wicked and euill.* But notwithstāding, if the pope do abuse his power, it is not thē to be feared as by bondage. And so the Lordes the Cardinals as I suppose, did not feare the power of Gregory the xij. before his deposition, whē as they resisted him, saying that he did abuse his power contrary vnto his owne othe.

The 8. Article.* An euill and a wicked Pope is not the successor of Peter, but of Iudas. The aunswere. I wrote thus in my treatise: If the pope be humble and meek, neglecting and despising the honors and lucre of the world: if he be a shepheard taking his name by the feeding of y^e flock of God (of the which feeding the Lord speaketh,* sayinge: feede my sheepe) if he feede the sheepe with the worde, and with vertuous example, and that he become euen lyke hys flocke with his whole hart and minde: if he doe diligently and carefully labour and trauell for the Church, then is he without doubt the true Uicare of Christ. But if he walke contrary vnto these vertues, for so much as there is no society betwene Christ and Belial, and Christ himselfe saith: he that is not with me, is agaynst me: how is he then the true vicar of Christ or Peter, and not rather the Uicare of Antichrist? Christ called Peter himselfe Sathanas, when he did cōtrary him but onely in one word, and that wyth a good affection, euen him whom he had chosen his Uicare, and specially appoynted ouer his church. Why should not any other then, being more contrary vnto Christ be truely called Sathanas, and consequently Antichrist, or at lest the chiefe and principall minister or vicar of Antichrist? There be infinite testimonyes of this matter in S. Augustine, S. Ierome, Ciprian, Chrisostom, Bernard, Gregory, Remigius, and Ambrose. &c.

The 9. Article.* The Pope is the same beast of whome it is spoken in the Apot.* power is geuen vnto him to make warre vpon the sayntes. The answeare. I deny this Article to be in my booke.

The 10. Article.* It is lawful to preach, notwithstāding the Popes inhibition. The answeare. The Article is euidēt forsomuch as the Apostles did preach contrary to the commaundement of the bishops at Ierusalem.* And S. Hillary did the like, contrary to the cōmaūdement of y^e pope which was an Arrian. It is also manifest by the example of Cardinals, which contrary vnto the cōmaundement of Pope Gregory the xij. sēt throughout all realmes such as should preach agaynst him. It is also lawfull to preach vnder appeale, contrary vnto the Popes commaundement. And finally he may preach which hath the commaundement of God, wherunto he ought chiefly to obey.

The 11. Article.* If the Popes commaundement be not concordant and agreeable with the doctrine of the Gospell or the Apostles, it is not to be obeyed. The answer. I haue thus written in my booke:* The faythfull disciple of Christ ought to wey and consider whether the popes commaundement be expressly & plainly the cōmaūdement of Christ or any of his Apostles, or whether it haue any foundatiō or groūd in their doctrine or no: and that being once knowne or vnderstand, he ought reuerētly and humbly to obey the same. But if he do certaynly know that the popes cōmaūdement is contrary and agaynst the holy Scripture, and hurtful vnto the Church: then he ought boldly to resist agaynst it, that he be not partaker of the crime and offēce by cōsenting thereunto. This I haue handled at large in my treatise, and haue confirmed it by the authorities of Saint Austine, Hierome, Gregory, Chrisostome, Bernard and Bede, and with the holy Scripture and Canons, the which for breuities cause I do here passe ouer.* I will onely rehearse the saying of Saint Isydore, who writeth thus: He Page 617 which doth rule, and doth say or commaund any thing cōtrary and besides the will of God, or that which is euidētly commaunded in the Scriptures, he is honoured as a false wisse of God, and a Church robber. Whereupon we are bounden to obey no Prelate, but in such case as he do commaund or take counsell of the Councels and commaundements of Christ.

Likewise S. Augustine vpon this saying: vpon the chayre of Moyses. &c. sayth: Secondly, they teach in the chayre of Moyses the law of God: Ergo, God teacheth by them: but if they will teach you any of theyr owne inuentions, do not geue eare vnto them, neither doe as they cōmaund you. Also in the saying of Christ, he that heareth you heareth me, all lawfull and honest thinges be comprehended, in the which we ought to be obedient, according to Christes saying: it is not you which doe speake, but the spirite of my father whiche speaketh in you. Let therfore my aduersaries and slaundersers learne that there be not onely 12.* Counsels in the Gospell, in the which subiectes ought to obey Christ and his appoynted ministers, but that there are so many Counsels and determinations of God, as there be lawfull and honest thinges ioyned with preceptes and commaundementes of God, bindinge vs thereunto, vnder the payne of deadly sinne: for euery such thing doth the Lord commaund vs to fulfill in tyme and place, with other circumstaunces at the will and pleasure of their minister.

The 12. Article.* It is lawfull for the clergy and laytye by their power and iurisdiction to iudge and determine of all things pertayning vnto saluation,* and also of the workes of the Prelates. The aunswere. I haue thus written it in my booke, that it is lawfull for the clergy and laity to iudge and determine of the works of their heades and rulers. It appeareth by this, that the iudgement of the secret counselles of God, in the court of conscience is one thyng, & the iudgement of the authority and power in the church is an other. Wherefore subiectes first ought principally to iudge and examine themselues 1. Corinthians. 11. chapter. Secondly they ought to examine all thinges whiche pertayneth vnto their saluation, for a spirituall man iudgeth and examineth all thinges. And this is alleadged, as touching the first iudgement, and not the second, as the enemy doth impute it vnto me.* Whereupon in the same place I doe say that the lay man ought to iudge and examine the workes of his Prelate, like as Paule doth iudge the doings of Peter in blaming him. Secondly to auoyd them according to this saying: Beware of false Prophets. &c. Thirdly to rule ouer the ministry: For the subiect ought by reason to iudge and examine the works of the Prelats. And if they be good, to prayse God therefore and reioyce: But if they be euill, they ought with patience to suffer them, and to be sorry for them, but not to do the like, least they be damned with them: according to this saying: If the blinde lead the blinde, both fall into the ditch.

The 13. Article.* God doth suspend of himselfe, euery wicked Prelate from his ministry, while he is actually in sinne. for by that meanes that he is in deadly sinne, he doth offend and sinne whatsoeuer he do: and consequēly is forbiddē so to do: therefore also is he suspended from his ministry. The aunswere. This is proued as touching suspension from dignitie, by Osee the iiij. chapter, and Esay, and Malachy the first. And Paule in the 1. Corinthians. 11. chapter, suspendeth all such as be sinnefull or in any greuous crime or offence, from the eating of the bodye of the Lord, and the drinking of his bloud, and consequently suspendeth all sinnefull Prelates from the ministration of the reuerent Sacrament. And God doth suspend the wicked and sinnefull from the declaration of his righteousness. Psalme. 49. For so much then as to suspend in effect, is to prohibite the ministry or any other good thing for the offence sake, or as the new lawes do terme or cal it, to interdict or forbidde: It is manifest by the Scriptures afore rehearsed, that God doth prohibite the sinnefull, being in sinne to exercise or vse theyr ministrye or office, whiche by Gods commaundement ought to be exercised without offence. Whereupon he sayth by Esay the Prophet: ye that cary the vessels of the Lord, be ye clensed and made cleane. And to the Corinthians it is sayd: Let all thinges be done with loue and charity. &c. The same thing also is cōmaunded by diuers and sundry Canons, the which I haue alleged in my treatise.

The 14. Article.* The aunswere which he made to the 25. Article in prison suffiseth for this,* that is to say, that the Clergye for theyr owne preferment and exaltation, doth supplant and vndermine the lay people, doth increase and multiply theyr couetousnes, cloaketh and defendeth theyr malice and wickednes, and prepareth away for Antichrist.

The first part he proueth by experience, by the example of Peter de Luna, which named himselfe Benedict: by the example of Angelus Coriarius, which named himselfe Gregory the 12. and also by the example of Iohn 23. Likewise by the xij. and xxiiij. of Ezechiel, and out of Gregory, which sayth, what shalbe come of the flock, when the shepheardes themselues, are become wolues. &c. Also out of Osee, Miche, and other of the Prophets, and many places of S. Barnard.

The second part is proued by the 8. chapter of Ieremy, Gregory in his 17. Homely, and S. Barnard vpon the Canonicals.

The third part of this Article is also proued by experience: for who defendeth the wickednes of any schisme but onely the Clergy alledging Scriptures, and bringing reasons therfore? Who excuseth Simony, but onely the Clergy? likewise couetousnes in heaping together many benefices, luxuriousnes and fornication? For how many of the Clergy is there now a dayes which do say it is no deadly sinne alledging (albeit disorderly) the saying of Genesis, increase and multiply.

Hereby also is the 4. part of the Article easily verified. For the way of Antichrist is wickednesse and sinne: of the which the Apostle speaketh to the Thessalonians: Gregory in his register Pastorall and moralls: Also S. Barnard vpon the Canonicales playnely sayth: wicked and euyl Priestes prepare the way for Antichrist.

The 15. Article.* Iohn Hus doth openly teach and affirme that these conclusions aforesayd are true.* The aunswere is manifest by that which I haue afore written. For some of these propositions I did write and publishe, other some my enemy did fayne, now adding, then diminishing and taking away, now falsely ascribing and imputing the whole proposition vnto me: the which thing the commissioners themselues did confesse before me. Whome I desired for the false iuention and fayning of those Articles, that they would punish those, whom they thēselues knew and confessed to be mine enemies.

The 16. Article.* Hereby also it appeareth, that it is not true which they haue affirmed in the article followyng: that is to say, that all the aforesayd conclusions be false, erroneous, seditious, and such as do weaken and make feeble the power and strength of the Church, inuented contrary to the holy Scriptures and the Church. But if there be any such, I am ready most humbly to reuoke and recant the same.

The 17. Article.* There was also an obiection made agaynst me as touching the Treatises whiche I wrote agaynst Paletz and Stanislaus de Znoyma. The which I desired for Gods sake, they might be openly read in the audience of the whole Councell, and sayd that I, notwithstanding my former protestation, would willingly submit my selfe to the iudgement of the whole Councell.

The 18. article.* There was also an other article objected agaynst me in this forme. Item, Iohn Husse sayd and preached that he shoulde goe to Constance, and if so be that for any maner of cause he shoulde be forced to recant that he had before taught, yet notwithstanding he neuer purposed to doe it with his minde: for so much as what so euer he had before taught, was pure and true, and the sounde doctrine of Christ. The aunswere. This article is full of lyes: to the inuenter whereof I suppose the Lord sayth thus: All the day long thou hast imagined mischief and wickednesse, and with thy tounge as with a sharpe rasour, thou hast wrought decypte. Thou hast delighted and loued rather to talke of wickednesse and mischief then of equity and iustice. Uerely I do graunt that I left behinde me a certayne epistle to be read vnto the people, the which did containe that all such as did wey and consider my carefull labors and trauelles, should pray for me, and stedfastly perseuere and continue in the doctrine of our Lord Iesu Christ, knowing for a certaintie that I neuer taught them any such errors as mine enemies do impute or ascribe vnto me, and if it should hap|pen that I were ouercome by false witness, they shoulde not be vexed or troubled in their mindes, but stedfastly continue in the truth.

The 19. Article.* Last it was objected agaynst me, that after I was come into Constance, I did write vnto the Kingdome of Boheme, that the Pope and the Emperour receiued me honourablye and sent vnto me two Byshoppes to make agreement betweene me and them, and that thys seemeth to be wrytten by me to thys ende and purpose, that they shoulde confirme and establishe me and my hearers in the errors, whiche I had preached and taught in Boheme. Thys Article is falsely alledged euen from the beginning. For how manifestly Page 618 false should I haue written y^t the pope & the Emperour did honour me, when as otherwise I had written before, that as yet we knew not where y^e Emperour was? and before the Emperour himselfe came vnto Constance, I was by the space of 3. weekes in pryson. And to wryte that I was honoured by my imprisonment, the people of the kingdome of Boheme would repute the honour as no great renowne and glory vnto me. Howbeit my enemies may in derision say vnto me, that according to their willes & pleasures, I am exalted and honored. Wherefore this article is wholly throughout false and vntrue.

Unto these articles aboue prefixed, were other articles also to be annexed, which the Parisians had drawne out agaynst M. Iohn Hus, to the number of 19. The chiefe author wherof, was Iohn Gerson Chauncellour of the vniuersity of Paris, a great setter on of the Pope against good men. Of these articles Iohn Hus doth often complayne in his Epistles that he had no time nor space to make answeere vnto them. Which articles being falsly collected and wrongfully depraued although Iohn Hus had no time to aunswere vnto, yet I thought not vnfit here to set downe for the reader to see and iudge.

Articles formally contayned or picked out of the Treatise of Iohn Hus of Prage, which he intituled of the Church folowing in this part or behalfe the errours they terme them of Iohn Wickelyffe

The first article.* No reprobate is true Pope, Lorde or Prelate. The errour is in the fayth and behaiour and manners, being both of late and many times before condemned, as well agaynst the poore men of Lions, as also agaynst the Waldenses and Pikardes. The affirmation of which error is temerarious, seditious, offenseue and pernicious, and tending to the subuersion of all humaine policy and gouernance, forasmuch as no man knoweth whether he be worthy of loue or hatred, for that all men doe offend in many poyntes, and therby shoulde all rule and dominion be made vncertaine and vnstable, if it shoulde be founded vpon predestination and charity: neither shoulde the commaundement of Peter haue bene good, which willeth all seruauntes to be obedient vnto their maisters and Lordes although they be wicked.

The 2. article.* That no man being in deadly sinne, whereby he is no member of Christ, but of the Deuill, is true Pope, Prelate or Lord. The error of this is like vnto the first.

The 3. article.* No reprobate or otherwise being in deadlly sinne, sitteth in the Apostolicke seate of Peter, neither hath any Apostolical power ouer y^e christian people This error is also like vnto the first.

The 4. Article.* No reprobate are of the Church neither likewise any which doe not followe the life of Christ. This error is agaynst the common vnderstanding of the doctors, concerning the church.

The 5. Article.* They onely are of the church, and sit in Peters seat, and haue Apostolicke power whiche followe Christ and his Apostles in their life and liuing. The error hereof is in fayth and maners, as in the first article, but contayning more arrogancy and rashnes.

The 6. article.* That euery man which liueth vprightly according to the rule of Christ may and ought openlye to preach and teach, although he be not sent, yea although he be forbidden or excommunicate by any Prelate or Bishop euen as he might and ought to geue almes: for his good life in liuing together with his learning doth sufficiently send him.

This is a rash and temerarious error offensive and tending to the confusion of the whole ecclesiastical hierarchy.

The 7. article.* That the Pope of Rome being contrary vnto Christ, is not the vniuersall Bishop, neither hath the church of Rome any supremacy ouer other Churches, except peradventure it be geuen him of Cesar, and not of Christ. An error lately and playnely reprobued.

The 8. article.* That the Pope ought not to be called most holy, neither that his feet are holy and blessed, or that they ought to be kissed. This error is temerarius vnreuerently and offensively published.

The 9. article.* That according vnto the doctrine of Christ, heretickes, be they neuer so obstinate or stubburne, ought not to be put to death, neither to be accursed or excommunicated. This is the error of the Donatistes, temerariouly, and not without great offence affirmed agaynst the lawes of the ecclesiasticall discipline as S. Augustine doth proue.

The 10. Article.* That subiectes and the common people may and ought publickly and openly to detect and reprove the vices of their superiours and rulers, as hauing power geuen them of Christ, and example of Saynt Paul so to doe: this error is pernicious, full of offence, inducing all rebellion, disobedience and sedition, and the curse and malediction of Cham.

The 11. article.* That Christ onely is head of the church and not the Pope. It is an error accordyng vnto the cōmon vnderstanding of the Doctors, if all the reason of the supremacy, and of being head be secluded and taken away from the Pope.

The 12. article.* That the onely church which comprehendeth the predestinate and good liuers, is the vniuersall Church, whereunto subiectes do owe obedience. And this is consequent vnto the former article. The error is contained as in the former articles.

The 13. article.* That tithes and oblations geuen vnto the Church are publicke and common almes. This error is offensive, and contrary to the determination of the Apostle. 1. Cor. 9. chapter.

The 14. article.* That the clergy liuing wickedly, ought to be reprobued and corrected by the lay people by the taking away of theyr tithes and other temporall profites. A most pernicious error and offensive, inducing the secular people to perpetrate sacriledge subuerting the ecclesiasticall liberty.

The 15. article.* That the blessinges of such as are reprobate or euill liuers of the clergy are maledictions and cursinges before God according to the saying. I will curse your blessinges. This error was lately reprobued of Saynt Augustine, agaynst Saynt Cyprian and his followers, neither is the maister of the sentences allowed of the maysters in that poynt that he semeth to fauor this article.

The 16. article.* That in these dayes and in long tyme before, there hath bene no true Pope, no true Church, or fayth, which is called the Romishe Church, whereunto a man ought to obey, but that it both was and is the sinagogue of Antichrist and Sathan. The error in this article is in this poynt that it is deriued, and taketh his foundation vpon the former articles.

The 17. article.* That all gift of money geuen vnto the ministers of the Church, for the ministration of any spirituall matter, it doth make such ministers in that case vsers of Simony. This error is seditious and temerarius, for so much as some thing may be geuen vnto the clergy, vnder the title of sustentation or mayntaynyng the minister, without the selling or buying of any spirituall thing.

The 18. article.* That whosoeuer is excommunicate of the pope if he appeale vnto Christ, he is preserued that he need not feare the excommunication, but vtterlye to contemne and despise the same. This error is temerarious and full of arrogancy.

The 19. article.* That euery deed done with out charity is sinne. This error was reprobud and reuoked before this time at Paris, specially if it be vnderstand of deadlye sinne, for it is not necessarye that he whiche lacketh grace should continually sinne and offend a new Albeit he be cōtinually in sinne.

This following, the Maisters of Paris by theyr whole voyce and consent did adde and adioyne vnto these ninetene articles, for theyr reason and determination.

WE affirme that these articles aforesayd are notoriously hereticall, and that they are iudicially to be condemned for such, and diligently to be rooted out with theyr most seditious doctrines, least they do infect other. For albeit they seeme to haue a zeale against the vices of the Prelates and the clergy, the which (the more is the pittye and grieve) do but to much abound, yet is it not according vnto learning, for a sober and discrete zeale, suffereth and lamenteth those sinnes and offences, whiche he seeth in the house of God, that he cannot amend or take away, for vices cannot be rooted out, and taken away by other vices and errors, for so much as Deuilles are not cast out thorowe Belsabub, but by the power of God whiche is the holy Ghost, who willeth that in correction the measure and meane of prudence be alwayes kept, according to the saying. Marke, who, what, where and why, by what meanes and when, Prelates and Byshoppes are bound vnder greuous and expresse penalties of the lawe diligently and vigilantly to beare themselves agaynst the foresayd errors and such other like, and the mayntayners of them, for let it alwayes be well vnderstand Page 619 and noted that the error which is not resisted is allowed, neither is there any doubt of prime affinitie or societie of him, which slack•• to withstand a manifest mischiefe.

These things are entermedled by the way vnder correction, as by way of doctrine.

Iohn Gerson Chauncellour of Paris, vnwoorthie.

These things thus declared, a man may easily vnderstand, that Iohn Husse was not accused for holding any opinion contrary to the Articles of our faith, but because hee did stoutly preach and teach against the kingdome of Antichrist for the glorye of Christ, and the restoring of the Church.

Now to returne vnto the story: when as the first 39. articles,* which I haue before rehearsed, were all read ouer together with their testimonies, the Cardinal of Cambray cailing vnto Iohn Hus, said: thou hast heard what greuous and horrible crimes are laid against thee, and what a number of them there are: and now it is thy part to deuise with thy selfe what thou wilt do. Two waies are proponed and set before thee of the Councell, whereof the one of them, thou must of force and necessitie enter into.

First, that thou do humbly and meekely sub•nit thy selfe vnto the iudgement & sentence of the Councel,* that whatsoeuer shall be there determined by their cōmon voice and iudgement, thou wilt patiently beare and suffer the same. The which thing if thou wilt doe, we of our part both for the honour of the most gentle Emperour here present, and also for the honour of his brother the King of Boheme, & for thy owne sauegard and preservation, will intreate and handle thee with as great humanitie, loue, and gentlenes, as we may. But if as yet thou art determined to defende any of those Articles which wee haue propounded vnto thee, and doest desire or require to be further heard therevpon, we will not denie thee power and licence thereunto: but this thou shalt well vnderstand that heere are such mance of men, so cleare in vnderstāding and knowledge, and hauing so firme and strong reasons and argumentes against thy articles: that I feare it will be to thy greate hurt, detriment, and perill, if thou shouldest any longer will or desire to defend the same.

This do I speake and say vnto thee to counsaile and admonish thee, and not as in maner of a iudge.

This Oration of the Cardinals many other prosecuting, euery man for himselfe,* did exhort and persuade Iohn Hus to the like: vnto whom with a lowly countenance he answered: Most reuerend fathers, I haue often said that I came hither of mine owne free wil, not to the intent obstinately to defende any thing, but if that in any thing I should seeme to haue conceiued a peruerse or euill opiniō, that I would meekely and patiently be content to be reformed and taught. Whereupon I desire that I may haue yet further libertie to declare my minde. Wherof except I shall alledge most firme & strong reasons, I wil willingly submit my selfe (as you require) vnto your informatiō.

Then there start vp one, which with a loud voice sayd: Behold how craftely this man speaketh. Determeth it information and not correction or determination. Verely sayd Iohn Hus, euen as you will tearme it, information, correction, or determination: for I take God to my witnes, that I speake nothing but with my hart and mind.

Then sayde the Cardinall of Cambray, forsomuch then as thou doest submit thy selfe vnto the information and grace of this Councell,* this is decreed almost by threescore Doctours, wherof some of them are now departed hence, in whole roome and place the Parisians are succeeded: and also it is approued by the whole Councell, not one man speaking the contrary thereunto.

First of all, that thou shalt humbly and meekely confesse thy selfe to haue erred in these Articles, which are alledged and brought against thee.

Moreouer, that thou shalt promise by an othe, that frō hencefoorth thou shalt not reach, holde, or maintayne anie of these Articles. And last of all that thou shalt openly recant all these Articles.

Upon the which sentence, when as many others had spoken their minds,* at the length Iohn Hus said: I once againe do say, that I am redy to submit my selfe to the informatiō of the Councell: but this I most humbly require and desire you all, euen for his sake, which is y^r God of vs all, that I be not cōpelled or forced to do the thing, which my conscience doth repugne or striue against, or the which I cannot do without danger of eternall damnation: that is, that I should make reuocation by othe to all y^e Articles which are alledged against me. For I remēber y^t I haue red in the booke of vniuersalities, that to abiure is to renounce an error which a man hath before holden. And for so much as many of these Articles are sayde to bee myne, which were neuer in my mind or thought to hold or teach, how shoulde I then renounce them by an othe? But as touching those articles which are mine in deed, if there be any man which can teach me contrarywise vnto them, I will willingly performe that which you desire.

Then said the Emperour,* why mayest not thou without danger also renounce all those articles which thou saiest are falsly alledged against thee by the witnesses? For I verily would nothing at al doubt to abiure all errors, neither doth it follow that therfore by and by I haue professed any error. To whom Iohn Hus answered: Most noble Emperour, this word to abiure, doth signifie much otherwise then your maiesty doth heere vse it. Then sayde the Cardinall of Florence: Iohn Hus, you shall haue a forme of abiuration, which shal be gentle and tollerable inough, written and deliuered vnto you, and then you will easily & sone determine w^t your selfe, whither you will do it or no.

Then the Emperour repeating againe the wordes of the Cardinall of Cambray,* said: thou hast heard that there are two waies layd before thee. First, that thou shouldest opēly renounce those thy errors, which are now cōdēned, and subscribe vnto the iudgement of the Councel, wherby thou shouldest try and find their grace and fauour. But if thou proceed to defend thy opiniōs, the Councell shal haue sufficient, wherby according to their lawes & ordinances, they may decree and determine vpō thee. To whom Iohn Hus answered: I refuse nothing (most noble Emperour) whatsoever y^e Councell shall decree or determine vpō me. This only one thing I except, that I do not offend God and my cōscience, or say that I haue professed those errors which was neuer in my mind or thought, for to professe. But I desire you al, if it may be possible, y^t you will grant me further libertie to declare my mind and opiniō, that I may answer as much as shall suffice, as touching those things which are obiected against me, and speciallie cōcerning ecclesiasticall offices, and the state of the ministerie.

But when as other men began to speake,* the Emperor himselfe began to sing the same song which he had song before. Thou art of lawfull age said y^e Emperor, thou mightest haue easily vnderstand what I saide vnto thee yesterday and this daye:* for wee are forced to giue credit vnto these witnesses which are worthy of credit: for so much as the Scripture saith, that in the mouth of two or three witnesses, all truth is tried: How much more then by so manie witnesses of such worthy men.

Wherefore if thou be wise, receiue penance at the handes of the Councell, with a contrite hart, and renounce the manifest errors, and promise by an othe that from henceforth thou wilt neuermore teach or preach againste them. The which if thou refusest to do, there are lawes and ordinances, whereby thou shalt be iudged of the Councell.

Heere a certain very old Bishop of Pole put to his verdict.* He saide the lawes are euident as touching hereticks, with what punishment they ought to be punished. But Iohn Hus constantly answered as before: in somuch that they saide he was obstinate and stubborne. Then a certaine well fed priest and gaily apparelled,* cried out vnto the presidents of the Councell, sayeng: he ought by no meanes to be admitted to recantation: for he hath written vnto his frends, that although hee do sweare with hys tong, yet he will keepe his mind vnsworne without othe: wherefore he is not to be trusted. Unto this slander Iohn Hus answered as is said in the last Article, affirming that he was not guilty of any error.

Then said Palletz,* to what end is this protestation, for so much as thou saiest that thou wilt defend no error, neyther yet Wickliffe, and yet doest defend him? When he had spoken these words, he brought forth for witnes 9. Articles of Iohn Wickliffes, and red thē openly: & afterward he saide: When as I and M. Stanislaus in the presence of Ernestus of Austrich duke of Prage, preached against thē, he obstinately defended the same, not only by his sermōs, but also by his bookes which he set forth. The which except you do here exhibite, we will cause them to be exhibited. So said the Emperor also.* Unto whome Iohn Hus answered, I am very well contented that not onely those, but also all other my bookes be brought forth and shewed.

In the meane time there was exhibited vnto the Coūcell a certaine Article, wherein Iohn was accused, that he had slaunderously interpreted a certaine sentence of the Popes: the which he denied that he did, saieng, that he neuer sawe it, but in prison, when as the Article was shewed him by the Commissioners. And when he was demaunded who was the authour thereof, he aunswered that hee knew not, but that he hard say that maister Iessenitz was Page 620 the author thereof.

What (sayd they) then do you thinke or iudge of the interpretation thereof? Then aunswered Iohn Hus, what should I say therunto, when as I said I neuer saw it, but as I haue heard it of you. Thus they were all so greuous and troublesome vnto him,* that he waxed faint & wearie, for he had passed all y' night before without sleepe, through the paine of his teeth.

*Then was there another Article read, in the which was contained that three men were beheaded at Prage, because that through Wickleffes doctrine and teaching, they were contuineliuous and slanderous against the Popes letters: and that they were by the same Hus, with the whole pompe of the Scholers, and with a publike conuocation or congregation caryed out to be buried, & by a publicke Sermon placed amongst the number of Saints. And the same Doctour Naso, of whome you haue heard certaine testimonies already recited, affirmed the same to be true, and that he himselfe was present, when as the king of Boheme commanded those blasphemers so to be punished.

*Then said Iohn Hus: both those partes are false, that the King did command any such punishment to be done, and that the coarses were by me conueyed with any such pompe vnto their sepulture or buriall: wherefore you do both iniury vnto me and the King. Then Palletz confirmed the affirmation of Doctour Naso, his fellow, with this argumēt (for they both laboured to one end and purpose:) That it was prouided by the Kings commaundement, that no man should once speake against the Popes Bulles: And these three spake against y^e Popes Bulles: Ergo, by vertue of the kings commaundement they were beheaded. And what Iohn Husse his opinion and mind was as touching these men, it is euident inough by hys booke intituled Of the Church, wherein he writeth thus: I beleeeue they haue read Daniell the Prophet, where as is said: And they shall perish with sword and fire, and with captiuitie, and many shall fraudulently & craftely associate themselues vnto thē. And afterward he saith: how is this fulfilled in these two lay men, who not cōsenting, but speaking against the fained lies of Antichrist, haue offred their liues therfore, and many other were ready to do the same, and many were fraudulently associate vnto them, which being feared by the threatnings of Antichrist, are fled, and haue turned their backes, &c.

When these things were read, one looking vpon another, as though they had bene all in a maruellous strange study, they held their peace for a certaine space. For this Palletz, & the foresaide Doctour Naso had also added that Iohn Hus in an open Sermon had inflamed & stirred vp the people against y^e Magistrates, in so much that a great number of the citizens did openly set themselues against y^e magistrates: and by y^t meanes was it, that he said those in. were ready to suffer death for the truth. And this sedition was hardly appeased by any benefite, or help that the king could do.* Then the Englishmē exhibited the copy of a certaine Epistle, which they saide was falsely conueyed vnto Prage, vnder y^t title of the Uniuersitie of Oxford, & that Iohn Hus did reade the same out of y^e Pulpit vnto y^e people, that he might cōmend and praise Iohn Wickleffe vnto the Citizens of Prage. When they had read the same before the Councell,* the Englishmen demaunded of Iohn Hus, whether he had read the same openly or no. Which whē he had confessed, because it was brought thether by two scholers vnder the seale of the Uniuersitie: they also inquired of him what scholers they were. He aunswered: this my frend (meaning Stephen Palletz) knoweth the one of them as well as I, the other I know not what he was.

Then they first enquired of him, as touching the last man, where he was. Iohn Hus aunswered: I heard say (said he) that in his returne into England, he died by the way. As touching the first, Palletz said, that he was a Bohemian, and no Englishman, and that he brought out of England a certaine small peece of the stone of Wickleffes sepulchre,* which they that are y^e followers of his doctrine at this present, do reuerence and worship as a thing most holy. Hereby it appeareth for what intent all these things were done, and that Iohn Hus was the author of thē all.

Then the Englishmen exhibited another Epistle, contrary to the first, vnder the seale of the Uniuersitie, the effect and argument whereof was this: The Senate of the vniuersitie, not without great sorrow and grieffe hath experimented & found that the errorrs of Wickleffe are scattered & spread out of y^e Uniuersitie throughout all England. And to the intent that through their helpe & labour, meanes may be found to remedy this mischiefe, they haue appointed for that purpose twelue Doctours, men of singuler learning, and other maisters, which should sit in iudgement vpon the bookes of Wicklesse.

These men haue noted out aboute th••um••er of CC. articles, the which the whole universitie haue iudged worthy to be burnt: but for the reuerence of the said sacred Councell, the said Uniuersitie hath sent them vnto Constance, referring and remitting the whole authoritie of the iudgement vnto this Councell.

Heere was great silence kept for a while.* Then Palletz rising vp, as though he had finished now his accusation, said: I take God to my witnes before the Emperours maiestie here present, & the most reuerend fathers, Cardinals and Bishops, that in this accusation of Iohn Hus, I haue not vsed any hatred or euill will: but that I might satisfie the othe which I tooke, when I was made Doctour, that I would be a most cruell and sharpe enemie of all maner of errors, for the profite and commoditie of the holy Catholike Church.* Michaell de Causis did also the like. And I, said Iohn Hus, do commit all these things vnto the heauenly Iudge, which shall iustly iudge y^e cause or quarell of both parties.* Then saide the Cardinall of Cambray, I cannot a little commend and praise the humanitie and gentlenes of Maister Palletz, which he hath vsed in drawing out the articles against maister Iohn Hus. For as we haue heard, there are many things contened in his booke, much worse and detestable.

When he had spoken these words, the Byshop of Rygen vnto whom Iohn Hus was committed, commanded that the said Iohn Hus, should be carried againe safely vnto prison. Then Iohn de Clum folowing him, did not a little incourage and comfort him.* No tounge can expresse what a courage and stomacke he receiued by the shorte talke which he had with him: when as in so great a broile and greuous hatred, he saw himselfe in a maner forsaken of all men. After that Iohn Hus was caried away, the Emperour began to exhort the presidents of the Councell in this maner, saieng:

YOu haue heard the manifold and greuous crimes which are layd against Iohn Hus,* which are not onely prooued by manifest and strong witnesses, but also confessed by him: of the which euery one of them by my iudgement and aduise haue deserued, and are worthy of death. Therefore, except he do recant them all, I iudge and thinke meete that he be punished with fire: and albeit he doo that which hee is willed and commanded to do: notwithstanding I do counsell you, that he be forbid the office of preaching and teaching, and also that he returne no more into the kingdome of Boheme. For if he bee admitted againe to teach and preach, and specially in the kingdome of Boheme, hee will not obserue and keepe that which he is commaunded, but hoping vpon the fauour and good will of such as be his adherents and fautours there, he will returne againe vnto his former purpose and intent, and then besides these errors, he will also sow new errors amongst the people, so the last error shall be worse than the first.

Moreouer, I iudge and thinke it good that his articles which are condemned, should be sent vnto my brother the king of Boheme, and afterward into Pole and other prouinces, whereas mens minds are replenished with his doctrine, with this commandement, that whosoever do proceed to hold or keepe the same,* they should by the common ayde both of the Ecclesiasticall and Ciuill power, be punished. So at the length shall remedy bee founde for this mischief, if the boughes together with the roote, be vtterly rooted and pulled vp: and if the Byshops and other Prelates, which heere in this place haue laboured and trauelled for the extirpating of this heresie, be commended by the whole voices of the Councell vnto the Kings and Princes, vnder whose dominion they are.* Last of all, if there be any founde heere at Constance, which are familiars vnto Iohn Hus, they also ought to be punished with such seueritie and punishment as is due vnto them, and specially his scholer Hierome of Prage. Then saide the rest, when the maister is once punished, we hope wee shall finde the Scholer much more tractable and gentle.

After they had spoken these wordes, they departed out of the Cloystev, where they were assembled and gathered together. The day before his condemnation, which was the sixt of Iuly,* the Emperour Sigismond sent vnto him foure Bishops, accompanied with maister Wencelate de Duba, and Iohn de Clum, that they should learne and vnderstand of him what he did intend to do. When as hee was brought out of prison vnto them, Iohn de Clum began first to speake vnto him, saieng.

MAister Iohn Hus,* I am a man vnlearned, neither am I able to counsell or aduertise you, being a man of learning and vnderstanding: notwithstanding I do require you, if you know your selfe giltye of any of those errors, which are objected and laid against Page 621 you before the Councell, that you will not be ashamed to alter & change your mind to the will and pleasure of the Councell: if cōtrary wise, 〈◇〉 will be no author vnto you, that you should do any thing contrary or against your conscience, but rather to suffer and endure any kinde of punishment, than to denie that which you haue knowne to be the truth. Vnto whome, Iohn Hus turning himselfe,* with lamentable teares, sayd: verely as before I haue often times done, I do take the most high God for my witnes, that I am ready with my whole hart and minde, if the Councell can instruct or teach me any better by the holy Scripture: I will be ready with all my hart to alter and change my purpose. Then one of the Byshops which sate by,* sayde vnto him, that hee would neuer be so arrogant or proude, that he would prefer his owne mind or opinion before the iudgemēt of the whole Councell. To whome Iohn Hus aunswered, neither doo I otherwise minde or intend. For if he which is the meanest or least in all this Councell, can conuict me of error, I will with an humble hart and mind performe and do whatsoever the Councell shall require of me. Marke said the Bishops, how obstinately he doth perseuer in his errors. And when they had thus talked, they commaunded the keepers to cary him againe vnto prison, and so they returned againe vnto the Emperour with their commission.

The next day after, which was Saturday, and the sixte day of Iuly, there was a generall Session holden of the Princes and Lords, both of the Ecclesiastiall and Temporall estates in y^e head Church of the Citie of Constance, the Emperour Sigismund being President in his Imperiall robes and habite: in the middest whereof, there was made a certaine high place being square about like a table, and hard by it there was a deske of wood, vpon the which the garments and vestiments pertaining vnto Priesthode were laide, for this cause, that before Iohn Husse should be deliuered ouer vnto the Ciuill power, he should be openly depriued and spoiled of his Priestly ornaments. When Iohn Husse was brought thether, he fell downe vpon his knees before that same high place, and praied a long time. In the meane while y^e Bishop of Londy went vp into the Pulpit, and made this Sermon following.

The Sermon of the Byshop of Londy, before the sentence was giuen vpon Iohn Husse.

*IN the name of the Father, the Sunne, and of the holy Ghost. Trusting by humble inuocation vpon the diuine helpe and ayde, most noble Prince, and most Christian Emperour, and you most excellent Fathers, and reuerend Lords, Byshops, and Prelates, also most excellent Doctours and Maisters, most famous and noble Dukes and high Countes, honourable Nobles, and Barons, and all other men woorthie of remembraunce: that the intent and purpose of my minde may the more plainelie and euidently appeare vnto this most sacred congregation, * I am first of all determined to intreate or speake of that which is read in the Epistle on the next Sunday, * in the sixt Chapter to the Romaines. That is to say: Let the bodie of sinne be destroyed, &c.

It appeareth by the authoritie of Aristotle, in his booke intituled De coelo & mundo, how wicked, dangerous, and foolish a matter it seemeth to be, not to withstand peruerse and wicked beginnings. For he saith, that a small error in the beginning, is very great in the end. It is very damnable and dangerous to haue erred, but more hard to be corrected or amended. Whereupon that worthy Doctour S. Hierome, in his booke vpon the exposition of the Catholicke faith, teacheth vs how necessarie a thing it is, that heretickes and heresies should be suppressed, euen at the first beginning of them, saieng thus: the rotten and dead flesh is to be cut off from the body, least that the whole body doo perish and putrifie. For a scabbed sheepe is to be put out of the fold, least the whole flocke be infected. And a little fire is to be quenched, least the whole house be consumed and burned. Arrius was first a sparke in Alexandria, who because hee was not at the first quenched, he presumed and went about with his wicked and peruerse imaginations, and phantasticall inuentions, to spot and defile the Catholicke faith, which is founded and established by Christ, defended with the victorious triumphes of so manie Martirs, and illuminate and set foorth with the excellent doctrines and writings of so manie men. Such therefore must be resisted: such heretickes of necessitie must be suppressed and condemned.

Wherefore I haue truely propounded, as touching the punishment of euery such obstinate hereticke, that the body of sin, is to be destroyed. Whereupon it is to be considered according vnto the holy traditions of the fathers, that some sins are aduerse and contrarie vnto another. Othersome are annexed or conioyned together: othersome are, as it were, branches and members of others. And some are as it were the rootes and head of others. Amongst all which, those are to be counted the most detestable, out of the which the most and worst, haue their originall and beginning. Wherefore, albeit that all sinnes and offences are to be abhorred of vs: yet those are specially to be eschewed, which are the head and roote of the rest. For by how much the peruersenes of them is of more force and power to hurt, with so much the more speede and circumspection, ought they to be rooted out and extinguished, with apt preseruatiues and remedies. For so much then as amongst all sinnes none doth more appeare to be inueterate, then the mischief of this most execrable Schisme, therefore haue I right well propounded, that the bodie of sinne should be destroyed. For by the long continuance of this Schisme, great and most cruell destruction is sproong vp amongst the faithfull, and hath long continued, abhominable diuisions of heresies are growne: threatnings are increased and multiplied: the confusion of the whole Cleargie is growne thereupon, and the opprobries and sclaunders of the Christian people are abundantlie sproong vp and increased. And truely it is no maruell, for so much as that most detestable and execrable Schisme, is as it were, a bodie and heape of dissolution of the true faith of God: for what can be good or holie in that place, where as such a pestiferous Schisme hath rained so long a time? For as Sainct Bernard sayth, like as in the vnitie and concord of the faithfull, there is the habitation and dwelling of the Lord, so likewise in the Schisme and dissipation of the Christians, there is made the habitation and dwelling of the Diuell. Is not Schisme and deuision the originall of all subuersion, the denne of heresies, and the nourisher of all offences? for the knot of vnitie and peace being once troubled and broken, there is free passage made for all strife and debate. Couetousnes is vttered in othes for lukers sake,* lust and will is set at libertie, and all meanes opened vnto slaughter. All right and equitie is banished, the Ecclesiasticall power is iniured, and the calamitie of this Schisme bringeth in all kinde of bondage, swords and violence doth rule, the laitie haue the dominion, concord and vnitie are banished, and all prescript rules of Religion vtterly contemned and set at naught.

Consider most gentle Lords,* how that during this most pestiferous Schisme, how manie heresies haue appeared and shewed themselues, how manie heretickes haue scaped vnpunished, how manie Churches haue beene spoiled and pulled downe, how manie Cities haue beene oppressed, and regions brought to ruine,* what confusion hath there happened in the Cleargie? What and how great destruction hath bene amongst the Christian people? I pray you marke how the Church of God, the spouse of Christ, and the mother of all faithfull, is contemned and despised. For who doth reuerence the keies of the Church, who feareth the censures or lawes, or who is it that doth defend the liberties thereof? But rather who is it, that doth not offend the same, or who doth not inuade it, or else what is he that dare not violentlie lay hands vpon the patrimonie or heritage of Iesus Christ? The goods of the Cleargie, and of the poore, and the reliefe of Pilgrimes and straungers, gotten together by the blood of our Sauour, and of manie Martyres, are spoyled and taken awaie, behold the abomination of the desolation brought vpon the Church of God, the destruction of the faith, and the confusion of the Christian people, to the ruine of the Lordes flocke or folde, and all the whole companie of our most holy Sauour and redeemer. This losse is more great or greeuous then anie which could happen vnto the Martires of Christ, and thys persecution much more cruell then the persecution of anie tyrants, for they did but only punish the bodies, but in this schisme, and diuision the soules are tormented. There the blood of men was only shed, but in this case the true faith is subuerted and ouerthrowne. That persecution was saluation vnto many: but this Schisme is destruction vnto all men. When the tirants raged, then the faith did increase: but by this diuision it is vtterly decaied. During their crueltie and madnes, the primatiue Church increased, but through this schisme it is confounded and ouerthrowne. Tiraunts did ignorantly offende: but in this schisme many do wittingly and willingly euen of obstinacie offend. There came in heretikes, vsers of Symonie, and hypocrites, to the great detriment and deceit of the Church: vnder those tirants the merites of the iust were increased.

But during this Schisme, mischief and wickednes are augmented, for in this most cursed and execrable diuision, truth was made an enimie vnto all Christians, faith is not regarded, loue and charitie hated, hope is lost, iustice ouerthrowne, no kinde of courage or valiantnes, but onely vnto mischief: modestie and temperance cloked, wisdom turned into deceit, humilitie fained, equitie and truth falsified, pacience vtterly fled, conscience small, all wickednes intended, deuotion counted folly, gentlenes abiect and cast away,* religion despised, obedience not regarded, and all maner of life reprochfull and abhominable. With how great and greeuous sorowes is the Church of God replenished & filled, whiles that tirants do oppresse it, heretikes inuade it, vsers of Symonie do spoile and rob it, and schismatikes go about vtterly to subuert it? O most miserable and wretched christian people, whome now by the space of forty yeares, with such indurate and continuall schisme, they haue tormented and almost brought to ruine. O the little barke and ship of Christ, whiche Page 622 hath so long time wandred and straied now in the midst of the whorlepooles, and by and by sticketh fast in the rocks, tossed too and fro with most greuous and tempestuous stormes. O miserable and wretched boate of Peter, if the most holy father would suffer thee to sinke or drowne, into what dangers and perils haue the wicked pirates brought thee? amongst what rockes haue they placed thee? O most godly and louing Christians, what faithfull deuout man is there, which beholding and seeing the great ruine and decay of the Church, would not be prouoked vnto teares? what good conscience is there that can refraine weeping? because that contention and strife is powred vpon the ecclesiasticall rulers, which haue made vs to erre in the way: because they haue not founde,* or rather, would not finde the way of vnitie and concord: Whereupon so many heresies: and so great confusion is sproong vp, and growne in the flocke of Peter, and the fold of our Lord.

Many Princes, Kings and Prelates, haue greatly laboured and trauelled for the rooting out heereof, but yet could they neuer bring to passe, or finish that most holesome and necessary worke. Wherefore most Christian King, this most glorious and triumphant victory hath tarried only for thee, the crowne and glorie therof shal be thine for euer, and this most happy victory shall be continually celebrate to thy great honour and praise, that thou hast restored againe the Church which was so spoiled, thou hast remoued and put away all inueterate and ouergrowne Schismes and diuisions, thou hast troden downe vsers of Symony, & rooted out all hereticks. Doest thou not behold & see how great perpetuall and famous renowne & glory it wil be vnto thee? For what can be more iust, what more holy, what more better, what more to be desired, or finally, what can be more acceptable, than to roote out this wicked and abhominable Schisme, to restore the Church againe vnto hir auncient libertie, to extinguish and put away all Simony, and to condemne and destroy all errours and heresies from amongst the flocke of the faithfull? Nothing truely can be better, nothing more holy, nothing more profitable for the whole worlde, and finally, nothing more acceptable vnto God. For the performance of which most holy and godly worke, thou wast elect and chosen of God, thou wast first deputed and chosen in heauen, before thou wast elect and chosen vpon earth. Thou wast first appointed by the celestiall and heauenly Prince, before the electours of the Empire did elect or choose thee, and specially, that by the Imperiall force and power, thou shouldest condemne and destroy those errours and heresies, which wee haue presently in hand to be condemned and subuerted. To the performance of this most holy worke, God hath giuen vnto thee the knowledge & vnderstanding of his diuine truth and veritie, power of princely maiestie, and the iust iudgement of equitie and righteousness, as the most highest himselfe doth say: I haue geuen thee vnderstāding and wisdom, to speake and vtter my words, and haue set thee to rule ouer nations and kingdomes, that thou shouldest helpe the people, plucke down and destroy iniquitie, & by exercising of iustice, thou shouldest, I say, destroy all errours and heresies, and specially this obstinate heretike heere present, through whose wickednes & mischiefe, many places of the world are infected with most pestilent and hereticall poison,* and by his meanes and occasion, almost vtterly subuerted & destroyed. This most holy and godly labour, O most noble Prince, was reserued only for thee, vpon thee it doth only lye, vnto whome the whole rule and ministration of iustice is giuen.* Wherefore thou hast established thy praise & renowne, euen by the mouthes of infants & sucking babes, for thy praises shall be celebrate for euermore that thou hast destroied & ouerthrowne such and so great enimies of the faith. The which that thou maist prosperously & happely perfourme & bring to passe, our Lord Iesu Christ may vouchsafe to grant thee his grace & help, who is blessed for euer & euer, Amen.

*When this Sermon was thus ended, the Procurer of the Councell rising vp, named Henricus de Piro, required that the processe of the cause against Iohn Hus might be continued, and proceed vnto the difinitive sentence. Then a certaine Byshop, whych was appointed one of the Iudges, declared the processe of the cause, which was pleaded long since in the Court of Rome and elsewhere, betweene Iohn Hus, and the Prelates of Prage.

At the last he repeated those articles which we haue before remembred, amongst the which he rehearsed also one article, that I. Hus shoulde teach the two natures of the Godhead and manhead to be one Christ. Iohn Hus went about briefly with a word or two to aunswere vnto euerie one of them, but as often as he was about to speake, the Cardinall of Cambray cōmanded him to hold his peace, *saieng: heereafter you shall answere to all together, if you will. Then said Iohn Hus, how can I at once aunswere vnto all those things which are alledged against me, whē as I cannot remember them all? Then sayde the Cardinall of Florence, we haue heard thee sufficiently. But whē as I. Hus for all that, would not hold his peace, they sent the officers which should force him therunto. Then began he to intreate, *pray, and beseech ther••hat they woulde heare him, that such as were present, might not credite or beleue those things to be true which were reported of him. But when all this would nothing preuaile, he kneeling downe vpon his knees, committed the whole matter vnto God, and the Lord Iesus Christ, for at their handes he beleueed easely to obtaine that which he desired.

When the articles abouesaid were ended, last of all there was added a notable blasphemy, *which they all imputed vnto Iohn Hus. That is, that he saide there shoulde be a fourth person in diuinitie, and that a certaine Doctour did heare him speake of the same. When Iohn Hus desired that the Doctour might be named, the Bishop which had alledged the article, said, that it was not needefull to name him. *Then said Iohn Hus, O miserable and wretched man that I am, which am forced and compelled to beare such blasphemy and slaunder.

Afterward the Article was repeated, *how he appealed vnto Christ, and that by name, was called hereticall, whereunto Iohn Hus answered: O Lord Iesu Christ, whose word is openly condemned heere in this Councell, vnto thee againe I do appeale: which when thou wast euill intreated of thine enimies, diddest appeale vnto God thy father, committing thy cause vnto a most iust Iudge, that by thy example we also being oppressed with manifest wrongs and iniuries, *should flee vnto thee. Last of all, the Article was rehearsed, as touching the contempt of the excommunication by Iohn Hus. Whereunto he answered as before, that he was excused by his aduocates in y^e court of Rome, wherefore he did not appeare when he was cited: and also that it may be proued by the actes, that the excommunication was not ratified: and finally, to the intent he might cleare himselfe of obstinacie, he was for that cause come vnto Constance, vnder the Emperours safeconduct. When he had spoken these words, one of them which was appointed Iudge, reade the definitiue sentence against him, which followeth thus word for word.

The sentence or iudgement of the Councell of Constance geuen against Iohn Husse.

THE most holy and sacred generall Councell of Constance, being congregate and gathered together, representing the Catholike Church for a perpetuall memory of the thing,* as the veritie & truth doth witnes, an euill tree bringeth forth euill seuite: hereupon it commeth, that the man of most damnable memory Iohn Wickleffe, through his pestiferous doctrine, not through Iesu Christ by the Gospell, as y^e holy Fathers in times past, haue gottē faithfull children, but cōtrary vnto the wholesome faith of Iesus Christ, as a most venemous roote, hath begotten many pestilent & wicked children, whome he hath left behind him, successours and folowers of his peruerse and wicked doctrine, against whome this sacred Synode of Constance is forced to rise vp, as against bastards and vnlawfull children, and with diligent care, with the sharpe knife of the Ecclesiasticall authoritie, to cut vp their errours out of the Lords field, as most hurtfull brambles and briers, least they should growe to the hurt and detriment of others.

For somuch then as in the holy generall Councell lately celebrated and holden at Rome, it was decreed that the doctrine of I. Wickleffe of most damnable memory should be condemned, & that his bookes which cōteined the same doctrine, should be burned as hereticall, & this decree was approued & confirmed by the sacred authoritie of y^t whole Coūcell: neuertheles one Iohn Hus here personally present in this sacred Councell, not y^c Disciple of Christ, but of Iohn Wickliffe, an Archheretike, after, and contrary or against the cōdemnation and decree, hath taught, preached & affirmed the Articles of Wickleffe, which were condemned by the Church of God, and in times past by certaine most reuerend fathers in Christ, Lords, Archbishops, and Byshops, of diuers kingdomes & Realmes, Maisters of diuinitie of diuers Uniuersities: especially resisting in his open Sermons, and also with his adherents and complices in the scholes, the condemnation of the said Articles of Wickleffes, oftentimes published in the said Uniuersitie of Prage, and hath declared him the said Wickleffe, for the fauour and commendation of his doctrine, before y^e whole multitude of the Cleargy and people, to be a Catholicke man, and a true Euangelical Doctour. He hath also published and affirmed, certaine & many of his Articles worthely condemned to be Catholicke, the which are notoriously contained in the bookes of the said Iohn Hus.

Wherefore, after diligent deliberation & full information first had vpon the premisses by the reuerend fathers and Page 623 Lords in Christ of the holy Church of Rome,* Cardinals, Patriarkes, Archbishops, Bishops, and other Prelates, & Doctours of •••nitie and of both lawes in great number assembled and gathered together, this most sacred & holie Councell of Constance declareth & determineth y^e articles aboue said (the which after due conference had, are found in his bookes written with his owne hand, the which also y^e said Iohn Hus in opē audience, before this holy Councell, hath confessed to be in his bookes) not to be Catholicke, neither worthy to be taught, but that many of them are erroneous, some of them to be wicked, othersome to be offensiue vnto godly eares, many of thē to be temerarious and seditious, and the greater part of them to be notoriously hereticall, and euē now of late by y^e holy fathers and generall Councils, reprobued & condēned. And for so much as y^e said Articles are expresly contained in the bookes of the said Iohn Hus, therefore this said * sacred Councell, doth cōdemne & reprove all those bookes which he wrote, in what forme or phrase soeuer they be, or whether they be trāslated by others & doth determine and decree, that they all shall be solemnely & openly burned in the presence of y^e clergy & people of y^e city of Constance, & elsewhere: adding moreouer for the premisses, that all his doctrine is worthy to be despised & eschewed of all faithfull Christians. And to the intent this most pernicious & wicked doctrine, may be vtterly excluded & shut out of the Church, this sacred Synode doth straightly cōmand, that diligent inquisition be made by y^e ordinaries of the places by the Ecclesiasticall censure, for such treatises and works, and that such as are found, be consumed & burned with fire. And if there be any found, which shall contemne or depise this sentence or decree, this sacred Synode ordeineth and decreeth that the ordinaries of the places, and the inquisitours of heresies, shal proceed against euery such person as suspect of heresy.

Wherefore, after due inquisition made against the sayd Iohn Husse, and full information had by the Commissaries and Doctours of both lawes, and also by the saiengs of the witnesses which were worthy of credite, and many other things opēly read before the said Iohn Hus, and before y^e fathers and prelates of this sacred Councell (by the which allegatiōs of the witnesses it appeareth that y^e sayd Iohn Hus hath taught many euill & offense, * seditious, and perilous heresies, and hath preached the same by a long time) this most sacred & holy Synode lawfully congregate and gathered together in the holy Ghost, the name of Christ being inuocate & called vpon, by this their sentence which here is set forth in writing, determineth, pronounceth, declareth, & decreeth, that Iohn Hus was and is a true and manifest hereticke, and that he hath preached openly errors & heresies lately condemned by the church of God, and many other seditious, temerarious, & offense things to no small offence of the Diuine maiestie, and of the vniuersall Church, and detriment of the Catholicke faith & Church, neglecting and despising the keyes of the Church, & Ecclesiasticall censures. In the which his errors he continued with a minde altogether indurate and hardned by the space of many yeares, much offending the faithfull Christians by his obstinacie & stubbornnes, when as he made his appeale vnto the Lord Iesu Christ, * as the most high iudge, omitting and leauing all Ecclesiasticall meanes. In the which his appeale he alledged many false, iniurious, and offense matters, in contempt of the Apostolicke sea, and the Ecclesiasticall censures and keyes.

Wherupon both for the premisses & many other things, the said Synode pronounceth I. Hus to be an hereticke, * & iudgeth him by these presents to be condemned & iudged as an heretike, & reprobeth y^e said appeal as iniurious, offense, & done in derisiō vnto y^e ecclesiastical iurisdictiō, & iudgeth the said Hus, not only to haue seduced the christian people by his writings & preachings, and specially in the kingdome of Boheme, neither to haue bene a true preacher of the Gospell of Christ vnto y^e said people, according to the exposition of y^e holy Doctours: but also to haue bene a seducer of them, & also an obstinate and stifnecked person, yea and such a one as doth not desire to returne againe to the lappe of our holy mother the Church, neither to abiure the errors and heresies which he hath openly preached and defended. Wherefore this most sacred Councell decreeth and declareth that the said Iohn Husse, shall be famously deposed and disgraced from his Priestly orders and dignitie, &c.

Whilest these things were thus read, Iohn Husse, albeit he were forbidden to speake, notwithstanding he did often interrupt them, * and specially whē he was reproved of obstinacie, he said with a loude voice: I was neuer obstinate, but as alwaies heretofore, euē so now againe I desire to be taught by the holy Scriptures, and I do professe my selfe to be so desirous of y^t truth,
